THE PUBLISHER OF THIS ENGLISH Tranſlation TO THE READER.

VALESIUS has ſpoken ſo fully and ſatisfactorily concerning what He has done in His Edition of theſe following Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtorians, as to His Amendments of the Greek Text, as to His Latin Verſion of them, and as to His Explanation of the obſcurer paſſages that occur in them; and beſides, has added ſuch compleat Accounts concerning the Lives and Hiſtories of theſe Authors: (All which particulars, becauſe they were judged neceſſary to be made known to the Engliſh Reader, are done into His own Language, and prefix'd before each Writer whom they concern:) That 'tis needleſs to give the Reader any farther trouble here, than barely to acquaint him, for what reaſon this Engliſh Tranſlation was at firſt attempted, and by what Helps and Aſſiſtances this Attempt has at length been finiſhed.

IT cannot be ſuppoſed a thing unknown to any Perſon, though He may have been but meanly converſant amongſt Books, that this is not the firſt time wherein theſe Church-Hiſtorians have appeared in Engliſh. For 'tis now almoſt a Compleat (a) Century, ſince Meredith Hanmer Doctor of Divinity, firſt publiſhed His Tranſlation of them all; excepting only Euſebius's Four Books concerning the Life of the Emperor Conſtantine, and the Two Orations ſubjoined thereto: Which, by a Dedication to Sir John Lambe Knight, Doctor of Laws, and Dean of the Arches of Canterbury, ſeem to have been made Engliſh ſeveral years after Doctor (b) Hanmer's death, by one Mr. Wye Saltonſtall.

(b) He dyed at Dublin, of the plague Anno 1604. See Fuller's Worthies of Wales. Flintſhire. pag. 39.

After Four Editions of Doctor Hanmer's Tranſlation, a fifth, whereto was added Mr. Saltonſtall's Verſion of the Life of Conſtantine and the Two Orations, was publiſhed in the Year 1650. Which Impreſſion being ſold off, and the Book become Scarce; the Perſon whoſe Propriety Dr. Hanmer's Tranſlation was, ſome few Years ſince reſolved to reprint it. This Reſolution he communicated to ſome Friends, whom He knew to be able Adviſers and Directors in an Affair of that nature. From them He received anſwer to this effect: That in Doctor Hanmer's Tranſlation they ſaw many things that wanted Correction, which they ſuppoſed were not ſo much to be attributed to the Doctor, as to the Imperfection and Miſtakes of the Greek Text and thoſe Latin Tranſlators, which the Doctor had made uſe of: That now there was a fair way opened, whereby the Errors in the Doctor's Tranſlation might be corrected, in regard the Original Text of theſe Hiſtorians, after it had been compared with ſeveral Ancient Manuſcripts of the beſt Note, (whereby the imperfections in it were ſupplied, and the faults committed in other Editions amended;) was, together with an excellent Latin Verſion thereof, publiſhed at Paris by Henricus Valeſius, a Perſon of ſuch eminent Learning, that by the unanimous conſent of the Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops of the Gallican Church, He had been pitcht upon and employed as the fitteſt Man to undertake a work of this Nature: And therefore their advice was, that the Doctor's Tranſlation ſhould be compared with that Edition of theſe Hiſtorians which Valeſius had publiſhed, and that, where-ever it differed, it ſhould be made to agree with the Greek Text thereof.

After receipt of this advice, 'twas reſolved it ſhould be followed. And accordingly a Reverend and Learned Divine was prevailed with to undertake this Work. Who, after He had done ſome few Chapters only of the Firſt Book of Euſebius's Hiſtory, for reaſons beſt known to Himſelf, deſiſted. But by this Tryal of His it plainly appeared, that (beſides its being an invidious attempt to go about to interpolate what another Perſon had long ſince put his laſt Hand to;) it was a work of far greater labour to bring Doctor Hanmer's Tranſlation to an agreement with the Greek Text of Valeſius's Edition, than to make a New One. On which account this latter was reſolv'd upon; and by Divine aſſiſtance being now finiſhed, is here preſented to the Reader's view.

The Reader having been acquainted with the Reaſon why this New Tranſlation was at firſt attempted, 'tis fit He ſhould know farther, by what Helps and Aſſiſtances this attempt has at length been finiſhed.

This Verſion, as has been intimated, was taken immediately from the Greek, according to that Edition which Henricus Valeſius ſet forth at Paris: Whence this advantage will accrue, that whatever Errors are found in it, will be Errors but of one deſcent. Beſides Valeſius's Edition, That which Robert Stephens Printed at Paris in the year 1544. was likewiſe all along conſulted. Nor were the Latin Tranſlators of theſe Hiſtorians refuſed or neglected: Namely theſe four; Muſculus's Verſion Dedicated to Edward the Sixth, King of England, and Printed at Baſil in the Year 1549; the Tranſlation of John Chriſtophorſon (heretofore (a) Maſter of Trinity College in Cambridge, afterwards Biſhop of Chicheſter;) Printed at Cologne, in the Year 1570; John Curterius's Verſion, or rather his Emendation of Chriſtophorſon's, Printed at Paris in the Year 1571; And laſtly Grinæus's Tranſlation, ſet forth at Baſil in the Year 1591. All which Verſions were all along inſpected; and in all places that required it, their Diſagreements or Conſents are (as the Reader will find,) taken notice of; unleſs the Learned Valeſius's diligence had made thoſe Remarks needleſs.

As for the Notes they are in a manner all Valeſius's: nor is any Remark of his left untranſlated (though perhaps ſome times made ſhorter;) that was judg'd of uſe to an Engliſh Reader, and becoming an Engliſh Tranſlation. If the Reader does, as now and then He will, meet with a Note that has not Valeſius's name ſet at the bottom; He may conclude that not to be Valeſius's; however, He generally meets with ſome intimation or other, whereby notice is given him, on what authority ſuch a Remark is grounded. But whereas in Valeſius's Edition, His Notes on all theſe Hiſtorians are placed together in a Body by themſelves, at the latter end of each Author whereto they belong: Here the Reader has them embodied with the Text, and by the Letters of the Alphabet He is ſhown the paſſages in the Hiſtory, whereof they treat treat. In which method the Reader's eaſe was conſulted; that He might not have the trouble and interruption given Him, of turning forward and backward, from the Matter to the Notes, and from thence to the Matter.

How far this Tranſlation is beholden to That done by Doctor Hammer, will quickly be diſcovered by any, that ſhall take the pains to compare them. It need not be diſſembled, that the Doctor's Verſion has been ſeen; and 'tis as needleſs to detain the Reader in ſhewing Him by tedious inſtances, that He has not been, nor could have been followed, without a departure from the Original Greek as publiſhed by Valeſius.

It only remains, that the Reader be entreated, as He peruſes this Tranſlation, to excuſe and amend what Errors may have eſcaped the Preſs; which that He may the eaſier be perſwaded to, He is deſir'd to be mindful of this Excellent Saying:

Μηδὲν ἁμαρτεῖν ἴδιον Θεοῦ, καὶ πάντα κατορθοῦν·
'Tis God's property to miſtake in nothing, and to correct all things.

ANcient Writers were wont, before their Books, to ſet an Index [or, Contents] of the Chapters; to the end, the Readers might know, at firſt ſight as 'twere, what was treated of in each Book. Now this was uſually done by them two ways. For they either prefix'd the Contents of all the Books together, before their whole Work; as Plinius Secundus has done in his Books of Natural Hiſtory. Or elſe their uſage was, to ſet the Contents of the Chapters before each Book; as Our Euſebius has done in his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. For 'tis not to be doubted, but Euſebius did himſelf make theſe Contents or Titles of the Chapters, and ſet them before his Books of Hiſtory, as they now occur. We may indeed obſerve, that in theſe Contents Euſebius does always ſpeak of himſelf in the firſt Perſon. For inſtance, after the Contents of the Chapters of the Second Book, theſe words occur: Σημ. ὅτι σωμπλεῖται ἡμῖν ἡ βίβλος, ἀπὸ μὲν Κλήμεντος, Τερτυλλιανοῦ, Ἰωσήπου καὶ Φίλωνος. That is, Note, that this Book was collected by us, out of the Writings of Clemens, Tertullian, Joſephus, and Philo. Beſides, in his Seventh Book, theſe are the Contents of the Laſt Chapter; Περὶ τῶν καθ' ἡμᾶς αὐτὸς διαπρεψάντων ἐκκλησιαστικῶν ἀνδρῶν, &c. That is, Concerning thoſe Eccleſiaſtick Perſons who were famous in our own Age, &c. Whence it may plainly be gathered, that Euſebius the Compiler of this Hiſtory, was the Author of the Contents of the Chapters alſo. Beſides, Ruſinus, who rendred the Books of Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory into Latin, about ſix hundred years after Euſebius's death, found the ſame Contents in his Greek Copy, which now occur in our Copies. And this is apparent from Ruſinus's Manuſcript Copies, one of which, written out above ſeven hundred years ſince, I have in my cuſtody. For in them the Contents of the Chapters are always ſet before every Book, in the ſame order wherein they are now placed in our Greek Manuſcript Copies. And Ruſinus calls them Capitula. But Caſſiodorus in his Preface to the Tripertite Hiſtory, terms them righter Titulos; as does likewiſe St. Cyprian, in his Exhortation to Martyrdom, [written] to Fortunatus. Compendium feci, ſays he, ut propoſitis titulis, quos quis noſcere debeat & tenere; Capitula Dominica ſubnecterem. Where you ſee that Tituli are diſtinguiſh'd from Capitula. Moreover, Suidas, in the word κεφάλαιον, and in the word τίτλος, remarks, that Tituli differ from Capitula. For inſtance, St. Matthew [he ſays] contains ſixty eight Tituli, but three hundred fifty five Capitula; and ſo concerning the other Goſpels. Capitulum is properly a Part of a Book, which contains the entire Narrative of ſome one thing. But Titulus is an Index ſet above the Capitulum; and ſometimes one Titulus or Title contains many Capita or Chapters, as may be ſeen in the Pandects of the Civil Law. The ſame thing was heretofore viſible in St. Matthew's Goſpel, which had more Chapters than Titles, as Suidas does atteſt. So alſo in the other Goſpels. For, that Paſſage which occurs in Suidas, namely, that St. Mark had forty eight Tituli, and but thirty ſix Capita, is faulty, and inſtead of thirty ſix, it muſt be mended thus, two hundred thirty three, as may be plainly gathered from the Canons of the Goſpels which Our Euſebius compoſed. But ſometimes each Titulus does anſwer each Capitulum, as 'tis in theſe Books of Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. And in the Mazarine and Medicæan Copies, the Tituli or Contents of each Book are prefix'd, together with the Numeral Notes or Figures. But in the Fuketian Manuſcript, after the Titulus, κεφάλαιον is added, together with the Numeral Note. But this term never ocurs in thoſe Excellent Copies which I have mentioned: Yea, inſtead thereof, I found the word πεῖσις placed in the Beginning of the Fourth Book, over the very Contents of the Chapters; Λόγος τετάρτης πεῖσις. That is, The Contents of the Fourth Book. Valeſ.

VALESIUS'S PREFACE,

EUSEBIUS'S HISTORY.

HAVING performed the Office of a Solemn (a) Dedication, 'tis now time, Moſt Illuſtrious Prelates! That I ſhould give You a particular Account of my Work. For, whereas this Labour was undertaken by me, on Your Account chiefly, and by Your Command; I do both wiſh, and alſo hope, that before all others, You will be the Readers and Judges of my Work. There are three things therefore, which I have endeavoured to perform in this Edition. The firſt is, an Amendment of the Greek Text: The ſecond, a Latin Verſion of it. The third is, an Explanation of the obſcurer places. As touching the Latin Verſion, after three Tranſlators of Euſebius's Hiſtory, I have made a fourth. But no perſon before us, had attempted an Amendment and Explanation of the Euſebian Work. But, that I may ſpeak more diſtinctly concerning each particular in its Place and Order, I will begin firſt from the Emendation. Whoever attempt a new Edition of old Writers, thoſe Perſons muſt of neceſſity begin their Labour from an Emendation. So Origen, after he had undertaken a New Edition of the Seventy Interpreters, and had found many paſſages in them that were doubtful and diſagreeable by reaſon of the diverſity of Copies, in the firſt place Laboured in an Emendation of them. And having compared the Copies of the Seventy Seniors, partly with the Hebrew Text, partly with three other Editions, namely Aquila's, Theodotion's, and Symmachus's; He took out all thoſe Errors which had crept into the Edition of the Seventy Seniors. For this He himſelf intimates, in His Eighth Tractate on St. Matthew, in theſe Words. (b) In Exemplaribus quidem Veteris Teſtamenti, quæcunque fuerunt inconſonantia, Deo præſtante coaptare potuimus; utentes judicio cæterarum Editionum. Ea enim quæ videbantur apud Septuaginta dubia eſſe propter Conſonantiam Exemplariorum, facientes judicium ex Editionibus reliquis, convenientia ſervavimus. Indeed, in the Copies of the Old Teſtament, whatever [paſſages] were diſagreeable, by God's aſſiſtance we have been able to make fit; uſing the judgment of the reſt of the Editions. For thoſe [paſſages] which ſeemed in the Seventy to be doubtful by reaſon of the agreement of Copies, making a judgment from the other Editions, we have preſerved agreeable.

(a) Valeſius dedicated his firſt Volume, (which contains Euſebius's Ten Books of Hiſtory, His life of Conſtantine, Conſtine's Oration, and His own) to the Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops, and the whole Clergy of the Gallican Church.

(b) See Origen's Works, ſecond part, pag. 46. Edit. Paris 1619.

Origen's Example was afterwards followed by St. Jerome, who beſtowed a new Edition of the Seventy Tranſlators mended by Himſelf, and diſtinguiſhed by Aſterisks and Obelisks, on the Men of His own Language, as He Himſelf atteſts in ſeveral places. And that I may ſpeak alſo concerning profane Writers, Crates and Ariſtarchus, Grammarians, who ſet forth moſt accurate Editions of Homer's Poem, have done nothing elſe in a manner, but mended and diſtinguiſhed that Work. In like manner therefore, when I had reſolved to publiſh a New Edition of the Euſebian Hiſtory, I uſed my utmoſt Induſtry and diligence in its Emendation. Two Editions only of Euſebius's Hiſtory have hitherto come forth in Greek. The one is the Paris-Edition, which Robert Stephens Printed; a Perſon who on this very account has deſerved highly of Learning, becauſe He was the firſt that publiſhed the Body of Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory in a moſt Excellent Letter. The other is the Geneva-Edition. But this has in the Greek Text every where expreſt that Edition of Robert Stephens: ſave only, that it has various Readings and Emendations ſet at the Margin, [taken] out of the Copies of Learned Men; and, that out of thoſe Copies it has ſupplied ſome imperfections which occur in the Books concerning the Life of Conſtantine. Therefore, my pains was to be beſtowed upon that one Edition only of Robert Stephens. Which, with as much diligence as I could, I have compared with Four Manuſcript Copies of the beſt Note, and have reſtored it in many places. Two of theſe Four Copies, the King's Library furniſh'd us with. The former bears the Arms of Francis the Firſt; written on Silken Paper, about four hundred years ſince; and it does ſometimes exhibit ſingular Readings, and very different from the other Copies. This is that, which in my Notes I have named The King's Copy. The other is out of the Mediceæan Library, which being now removed into the King's, is called by one and the ſame name of the King's Library. This, to diſtinguiſh it from that former Copy, is in Our Notes termed the Mediceæan Copy. Which, though it be ſomething leſs ancient, is nevertheleſs tranſcribed from an excellent Copy, and by a Learned hand. Robert Stephens had made uſe of Both theſe Copies, in His Edition of the Euſebian Hiſtory. And in His Printing of the Text it ſelf, He has almoſt every where followed the King's Copy, and very ſeldom departs from its footſteps, as I have remark'd in my Notes. But in the diſtinction of the Chapters, He has expreſt the Mediceæan Copy, wherein the Contents are ſet before each Chapter, and are written in Red-Letters. There is, beſides thoſe, a third Copy, belonging to the moſt Eminent Cardinal Julius Mazarinus. Before I ſpeak concerning the Goodneſs and Excellency of which Copy, it is requiſite, and You (Moſt illuſtrious Prelates!) with importunity ſeem to crave this very thing of me, that a few words ſhould be ſaid concerning the Moſt Eminent Cardinal, by whom that Copy was lent me. For, whereas this Moſt Eminent Prince, born to every thing that is Great, does embrace Learning with a ſingular affection and benevolence; We, who from our infancy have applied our Minds to the Studies of Learning, ſhould doubtleſs be ungrateful, ſhould we not, both in our own, and in the name of all Learned Men in general, ſtudy to render Him all poſſible Thanks, as well in Words, as in our Writings. Farther, with what favour and how great a benevolence He does honour and reſpect Learning, His bounteous Liberality and Munificence towards Learned Men does atteſt; which, to ſpeak nothing concerning other Perſons, (a) He was lately willing ſhould be extended even to me alſo, when I neither hop'd for, nor thought of any ſuch thing. The ſame thing is declar'd by His moſt compleatly-furniſh'd Library. Which having ſtor'd with innumerable Copies of the Beſt Writers, partly Printed, and partly in Manuſcript; He does not keep it perpetually ſhut like ſome Sepulchre, as thoſe old Senators of the City Rome did, whom (b) Ammianus Marcellinus doth ſharply reprove on that very account: but opens it, as 'twere ſome publick Houſe, to all the Learned; and voluntarily invites each Perſon to it; and freely imparts the uſe of His Manuſcript Books to the Studious, as often as they ſhall have need. What ſhall I ſay concerning His other Virtues and eximious Accompliſhments of Mind? What concerning His wonderful Moderation and Lenity, whereby He hath allayed inteſtine Commotions and Tumults without the blood of any Citizen? But, theſe things will be ſpoken by me more fitly at another time, or more Rhetorically by others. For at preſent I have reſolved, to purſue thoſe Praiſes of His only, which do apart belong to the Studies of Literature. Nevertheleſs, I can't poſſibly refrain my ſelf, but muſt ſpeak ſomething here concerning that Peace, which the moſt Eminent Cardinal, with all immaginable earneſtneſs and induſtry, does now chiefly urge and promote, and which we hope will in a ſhort time be made publick by His Majeſties (c) Proclamation. For, this thing is of great concern to the advantage of Learning; which every one knows to be the Child of Peace, and to repoſe it ſelf under its Umbrage and Defence. Whereas therefore the moſt Eminent Cardinal, when firſt placed at the Helm of State, had not Himſelf raiſed a diſmal War with the Spaniards, but had found it already raiſed: by various Councils (as ['tis requiſite] in ſo Great an Affair,) long and accurately weighed, at length He hath reſolv'd upon this; that the Spaniards are to be broken by a laſting War, and muſt really be made to know how powerful the French are in Arms, Riches, Valour, Conſtancy, and the other neceſſary Proviſions and Helps for a War: that the Enemy, made ſenſible of their own weakneſs and the power of the French, might be ſlower in future to provoke Our Nation, either by Arms or Injuries. For ['twas His Sentiment,] that a firm and ſecure Peace could no otherwiſe be made with the Enemy, than till ſuch time as by their frequent Overthrows and Loſſes they had perceived, that they were inferior to the French in waging War. Therefore, when the Spaniards, no otherwiſe than the Phrygians, had at length underſtood that; then the moſt Eminent Cardinal, perceiving a fit opportunity of entring into a Peace preſented it ſelf, refus'd not to make it with the Enemy, and to recede ſomething from Our Right, from the chief point of the whole War; laſtly from that Hope and Victory which we had now almoſt in our Hands; that thereby He might [promote] the Good of the People, [anſwer] the wiſhes of all good Men, and gratifie the deſire of the whole Chriſtian World. In which Affair I can't indeed enough admire His ſingular Prudence, and His Wiſdom that was ſalutary to the State. For the Peace was for no other reaſon deferred ſo long, than that in future it might be laſtinger and more firm. And let thus much be ſaid by the by, concerning the praiſes of the moſt Eminent Cardinal. Who having, during the War, never deſiſted from cheriſhing Learning and Learned Men in a moſt gracious manner; 'tis much more to be hop'd, that in the time of His Own Peace, He will embrace the ſame Arts with a choice Affection and Care: and will bring it to effect, that Our French, who for the Glory of Arms have been always eminent above other Nations, may now excel for the praiſe of Learning,

(a) He allowed Valeſius a yearly Penſion of 1500 Livers: which ſumm the Cardinal ſent him yearly, as long as he lived; and by his Will continued it till Valeſius's death: See Valeſius's Life, written by his brother Hadrian.

Learning, and in Studies of the beſt Arts. But, 'tis now time, that we ſhould return thither, whence we have digreſs'd. That third Copy therefore, which the Library of the Moſt Eminent Cardinal hath furniſh'd us with, is far the beſt and ancienteſt of all thoſe Copies of Euſebius which I have ſeen. For, whatever Emendations we found in other Copies, are all ſhown us by that Manuſcript: And many other Amendments occur in it, which I found not in other Copies, as the Studious Readers will be able to perceive from my Annotations. It is written in Parchment, [tranſcrib'd] about ſeven hundred years ſince, moſt neatly and alſo moſt correctly. It has likewiſe (a) Short Expoſitions now and then ſet at the ſide, ſometimes in an ancient, ſometimes in a more modern hand; which Expoſitions we have ſet down in Our Notes, at their due places. Many other things alſo are to be taken notice of in that Excellent Manuſcript. partly in the Accents, partly in the (b) Diſtinction or Punctation. For, as to the Accents, in that Manuſcript Words are often acuted, which in other Copies have a Circumflex Accent. For inſtance, πῶς and χαῖσαρ in that Copy are always acuted. But on the contrary, σφῖσι, which in other Manuſcripes is marked with an acute Accent, is Circumflected in that Copy. And this in my judgment is righter. But, as to the Diſtinction, which we vulgarly term the Punctation, this Copy is ſo accurately pointed, that from this very one Manuſcript you may underſtand the whole manner and knowledge of pointing, which is a thing of no ſmall moment. Indeed, before I had procured this Copy, I was not thorowly acquainted with the uſefulneſs and neceſſity of the Middle diſtinction; with which, that very one Book, diligently inſpected and examined, hath at length made me acquainted. But, we ſhall ſpeak more hereafter, concerning the Diſtinction. This moreover, I have obſerved in that moſt ancient Manuſcript, as often as a (c) full diſtinction, or τελεία στιγμὴ is ſet in any Line, the firſt Letter of the following Line appears without the order of the reſt, and touches upon the very outward Margin. And this is a ſign, that a new Chapter, or a new Period is begun after that final diſtinction. I have obſerved the ſame in the other Manuſcript Copies alſo. Indeed, in the Old Sheets of the King's Library, which contain Euſebius's Books concerning the Life of Conſtantine, I have found that 'tis always ſo, as often as a new Chapter is begun. We had, beſides, a fourth Copy out of the Library of that moſt illuſtrious Perſonage Nicholas Fuket, who bears the Office of Procurator General in the Senate of Paris, and at the ſame time manages the Præfecture of the Royal Treaſury, with the higheſt commendation. And theſe four Manuſcript Copies we have made uſe of, in order to our amendment of the Books of Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. But, we have compared the Books concerning the Life of the Emperor Conſtantine, with three ancient Copies. The firſt is that Copy of the King's, concerning which I have ſpoken above, in which Manuſcript, before the Books of Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, occur the four Books concerning the Life of the Emperor Conſtantine, written, though not in the ſame, nevertheleſs in an ancient hand. The ſecond place belongs to the Old Sheets of the King's Library. So I call certain Papers, which are digeſted into Quaternions; but they are looſe, and are not made up into the form of a Book. In theſe Sheets, beſides Euſebius's Books concerning the Life of Conſtantine, and the Oration of the ſame Emperor to the Saints, occurs the firſt Quaternion of the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory; whereof I have likewiſe made frequent mention in my Notes. All the reſt of it, by what accident I know not, is loſt. The Fuketian Library furniſhed us with the third Copy. Wherein, before the four Books concerning the Life of the Emperor Conſtantine, is prefixt Euſebius's Panegyrick, ſpoken to the ſame Conſtantine, in the thirtieth year of His Empire. This Copy, tho' of the meaneſt Antiquity, is nevertheleſs of the beſt Note, and in many places more correct and larger than thoſe two former, which Robert Stephens made uſe of in in His Edition. Beſides theſe Manuſcript Copies, we were aſſiſted by thoſe various Readings and Emendations, which learned Men had with their own Hands noted at the Margin of Robert Stephens's Edition. Of which ſort many Books are now to be found. But we made uſe more eſpecially of three, which are likewiſe often mentioned in our Notes. The firſt was Hadrian Turnebus's, which with great exactneſs He had compared with The King's, and The Medicæan Copy. But the Books concerning the Life of the Emperor Conſtantine, had been compared with an Engliſh Copy, either by the Hand of Hadrian Turnebus Himſelf, or that of Odo Turnebus. The ſecond Copy was Vulcobius's; which, becauſe Renatus Moræus a Phyſician of Paris had lent me, I am wont in my Notes to term Moræus's Copy. This Book contains ſome few other Emendations, beſides thoſe which occur in Turnebus's Copy. The third was Sir Henry Savil's Book, a Perſon of incomparable Learning; it was ſent me out of England by James Uſher Arch-Biſhop of Armagh. For, whereas I had perceived, that in Uſher's Notes on the Martyrdom of the B. Polycarp, a Manuſcrpt Copy of Euſebius's Hiſtory out of Sir Henry Savill's Library was quoted; and had found, that, by ſome paſſages produced by Uſher, that Copy was of the beſt Note; I made my requeſt to Him by Letter, that he would tranſmit to me the various Readings of that Copy; for I did ſuppoſe, that the whole Copy had been compared by him. But he wrote back to me, that the Copy it ſelf, written in ſilken Paper, had been given by Sir Henry Savil to the Oxford Library. But he preſently ſent me Robert Stephens's Edition, in the Margin whereof Sir Henry Savil had noted the Emendations taken out of that his own Manuſcript Copy. Nevertheleſs, as far as I have been able to conjecture, Sir Henry Savil hath not ſet all the Readings of the Manuſcript Copy at the ſide of that Edition; but thoſe only, which he thought to be good and undoubted. For ſome Readings are produced by Uſher out of that Manuſcript Copy, which I afterwards perceived were omitted by Sir Henry Savil. Farther, the ſame Sir Henry Savil, at the Margin of that Edition, hath written many Amendments, out of a Book of John Chriſtophorſon's; which Book Chriſtophorſon had compared with ſome Manuſcript Copies. Theſe are the Helps from Books, wherewith we were furniſhed, when we undertook to mend the Books of Euſebius's Hiſtory. But leſt any one ſhould perhaps think, that any thing hath been alter'd by us raſhly and at pleaſure, we do before all things deſire the Readers ſhould know, that we have done nothing without the conſent and authority of the beſt Copies. And ſo ſcrupulous were we, of making any Alteration in theſe Books, that when it appear'd moſt evidently, that the place was corrupted, we refuſed even then to favour and follow our own Conjecture. For proof hereof may be [produced] a place in the Cloſe of the Tenth Book of the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, pag. 399 [of Our Edition;] which runs thus: ὁ δ' ἀρετῇ πάσῃ θεοσεβείας ἐκπρεπῶς μέγιστος νικητὴς χωρσαντῖνος. We could very eaſily have reſtored the true Reading here, and inſtead of ἐκπρεπῶς, mended it in this manner, ἐκπρέπων. For ſo Gelaſius Cyzicenus, in (a) his Second Book, cites this place of Euſebius: nor is it otherwiſe written in Euſebius's Second Book concerning the Life of Conſtantine, Chap. 19; where this Paſſage is repeated almoſt in the very ſame words. Laſtly, no place is mended in this our Edition, concerning which I have not advertiſed the Reader in my Notes, and have not given an Account of mine Amendment.

(b) He means, the diſtinguiſhing the Periods one from another, and the Cauſes and Members of each Period, by points.

(a) Chap. 1. pag. 45. Edit. Paris, 1590.

Diſtinction, or Punctation, is not the leaſt part of Emendation; concerning which I muſt ſay ſomething, leſt peradventure the Readers ſhould be confounded by a new kind of Pointing, which was firſt brought into this Edition by me. Although, if we would ſpeak properly, this is not a new ſort of Diſtinction, but the oldeſt, and made uſe of by all the Ancients, as well Greek as Latin Writers: Which being wholly diſuſed and loſt by the negligence of more modern Authors, I have, at leaſt in part, endeavour'd to reſtore in this Edition. Thoſe Ancients indeed (the Figures of Letters being then newly invented,) wrote in one continued form, without any diſtinction at all. Which thing contained much of difficulty both in reading and pronouncing, the ancient Grammarians found out three Poſitures or Diſtinctions, whereby, as 'twere by certain Stations and Inns, the continued Journey of Speech might be diſtinguiſhed and divided. The firſt they termed ὑποστιγμὴν, that is a Sub-diſtinction: The Second μέσην, that is a middle Diſtinction: The Third τελείαν στιγμὴν, that is a final or full Diſtinction. Now they noted them by three Points placed in a different ſite. For a Point ſet at the bottom of a Letter, denotes a Sub-diſtinction: a middle Diſtinction, which the Latines have termed (b) Moram, is ſhown by a Point placed at the middle of a Letter. But that Point which is ſet at the head of a Letter, denotes a final Diſtinction. What the Import and Deſign of theſe Diſtinctions is, the Grammarians do inform us; Donatus, and Marius Victorinus, and Diomedes in his Second Book. Which Author laſt named, at this place ſhall be to us inſtead of all. Lectioni, ſays he, Poſituras accedere vel Diſtinctiones oportet, &c. To Reading muſt be added the Poſitures or Diſtinctions, by Græcians termed θέσεις: which, during our reading, give a liberty of recovering Breath, leſt it ſhould fail by a Continuation. Theſe are three, a Diſtinction, a Sub-diſtinction, a middle Diſtinction or Pauſe, or, as ſome will have it, a Sub-middle: The Diverſity of which [three,] is ſhown by three Points ſet in a different place. And after ſome few words: A Diſtinction is a token of ſilence, when, the Senſe being ended, there is a liberty of reſting longer. The Mark hereof, is a Point ſet above the Verſe, at the head of the Letter. A Sub-diſtinction is a Sign of a meet and convenient Silence, whereby the Courſe of Pronunciation (the Senſe remaining) is ſo ſtop'd, that what follows, ought to ſucceed immediately. The Note hereof, is a Point placed under the Verſe. A Pauſe is a ſmall Separation, interpoſed in the Continuation of Senſes, and poſſeſſes the middle place of a meet Diſtinction and Sub-diſtinction, in ſuch manner that it may ſeem neither perfect in the whole, nor omitted, but by a Signification of Staying, may want the beginning of another Senſe. And it attends this Office only, that by the ſhorteſt Reſpiration it may recover and nouriſh the Reader's Breath. For, in pronouncing every one ought in ſuch wiſe to be ſilent, that, becauſe the Breath it ſelf is changed by a kind of decay, it may afterwards be recovered. As thus;

(b) A Pauſe.

Ut belli ſignum Laurenti Turnus ab arce

Utque acres concuſſit equos, utque impulit arma,
Extemplo turbati animi.

For, there are many middle Clauſes of this Reading. Firſt, leſt thoſe be confounded, which are put as double-membred and treble-membred [Clauſes,] and the like. Then, that the (c) Emphaſis of the Words may be more eminently apparent and conſpicuous, which may be moved by ſome Affection, either by Indignation, or Commiſeration compared, &c. Such Marks therefore of Diſtinctions and Punctations as theſe, all the Ancients, as well Greeks as Latines, made uſe of in their Books: which alſo, as 'tis manifeſt, were ſtill in uſe, in the Age of Iſidorus Hiſpalenſis. For this we learn learn from His Origines, Book 1. Chap. 19. In Manuſcript Copies likewiſe, which are ſomewhat ancienter, the ſame way of diſtinguiſhing is always obſerved. But more modern Writers, whether by Unskilfulneſs, or a kind of Sloth and Negligence, have changed them all. And inſtead of a Sub-diſtinction, they have put (d) little Rods; for the mark of a middle Diſtinction, two Points: But they have caſt the Note of a final Diſtinction from the Head to the Feet of a Letter. Which ill way of Pointing almoſt all Printers have follow'd, except Aldus Manucius. For he in his Edition of Greek Books, whereof he printed almoſt an innumerable company, hath always retained that Punctation, which he had found in Manuſcript Copies. As to the Little Rods, I would not condemn them: For 'tis of very ſmall moment what Mark we ſhould make uſe of, to denote a Sub-diſtinction, provided that Mark be placed at the Feet of a Letter. Indeed, in that excellent and moſt ancient Manuſcript belonging to the Mazarine Library, whereof I have made mention before, I found a little Rod placed ſometimes for a middle, ſometimes for a final Diſtinction; that is, ſometimes at the middle of a Letter, ſometimes at the top. And not only by a little Rod, but alſo by a Sicilicum or ἁπλῆ, turned backwards, a middle Diſtinction, was ſometimes denoted, as Victorinus informs us in his Firſt Book of the Art of Grammar. But, whereas we now-a-days put a Point at the Feet of a Letter for a final Diſtinction, in my judgment that can in no wiſe be born with. For it does not only contradict Antiquity, but Reaſon alſo. For Reaſon requires, that a Mark placed in the ſame ſite, ſhould denote the ſame Diſtinction. A Point therefore placed in the bottom ought to ſignifie the ſame that a little Rod does, which is ſet at the bottom of a Letter. For, not the Mark it ſelf, but the Site of the Mark alters the Diſtinction. Whence 'tis made evident, that a final Diſtinction is not rightly ſhown by us, by our ſetting a Point at the foot of a Letter. Wherefore, 'tis not without reaſon that I have endeavour'd to reſtore the old way of Punctation in this Edition. I have indeed retained the Little Rod it ſelf, in regard it denoting a Sub-diſtinction it ſerves for the ſame purpoſe with a Point: but from the Authority of the Manuſcript Copies, I have, by way of Recovery as 'twere, put the middle Diſtinction into poſſeſſion of its own places. The Advantage and Neceſſity whereof, the Studious, I hope, will ſoon acknowledge. For, that middle Diſtinction does not only ſerve for this purpoſe, that breath may be taken in order to the continuing the beginning of another Senſe, and that the Emphaſis may be more eminently apparent and conſpicuous, as Diomedes writes; but alſo, to denote the difference of Perſons and Dignities. So ſomewhere in theſe Books, where the reading is ὑπισχόπων πρεσβυτέρων τε καὶ διακόνων, the Moſt Eminent Cardinal's Manuſcript, after the word ὑπισκόπων, adds a middle Diſtinction. Beſides, in many places I have ſet a Point at the head of the Letter, to denote a final Diſtinction: and would have done that every where, had not the force of old cuſtom diverted me from my Attempt. But, what I have in part only performed in this Edition, that (I hope) will at length be perfected by others endued with greater Learning and Authority, who ſhall in future publiſh the Books of the Ancients. And thus much may ſuffice to have been ſpoken briefly concerning Our Emendation and Punctation. Come we now to the Latin Tranſlation.

I doubt nor but there will be many who will admire, why, after three Latin Tranſlators of Euſebius, and thoſe not meanly vers'd in the Greek Tongue, I ſhould have made a fourth Verſion. To whom in the firſt place I anſwer thus: If after Rufinus, who firſt turned the Books of Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory into Latin, Muſculus might have leave to make a new Tranſlation; if again, after Muſculus, Chriſtophorſon might have leave to do the ſame, why ſhould not I alſo have the like liberty with others? Amongſt the Jews, after the Edition of the ſeventy Seniours, confirmed by the Religion of ſo many Oaths, by the Authority of ſo many Ages; firſt Aquila, then Theodotion and Symmachus, did each of them publiſh new Verſions of the Old Teſtament. Alſo, ſome Perſons are found to be the Authors of a fifth, ſixth, and ſeventh Edition, whoſe names are unknown: and all theſe Tranſlations Origen hath placed in His Hexapla, that they might be read by Catholicks. That therefore which the Jews were free to do in the Old Teſtament, why may not I have leave to do in Euſebius? Eſpecially, in regard 'tis leſs dangerous to attempt that in Euſebius, than in the ſacred Books of the Divine Scriptures. Indeed, many and thoſe cogent Reaſons enforc'd me even againſt my will, to undergo the burthen of this new Tranſlation. For, whereas by (e) Your Command and with Your Advice I had undertaken a new Edition of the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory; and perceived, that the Verſions of former Tranſlators, by reaſon of their frequent Miſtakes and ill Renditions, did in no wiſe ſatisfie the Deſire of Learned Men; as it has been (f) already declared by the Teſtimony of J. Curterius and Peter Halloixius: One of theſe two things was of neceſſity to be performed by me, that I ſhould either correct the old Tranſlation, or elſe make a new one. Farther, to correct the Tranſlation of others, as it is in it ſelf a thing troubleſome and difficult, ſo alſo it ſeem'd invidious. For, His own Praiſe and His own Honour, is from us due to each Perſon. They have done as much as in them lay, and by their own Pains have endeavour'd to lighten and leſſen our Labour. Therefore, the Work of each Tranſlator ought to be commended by us, rather than interpolated. Rufinus, altho' he follows the Senſe of Euſebius rather than his Words, is nevertheleſs neat and clean, and not unpleaſant to the Readers: And even on this very account highly to be commended, becauſe he was the firſt that beſtow'd the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory on Men of the Latin Tongue; whoſe Tranſlation the Weſtern Church has made uſe of till our own Age. Muſculus keeps cloſer to the words, and in tranſlating is ſhort and clear, and in many places more happy than Chriſtophorſon. Chriſtophorſon, as He is more diligent and learneder than Muſculus, ſo alſo is more verboſe, and has ſomething of the Stile of Cicero. Beſides, He uſed Manuſcript Copies in the making his Tranſlation; and was the firſt that publiſhed Euſebius's Panegyrick ſpoken at Conſtantine's Tricennalia, in Latin. Which the Geneva-Printers afterwards printed in Greek. Some body will be ready to ſay here; What need then was there of a new Verſion? whenas thoſe Tranſlators abound with ſo many and ſuch high Commendations. I rehearſe their Praiſes, but do not detect their Errors; which I had rather ſhould be diſcovered by the Teſtimony of others, than mine own. But, if any one will read my Notes, or ſhall have a mind to compare my Tranſlation with their Verſion, He will doubtleſs underſtand, with how many and how groſs Miſtakes their Tranſlations are ſtuft; and that 'twas not without reaſon, that you had ordered me to make a new Verſion of Euſebius. But, becauſe I am faln upon this Diſcourſe, not willingly but by neceſſity, I will ſay ſomething briefly concerning the Errors of former Tranſlators. For, ſhould I have a mind to reckon up all their Miſtakes one by one, my Diſcourſe would be ſtretch'd to a vaſt length. To begin therefore with Rufinus: Who knows not, that, at his pleaſure, he has added many Paſſages to Euſebius, has taken away many Paſſages from him, has changed many; and in moſt places is rather a Paraphraſt than a Tranſlator? For inſtance; In the Seventh Book he has inſerted a tedious Narrative concerning the Miracles of Gregory Thaumaturgus, which occurs not in the Copies of our Euſebius. The ſame Perſon, in the Ninth Book, rehearſes a Speech of Lucian the Martyr, ſpoken before the Judge in defence of our Faith: Which Speech the Copies of Euſebius do not acknowledge. He has omitted almoſt the whole Tenth Book of the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, in his Verſion. I ſay nothing here concerning the Chapters altered by him in the Sixth and Seventh Book, in as much as I have given the Reader notice of this thing, in my Notes. How many places of Euſebius are miſunderſtood and ill rendred by him? This is he, who of Zacharias the Prieſt, of whom mention is made in S^t Luke's Goſpel, has made us a Martyr of Lyons. This is he who hath confounded Biblias with Blandina. This is he who has made the moſt Noble Martyr Philoromus a Tribune of Soldiers, from his being a Rationaliſt. To what purpoſe is it to ſpeak concerning Muſculus, whoſe Verſions (for he has tranſlated other Writers alſo into Latin,) are not extraordinarily approved of by the Learned? I could, if I had a mind, expoſe his innumerable Miſtakes: Amongſt which this is a notorious one. Dionyſius Alexandrinus, in his Epiſtle to Germanus, which Euſebius records in his Sixth (g) Book, ſays, that he was taken by the Soldiers ἐκ τῆς Ἡλιοδύσμας, and was brought to Tapoſiris. But Muſculus believed Heliodyſmas to be a Town. For thus he renders it: Ego namque cùm Heliodyſmas, unà cum illis qui mecum erant, veniſſem, Tapoſirim à militibus ductus ſum. For I, after I was come to Heliodyſmæ, together with them that were with me, was brought by the Soldiers to Tapoſiris. Farther, the ſame Muſculus in his Tranſlation has wholly omitted Euſebius's Book concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine, which is ſubjoyn'd to the Eighth Book of his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory; for what reaſon I know not. For that Book of Euſebius's, is a moſt elegant one. The Tranſlation of John Chriſtophorſon remains [to be ſpoken of,] which very Verſion wants not its Blemiſhes. For to omit the Barbariſms which do frequently occur in it, his Tranſlation is too prolix and intricate, whilſt he either adds ſome Words to fill up the Period, or annexes his own Explanations in order to the clearing of an obſcure place. Sometimes alſo, of two Periods he makes but one, and puts two Chapters into one: In ſo much that the Diviſion of the Latin Chapters in his Tranſlation differs much from the Greek. Which thing, how much Trouble and Vexation it breeds in citing places out of Euſebius, all the Studious know. The ſame Tranſlator was indeed ſufficiently well vers'd in Divinity; but he was meanly furniſhed with the Skill of (h) a Critick, and with the Knowledge of Roman Antiquity. Wherefore, in the proper Names of Roman Magiſtrates, and in thoſe Matters which appertain to the Civil Adminiſtration, he is always out: For inſtance, in rendring the words ἡγεμών, στρατηγός, ἐπαρχικῆς τάξεως, and in other ſuch like terms. Laſtly, Chriſtophorſon has embodied Euſebius's Book concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine, (which in Robert Stephens's Edition, and in the Manuſcript Copies, is ſubjoyned to the Eighth Book of his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory,) with his eighth Book, becauſe he believed it to be a part thereof. Which Miſtake of Chriſtophorſon's, the Geneva-Printers having afterwards followed, that they might make the Greek agree with the Latin; of two Books of Euſebius's, have made but one. And let thus much be briefly ſpoken concerning the Errors of former Tranſlations, not with any deſign to diſparage or leſſen the Glory of any Tranſlator; but, that all the Studious may underſtand, that we had good reaſon for our undertaking a new Tranſlation. Which as I dare not warrant to be perfect and every way compleat, (for that would be too much confidence;) ſo I do boldly affirm, that it wants very many Faults, wherewith former Tranſlations do abound. Further, whereas three things are required in a Verſion; namely, that it be faithful, elegant and clear; I have made it my buſineſs, that no one of theſe ſhould be wanting in our Tranſlation.

(e) He means the French Clergy.

VALESIUS'S PREFACE.

The Tranſlation is followed by the Annotations. Wherein I had an Eye chiefly to two things: Firſt, that I might give an account of my Emendations, and might propoſe to the Studious the various Readings of Manuſcript Copies: Secondly, that I might clear the obſcurer paſſages in Euſebius, and might explain the ancient Uſages and Rites of the Church, by producing and comparing the paſſages of other Writers. To my Annotations I have ſubjoined (a) four Diſſertations. The firſt whereof is, Concerning the Beginning and Progreſs of the Schiſm of the Donatiſts. The Second, Concerning the Anaſtaſis and the Jeruſalem-Martyrium. This is followed by a diſputation about the Verſion of the Seventy Tranſlators againſt James Uſher Arch-Biſhop of Armagh. The Fourth is, Concerning the Roman Martyrology which Roſweydus publiſhed. And theſe are the things which with care and diligence I have performed in this Edition, in order to the illuſtration of Euſebius's Hiſtory. Which if to any one they ſhall peradventure ſeem ſlight and of little worth, let him think, that all things which are publiſhed in this kind of Learning, are in a manner of this nature, and are either valued or contemned according to the Affection and Stomach of the Readers. For, if they find a candid and ſtudious Reader, they are highly eſteemed: But if they ſhall happen to fall into diſdainful Ears, they are look't upon us nothing. Beſides, what but that which is very ordinary and mean can be expected, from me eſpecially, who by reaſon of my weakneſs of ſight am forc'd both to read and write by other Men's Eyes and Hands: And who, whilſt by reaſon of the greatneſs of the Labour I do always haſten forwards, have ſo haſtily dictated this whole work, ſuch as it is, that I have ſcarce had leiſure to read it over again. On which account I am the more to be pardoned, if perhaps in any place of my Notes I have not ſo fully ſatisfied the Reader's deſire.———

(a) Theſe four Diſſertations are publiſhed at the latter end of Valeſius's firſt Volume of the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtorians.

VALESIUS'S ACCOUNT

Concerning the

LIFE

EUSEBIUS CÆSARIENSIS.

CConcerning the Life of Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea, Acacius, his Scholar and Successor in the See of Cæsarea, had heretofore written a Book, as (a) Socrates does attest. But in regard this Book, together with very many others, is lost by the carelesness of Antiquity, we, by gathering together from this place and t'other the Testimonies of Ancient Writers who have spoken concerning Eusebius, to the utmost of our ability will endeavour to repair that Loss. Eusebius therefore was born in Palestine, about the Close (as 'tis likely) of Gallienus's Reign. That he was a Native of Palestine, is hence prov'd, because by the Ancients he is commonly called a Palestinian. So, 'tis certain, Basilius, Theodoret, and others do term him. And although he might have been thus Sur-nam'd from his being Bishop of the City Cæsarea, yet it seems to me truer, that he drew that Sur-name from his Country. Indeed, he himself does attest, in his First (b) Book concerning the Life of Constantine, that during his being a youth he was educated and conversant in Palestine, and that Constantine was first seen by him there, whilst he made a journey thorow Palestine in the Court of Diocletianus Augustus. Besides, in the Second (c) Book of the same work (where he records a Law of Constantine's, which he wrote to the Palestinians in favour of the Christians,) he does plainly shew himself to have been a Palestinian. For, after he has recited the Contents of that Law transmitted to the Palestinians, he adds these words. Τὸ μὲν δὴ πρῶτον ὡς ἡμᾶς καλαπεμφθὲν βασιλέως γράμμα, ταῦτα διετάττετο. These were the Constitutions contained in the Emperor's first Edict sent to Us. But whereas I have plac'd his Birth upon the Latter end of Gallienus's Reign; of this thing I have Eusebius himself for my Author. For speaking (in his Books of Ecclesiack History,) concerning Dionysius Bishop of the Alexandrians, he does attest that He had lived in his own Age, as may be seen in Book 3. Chap. 28. Wherefore, in regard 'tis manifest that Dionysius Alexandrinus departed this life on the twelfth year of Gallienus's Empire, Eusebius must of necessity have been born then, if his age fell on those times wherein Dionysius lived. The same may likewise be gathered from the Fifth (d) Book of his Ecclesiastick History, about the end of it, where speaking concerning Artemon's Heresie, he writes that Paul of Samosata had revived that Heresie in (e) his age. Lastly, relating (in his Seventh Book,) those things which hapned during the Reign of Gallienus, before he begins his Discourse concerning the Error and Condemnation of Paul of Samosata, he has these Words. (f) Ἀλλὰ γὰρ ἤδη μετὰ τοῦτο περὶ τούτων ἱστορίαν; φέρε καὶ τοῦ καθ' ἡμᾶς τοῖς μετέπειτα γνωρίζειν γενεὰν ὁποία τις ἦν, φράσωμεν. But now, after an Historical relation of these things, we will deliver to the knowledge of posterity an account of our own age. Whom he had for his Parents, is unknown to us, excepting that Nicephorus Callistus, following I know not what Authors, does tell us that he was begotten of the Sister of Pamphilus the Martyr. But in Arius's (g) Letter to Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia, he is termed the Brother of Eusebius Nicomediensis. And although by reason of his friendship he might be called the Brother, yet it seems truer to me, that he was either the near Kinsman or Cousin-germane of Eusebius Nicomediensis, especially in regard Arius, although many other Persons are there mentioned, yet terms only Eusebius of Cæsarea Brother to him of Nicomedia. Besides, Eusebius of Nicomedia was a Native of Syria. For he was at first Bishop of Berytus. Nor was it the usage then, that Strangers and Persons unknown should be preferred to govern Churches. What Masters he had in secular Learning, is in like manner unknown to us. But in sacred Literature he had Dorotheus the Eunuch, a Presbyter of the Antiochian Church, for his Master: of whom also he makes an honourable mention in his Seventh (h) Book. Although Eusebius at that place says only, that he had heard Dorotheus, whilst he expounded the Holy Scriptures in the Church not unfitly. Nevertheless, if any one has a mind (with Trithemius*) to conclude from those* those words of Eusebius, that Eusebius was Dorotheus's Disciple, truly I shall not very much oppose him. Theotecnus being at that time dead, the Bishoprick of the Church of Cæsarea was administred by Agapius, a person of eminent piety and large bounty towards the Poor. By him Eusebius was admitted into the Clergy, and entred into the strictest and most intimate friendship with Pamphilus, who at that time was eminent amongst the Presbyters of the Church of Cæsarea. Pamphilus was by Nation a Phœnician, born at Berytus, Scholar to Pierius a Presbyter of the Alexandrian Church, as Photius relates. Who (in regard he was inflamed with a singular love of sacred Learning, and with the greatest diligence imaginable, made a Collection of all the Books of Ecclesiastick Writers, and especially of Origen's ;) founded a most famous School and Library at Cæsarea. Of which School Eusebius seems to have been the first Master. Indeed Eusebius, in his (a) Book concerning the Martyrs of Palestine, writes in expres words, that Apphianus, who compleated his Martyrdom on the third year of the Persecution, had been instructed in the sacred Scriptures by him in the City Cæsarea. From that time Eusebius always lived with Pamphilus in the closest intimacy, and continued his inseparable Companion till his death: So dear to him, that from his Friendship he got the firname of Pamphilus. Nor did Eusebius love him whilst he lived only, but had a singular affection for him when dead also: in so much that after Pamphilus's death, he always made a most honourable, and likewise a most loving mention of him. This is attested by those Three Books which he wrote concerning the Life of Pamphilus the Martyr, which Books St. Jerome terms most elegant ones. The same is likewise gathered from many Passages which occur in his Ecclesiastick Hiſtory, and in his Book concerning the Martyrs of Palestine. Lastly, in his Second Book against Sabellius, which was written by Eusebius after the Nicene Council, he frequently commends Pamphilus the Martyr, altho' he suppresses his name. For even in the very beginning of his Discourse he says thus. Puto adhuc aures obstrepi meas à memoria beati illius viri, &c. I think my Ears are as yet struck by the memory of that blessed Man, who frequently made use of that devout word. For even your Ears do as yet retain the sound of that word. For I think I hear him saying, The only begotten Son of God. For this Religious word was always uttered by his Mouth. For it was the remembrance of the Only begotten, to the Glory of the unborn Father. Now, we have heard the Apostle commanding, that Presbyters ought to be honoured with a double Honour; those especially who labour in the Word and Doctrine. And at pag. 29. he speaks of him again in this manner. Hæc non nos extollunt, &c. These things do not puff us up, (b) remembring that Blessed Man. Now I wish I could so speak, as together with you I did always hear from him. But these words which are now said, seem to have been pleasing to him. For 'tis the glory of good Servants, to speak truth concerning the Lord; and 'tis the honour of those Fathers who have taught well, if their Doctrines be repeated. And again in the same Book, pag. 37. Hæc audiebamus semper à beato illo viro, &c. These words we always heard from the Blessed Man. For they were often spoken in this manner by him: Altho' some suspected, that he uttered these words with his mouth, but that in his Heart he thought otherwise. And indeed I remember with you, that I have heard from him, that he hath satisfied us with an holy Oath, that there was not one thing in his Tongue, and another in his Heart. And a little after. Sed nunc quidem paucis, &c. But now, let thus much be said by us in short, in memory and honour of that our Father, so good, so laborious, and every where vigilant for the Churches. For we have not made mention of his Stock, nor of his Education, or Learning, or of (c) the rest of his Life and Resolution. Which Passages in Eusebius (that I may not defraud any one of his Commendation,) were shown me by the most Learned Franciscus Ogerius. Now, from what I have said it may be evidently enough gathered, that Eusebius was joyned to Pamphilus by no (d) Tye of kindred, but by the Bond of friendship only. 'Tis certain, Eusebius, altho' he names Pamphilus in so many places, and boasts so highly of his friendship, yet never terms him his Kinsman or Relation. Yea, from Eusebius's own testimony 'tis plainly made out, that Pamphilus the Martyr was not Eusebius's Kinsman. For in the Close of his Seventh (e) Book of Ecclesiastick Hiſtory, where he makes mention of Agapius Bishop of the Church of Cæsarea; his words are these: Κατὰ τοῦτον ἐλλογιμώτατον αὐτῷ τε βίῳ φιλόσοφον ἀληθῆ, πρεσβείᾳ τῆς αὐτόθι παροικίας ἀξιωμένον, Παμφίλον ἐγνωμεν. In this Man's time we knew Pamphilus (a most eloquent Man, and a true Philosopher in the practises of his Life) honoured with a Presbytership of that Church. Whereas therefore Eusebius himself does attest, that Pamphilus was first known by him, then, it is sufficiently apparent, that they were not joyned together by any kindred or affinity. In these times hapned that most severe Persecution of the Christians; which being first begun by Diocletian, was by the following Emperors continued to the tenth year. In the time of this Persecution, Eusebius, in regard he was then a Presbyter of the Church of Cæsarea, resided almost constantly in that City, and by continual exhortations instructed many persons in order to Martyrdom. Amongst whom was Apphianus, a noble Youth, whose illustrious Combat our Eusebius does relate in his (f) Book concerning the Martyrs of Palestine. In the same Persecution Pamphilus was taken, and cast into Prison, where he spent two whole years in Bonds. During which time Eusebius in no wise deserted his Friend and Companion: but visited him continually, and in the Prison wrote together with him Five Books in defence of Origen. The Sixth and last Book of that Work he at length finished after Pamphilus was dead. That whole Work was by Eusebius and Pamphilus dedicated to the Confessors living in the Mines of Palestine, as Photius relates in his Bibliotheca, Chap. 118. In the time of the same Persecution, on account of some urgent Business of the Church, as 'tis probable, Eusebius went to Tyre. During his residence in that City, he attests (Book 8. Chap. 7.) that he himself was eye-witness of the glorious Combats of five Egyptian Martyrs. And in the Ninth Chapter of the same Book, he writes that he came into Egypt and Thebais, whilst the fury of the Persecution as yet raged; and that there he beheld with his own eyes, the admirable Constancy of many Martyrs of both Sexes. There are those who relate, that Eusebius in this Persecution, to free himself from the Troubles of a Prison, sacrificed to Idols: and that that was objected against him by the Egyptian Bishops and Confessors in the Synod at Tyre, as we will hereafter relate. But I doubt not but this is false, and a Calumny forged by by the Enemies of Eusebius. For, had so great a Crime been really committed by Eusebius, how could he have been afterwards made Bishop of the Church of Cæsarea? How is it likely that he should have been invited by the Antiochians, to undertake the Episcopate of that City? And yet Cardinal Baronius has catch'd up that as certain and undoubted, which was objected against Eusebius by the way of Contention and Wrangling, by his Enemies, nor was ever confirmed by any one's Testimony. At the same time, a Book was written by Eusebius against Hierocles. And the occasion of writing it was given by Hierocles of Nicomedia, who about the beginning of this Persecution, when the Churches of the Christians were every where demolished, insulting as it were over the disquieted Religion, in the City Nicomedia published two Books against the Faith of Christ, which he entitled, Φιλαλήθεις. In which Books amongst other things he asserted this, that Apollonius Tyaneus performed far more and greater Miracles than Christ; as Lactantius does attest in his (a) Seventh Book. But Eusebius contemned the Man, rested satisfied in confuting him in a very short Book. Agapius Bishop of Cæsarea being dead during this interval, and the Persecution being now abated, and Peace restored to the Church; by the general consent of all Persons Eusebius is put into his Place. Others make Agricola (who was present at, and subscribed to the Synod of Ancyra, on the Year of Christ 314,) Successor to Agapius. So Baronius in his Annals, at the Year of Christ 314; and Blondellus in his Apology pro sententia B. Hieronymi, Chap. 19. where he writes, That Eusebius undertook the Administration of the Church of Cæsarea after Agricola's death, about the Year of Christ 315. But those Subscriptions of the Bishops which are extant in the Latin Collections of the Canons, in my judgment seem to have little of certainty and validity in them. For they occur not either in the Greek Copies, or in the Latin Version of Dionysius Exiguus. Besides, Eusebius reckoning up (in the Seventh (b) Book of his Ecclesiastick History,) the Bishops of the chief Sees, under whom the Persecution began and raged, ends in Agapius Bishop of Cæsarea, who (says he) took a great deal of pains in that Persecution for the good of his own Church. He therefore must of necessity have sate Bishop until the end of the Persecution. But Eusebius was made Bishop immediately after the Persecution was ended. For when Paulinus Bishop of Tyre dedicated a Cathedral, some time after Peace and Repose was restored to the Church; He, together with other Bishops, was invited by Paulinus to its Dedication, and made a most elegant Oration before him, as we are informed from the Tenth (c) Book of his Ecclesiastick History. Now, this hapned before Licinius rebelled against Constantine, which fell on the Year of our Lord 315. About these Times Eusebius wrote those famous Books concerning Evangelick Demonstration and Preparation. Which Books, 'tis plain, were written before the Nicene Council, in regard they are by name cited in his Ecclesiastick History, which was written by Eusebius before that Council, as we have shown in Our Annotations. In the interim Licinius, who managed the Government in the Eastern Parts, incited by a sudden rage, began to persecute the Christians; especially those that were Prelates, of whom he had a suspicion that they shewed more of favour to Constantine, and put up Prayers for him. But Constantine undertook an Expedition against Licinius, and in a short time compell'd him, after he had been vanquished in two Fights by Land and Sea, to a Surrendry. And thus Peace was again by Constantine restored to the Christians, who inhabited the East. But a far more vehement Disturbance was at that time raised amongst the Christians themselves. For Arius a Presbyter of the City Alexandria, in regard he would publickly in the Church preach up some new and impious Opinions concerning the Son of God, and having been frequently admonished by Alexander the Bishop, would nevertheless persist in those Assertions, was at length condemned together with the Associates of his own Error, and was expelled out of the Church. Highly resenting this his Condemnation, he sent Letters, with a Draught of his own Faith, to all the Bishops of the neighbouring Cities: Wherein he complained, that he had been undeservedly deposed by Alexander, in regard he asserted the same Points that the rest of the Eastern Prelates maintained. Many Bishops imposed upon by these Artifices, and powerfully incited by Eusebius of Nicomedia, who was an open Favourer of Arius's Party, wrote Letters in defence of Arius, to Alexander Bishop of the City Alexandria, entreating him to restore Arius to his former Place. Our Eusebius was one of their number, whose Letter, written to Alexander, is extant in the Acts of the Seventh Oecumenical Synod, and is by us put amongst the (d) Testimonies of the Ancients. Eusebius Cæsariensis's Example being presently followed by Theodotus and Paulinus, the one Bishop of Laodicea, the other of Tyre; they interceded with Alexander for Arius's Restitution. Whose Letters, as patronizing his own Opinions, in regard Arius boasted of in all places, and by the authority of such Great Men, drew many Persons into a Society of his own Error; on this account Alexander himself also was forced to write Letters to the other Bishops of the East, whereby it might be made publickly known, that Arius, together with his Associates, had been justly condemned and deposed. Two Letters of Alexanders are at this present extant: the one to Alexander Bishop of Constantinople, in which Alexander complains of three Bishops of Syria, who agreeing in Opinion with Arius had inflamed the Quarrel, which they ought rather to have extinguished, and had rendred it fiercer than it was before. These three are Eusebius, Theodotus, and Paulinus, as may be collected from Arius's Letter written to Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia. The other Letter of Alexander's, written to all the Bishops throughout the World, Socrates records it in his First (e) Book. To these Letters of Alexander almost all the Eastern Bishops subscribed: Amongst whom the Prelates of chiefest note were, Philogonius Bishop of Antioch, Eustathius of Berœa, and Macarius of Jerusalem. Now, those Bishops who seem'd to be of Arius's side, in regard they saw themselves severely touch'd in Alexander's Letters, made it their business to defend Arius with far more of fierceness and vehemency: but most especially Eusebius Nicomediensis. For our Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea, together with Patrophilus and Paulinus, and other Bishops of Syria, concluded upon this only, that Arius the Presbyter should have a liberty of holding Assemblies in his own Church; nevertheless, that he should be subject to Alexander the Bishop, and should earnestly request of him that he might be admitted to Peace and Communion. The Bishops in this manner disagreeing amongst themselves, and some favouring Alexander's, others Arius's side; the Contention was incredibly heighten'd. To cure which mischief, Constantine assembled a General Synod of Bishops (such a one as no Age had ever seen,) from all Parts of the Roman World, in Nicæa a City of Bithynia. Of this Greatest and most Celebrated Council, Our Eusebius was not the least part. For he had both the first place in the Right-Hand (a) Side, and also in the name of the whole Synod made a Speech to the Emperor Constantine, who sat on a Golden Chair in the midst between the two Rows of those who sat together [in the Council;] as he himself attests in the Preface to his First (b) Book concerning the Life of Constantine, and in his (c) Third Book of the same Work. The same is likewise confirmed by Sozomen, in the First (d) Book of his Ecclesiastick History. Farther, when there was a great contest amongst the Bishops concerning a (e) Draught of the Creed, Our Eusebius proposed a Draught that was exactly true and plain, and which was commended by the consent of all the Bishops, and of the Emperor himself. But, in regard something seem'd to be wanting in that Draught, in order to confuting the Impiety of the new Opinion; the Fathers of the Nicene Synod judged these words as necessary to be further added, Very God of very God; begotten not made, being of one Substance with the Father. They likewise annex'd Anathematisms, against those who should assert that the Son of God was made of things which are not, and that there was a time when He was not. And at first indeed Our Eusebius refused to admit of the term Consubstantial. But afterwards, informed by the other Bishops what the Import and Meaning of that word was, he at length consented and subscribed to this Creed, as he himself relates in his (f) Letter to his Diocess of Cæsarea. Some affirm, that Eusebius, forced by necessity, and out of a fear of the Emperor, rather than from the Sentiment of his own Mind, had subscribed to the Nicene Creed. I might indeed be easily induced to believe that, concerning others who were present at this Synod. But, I can't think so of Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea. For after the Nicene Synod, Eusebius always condemned those who would assert that the Son of God was made of Nothing, as 'tis plain from his Books against Marcellus, and expresly from the Ninth and Tenth Chapter of his First Book De Ecclesiastica Theologia. Athanasius does likewise attest the same concerning him. Who (though he has often related that Eusebius Cæsariensis had subscribed to the Nicene Synod, yet) does never declare, that he did that dissemblingly and in pretence only. Had Eusebius subscribed to the Nicene Council, not heartily, but by fraud and under a colour; why did he afterwards send that Letter I have mentioned, to his Diocess of Cæsarea, wherein he profess'd ingenuously, that he had embraced that Faith, which had been published in the Nicene Council? After the Nicene Synod, the Arians out of a fear of the Emperor, were for some little time quiet. Resuming their boldness presently, after they had by subtilty crept into the Prince's favour; by all ways and arts they began to persecute the Catholick Prelates. Their first assault was made against Eustathius Bishop of the City Antioch, who was eminent both for the Glory of Confession, and was also accounted the Chief amongst the Assertors of the Nicene Faith. Him therefore they accuse before the Emperor, because he maintained Sabellius's Impiety, and because he had reproach'd Helena Augusta the Emperor's Mother. A numerous Assembly of Bishops is convened in the City of Antioch, in which presided Eusebius of Nicomedia, the Chief and Ring-leader of the whole Faction. Eusebius of Cæsarea was likewise present at this Synod. Eustathius therefore having been accused by Cyrus Bishop of the Berœans, because he held the impious Doctrine of Sabellius, and moreover an Accusation of (g) Incontinency having been framed against him, is thrust out of his own See. On which account a most impetuous Tumult is raised at Antioch; the People being divided into two Parties, some requesting Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea might be put into Eustathius's place; others desiring Eustathius their Bishop might be restored to them. And it had come to blows, had not a fear of the Emperor, and the Judges authority repress'd them. The Sedition being at length quieted, and Eustathius banish'd, Our Eusebius (although entreated both by the People, and by the Bishops also that were present, to undertake the Administration of the Antiochian Church, yet) refused to do that. And when the Bishops by Letters written to Constantine, had acquainted him both with their own [Vote,] and with the Suffrage of all the People; Eusebius wrote his Letters also to Constantine. Whereto the Emperor Constantine gave answer, and highly commended Eusebius's Resolution. Eustathius having in this manner been deposed, which was done on the Year of Christ 330, as I have remark'd in my (h) Annotations; the Arians turn the violence of their Fury upon Athanasius. And in the first place they complain of his Ordination in the Prince's presence: then, that (i) he exacted an Impost of a Linen Garment from the Provincials: that he had broken a sacred Cup: lastly, that he had murther'd one Arsenius a Bishop. Therefore Constantine, wearied with their most troublesome Complaints, indicted a Council in the City of Tyre, and commanded Athanasius the Bishop to repair thither, to make his defence. In that Synod Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea amongst others, sat as Judge; whom Constantine had a mind should be present at that Council. Potamo Bishop of Heracleopolis (who had come thither with Athanasius the Bishop, and some Prelates of Egypt;) seeing him sitting in the Council, is said to have accosted him in these words: [Is it fit,] Eusebius, that You should sit, and that the Innocent Athanasius should stand to be judg'd by You? Who can bear such things as these? Tell me, were not you in Custody with me during the time of the Persecution? And I lost an Eye in defence of the Truth; but you appear'd maim'd in no part of your Body, nor did you undergo Martyrdom, but are alive and whole. By what means did you escape out of Prison? unless you promised our Persecutors that you would do the (k) detestable thing, and perhaps you have done it. These things are in this manner related by Epiphanius in the Heresie of the Meletians. From which words by the by it appears, that they are mistaken who relate, that Our Eusebius had some time sacrificed to Idols, and that that was openly objected against him in the Tyrian Synod. For Potamo accused not Eusebius, as if he had sacrificed to Idols; but only his Dismission out of Prison safe and whole, had given Potamo an occasion of suspecting that concerning him. Nevertheless 'tis possible that Eusebius might have been dismist out of Prison by some other way, than that which Potamo has related. Farther, from Epiphanius's words it may, I think, be gathered, that Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea presided at this Synod. For he adds, that Eusebius being sorely vex'd at the hearing of these words, dismiss'd the Council. Yet from other Writers we have it for certain, that not Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea, but Eusebius of Nicomedia presided at the Tyrian Synod. After the Council held at Tyre, all the Bishops who had sat together there, by the Emperor's order betook themselves to Jerusalem, to celebrate the Consecration of that Great Church, which Constantine had erected in that place, in Honour of Christ. There Our Eusebius graced the Solemnity, by several Sermons which he made in the Church. And when the Emperor by most sharp Letters had summon'd the Bishops to his own Court, that in his presence they might give an account of those things, which by fraud and out of hatred they had transacted against Athanasius; Our Eusebius together with five others came to Constantinople, and certified the Prince concerning all Transactions. Then also he recited his Tricennalian Oration in the Emperor's own presence, in the Palace. Whereto the Emperor hearken'd with the greatest joy imaginable, not so much in respect of his own, as God's Praises, whom Eusebius has magnified throughout that whole Oration. This was the Second Oration that Eusebius spoke in the Palace, as he himself attests in his Fourth (a) Book concerning the Life of Constantine. For he had before made an Oration in the Palace concerning the Sepulchre of Our Lord: which the Emperor heard standing, nor could he ever be perswaded, though he was once and again entreated by Eusebius, to sit down in the Seat set for him; saying, 'twas fit, that Discourses concerning God be heard by persons standing; as Eusebius relates in the thirty third Chapter of the same Book. Farther, how dear and acceptable Our Eusebius was to Constantine, may be known both from these Matters I have mentioned, and also from many other Circumstances: For he both frequently received Letters from him, which occur inserted in the foresaid Books. Nor was it seldom that he was sent for to the Palace, and entertained at Table, and honoured with private Discourse. Moreover, Constantine related that Vision of the Cross, which he saw in the Heaven at such time as he was making his Expedition against Maxentius, to Our Eusebius; and shew'd him the Labarum, which he had [order'd to be] made, to express the likeness of that Cross, as Eusebius himself does (b) attest. And when he wanted (c) Copies of the Sacred Scriptures for the use of those Churches which he had built at Constantinople, he committed the Care and Over-sight of transcribing them to Eusebius; in regard he well knew him to be most skilful in these matters. Lastly, when Our Eusebius had dedicated a (d) Book concerning the Feast of Easter to him, that Present was so acceptable to Constantine, that he ordered that Book to be forthwith translated into Latin; and by a Letter written to Eusebius entreated him, that he would as soon as possible communicate the Works of this nature which he was upon, to the Studious in Sacred Matters. About the same time Eusebius comprized a Description of the Jerusalem-Church, and of the Sacred Gifts which had been consecrated there, in a small Book, and dedicated it to the Emperor Constantine. Which Book, together with his Tricennalian Oration, he had placed at the Close of his Books concerning the Life of Constantine. But this Book is not now extant. At the same time also Five Books were written by Eusebius against Marcellus: The last three whereof De Ecclesiasticâ Theologiâ, he dedicated to Flaccillus Bishop of Antioch. Now Flaccillus entred upon that Bishoprick a little before the Synod of Tyre, which was convened in the Consulate of Constantius and Albinus, on the Year of Our Lord's Nativity 335. 'Tis certain, Eusebius (in his First Book against Marcellus De Ecclesiasticâ Theologiâ, Chap. 14.) writes in expres words, that Marcellus had been deservedly condemned by the Church. Now Marcellus was first condemned in the Constantinopolitan Synod, by those very Bishops who had consecrated Constantine's Church at Jerusalem, that is on the Year of Christ 335, or else 336, as Baronius will have it. Indeed (e) Socrates acknowledges but Three Books of Eusebius's against Marcellus; those namely which are entitled De Ecclesiasticâ Theologiâ: whereas nevertheless, the whole Work against Marcellus, was by Eusebius comprized in Five Books. Farther, of all Eusebius's Books, the last seem to be those Four concerning the Life of Constantine. For they were written after the Death of that Emperor, whom Eusebius did not long survive. For he died about the beginning of Constantius Augustus's Reign, a little before the Death of Constantine Junior, which hapned when Acindynus and Proculus were Consuls, on the Year of Christ 340; as may be gathered from Socrates's Second (f) Book. Now, what Scaliger says, in his Animadversions upon Eusebius, pag. 250. of the last Edition, that Eusebius's Books against Porphyrius were written under Constantius Son to Constantine the Great, cannot so easily be admitted of by us, in regard 'tis confirmed by the Testimony of no ancient Writer. But what the same Scaliger adds in that very place, that the Three last Books of the Evangelick Demonstration, the Eighteenth namely, Nineteenth, and Twentieth, were written by Eusebius against Porphyrius; therein he does manifestly blunder. St. Jerome (g) writes indeed, that Eusebius answered Porphyrius in Three Volumes, that is, in the Eighteenth, Nineteenth, and Twentieth; who in the Twelfth and Thirteenth of those Books which he published against the Christians, had attempted to confute the Book of the Prophet Daniel. But St. Jerome does not mean Eusebius's Books concerning Evangelick Demonstration, as Scaliger thought, but the Books he wrote against Porpyrius, which had this Title, Ἐλέγχου καὶ ἀπολογίας, [Books] of Confutation and Apology, as may be gather'd from Photius's Bibliotheca. Farther, I am of opinion, that these Books were written by Eusebius after his Ecclesiastick History: And this I conjecture from hence, because Our Eusebius in the Sixth (h) Book of his Ecclesiastick History, where he produces a famous Passage out of Porphyrius's Third Book against the Christians, makes no mention of those Books wherein he had answered Porphyrius: Whenas nevertheless, he is wont to be a diligent Quoter of his own Works, and does frequently refer the Studious to the reading of them. But because a fit opportunity presents it self, I have a mind to make some few Remarks here concerning his Books of Ecclesiastick History. For on their Account chiefly, all this Labour has been undertaken by us. Indeed, much hath been written by Our Eusebius for the profit and advantage of the Catholick Church, and in confirmation of the Truth of the Christian Faith; partly against the Jews, and partly against the Heathens. Nevertheless amongst all his Books, his Ecclestick History does deservedly bear away the Bell. For, before Eusebius, many Persons had written Books in defence of the Christian Faith, and by most cogent Reasons had confuted the Jews Contumacy, and the Error of the Heathens. But there was no person before Eusebius, who could deliver to Posterity an History of Ecclesiastick Affairs. On which account Our Eusebius is the more to be commended, who was both the first that found out this Subject; and also, after he had attempted it, left it entire and perfect in every respect. 'Tis certain, although many have been found after him, who, incited by his example, have undertaken to commit to writing Ecclesiastick Matters;

ters; yet they have all begun their History from those times wherein our Eusebius had closed his Work: but the History of the foregoing times, which he had set forth in Ten Books, they have left to him entire and untoucht. Wherefore, should any one have a mind to term him the Father and Founder of Ecclesiastick History, truly that person would seem to give him this surname not absurdly nor without cause. Now, what way Eusebius applied himself to this Subject, 'tis not hard to conjecture. For, whereas in the Last Part of his Chronical Canons, he had accurately noted the Time of Our Lord's Coming, and of his Passion; the Names also of the Bishops who had sat in the four chief Churches, and of the famous Men who had flourished in the Church; and lastly, in their own Time and Order had digested the Heresies and Persecutions wherewith the Church had been disquieted; He was led by the hand as 'twere, by little and little to the writing an Ecclesiastick History; that he might handle those matters more largely and copiously in his Ecclesiastick History, which in his Chronical Canons he had comprized in a Summary as 'twere. Indeed he himself, in the (a) Preface to his Ecclesiastick History, does plainly shew that which I have said. Where also he requests, that Pardon may be granted him by candid Readers, if peradventure he shall not so largely and copiously pursue and finish this Subject: For [he says,] that he was the first person who applied himself to this sort of Writing, and first began to walk in a way which had not before been worn by any one's Footsteps. But this may seem to some persons, not so much an Excuse and desire of Pardon, as an Endeavour to procure Praise and Glory. Farther, notwithstanding it appears evident from Eusebius's own Testimony, that he wrote his Ecclesiastick History after his Chronological Canons; yet 'tis strange that Both those Works proceed to one and the same Limit, namely, to Constantine's Twentieth Year, which was the Year of Christ 325. That moreover may deservedly be wondred at, that although the Nicene Synod was celebrated on Constantine's (b) Vicennalia, yet no mention is made of it, either in his Chronicon, or Ecclesiastick History. For, whereas in his Latin Chronicon, at the Fifteenth Year of Constantine, these words occur; Alexandrinæ Ecclesiæ 19. ordinatur Episcopus Alexander, &c. Alexander is ordained the nineteenth Bishop of the Alexandrian Church; by whom Arius the Presbyter being ejected out of that Church, joyns many to his own Impiety. To confute the Perfidiousness of which persons, a Synod of 318 Bishops being convened at Nicæa a City of Bithynia, ruin'd all the subtil Devices of the Hereticks by the opposition of [the term] HOMOOUSIOS: 'Tis plain enough, that those words were not written by Eusebius, but were added by St. Jerome, who interpolated Eusebius's Chronicon, by inserting many Passages on his own head. For, to omit that, namely, that the mention of the Nicene Synod is here set in a foreign and disagreeable place; who can ever believe, that Eusebius would have spoken in this manner concerning Arius, or would have inserted the term HOMOOUSIOS into his own Chronicon? Which word always displeased him, as we shall see afterwards. How should Eusebius say, that there were three hundred and eighteen Bishops present at the Nicene Synod? when in his Third (c) Book concerning the Life of Constantine, he writes in most express words, that something more than two hundred and fifty sat in that Synod. Yet I don't doubt, but the Ecclesiastick History was finish'd by Eusebius some years after the Nicene Synod. But whereas Eusebius had resolved to close his History with that Peace which after Diocletian's Persecution shone from Heaven upon the Church, as he himself attests in the beginning of his Work; he designedly avoided mentioning the Nicene Synod, lest he should be compelled to set forth the Strifes and Broils of the Bishops quarrelling one with another. For Writers of Histories ought chiefly to take care of and provide for this, that they may conclude their Work with an illustrious and glorious Close, as Dionysius Halicarnassensis has long since told us in his Comparison of Herodotus and Thucydides. Now, what more illustrious Event could be wish'd for by Eusebius, than that Repose which by Constantine had been restored to the Christians, after a most bloody Persecution; when the Persecutors being every where extinct, and last of all Licinius taken off, no fear of past Mischiefs was now left remaining? With this Peace therefore Eusebius chose to close his History, rather than with the mention of the Nicene Sonod. For in that Synod the Divisions seemed not so much composed, as renewed: And that, not by the fault of the Synod it self; but by their pertinacious Obstinacy who refused to acquiesce in the most wholesome Determitions of the Sacred Council. And let thus much suffice to have been said by us in reference to the Life and Writings of Eusebius.

It remains, that we speak something concerning his Faith and Orthodoxy. And in the first place, I would have the Readers know, that they are not to expect here from us a Defence of Eusebius. For it belongs not to us to (d) pronounce concerning matters of this nature, in regard in these things we ought rather to follow the Judgment of the Church and the Opinion of the Ancient Fathers. Wherefore we will set down some Heads only here, whereon relying as on some firm foundations, we may be able to determine with more of certainty concerning Eusebius's Faith. Whereas therefore the Opinions of the Ancients in reference to Our Eusebius are various; and some have thought, that he was a Catholick; others, an Heretick; others (e) Δίλωτον, that is a person of a doubtful and wavering Faith; we must enquire, to which Opinion chiefly we ought to assent. 'Tis a constant Rule of the Law, in doubtful matters the more favourable and milder Opinion ought to be embraced. Besides, whereas all the Westerns, St. Jerome only excepted, have entertained honourable Sentiments concerning Our Eusebius; and whereas the Gallican Church hath enrolled him amongst the number of Saints, as may be gathered from Victorius Aquitanus, (f) Usuardus, and others; without question 'tis better, that we should subscribe to the Judgment of our Fathers, than to that of the Eastern Schismaticks. Lastly, Whose Authority ought to be greater in this matter, than that of the Bishops of Rome? But Gelasius, in his Book De Duabus Naturis, has recounted Our Eusebius amongst the Catholick Writers, and has recited two Authorities out of his Books. Moreover, Pope Pelagius (g) terms him the most honourable amongst Historians, and pronounces him free from all spot of Heresie, notwithstanding he had highly commended heretical Origen. But some body will say, that the Judgment of the Easterns is rather to be followed, in regard the Easterns were better able to know Eusebius, as being a Man of their own language. But it may be answered, that there are not wanting some amongst the Easterns, who have thought well of of Our Eusebius. Amongst whom is (c) Socrates and (d) Gelasius Cyzicenus. But, if the Judgment of the Seventh Oecumenial Synod be opposed against us, Our Answer is in readiness. For, Eusebius's Faith was not the Subject of that Synod's Debate, but the Worship of Images. In order to the overthrowing whereof, when the Adversaries a little before convened in the Imperial City, had produced an Evidence out of Eusebius's Letter to Constantia, and laid the greatest stress thereon; the Fathers of the Seventh Synod, that they might lessen the Authority of this Evidence, cry'd out, that Eusebius was an Arian. But they did this by the by only, from the Occasion and Hatred of that Letter; not designedly, or after a Cognizance of the Cause. They do indeed produce some Passages out of Eusebius, whereby they would prove, that he adhered to the Arian Opinion. But they make no difference between Eusebius's Books before the Nicene Council, and those he wrote after that Council; which nevertheless ought by all means to be done, to the end a certain and just Sentence might be pronounced concerning Eusebius's Faith. For, whatever he wrote before the Nicene Synod, ought not to be objected and charged as a Fault upon Eusebius. Farther, Eusebius's Letter to Alexander, wherein he intercedes with him for Arius, was doubtless written before the Nicene Synod. Therefore, that Testimony of the Fathers of the Seventh Synod against Eusebius, although it has the greatest Authority, yet seems to us a rash Judgment, before the Matter was heard, rather than a Synodal Sentence. But the Greeks may have leave to think thus concerning Our Eusebius, and to call him a Borderer upon the Arian Heresie, or even an Arian. But who can with patience bear St. Jerome, who not content to term him Heretick and Arian, does frequently stile him a Ring-leader of the Arians? Can he be justly termed a Ring-leader of the Arians, who after the Nicene Synod always condemned the Opinion of the Arians? Let his Books De Ecclesiasticâ Theologiâ be perused, which he wrote against Marcellus long after the Nicene Council. We shall find what I have said, that they were condemn'd by him, who would affirm, that the Son of God was made of things which are not, and that there was a time when He was not. Athanasius does likewise attest the same thing concerning Eusebius, in his Letter about the Decrees of the Nicene Synod, in these words: Καὶ πέπονθέ τι δεινόν. ὡς γὰρ ἀπολογούμενος, &c. And truly he was unhappy in that: For, to the end he might clear himself, he in future accused the Arians, because when they would maintain that the Son [of God] existed not before He was begotten, by this means they might deny Him to have existed before His Incarnation. And this is the Testimony which Athanasius gives Eusebius, who bore Eusebius a private Grudge. But St. Jerome, who had no Reasons of Hatred against Eusebius, yea, who had profited so much from his Writings; who had rendred his Chronical Canon, and his Book De Locis Hebraïcis into Latin; yet brands Eusebius with this Reproach, which even his most malicious Enemies never fastned on him. The Reason of which thing I am not able to find out, unless it be, that St. Jerome, having conceived an Hatred against Origen, beyond measure persecuted all the Defenders of his Opinions, and especially Our Eusebius. It must indeed be confest, that Our Eusebius (altho' he can't deservedly be term'd a Ring-leader of the Arians, yet) after the Nicene Synod was perpetually conversant with the Chiefs of the Arians, and together with them opposed the Catholick Bishops, Eustathius namely, and Athanasius, the principal Maintainers of HOMOOUSIOS. That also seems worthy of Reprehension in Eusebius, that altho' he always asserted the Eternity of the Son of God against the Arians, yet never heartily approved of the word HOMOOUSIOS. 'Tis certain, he has never made use of that Term, either in his Books against Marcellus, or in his Orations concerning the Faith against Sabellius: Yea, in his Second Book against Sabellius, he does plainly intimate, that that Word, in regard it occurs not in the Scriptures, is displeasing to him. For thus he says: Sicut ergo de his quæ possunt quæri, inertium est non quærere, &c. As therefore concerning those Matters which may be search'd into, 'tis Sluggishness not to enquire: So, in reference to them which there is no necessity of searching into, 'tis boldness to enquire. What things then ought to be searched into? Those which we find recorded in the Scriptures. But, what we don't find in the Scriptures, let us not search after. For, were it behoveable that they should be known to us, doubtless the Holy Spirit would have placed them in the Scriptures. And a little after he has these words: Let us not in such a manner expose our selves to danger, but let us speak safely. But if any thing be written, let it not be blotted out. And in the end of his Oration he expresses himself in this manner: Speak what is written, and the Controversie will be ended. In which words Eusebius, no doubt, touches upon the term HOMOOUSIOS. But now, if you please, let us hear the Testimonies of the Ancients concerning Eusebius: Wherein this is chiefly to be remark'd, altho' the Judgments of Men concerning Our Eusebius have been various, in reference to the Purity of the Ecclesiastick Opinions; yet all do unanimously give him the Commendation of most profound Learning. One only Person, Joseph Scaliger, has lived in our Father's Memory; who, hurried on with a rash Boldness and Lust of Reproaching, has endeavour'd to deprive Eusebius of this Glory of his Learning, which even his Adversaries never envied him. His (d) Words, if any one be desirous of knowing them, we have placed amongst the Testimonies of the Ancients; not that we have any great value for his Judgment, in this Particular especially; but with this Design rather, that his unreasonable Detraction might be exposed to publick view. Who having resolved to write Comments on Eusebius's Chronical Canon, in the very Entrance of that Work reproves St. Jerome, because he hath termed Eusebius a most Learned Man. And at first I had indeed determined, to have reason'd at large against Scaliger, and to have confuted his Opinion by a more copious Answer. But in regard that Matter requires a greater Leisure, and would peradventure be tedious to the Readers, it will be more opportunely deferr'd to another time.

GEOGRAPHICAL PART OF THE
Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories
OF
EUSEBIUS, SOCRATES, and EVAGRIUS,
And to the MAPPS thereunto adjoin'd.

FOR the better underſtanding the Geographical Part of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories herewith publiſh'd, it may be of uſe, at leaſt to ſuch as have but little inſight into Geography, to make the following Obſervations.

I. That it is very uſual to have the Names of Places ſomewhat varied by various Authors, and that eſpecially as to their Termination. Hence we find the ſame Place by ſome termed Cyzicus, by others Cyzicum; ſo Aſtacus and Aſtacum; Mopſucrene and Mopſucrenæ; Arca or Arce, and Arcæ. And ſo in other Syllables beſides the laſt, Sardica and Serdica; Emeſa and Emiſa; Cyrus, Cyrrus, and Cyrrhus, &c. And hither may be referr'd the different rend'ring of the ſame Word: For inſtance, the City, where the firſt General Council was held, is ſometimes render'd in Engliſh (literally agreeable to the Greek) Nicæa, ſometimes more ſhort Nice; ſo Antiochia and Antioch, Thracia and Thrace, &c. The ſame Greek Word is alſo differently render'd as to ſpelling, viz. Sardes and Sardis; Laodicæa and Laodicea; Apamea, Apamea, and Apamia, &c. From this Obſervation the Reader may eaſily infer, that he is not to look on Words, that are thus a little varied, to denote preſently ſo many various Places; and conſequently is not to expect all theſe Variations in the Mapps hereunto belonging.

II. Names of Places are frequently corrupted, or falſly written, through the Ignorance, or at leaſt Heedleſneſs of Tranſcribers. Here are not wanting Footſteps of it in theſe Hiſtories. To inſtance but in one place, Chap. 25. B. 3. of Socrates's Hiſtory, where we find mention made of the Biſhop of Zenæ, corruptly for Zelæ; of the Biſhop of Sippi, corruptly for Hippi, as Valeſius has obſerv'd; and of the Biſhop of Antros for Adra, as Valeſius conjectures; and of Εὐάγριος Σικελὸς, or as ſome Copies have it, Σικελῶν, which Reading Valeſius prefers, and ſaith, that Siculi is the name of a City in the Eaſt, Concerning which (adds he) I have yet met with nothing. Now if it it ſeems not ſo probable, that Ἄνδρα (as it is in the Greek) ſhould be writ for Ἀδρῶν or Ἀδρανὸς, as Valeſius conjectures; what if it ſhould be ſuppoſed to be rather written for Ἀνάρ, the Miſtake being but little, and ſo eaſie; and we have not only ſuch a Town as Ἄναρος mention'd by Ptolemy in Galatia, but we there find it alſo writ Andrus, or Antrus; and placed not far from Ancyra, the Biſhop whereof is mention'd in the ſame place, and on the ſame account by Socrates. And as to Εὐάγριος Σικελὸς, 'tis certain, that ſometimes the Weſtern Biſhops were upon ſome occaſion or other in the Eaſtern Parts, and therefore Σικελὸς may poſſibly be not only the common, but trueſt Reading, and denote that the ſaid Evagrius was a Sicilian Biſhop. And ſuppoſing Σικελῶν to be the true Reading, the ſame Interpretation may hold, as may be prov'd. But if we will with Valeſius rather ſuppoſe Σικελὸς or Σικελῶν, to denote here ſome City in the Eaſt; then perhaps we may meet with ſomething concerning it, when we find in Ptolemy, a City on the Euphrates, call'd Κικιλία; and we may ſuppoſe the Original Reading in Socrates, to have been Κικιλὸς or Κικελὸς, or Κικιλῶν or Κικελῶν) from which Σικιλὸς or Σικελὸς (or Σικιλῶν or Σικελῶν) is an eaſie change. And this Conjecture is made the more probable, becauſe there are here mention'd by Socrates the Biſhops of Samoſata and Urima, both which lay likewiſe on the ſame River, ſomewhat above Cecilia or Cicelia. To this corruption of Names, or elſe to the variation of Names obſerved under the firſt Head, ought to be referr'd (as I am inclin'd to think) the words Avares, or Abares, or Abari, or Abaſgi; which may not improbably have been the ſame People; and I find others of this Opinion. For which reaſon Abaſgi is not mention'd in the Maps, but only Abares.

III. The Names of Countries are, many or moſt of them, taken in different Senſes, according to the ſeveral Diviſions made at ſeveral times. Thus Illyricum, which once denoted only a Province lying on the Eaſt of the Adriatick Gulf, came in time to denote many and large Provinces. Hence the Reader is not to wonder, if he finds Sirmium ſometimes reckon'd a City of Pannonia, ſometimes of Illyricum; Sardica or Serdica, ſometimes ſtiled a City of Thrace, ſometimes alſo of Illyricum; namely, becauſe Illyricum in its largeſt acceptation included all Pannonia, and that part of Thrace, wherein Sardica ſtood. On the contrary, Syria, which moſt anciently denoted all that Tract, which lay from the River Euphrates to Egypt, between Arabia Deſerta Eaſtward, and the Mediteranean Sea Weſtward, came afterwards to be reſtrained ſimply and properly only to a ſmall part of it, namely about Antioch. Hence what is ſtiled by one Writer ſimply Paleſtine, by another is ſtiled Syria-Paleſtine; and the ſame City is reckon'd by one, as appertaining to Phœnicia-Libanenſis, by another to Cœleſyria, or as it is ſometimes placed Syria-Cœle, by a third, a City of Syria in general, &c. Now to have taken notice of all this variety of Diviſions in the Maps, would only have perplexed them, and ſo render'd them leſs uſeful. Therefore in them I have ſet down only ſuch Diviſions, as are generally made uſe of by the Eccleſiaſtical Writers. The others may be beſt learnt from the Notitia, which is (I think) intended to be publiſh'd with theſe Hiſtories; and alſo from the Diviſion of the Roman Empire, made by Conſtantine the Great; part whereof is to be ſeen in Valeſius's Notes, p. 332. 2. But becauſe the Knowledge of that Diviſion is of good uſe to the underſtanding Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, therefore I ſhall here give it the Reader all together in one view, ſo far forth as ſeems requiſite for him to know.

The Roman Empire was divided by Conſtantine the Great into Four General Parts, two whereof made up afterwards the Weſtern Empire, the other two, the Eaſtern, viz.

The WESTERN Empire.

(1.) The Præfecture or Government of the Præfectus Prætorio Italiæ, diſtinguiſhed into three Dioceſes, viz.	The Dioceſe of Italy, or Italian Dioceſe, comprehending	All Italy, the Iſles Sicily, Sardinia, & Corſica, the two Rhætia's, Prima & Secunda.
	The Dioceſe of Illyricum, comprehending	Noricum Ripenſe & Mediterraneum, Pannonia Prima & Secunda, Valeria, Savia, Dalmatia, & Liburnia.
	The Dioceſe of Africk, including	Africk Proper, Numidia, Byzacium, Tripolitana, Mauritania Sitifenſis & Cæſarienſis.
(2.) The Præfecture of the Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum, diſtinguiſhed into three Dioceſes, viz.	The Gallican Dioceſe, containing	All Old Gaul, with the Alpes, Graiæ & Maritimæ.
	The Spaniſh Dioceſe, containing	All Old Spain, with the Inſulæ Baleares, i. e. Majorca, Minorca, & Mauritania Tingitana.
	The Britannick Dioceſe, including	All Britain, that was under the Roman Government.

The EASTERN Empire.

(3.) The Præfecture of the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis, diſtinguiſh'd into five Dioceſes, viz.	The Aſian Dioceſe, comprehending	Aſia Proper, the Helleſpontick Province with the Iſles, Phrygia Pacatiana & Salutaris, Lydia, Caria, Lycia, Pamphylia, Piſidia, Lycaonia.
	The Pontick Dioceſe, including	Bithynia, Honorias, Pathagonia, * Galatia, Galatia Salutaris, Helenopontus, Pontus Polemoniacus, Cappadocia Prima & Secunda, Armenia Prima & Secunda.
	The Dioceſe of the Eaſt, comprehending	Cilicia Prima & Secunda, Iſauria, Syria Proper, Comagena or Euphratenſis; Syria Salutaris; Phœnice Maritima, & Libanenſis; Paleſtina Prima, Secunda, & Salutaris; Oſrhoëne, or Oſdroëne, Meſopotamia, Arabia Petræa, the Iſle Cyprus.
	The Dioceſe of Egyyt, containing	Egypt Proper, Auguſtamnica, Arcadica, Thebais, Libya Superior & Inferior.
	The Dioceſe of Thrace, containing	Europa, Thracia Proper, Hæmi-mons, Rhodope, Mœſia Secunda, Scythia Proper.

* This ſeems to be the ſame, that in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories is call'd Galatia the Leſs, whereof Ancyra was the Capital City.

(4.) The

(4.) The Præfecture of the Præfectus Prætorio Illyrici, diſtinguiſh'd into two Dioceſes, viz.

- The Dacian Dioceſe, containing
  - Mœſia Prima, Dacia Ripenſis & Mediterranea, Dardania, Prævalitana, and Part of Macedonia Salutaris.
- The Dioceſe of Macedonia, including
  - Achaia, Macedonia Parva or Proper, Theſſaly, Crete Iſle, Epirus Vetus or Inferior, Epirus Nova or Superior, and the other part of Macedonia Salutaris.

It is to be obſerv'd, that before the Diviſion of the Roman Empire between Honorius and Arcadius, to the Government of the Præfectus Prætorio Illyrici did alſo belong the Illyrican Dioceſe, which was afterwards taken from this Præfect, and added to the Government of the Præfectus Prætorio Italiæ, as is above-mention'd.

IV. From the foregoing Diviſion may be eaſily learn'd the Reaſon, why in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories, mention is ſometimes made of Mauritania, Libya, Africa, and ſo of Britannia, Gallia, and Spania, &c. in the ſingular; ſometimes of the Mauritania's, Libya's, Africa's, and ſo of the Britannia's, Gallia's, Hiſpania's, &c. in the Plural. Namely, Both ways of ſpeaking amount to the ſame, the former having a reſpect to the whole Countries conſider'd together, as denoted by their general Names; the latter having reſpect to the ſaid Countries, as diſtinguiſhed into ſeveral Diviſions or Parts, by ſome Epithet added to the general Name for diſtinction-ſake; thus we find in the foregoing Diviſion of the Empire, three Mauritania's, viz. Tingitana, Cæſarienſis, and Sitifenſis; two Libya's, viz. Superior, and Inferior, &c. And ſo Britain was divided into Britannia Prima, Secunda, Flavia Cæſarienſis, Maxima Cæſarienſis, and Valentia: Gallia into (G) Lugdunenſis Prima, Secunda, Tertia, and Quarta; Aquitania Prima, and Secunda mention'd by Socrates, &c. And here it may be of uſe to note, that altho' Gallia be ſometimes tranſlated France, and Hiſpania ſometimes Spain; yet neither does Preſent France include all Gallia or Old Gaul; nor Preſent Spain include all Hiſpania or Old Spain.

V. It is to be obſerved, that the ſame Diviſion has ſometimes ſeveral Names, whereof one is uſed by one Writer, another by Another, accordingly as the uſe of this or that Name prevail'd in the time wherein that Writer liv'd. Thus Libya Superior and Inferior, mention'd above in the Egyptian Dioceſe, are ſometimes ſtiled Cyrenaica, and Marmarica; and Cyrenaica again is otherwiſe ſtiled Pentapolis or Libya Pentapolitana. And hence it is, that in reckoning up the Parts of a Country, we often find them differently expreſſed.

VI. I am inclin'd to think, that the Title of the 12th Chapter of Euſebius's Second Book is ſomewhat corrupted. It ſtands at preſent thus, περὶ Ἑλένης τῆς τῶν Ὀσρηνῶν βασιλίδος, whereas I am apt to think, that either Ὀσρηνῶν is a corrupt reading for Ἀδιαβηνῶν; or elſe that the Original reading was only περὶ Ἑλένης τῆς βασιλίδος, and that τῶν Ὀσρηνῶν being added (as was intended, though erroneouſly) by way of Explication in ſome Copy, crept at length into the Body of the Title. We find this ſame Perſon in the beginning of the Chapter ſtiled ſimply ἡ βασίλισσα Ἑλένη; and at the very cloſe of the Chapter we are told, that τῶν Ἀδιαβηνῶν ἔθνος ἄνωθεν βασιλεῦσαι ἐλέγετο. And ſo ſhe is all along ſtiled Queen of Adiabene by Joſephus the Hiſtorian. But Adiabene, or Oſroëne were not the ſame Countries, but different.

VII. Whereas, on that Paſſage of Socrates B. 7. Chap. 22.—When the Biſhop of Chebron had ended his Life,——Valeſius makes this Remark, This City, and the Name of this Biſhop, are equally unknown to me: I am not aware at preſent of any thing, that hinders us from taking this City to be no other, than the City Hebron in Paleſtine, or the Holy Land, ſo famous in the Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament. Sure I am, that this City is writ both by the LXX Interpreters, and by Joſephus Χεβρών, juſt as it is here in the Greek of Socrates, excepting that the Accent is different, which is of no great moment, ſince a Miſtake therein is ſo very eaſie. To confirm this Opinion, ſeveral Conſiderations might be offer'd, was it needful.

VIII. Whereas Socrates, B. 2. Chap. 37. relates, that the Urſacians left Italy, went into the Eaſtern Parts, and arrived at a City of Thrace, the Name whereof was Nice, where they publiſhed a Creed;—— their Deſign being to impoſe on the ſimpler ſort of People by the likeneſs of the Cities name, namely to Nice in Bithynia: Neither Ptolemy, nor any of the Notitia's, or other Geographical Books by me, mention any ſuch City in Thrace. In the Peutingerian Tables, there is indeed a Nicæa or Nice, placed between Lariſſa and Theſſalonica, and ſo in the Road from Italy to Thrace, but then 'tis an Error in Socrates to place it in Thrace, when it lay in Macedonia, Weſt of Theſſalonica. If the City meant was not this, but did lie in Thrace, then perhaps it was no other than Nicopolis, ſurnam'd ad Neſum, which lay much in the ſame Road, and which is a Compound, denoting much the ſame as Νικαία πόλις or the City Nicæa or Nice diſtinctly. And ſuch Perſons, as would go about to impoſe on the ſimpler ſort of People, by the likeneſs of Names, would not ſtick at making uſe of ſuch a Quibble, as to denote Nicopolis by the City Nice.

And thus I have made ſuch Obſervations, as occurr'd to me, whilſt I was drawing up the Maps, and ſeem uſeful to ſuch Readers, as are leſs vers'd in the Study of Geography. I ſhall conclude, by taking this Opportunity to offer to the Judicious one Conſideration, viz. Whether ſince Geography does ſo much depend on the Revolutions of Governments, and the ſeveral Diviſions of Countries, that have been made thereupon, through the ſeveral Ages of the World; the moſt proper way to bring Geography to ſuch Perfection, as it is capable of, would not be this; namely, To begin with the moſt Ancient Authors or Writers, and from them to gather (as far forth as may be) the State of Geography in their times, then to deſcend to the Writers of the next Age or Ages, and by comparing theſe with the other, to learn what Changes had been made in Geography, during that Interval; and ſo to compile a Body of Geography, the ſeveral Sections whereof ſhould treat of, and by proper Maps repreſent the ſeveral Faces of Geography, according to the ſeveral ſucceeding Ages of the World. This, I conceive, to be as proper a Method as any can be taken, not only to perfect Geography, as far as may be; but alſo to convey to the Studious an eaſie, and withal diſtinct and clear Notion of it. Beſides which, there will alſo ariſe another very conſiderable Advantage from ſuch a Work, when drawn up; I mean this, That whatever Hiſtorian a Man ſhall take in hand, he need but be inform'd, in what Age, or of what Age the Hiſtorian wrote, and then by having recourſe to that Section of the foremention'd Body or Syſtem of Geography, which appertains to that Time, he may thereby be preſently taught to underſtand the Geographical Part of the Hiſtory he is reading. 'Tis obvious, that ſuch a Work would require not only a great deal of Pains and Time, but alſo a great deal of Somewhat Elſe, abſolutely neceſſary to furniſh the Compiler with thoſe many and chargeable Materials, that are requiſite for him to have. And 'tis as obvious, that the Conſiderations to be expected from a Bookſeller, will not amount to a ſufficient Encouragement for ſuch an Undertaking. And hence it comes to paſs, that as Hiſtory is eſteem'd a moſt uſeful part of Learning, and Geography one of the Eyes of Hiſtory, without which he that reads any Hiſtory, muſt be neceſſarily much in the Dark; ſo any King that has been ſo happy as to conſult both his own Glory, and his Peoples Good, by becoming a Promoter of Learning, hath hereupon judg'd it requiſite, among his other Penſioners of Learning, to have alſo a Regius Geographus. And I need not ſtand to acquaint the Learned, what Service has been done by ſuch to Geography, and ſo to Learning in general.

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE Ecclesiastical History OF EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS.

CHAP. I.

The Subject of this Work.

THE Successions of the Holy Apostles, together with the Series of times continued from our Saviour to our age, and how many and great things are said to have been done, agreeable to the Subject of an Ecclesiastical History, and who have eminently governed and presided over the Church, especially in the most famous Sees (a); also who in every age have set forth the Divine Word, either by preaching or writings; And also, what Men, and how many, and when, thro' a desire of innovation, falling into extream Errors, have published themselves authors of knowledge falsly so called, and sparing none, as ravening Wolves, have devoured the flock of Christ; and moreover, what evils and calamities befel straightway the whole nation of the Jews, because of their conspiracy against our Saviour; and again, by how great and what manner of means, and in what times the divine Word hath been impugned of the Gentiles, and what singular Men in every age have undergone the greatest perils in defence thereof, by shedding their blood, and suffering torments; and besides all this, the Martyrdoms that have happened in our own times, together with the merciful and benign assistance of our Saviour graciously exhibited towards every one: These things, I say, I determining to publish in writing, will not take my entrance from any other place, than from the very (b) Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour Jesus, who is the Christ of God. But truly even in the beginning we must modestly crave pardon; for we confess ingenuously, it is far beyond our strength to finish what we design and promise perfectly and compleatly, so as to omit nothing. For we taking this argument in hand first, adventure to tread a solitary and untrodden way, praying that God may be our guide, and the power of our Lord our present help and aid; but we can no where find so much as the bare steps of any men who have passed the same path before us: excepting only some small shews and tokens divers here and there have left us, particular declarations of the times they lived in, holding forth as it were Torches a far off, and lifting up their voices from on high, and calling as out of a Watch-tower to direct us what way we ought to go, and how without error or danger to order our discourse. Whatsoever things therefore we think will be expedient for this present argument, these we carefully chusing, as they are here and there by them mentioned, and culling and gathering the commodious and fit sentences of former Writers, as it were flowers out of Wisdoms Meadows, we will endeavour by an Historical narration to compact the same into one body, resting well contented to preserve from oblivion the Successions, although not of all, yet of the most famous Apostles of our Saviour in those Churches which

(a) I cannot approve of Christophorson's translation, who renders the word [παροικίας] Provinces. Neither am I pleased with the amendment of Curterius, or whoever it was that translated it [Churches.] Indeed παροικία signifies a Church amongst Christian Writers, and particularly in our Eusebius, not in one place. The original of which signification came from hence, as I judge; because the Church is as it were, πάροικος, a Stranger or Sojourner in the earth; but its country and freedom is in heaven. Hence we often meet with this phrase in our Eusebius, ἐκκλησία παροικοῦσα ἐν σμύρνῃ, Book 4. and B. 4. Chap. 23. And Clemens, in his Epist. to the Corinthians, writes thus; ἡ ἐκκλησία τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ παροικοῦσα ῥώμην, &c. But in this place of Eusebius we must not translate this word [παροικίας] Churches. For then the same word must be repeated twice in the same clause, thus — Who have governed and presided over the Church especially in the most famous Churches. I should rather translate it [Cities or Sees] or, with Rufinus, in celeberrimis locis, in the most famous places. Sometimes this word is taken for the whole Diocess, as it occurs in Eusebius in very many places; and in several other Authors: sometimes it is taken in a more strict sense, not for the whole Diocess, but for one particular Church: So Apollonius in his Book against the Cataphrygians, whose Words Eusebius quotes Chap. 18. B. 5. In both these senses the word is used amongst the Latins. See Jac. Sermondus in his notes on the last Epistle of Sidonius. Vales. See J. G's Notes on Ridley's view of the Civil Law. p. 152. Edit. Oxford, 1634.

(b) Whatsoever our Saviour did on earth in order to the procuring the salvation of mankind, that the antient Greek Fathers called οἰκονομίαν. Therefore [ἡ πρώτη τοῦ Χριστοῦ οἰκονομία] which is the phrase here us'd, signifies the Incarnation; as the last οἰκονομία is His passion. For they are mistaken who think that οἰκονομία signifies nothing else but the Incarnation. For this word is taken in a larger sense, and comprehends the whole Life of Christ among Men. Nicephorus therefore (B. 1. Chap. 2.) has rightly us'd, instead of this phrase here in Eusebius, this [τὴν ἐν σαρκὶ πολιτείαν] i. e. His conversation in the Flesh. In this sense Justin Martyr uses this word, in his disputation adversus Tryphon. p. 331. Clemens in the 6. of his Stromat. And Ireneus, Lib. 1. Cap. 10. calls the passion of Christ οἰκονομίαν. So Chrysostom in his second Homily on Matt. and Cyrill, in his 6. B. against Julian, pag. 213. and Origen, in the beginning of his 11 Tome of his Commentaries on John. Vales.

then were eminent, and are ſtill renowned. I ſuppoſe that I have taken in hand a ſubject very neceſſary, becauſe I have not found any Eccleſiaſtical Writer which hath hitherto employ'd any diligence in a work of this nature; I hope alſo it will appear a moſt profitable work to thoſe who prize the uſeful knowledge of Hiſtory. And indeed I heretofore wrote an Epitome of theſe things, when I compiled my (c) Chronical Canons; but the more ample declaration hereof I now purpoſe to undertake. And the beginning of my narration (as I ſaid) will I take from the (d) Diſpenſation of our Saviour Chriſt, and from his (e) Divinity, the conception whereof far exceeds the reach of human capacity. For it is requiſite for him that would commit to writing an Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, thence to begin, even from the incarnation of Chriſt, diviner than it ſeemeth to many, in as much as from him we are honour'd with the name of Chriſtians.

(c) In the Maz. M.S. I found this Scholion written in the Margin [σημείωσαι ὅτι πρότερον εἶχον οἱ Χρονικοὶ Κανόνες αὐτῶ] that is, Obſerve that the Chronical Canons were firſt written by Euſebius. Valeſ.

(d) There being in Chriſt a twofold nature, the one Divine, the other Humane, which conjoined make one perſon: as often as He is treated of, the diſcourſe muſt be divided into two parts. And thoſe things which are ſpoken of His Humanity belong to the οἰκονομία, as we ſaid before; But thoſe which are ſpoken of His Divinity are to be referred to the Θεολογία (which are the two terms here uſed by Euſebius.) Thus Greg. Nazian. in his 38. Orat. upon Chriſt's birth, diſtinguiſhes the Oeconomia from the Theologia in theſe words, Ταῦτά μοι περὶ Θεοῦ πεφιλοσοφήσθω ταυνῦ· ἤδη γὰρ ὑπὲρ ταῦτα καιρός· ὅτι μὴ Θεολογία τὸ προκείμενον ἡμῖν, ἀλλ' οἰκονομία. And Chryſoſtome, in his Sermon De ſigillis which is in his ſixth Tome, ſays, that the three former Evangeliſts, being to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt to all Nations, began their diſcourſe from his οἰκονομία· but, that John, after them three, applied himſelf to the explicating of his Θεολογία; and took the beginning of his diſcourſe from the Divinity of Chriſt. Whence it appears why Euſebius here uſed theſe words [Τῆς χρ τὸν Χριστὸν ἐπινοουμένης οἰκονομίας τε καὶ Θεολογίας.] For when we ſpeak of Chriſt, we muſt neceſſarily underſtand His two Natures. Valeſ.

(e) The Antients called that Theologicen, which we now commonly Stile Theologiam; Jerom in his 155. Epiſt. Ad Paulam Urbicam—— Aut de Logicâ pro quâ noſtri Theologicen ſibi Vindicant; ſo its written in the old M. S. of Henricus Memmius (not as it is now commonly printed, Theoricen, without any ſenſe) which I have heretofore ſeen. After the ſame manner Pliny called that Geometricen, and Magicen, which we now call Geometriam and Magiam. In the Books of Jerome you will never find it termed Theologiam, but in Greek Θεολογίαν. See him on Chap. 40. Ezechiel. Valeſ.

CHAP. II.

A brief Summary concerning the Præ-exiſtence and Divinity of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

(a) The Maz. Med. and Fuk. M.SS. begin the firſt Chap. at theſe Words, with this Title [Τίς ἡ τῆς ἐπαγγελίας ὑπόθεσις.] The ſame is obſerv'd in the Edit. of Robert Stephens, who has throughout the whole work, followed the King's M. S. in the Stile, or Text of the Chapters, but the Medicæan M. S. in the Titles of the Chapters. But any one may ſee that this Title is altogether unmeet for this place. Chriſtophorſon therefore rightly ſet it at the beginning of this Book; and here began the ſecond Chapter; whom we have willingly followed. Valeſ.

(a) WHereas therefore there is in Chriſt a twofold Nature, the one reſembling the Head of the Body, by which He is underſtood to be God; the other rightly compared to the feet, by which he hath put on our humane nature, ſubject to like paſſions with us, for the ſake of our Salvation; the ſeries of our ſubſequent narration will be perfect and entire, if we begin the declaration of the diſcourſe of the whole Hiſtory concerning him, from thoſe Heads which are the chief and principal. Hereby alſo both the Antiquity and divine Dignity of Chriſtianity will be manifeſtly declar'd, againſt them which ſuppoſe this Religion new, and ſtrange, of yeſterday and never before apparent. But to declare the Generation, Dignity, Eſſence, and Nature of Chriſt, no ſpeech can ſufficiently ſerve. Wherefore alſo the Holy Ghoſt in the Prophets ſaith; His Generation who ſhall be able to declare? For the Father no man hath known but the Son; neither at any time hath any fully known the Son, but the Father alone which begat him. That Light that ſhone before the world; that Intellectual and Eſſential Wiſdom that was before all ages; the Living God, the Word, who was in the beginning with the Father, who but the Father alone can clearly and perfectly comprehend? Him, who is before every creature and workmanſhip, whether viſible or inviſible, the firſt and only begotten Son of God, chief Captain of the rational and immortal hoſt in heaven, the Angel of the Great Council, the (b) Finiſher of the ſecret will of the Father, maker and worker of all things together with the Father, who after the Father, is cauſe and author of all things, the true and only begotten Son of God, Lord, God, and King of all Creatures, receiving dominion and rule from the Father, together with divinity, power, and honour. For, according to the myſtical and divine expreſſions of the Scriptures concerning him; In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. All things were made by him, and without him nothing was made that was made. And the ſame, great Moſes, who is the moſt ancient of all the Prophets, when he deſcribes by inſpiration of the Holy Spirit the Creation and Diſpoſition of the univerſe, doth ſhew, to wit, that God the Framer of the world and Architect of All, granted to Chriſt himſelf, and to none other, that is, to his divine and only begotten Word, the making of inferior creatures, and that he conferr'd with him about the creation of man; for God ſaid, ſaith he, Let us make man after our own image and likeneſs. And with this ſaying agreeth another Prophet, thus ſpeaking of God in Hymns, He ſpake and they were made, He commanded and they were created. He introduceth the Father and Maker, commanding as univerſal Lord, with his Royal beck; but the Word of God next to him, (not different from him who is preached by us) in all things (c) miniſtring to his Fathers commands. Therefore from the firſt original of mankind, all who are ſaid to have been eminent for righteouſneſs and the virtues of Religion, both about the time of Moſes that great worſhipper, and before him, eſpecially Abraham and his ſons, and as many as in the times following were accounted juſt; and the Prophets alſo which contemplated with the pure eyes of the mind, have acknowledg'd him, and have attributed to him, as to the Son of God, due honour. And he being in no wiſe ſlothful about his Father's worſhip, (d) was appointed a maſter to teach all men the knowledge of his Father. (e) The Lord God therefore appear'd in the likeneſs of man unto Abraham, as he ſat at the Oak of Mamre; but he forthwith falling down upon his face, altho' with the outward eye he beheld but man, worſhip'd him as God, and made ſupplication to him as Lord. And that he was not ignorant who he was, he profeſſeth when he uttereth theſe words, O Lord, which judgeth the whole earth, wilt not thou judge rightly? For if it be contrary to reaſon

(c) In the Med. and Savil. M.SS. There is this Scholion in the Margin at theſe words [οὐκ ἐπιδέχεται ὁ τῶ πατρὸς ὁμοούσιος λόγος, ἀλλὰ συνδημιουργῶν τὴν κτίσιν, ὡς φύσει θεὸς καὶ ἰσότιμος] i. e. The Word of the Father, being of the ſame ſubſtance with the Father, is not ſubject to the Father, but together with him framed the Creation, as being by Nature God, and equal to the Father in honour. Valeſ.

(d) Or, is appointed, or, made. Valeſ.

(e) At theſe words the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil. MSS. begin the ſecond Chapter; to which agrees Robert Stephens's Edit. But we, following Chriſtophorſon, have otherwiſe diſtinguiſhed the Chapters: For which we gave the reaſon before. Valeſ.

reason that either the unbegotten and immutable (f) person or nature of God Almighty should transform himself into the likeness of man, and so by an appearance in a bodily shape deceive the eyes of the beholders; or that the Scripture should feign such things falsly; then that God and Lord, who judgeth the whole earth, and executeth judgment, appearing in the shape of man, who else can he be call'd, (for it is not lawful to say it of the first Author of all things) but only his pre-existent Word? Of whom also it is said in the Psalms, He sent forth his Word and healed them, and delivered them from their destructions. The same Moses plainly calleth Lord, next after the Father, saying, The Lord rained brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven upon Sodom and Gomorrah. The same doth the Divine Scripture call God, appearing again unto Jacob in the figure of a man, and saying unto Jacob, Thy name shall be no more called Jacob, but Israel shall be thy name, because thou hast prevailed with God. At which time Jacob named that place the Vision of God, saying, For I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved. Moreover, neither is it lawful once to surmise that the apparitions of God in the Scripture may be attributed to the inferior Angels and Ministers of God: for neither doth the Scripture, if at any time any of them appeared unto men, conceal the same; expresly saying, not that God, or the Lord, but that Angels spake; which may easily be confirm'd by innumerable testimonies. This same also doth Jesus the Successor of Moses term Chief Captain of the great power of the Lord, as Prince of Celestial Angels, and Arch-Angels, and all supernatural Powers, and as being the Power and Wisdom of the Father, and to whom the second place in the rule and government of all things is committed, when as he beheld them in no other form or figure than of Man. For thus it is written; And it hapned when Joshua was in Jericho, he lifted up his eyes, and behold a man standing over against him, having a naked sword in his hand. And Joshua coming unto him said, Art thou on our side, or on our adversaries? And he said unto him, As Chief Captain of the Host of the Lord I am now come hither. And Joshua fell on his face to the earth, and said unto him, Lord, what commandest thou thy servant? And the Captain of the Lords host said unto Joshua, Loose thy shooe from off thy foot; for the place where thou standest is an holy place. By these words thou may'st by an attentive consideration perceive, that this person did not differ (g) from him who deliver'd his Oracles to Moses. For of him also the Scripture speaketh the same words; When the Lord saw that that he came for to see, God called to him out of the midst of the bush, and said, Moses, Moses; and he answered, what is it? And he said, come not nigh hither; put thy shooes off thy feet, for the place where thou standest is holy ground. And he said unto him, I am the God of thy fathers; the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Now that there is a certain Essence living and subsisting before the foundations of the world were laid, which ministred unto the Father and the God of all at the creation of all creatures, termed the Word, and the Wisdom of God; beside the before produc'd demonstrations, Wisdom herself, in her proper person by Solomon plainly speaking and delivering her mysteries after this manner, is to be heard: I Wisdom have fixed a Tabernacle: Council, Knowledge and Understanding I have by calling allured unto me. Through me Kings do reign, and Princes decree justice. Through me Princes bear rule on earth. To this she addeth, The Lord himself fashioned me the beginning of his ways, for the accomplishing of his works; I have been ordained before the foundations of the world were laid, and from the beginning: or ever the earth was made, before the well-springs flowed out, before the foundations of the mountains were firmly set, and before all hills, begat he me. When he spread and prepared the heavens, I was present with him; and when he bound in due order the depths under heaven I was by, composing all things; I was she in whom he daily delighted; rejoycing continually before his face, when he rejoyced at the perfect finishing of the world. That therefore the Word of God subsisted before all things, and that to some he appear'd, tho' not to all men; let thus much suffice at this time to have been by us briefly deliver'd. (h) Now for what cause he was not preach'd of old unto all men, and unto all nations as now he is, thus it shall evidently appear: That ancient Generation of men was not able to receive the most wise and most excellent Doctrine of Christ. For immediately in the very beginning, after that primitive happy state of life, the first man, being careless of the commandment of God, fell into this mortal and frail life, and chang'd this cursed earth for those heavenly delights and pleasures of old. And his posterity, when they had repleniſh'd this world, appear'd far worse, one or two excepted, they gave admission to certain savage and brutish manners, and led a life not worthy to be call'd life: And moreover they busied not their minds to erect either City or Common-wealth, nor to profit in Arts or Sciences. They had not amongst them so much as the name either of Laws or Statutes, or moreover of Virtue, or Philosophy; but wandring in deserts, they lived like wild and fierce Savages: they corrupted their natural understanding, and the seeds of reason and gentleness sown in man's mind, with their excessive wilful malice, yielding up themselves wholly to all abominable wickedness: some-

(f) Valesius, in his Note on this place says that [ουσιαν Θεου, the Essence of God] is here taken for [Hypostasis,] i. e. the Person of God the Father; for so (continues he) the Ecclesiastical Writers before the Nicene Council used to speak; he translates it [Naturam] nature. For confirmation of which he quotes Photius's Bibliotheca, cap. 119. See Photii Biblioth. cap. 119. pag. 300. Edit. David. Hoescel. 1611.

(g) Eusebius would here prove, that he who appeared to Joshua the Son of Nun, and called himself the Captain of the Host of the Lord, was the same that appeared to Moses in the Bush. Now he concludes this from hence, because this Captain of the Lord's Host used the same Words to Joshua, that God did to Moses in the Bush. So, before Eusebius, supposed Justin Martyr, in his Disputat. adversus Tryphon. and others, as Theodoret witnesses, in his questions on the Book of Joshua. But the rest of the Fathers thought this Captain of the Host of the Lord was not the Son of God, but rather Michael the Arch-Angel. In the most antient Maz. M. S. there is at these words, a Scholion put, which I thought good here to translate. But the Church, O holy Eusebius, thinks otherwise concerning this, and not as thou dost. For him that appeared to Moses in the Bush, the Church concludes to be God; but him that appeared to Moses's successor in Jericho, to whom the presidency over the Hebrews was allotted, who had his sword drawn, and commanded Joshua to put off his shooe, him, I say, the Church supposes to be Michael the Arch-Angel: And it's manifest that it thinks righter than thou. Whence is this gathered? God, that appeared in the Bush in the form of Fire, being asked by his servant Moses, who he was, most evidently declared this unto him, That he was God. But he that appeared to Joshua, in no wise stiles himself God, but calls himself God's chief Captain. But this Dignity being inferior to the supream Power and Divinity, and being not Regal, but belonging to a General, as one would say..... The rest, by reason of the great age of the M. S. could not be read, which indeed is great pity. For it is both amost elegant Scholion, and also written by the hand of that very Antiquary who wrote out the M. S. that is, by a most learned and antient hand. Vales.

(h) The Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. begin the third Chapter at these words, to which agrees the Edit. of Robert Stephens. But in that I saw the title of the third Chapter did not agree with this place, I judg'd it should be placed lower; which also Christophorson did. Vales.

times they defiled one anothers bodies, ſometimes they ſhed one anothers blood, and ſometimes they ſpared not to devour one anothers fleſh, yea they audaciouſly undertook to wage war with God, and attempted thoſe Gigantick combats ſo much talk'd of, determining in their minds, (i) to pile up the earth in manner of a bulwark, and ſo to ſcale heaven; and, ſuch was their outragious madneſs, they prepared to give battle to God himſelf who is over all. Wherefore, they behaving themſelves on this manner, God the overſeer of all things came upon them with floods and fiery deſtructions, as if they had been a wild thicket overſpreading the whole earth: alſo he cut them off with continual famines and peſtilences, with wars and thunderbolts from heaven; repreſſing with moſt ſharp puniſhments that grievous and moſt pernicious malady, as it were, of their ſouls Moreover, when this (k) fulneſs of wickedneſs was now come to its height, and had in a manner ſpread it ſelf over all, ſhadowing and darkning the minds almoſt of all men, as it were a certain grievous and dead fit of drunkenneſs; then that Firſt-begotten and (l) Pre-exiſtent Wiſdom of God, and the ſame Word that was in the beginning with God, out of his ſuperabundant loving kindneſs unto Man, appear'd ſometimes by viſion of Angels unto the inhabiters on earth, ſometimes by himſelf, as the ſaving power of God, unto ſome one or two of the Ancients that were belov'd of God, in no other form or figure than that of Man: for otherwiſe it could not have been. After that by them the ſeeds of God's worſhip were now ſown and ſcatter'd amidſt the multitude of men, and that whole nation, which originally deſcended from the Hebrews, had now addicted themſelves to the worſhip of God, He, by the Prophet Moſes, deliver'd unto them, as unto a multitude, yet (m) corrupted and tainted with old cuſtoms, figures, and ſigns of a kind of myſtical Sabbath, and Circumciſion, and Introductions unto other intelligible contemplations, but not the perfect and plain initiation into the ſacred Doctrines. But when the Law, famous among them, was publiſh'd abroad, and diffuſed, like a moſt ſweet odour amongſt all men, and thereby many of the Gentiles then had their (n) minds and manners civilized by Law-makers and Philoſophers every where, and their rude and brutiſh ſavageneſs chang'd into a meek and mild temper and behaviour, ſo that there enſued perfect peace and friendſhip and mutual commerce amongſt them; then at the laſt to all men, and to the Gentiles throughout all the world, as it were now prepared and fitted to receive the knowledge of the Father, the ſame perſon again, the Schoolmaſter of Virtue, his Father's Miniſter in all goodneſs, the Divine and Celeſtial Word of God manifeſted himſelf about the beginning of the Roman Empire, in human ſhape, for bodily ſubſtance nothing differing from our nature, and therein wrought and ſuffer'd ſuch things as were conſonant with the Oracles of the Prophets, who foreſhew'd there ſhould come into the world ſuch a one as ſhould be both Man and God, a mighty Worker of miracles, an Inſtructer of the Gentiles in the worſhip of his Father; and withal they foretold his Miraculous Birth, his New Doctrine, his wonderful Works, moreover the manner alſo of his death, his reſurrection from the dead, and laſt of all, his glorious and divine return into Heaven. The Prophet Daniel therefore by the Divine Spirit beholding his Kingdom that ſhall be in the latter age of the world, having been mov'd by the power of that Divine Spirit, hath thus more after the manner of man, and to man's capacity deſcrib'd the viſion of God. For I beheld (ſaith he) until the Thrones were placed, and the Antient of days ſat thereon: his garments were as the white ſnow, the hairs of his head as pure wool; his throne a flame of fire, his wheels burning fire. A fiery ſtream ſlided before his face. Thouſand thouſands miniſtred unto him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtood before him: The judgment was ſet, and the Books were opened. And afterwards, I beheld, (ſaith he) and behold, one coming in the clouds like the Son of Man; and he came unto the Antient of days, and he was brought before him: and to him was given Principality and Honour, and Rule; and all People, Tribes, and Tongues ſhall ſerve him: his Power Dan. 7. 9, 10, and 13, 14.

(i) It's ſtrange, that in the Tranſlation of this place both Muſculus and Chriſtophorſon erred. Ἐπιτειχίζειν (which is the term here us'd) in Greek ſignifies, to make a Fortification, or Bulwark againſt a place; See Harpocration, in the word [ὀπιτείχισμα.] But it's ridiculous to believe, that Men arrived to that degree of madneſs, as by building Rampires to attempt to ſcale Heaven, and to turn out God from thence; which yet Euſebius ſeems by this place to have believed. Theſe are the fictions of the Poets, who by this fanſie would ſet forth the pride of Men of that Age, and their contempt of God. Indeed Holy Writ mentions the Giants, but it ſays nothing of this ſort concerning them; and it teſtifies that that Tower was built, not by the Giants, but by the Sons and Poſterity of Noah, after the Flood. Valeſ.

(k) The term in the Original is [κόρος] and it ſignifies ſatiety or fulneſs; it is the ſame in Robert Stephens Edit. But Valeſius ſays it ſhould be [κάρος] which he tranſlates (torpor) i.e. a ſlothful heavineſs, for ſo, ſays he, it is written in the Fuk. and Savill. M. SS.

(l) I doubt not but Euſebius wrote it thus [πρωτόκτιστον τῆς θεοῦ σοφίαν, i.e. the Pre-exiſtent Wiſdom of God] as it is in our four M. SS. Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil. and not [πρωτότοκον, i. e. the firſt produced, &c.] for this term agrees better with Euſebius's meaning, ſeeing that he had a little above quoted that place out of the Proverbs (Chap. 8. v. 22.) The Lord himſelf faſhion'd me, &c. Indeed, the Antient Divines, and eſpecially thoſe who wrote before the times of the Nicene-Council, by the word [κτίζειν] underſtood, not only a Creation which is made of nothing, but, all Production in general, as well that which was from all eternity, as that which is produced in time. Hence it is, that Melito wrote a Book [περὶ κτίσεως καὶ γενέσεως χριστοῦ] as we ſhall ſee at the 4th Book of this Hiſtory. But if we ſhould here read [πρωτόγονον] there would be an unmeet repetition, which is called a Tautology, thus [ὁ πρωτόγονον καὶ πρωτότοκον, &c.] Beſides, [πρωτότοκον] is an unfit term to expreſs the Divine Generation. Valeſ.

(m) Nicephorus underſtood this place amiſs, as if it had been ſpoken by Euſebius in praiſe of the Jews: But the words of Euſebius have a clean contrary meaning. For he ſays, that the Jews being corrupted by the contagion of their former life, God thought it ſufficient to preſcribe them legal Ceremonies, and to deliver them as it were certain Signs and Symbols of more ſecret Myſteries, as being yet ignorant, and accuſtomed to the Superſtition of the Heathens. Chryſoſtome, on Matthew, ſays the ſame Ἐνδιατρίβειν, from whence the Participle here uſed comes, ſignifies in Greek, to be corrupted, and from a priſtine diſcipline to fall into a luxurious and diſſolute courſe of life. From whence [ἐνδιατριβικὸς βίος] is a remiſs and looſe life; a phraſe taken from intemperate Men, who obſerve no rule in meat and drink, nor in their whole courſe of life. This word occurs often in the Writings of Dion Caſſius. Valeſ.

(n) Tranſlators underſtood not this place, as it appears from their Verſion of it. The meaning of Euſebius here is this. He attributes not ſo much to the Law-makers and Philoſophers of the Gentiles, as if that old Savageneſs and Immanity of Men were by little and little brought to be more tractable and gentle by their Precepts and Inſtitutes. But he imputes the reaſon hereof to the Law of Moſes; which, being known to the whole World, at length reclaimed and civilized the manners of all Men. For the Law-makers and Philoſophers of the Gentiles, having derived all their beſt precepts from that Law, as from as fountain, infuſed them afterwards into the minds of their Auditors: whereby Men being poliſhed, were rendred fit to receive the knowledge of the Evangelical Law. For the Moſaical Law was previous and the forerunner to the Evangelical, and prepared the way to Chriſt's Preaching. This place therefore is to be thus written [Τοῖς πλείοσι τῶν ἐθνῶν διὰ τῶν παντα χόσε νομοθετῶν τε καὶ φιλοσόφων ἡμέρωτο τὰ φρονήματα] as it is plainly written in the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil. M. SS. and not, as it is in Robert Stephens's Edit. thus [ἡμερώτατα φρονήματα.] Undoubtedly, unleſs it be thus written, the ſentence will be incoherent. For to what ſhall the Particle [ὡς ὅ] be referred, which is put in the beginning of the Period? There is alſo another difficulty in this place of Euſebius, that is, what is meant by theſe words [ὀξ αὐτῶν.] For Euſebius ſays [ἤδη πότε ὀξ αὐτῶν καὶ τοῖς πλείοσι, &c.] as before. Which Words, as to me it ſeems, were put in, that Euſebius might ſhew, that whatever was fitly ſaid by the Law-makers and Philoſophers of the Gentiles, they borrow'd it all from the Hebrews. And thus Kuſinus underſtood this place, as it plainly appears from his Tranſlation. Euſebius diſcourſes largely concerning this Point in his Book, De Præparatione, where he ſhews that the Grecian Philoſophers ſtole many things out of the Books of Moſes. Valeſ.

Power is an everlasting Power which shall not pass, and his Kingdom shall never be destroyed. These things can manifestly be referred to none other than to our Saviour, the Word that was in the Beginning with God, God the Word, term'd the Son of Man by reason of his Incarnation in the latter times. But because we have in proper and peculiar (o) Commentaries collected the Oracles of the Prophets touching our Saviour Jesus Christ, and have elsewhere confirm'd by evident demonstrations those things which have been deliver'd concerning him, at this present we will be content with the Premisses.

(o) He means his Books of Evangelical Demonstration, of which ten only are now extant. Moreover, this Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius ought to be so much the more esteemed by us, because he wrote it after almost all his other Works. Vales.

CHAP. III.

That the very name of Jesus, and also that of Christ was from the Beginning both known and honour'd among the Divine Prophets.

(a) NOW that the name both of Jesus, and also of Christ, was of old honour'd among the Prophets belov'd of God, it is now an opportune time to declare. First of all Moses, knowing the name of Christ to be most especially venerable and glorious, when he delivered Types and Symbols of heavenly things, and mystical forms, agreeable to the Divine Oracle that said to him, See thou do all things after the fashion that was shewed thee in the Mount, the man whom he entitled (as much as he lawfully might) the High-Priest of God, the same he stiled Christ: and thus to the dignity of High-Priesthood, which excell'd in his judgment all other prerogatives among men, he for honour and glory put to the name of Christ. So then he deem'd Christ to be a certain Divine thing. The same Moses also, when being inspired by the Holy Ghost, he had well foreseen the name of Jesus, judg'd again the same worthy of singular prerogative. For this name of Jesus, which before Moses's time had never been named among men, Moses gave to him first, and to him alone, whom he knew very well by type again and figurative sign was to receive the Universal Principality after his death. His Successor therefore, before that time not called Jesus, but by another name, to wit, (b) Ause, which his Parents had given him, he called Jesus, giving him this appellation as a singular title of honour far passing all Royal Diadems, because that same Jesus, the son of Nave bore the figure of our Saviour; who alone, after Moses, and the accomplishment of the figurative service deliver'd by him, was to succeed in the Government of the true and most pure Religion. Thus to two men who surpass'd all people of that age in virtue and glory, one being then High-Priest, the other to be Chief Ruler after him, Moses gave the name of our Saviour Jesus Christ, as an ensign of the greatest honour. The Prophets also who came after, propheſied plainly of Christ by name, foretelling long before-hand the treacherous practice of the Jewish people against him, and the calling of the Gentiles by him. Both Jeremy saying thus, The Spirit before our face, Christ our Lord, is taken in their nets, of whom we spake, under the shadow of his wings we shall be preserved alive among the Heathen*: and David also, being very much perplexed, speaking thus, Why have the Gentiles raged, and the people imagined vain things? The Kings of the earth stood forth, and the Princes assembled together in the same place against the Lord and against his Christ?* whereunto afterwards he addeth in the person of Christ, The Lord said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee. Ask of me, and I will give thee the Heathen for thine inheritance, and the ends of the earth for thy possession. The name of Christ therefore among the Hebrews hath not only honour'd those that were adorn'd with the High-Priesthood, being anointed with figurative and mystical oyl prepared on purpose, but Kings also, whom Prophets by the Divine appointment anointing, made figurative Christs; because they bore in themselves a resemblance of the Regal and Princely power of the only and true Christ, The Word of God, who governeth all things. And moreover we have learned that certain of the Prophets also by being anointed have typically become Christs. So that all these have a relation unto the true Christ, the Divine and Heavenly Word, the only High-Priest of the whole World, therefore only King of all the Creation, and the only chief Prophet of the Father among all the Prophets. The proof hereof is demonstrable; for none of them that of old were typically anointed, whether Priests, or Kings, or Prophets, ever obtain'd so great a measure of Divine power and virtue, as the Saviour and our Lord Jesus, the only and true Christ, hath shewed. Indeed none of them, how famous soever they were among their own followers throughout many ages, by reason of their dignity and honour have caused by their being typically called Christ's, that such as were conform to them should be named Christians. Neither hath the honour of adoration been exhibited by their Subjects unto any of them, neither after the death of any of them have the minds of any been so much affected towards him, as to be ready to die for the maintenance of his honour: neither hath their been any so great stir and commotion among all the nations throughout the whole world for any of them. For the power of the figure and shadow was not of such efficacy in them, as the presence of the truth exhibited by our Saviour: Who tho' he received not from any the Ensigns and Badges of the High-Priesthood, nor indeed * lineally descended according unto the flesh from the Priestly Race, nor was advanced by a guard of armed men unto his Kingdom, nor was made a Prophet after the manner of the antient Prophets, nor obtained any pre-eminence, or prerogative among the Jews; yet for all this he was adorn'd (c) by the Father with all dignities, tho' not in Types and Symbols, yet in very truth. And altho' he obtain'd all these titles in another manner than those men did, whereof mention has been made, yet hath he been more truly stiled Christ than they all. And he, as being the only and true Christ of God, hath by that truly venerable and sacred name of his filled the whole world world with Chriſtians: nor doth he deliver henceforth Types and Shadows unto his followers, but naked virtues and an heavenly life, accompanied with the undoubted doctrine of verity. And the ointment he receiv'd was not corporal, compounded of ſpices, but divine, by the Holy Ghoſt and by participation of the unbegotten Deity of the Father. The which thing again Eſay declareth, when as in the perſon of Chriſt he breaketh out into theſe words; * The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, wherefore he hath anointed me to preach glad tidings unto the poor, he hath ſent me to cure the contrite in heart, to preach deliverance unto the captives, and recovering of ſight to the blind. And not only Eſay, but David alſo, directing his words to his perſon, ſaith, * Thy throne, O God, laſteth for ever and ever: the ſceptre of thy kingdom is a right ſceptre. Thou haſt loved righteouſneſs and hated iniquity: Wherefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oyl of gladneſs above thy fellows. In which Text the Word of God in the firſt verſe termeth Chriſt God, the ſecond honoureth him with a Royal Sceptre: thence deſcending by degrees, after the mention of his Divine and Royal Power; in the third place he ſheweth him to have been Chriſt, anointed not with oyl of corporeal ſubſtance, but of divine, that is of gladneſs: whereby he ſignifieth his prerogative and ſurpaſſing excellency above them, which with corporeal and typical oyl had of old been anointed. And in another place the ſame David ſpeaketh of him thus, ſaying, † The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, ſit thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footſtool. And, Out of my Womb before the Day-ſtar have I begotten thee: The Lord ſware and will not repent, thou art a Prieſt for ever after the Order of Melchiſedec. This Melchiſedec in the ſacred † Scriptures is brought in the Prieſt of the moſt High God; but neither was he conſecrated by any oyl prepared of man for that purpoſe, nor by ſucceſſion of kindred had he attain'd unto the Prieſthood among the Hebrews: wherefore our Saviour, according unto his Order, and not according to them who receiv'd ſigns and ſhadows, is publiſh'd, and that with addition of an oath, Chriſt and (d) Prieſt. Wherefore alſo the Sacred Hiſtory neither mentions him to be corporally anointed among the Jews, nor born of the Prieſtly Tribe, but of God himſelf before the Day-ſtar, that is, having his Eſſence before the ſtructure of the world, immortal, poſſeſſing a Prieſthood that never periſheth by reaſon of age, but laſteth world without end. But this is a great and an apparent argument of his Incorporeal and Divine (e) power, that he alone, of all men that hitherto ever were, is by all men throughout the whole world called Chriſt; is preach'd and confeſs'd by the common conſent and teſtimony of all, and by this name every where celebrated among the Grecians and Barbarians: and that hitherto among all his followers throughout the world, He hath been both honour'd as King, had in admiration above a Prophet, and alſo glorified as the true and only High-Prieſt of God; and above all this, that he is worſhip'd even as God, in as much as he is the Eternal Word of God, and ſubſiſted before all Worlds, (f) receiving majeſtical honour from the Father: but this moreover is moſt of all to be marvel'd at, that we who are dedicated unto him, honour him not with voices only and noiſe of words, but with all entire affection of the mind, ſo that we prefer the confeſſion of him before our own lives.

CHAP. IV.

That the Religion, by him declared to all Nations, is neither new nor ſtrange.

(a) LET theſe things therefore be neceſſarily placed by me here in the beginning of this Hiſtory, leſt any man ſhould ſurmiſe our Saviour and Lord Jeſus Chriſt to be a perſon newly apparent, by reaſon of the late time of his being converſant in the fleſh. Now alſo, leſt any ſhould deem his Doctrine to be new and ſtrange, as deliver'd by a new-comer, and one who nothing differeth from the reſt of men, come on, let us alſo in ſhort debate thereof. It is indeed moſt certain, when as the coming and preſence of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt ſhone now freſh unto all men, that a people new we muſt confeſs, yet neither ſmall, nor ſuch as was ſcituate in ſome corner of the earth, but of all nations both the moſt populous and moſt religious, and upon this account inexpugnable and invincible, becauſe aided continually by the aſſiſtance of God, at certain ſeaſons pre-determin'd by the ſecret Providence of God, to us ſuddenly appear'd, being ennobled among all men by the title and name of Chriſt. This, one of the Prophets by the eye of the Divine Spirit foreſeeing would come to paſs, was aſtoniſh'd, in ſo much that he cried out, thus, * Who hath heard ſuch things? Or who hath ſpoken after this manner? Hath the earth travelling brought forth in one day? And hath a nation ſprung up ſuddenly and at one time? Alſo the ſame Prophet ſhews the very name that ſhould be given, ſaying, * And they that ſerve me ſhall be called after a new name which ſhall be bleſſed upon earth. But altho', without controverſie we are but of late, and this new name of Chriſtians hath been but lately known unto all nations; yet, that our life and manner of converſation, together with the rules of Religion, are not newly deviſed by our ſelves, but have been (as I may ſay) even from the original of mankind, inſtituted and obſerved by ancient godly men from thoſe notions that nature had implanted in their minds, we will thus make evident. That the nation of the Hebrews is no new nation, but honour'd among all people for their antiquity, is well known to all. They have Books and Monuments in writing containing the actions of ancient men, who were rare indeed, and few in number, yet excell'd in piety and righteouſneſs, and all other kind of virtues. Whereof ſome flouriſh'd before the Flood, others after; as the ſons and off-ſpring of Noah; (b) and moreover Abraham, in whom the children of the Hebrews do glory, as their chief Founder, and Forefather. Now if any one beginning with Abraham and going upwards to the firſt man, does affirm that all thoſe men who have ſo glorious teſtimonials of their righteouſneſs, were in reality tho' not by name Chriſtians, he ſhall not err far from the truth: for whereas the name of Chriſtian ſignifieth a man who thro' the Knowledge and Doctrine of Chriſt excelleth in modeſty and righteouſneſs, in patience of life

(b) Some Tranſlators (as Muſculus, and Dr. Hanmer, as appears by his Verſion, and marginal Note thereat) ſuppoſed that [ἀτὰρ, i. e. Atar, which is the word here uſed in the Original, and is a Greek Adverb] was a proper name, and a corruption of Terah the name of the father of Abraham, of whom mention is made Gen. 11. But this is a great miſtake: For Terah, the father of Abraham, was not one of thoſe whom God loved, as it may be plainly collected from Sacred Scripture: Neither did our Euſebius think ſo, as appears by his own words, when he ſays, a little after this, in this Chapter, concerning Abraham, that he left the Superſtition of his Fathers. We have therefore tranſlated theſe words [ἀτὰρ καὶ] And moreover. Valeſ.

and virtuous fortitude, and in profession of sincere piety towards the One and the Only God who is above all; they were no less studious about all this than we are. They cared not therefore for corporal Circumcision; no more do we; nor for the observation of Sabbaths; no more do we; nor for abstinence from certain meats, and distinction of other things, which Moses first instituted and delivered to be typically observed; no more do Christians regard such matters now. But they of old evidently knew the very Christ of God. For that he appear'd to Abraham, gave answers to Isaac, talk'd with Jacob, convers'd with Moses, and afterwards with the Prophets, we have shew'd before. Hence thou may'st find those Darlings of God honour'd with the name of Christ, according unto that saying of them, * See that ye touch not my † Christs, neither deal perversly with my Prophets. It is manifest therefore, that the service of God, which was instituted by the godly of old about the time of Abraham, and published of late unto all the Gentiles by the Doctrine of Christ, ought to be accounted the first, the eldest, and the ancientest of all. But if they say that Abraham a long time after receiv'd the commandment of Circumcision; yet before the receit thereof he is said to have been justified by his faith; the Scripture speaking thus, * Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness. And he being such a one already before Circumcision, the Oracle from God, who manifested himself unto him, even Christ himself, the Word of God before hand hath utter'd this unto him in these words, concerning those who in future ages should be justified after the same manner with himself, saying thus; * And all the Tribes of the earth shall be blessed in thee: And that he should be a great and a populous nation, and all the nations on the earth should be blessed in him. And we may by consideration easily perceive that this is fulfilled in us. For he, through faith in Christ the Word of God, who appear'd unto him, was justified; when having left the superstition of his fathers, and the error of his former life, he confess'd one only God who is over all, and worship'd him with virtuous works, and not with the ceremonious service of the Law deliver'd afterwards by Moses. Unto him, being such a one, it was said that, In him shall all the Tribes of the earth and all nations be blessed. The very same manner of Religion which Abraham follow'd, is found at this present among Christians alone throughout the world, practised by them in works which are far more evident than words. What then hindreth but that we may henceforth confess, that one and the same way of living, and the same kind of Religion is common to us, who have our name from Christ, with them who of old sincerely served God and were so dear to him. It plainly appears therefore that that perfect and exact Rule of Religion, which hath been deliver'd unto us by the Doctrine of Christ, is neither new nor strange, but (if we ought to speak the truth) the first, the only, and the true one. And of these matters let thus much suffice.

CHAP. V.

Of the times of our Saviours Manifestation unto Men.

Augustus. BUT, after this preparation wherein by way of Preface we have laid down such things as are fit to usher in the Ecclesiastical History we design, it now remaineth that we take the first step as it were of our journey from the appearance of our Saviour in the flesh; calling upon God, the Father of the Word, and upon Jesus Christ himself, of whom we treat, our Saviour and Lord, the Heavenly Word of God, that he will be our help and fellow-labourer in the declaration of the truth. It was now therefore (a) the two and fortieth year of the Reign of Augustus, and the eight and twentieth year after the subduing of Egypt, and the death of Antonius and Cleopatra, in whom the Rule of the Ptolomees in Egypt ceased, when our Saviour and Lord Jesus Christ at the time of the first (b) taxing, which was when (c) Cyrenius was Governour of Syria, was born in Bethlehem of Judea, agreeable to the Prophecies, that went before him. Which taxing under Cyrenius, Flavius Josephus, a most famous Historiographer among the Hebrews, maketh mention of; adding thereto another History concerning the Sect of the

(a) The first year of Augustus, according to Eusebius's computation, is that wherein Hirtius and Pansa were Consuls. Therefore the 42d. year of Augustus falls on his thirteenth Consulship. Thus much concerning the year wherein Christ was born. Eusebius does no where expresly mention the day. It was the common opinion of the Western Church that he was born on the 7. Kalend. January: But the Eastern Church thought otherwise, that he was born on the 8. Id. January (i. e. on the 6th day Jan.) Vales. The learned have found so great difficulty in assigning the day of our Saviour's birth, that Scaliger said, Unius Dei est non hominis definire; i.e. God only, not Man was able expresly to declare it. It had been much better for these Men to content themselves with the tradition of the Church, rather than by such an elaborate unfruitful search to entangle the truth. For the celebration of this Festival, many testimonies may be produced out of Origen, Cyprian and Chrysostom, each of these Fathers deducing it from the practise of the first antiquity; and St. Augustine makes it a Character of a son of the Church to solemnize the Festivals of it, and this (principally and by name) of the Nativity. To which may be added that of the Author of the Constitutions (Constit. B. 5. c. 13.) τὰς ἡμέρας τῶν ἑορτῶν φυλάσσετε, καὶ πρώτην τὴν γενέθλιον, i. e. Keep the days of the feasts, and first the day of Christ's Birth. So that the Religion of this day, non est nupera, neque novitia, is not modern, nor newly begun, though Scaliger said so. And for the particular day, the 25th of December, whereon this Festival is by us solemnized, (not to mention other testimonies which might be produced to this purpose) In Joseph the Egyptian's Arabick Codex of the Consuls (a M. S. in the Archives of the publick Library of Oxford, of the gift of Sir Thomas Roe) this day as well as this Feast is affirmed to stand by Apostolical Canon. The words of which, as it is transcribed by Mr. Gregory, are in English these, Also that you constitute an anniversary Feast at the Nativity of the Lord Christ, on the Day on which he was born, and that was the five and twentieth of the first Canon (i. e. of December.) For this the principal of all the Feasts, &c. See Mr. Gregory's Works, Chap. 34. Dr. Hammond on the Festivals of the Church, and the Learned Selden's Tract of Christmas-Day, for further satisfaction.

(b) It is by learned Men affirmed, particularly by Is. Casaubon in Bar. p. 105. (and is most probable) that this decree of Taxing (or inrolling every Person, according to their Families and Estates) was an effect of Augustus his curiosity (and neither of his desire to enrich his Treasure, not to reform the excesses of those before him) and this over-rul'd by God's special Providence, that this Emperor might serve to be instrumental to the conserving the record of the Birth of Christ, whose Name and his Mothers, as well as Joseph's, were now inrolled. And this is an evidence of the nature of this ἀπογραφή, that it was not a Tax, for that would not have belonged to women and infants, but to the possessors only. See Dr. Hammond on Luk. 2. v. 1.

(c) There is a great disagreement amongst the Learned about this enrolment and valuation of Men's Person's and Estates, whether it was done once, or twice. Some say there were two, both made by the same Cyrenius, (or Quirinius,) and both mentioned by St. Luke: The first he speaks of Chap. 2. 2. of his Gospel; which was made a little before our Saviour's Birth, about the latter end of the Reign of Herod the great, Sentius Saturninus being then President of Syria; this, say these Men, St. Luke calls πρώτη ἀπογραφή, the first Taxing, to difference it from that other mentioned by him, Acts 5. 37. And whereas St. Luke says, Cyrenius at that time had the rule over Syria; these words are to be taken in a looser, nor stricter, sense; not that Cyrenius was then the standing Governour there under the Romans, but was sent by the Emperor particularly on this occasion, to take an Inventory of this part of the Empire: For it's confess'd that Sentius Saturninus was then the President of Syria. The other Taking, mentioned in the Acts, was made ten years after this, after the banishment of Archelaus, and about the insurrection of Judas of Galilee (or Gaulanites.) This is the opinion of Scaliger, Petavius, Casaubon, and Hammond. On the other hand, Valesius (and with him, as he thinks, agrees our Eusebius in this Chapt.) says there was but one Taxing, (which may be supposed to have been begun at the latter end of Herod the Great's Reign, about the time of Christ's Birth, and was not perhaps finiſh'd till ten years after, when Cyrenius was Preſident of Syria, after the Baniſhment of Archelaus;) his Reaſons are theſe: Joſephus mentions but one: After this Enrolment once made why ſhould it be repeated, and that by the ſame perſon? For if he had done it equally and exactly, what need of a new one? If not, another perſon ought rather to be ſent who might do it better: What had a Roman Magiſtrate to do with any thing of Government in Judea whilſt Herod lived, who in all right was King there, and was ſo acknowledg'd by the Roman Senate? Laſtly, about the time of Chriſt's Birth Saturninus and Varus were Procurators in Syria, and not Cyrenius. I ſhall not take upon me to determine this Difference; the Reader has here the Sum of the Arguments on both ſides, and is left to his liberty to be ſway'd by which Party he pleaſes.

Galileans, which ſprang up about the ſame time, whereof amongſt us alſo Luke in the Acts of the Apoſtles maketh mention, ſaying thus, After this man roſe up one* (d) Judas of Galilee in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him: he alſo himſelf periſhed, and all, even as many as obey'd him were diſperſed. The ſame indeed Joſephus before-mention'd in his Eighteenth Book of Antiquities, doth agree in and confirm thus, word for word: 'Cyrenius one of the number of the 'Roman Senators, a man who had born all Offices, and by all the degrees of Honour had 'climb'd at length to the Conſulſhip, and who 'was greatly renown'd in other reſpects, came 'with a few men into Syria, being ſent on 'purpoſe by Cæſar, as Judge of the nation, and 'to take the valuation of their Eſtates. And a 'little after, he ſaith, Judas Gaulanites, a man 'of the City named Gamala, having taken unto 'him one Saddochus a Phariſee, earneſtly ſollicited the People to Rebellion: Both of them 'affirming, that the Taxing of this Tribute 'inferr'd nothing but manifeſt ſervitude, and 'exhorting the whole Nation to maintain their 'liberty." And in his Second Book of the Wars of the Jews, he writeth thus of the ſame perſon: 'At that time a certain Galilean, by name Judas, ſtirr'd up the People of that Region to 'Defection, upbraiding them for paying tribute ſo tamely to the Romans; and, having 'God their Sovereign, for ſuffering mortal 'Men to be their Maſters. (d) This inſurrection of Judas of Galilee we aſſert to have been after the Baniſhment of Archelaus. Indeed, before his depoſition there could be no reaſon why Judas ſhould ſtir up the people of the Jews to a Defection. For no Valuation of Mens Eſtates could be made by a Roman Magiſtrate there, where a King, that was a Friend and an Ally of the Romans, govern'd; neither was Judea in any danger to be brought into Servitude by Strangers, as long as it obey'd a Jew, that is a King of their own Nation. Valeſ.

CHAP. VI.

That in his Time, according to the Predictions of the Prophets, the Princes of the Jewiſh Nation who before by Succeſſion had held the Principality, ſurceaſed, and that Herod, the firſt of the Aliens, became their King.

NOW at that time, when Herod, the firſt of them, who by deſcent was a Foreigner, had obtain'd the Rule over the Jewiſh Nation, the Prophecy written by Moſes was fulfill'd, which ſaid, That there ſhall not want a Prince in Juda, neither a Leader fail of his Loyns, until he come for whom it is reſerved.* Whom he declares to be the expectation of the Gentiles. Indeed the things of that Propheſie hung unaccompliſh'd all the time that it was lawful for the Jews to live under Princes of their own Nation: who taking their beginning as high as Moſes himſelf, continued down their Reign even to the Empire of Auguſtus: under whom Herod the firſt (a) Foreigner had the Government of the Jews granted him by the Romans: who, as Joſephus declares, was by his father's ſide an Idumæan; by his mother's an Arabian. But, as Africanus, one not of the vulgar ſort of Writers, ſays, they who have been more accurate about his Pedigree, ſay he was the ſon of Antipater, who was the ſon of one Herod an Aſcalonite, who was one of the ſervants which miniſtred in the Temple of Apollo. This Antipater being taken by Idumæan thieves while he was yet a child, remain'd a long time among them, becauſe his father being one of a mean eſtate was not able to redeem him. And being brought up after their manner of breeding, became at length very familiarly acquainted with Hyrcanus the High-Prieſt of the Jews. This very man's ſon was that Herod who liv'd in the time of our Saviour. When therefore the Principality of the Jews was come into the hands of this Alien, then was the expactation of the Gentiles even at the doors, according unto that prophecy: for then the Line of their native Princes and Governours was broken off, which had been drawn down by a continual ſucceſſion from Moſes himſelf until that time. For before they were taken Captives and carried into Babylon, Kings, reign'd over them, beginning from Saul, who was the firſt, and from David. Before their Kings Princes bore rule over them, whom they call'd Judges, beginning their Government after Moſes, and his ſucceſſor Jeſus*. After their return from Babylon there ceas'd not amongſt them a form of Government, an Ariſtocracy together with an Oligarchy, the Beſt ruling, and they but few in number. For the High-Prieſts had held that preeminence under Pompey the Roman Captain coming upon them by main force, beſieg'd and ranſack'd Jeruſalem, polluted the holy places, by entring into the Sanctuaries of the Temple, and ſent Priſoner to Rome the High-Prieſt, whoſe name was Ariſtobulus with his ſons, who by ſucceſſion from his Progenitors had continued unto that time both Prince and Prieſt; and committed the Office of High-Prieſthood unto his brother Hyrcanus, and from that time forth made the whole Jewiſh Nation become tributary to the Romans. And indeed not long after, Hyrcanus, the laſt of thoſe to whom the High-Prieſthood by ſucceſſion befel, being taken priſoner by the Parthians, Herod the firſt Foreigner, as I ſaid before, had the Government of the Jewiſh Nation deliver'd to him by the Roman Senate and the Emperor Auguſtus. Under whom, whenas the preſence of Chriſt was apparent, the long-lookt-for Salvation of the Gentiles was accompliſh'd, and their calling conſequently follow'd, according to the predictions of the Prophets. Since which time the Princes and Rulers of Juda (thoſe I mean who were of Jewiſh extraction) ceaſing, ſtraightway the ſeries and courſe of the High-Prieſthood, which among them by order of ſucceſſion after the deceaſe of the former, was always, as it was meet, wont to fall unto the next of blood, was confounded. Hereof thou haſt Joſephus a witneſs worthy of credit, declaring how that Herod, after that he was intruſted with the rule over the Jews by the Romans, aſſign'd 'em no more High-Prieſts of the ancient prieſtly Race, but conferr'd that honour upon certain obſcure perſons; and how that the ſame courſe which Herod had taken in conſtituting High-Prieſts, was follow'd by his ſon Archelaus, and after by the Romans who ſucceeded him in the Government of Judea. The ſaid Joſephus declareth, how that Herod firſt ſhut up under his own Privy-ſeal the Holy Robe of the High-Prieſt, not permitting the

And let these things be spoken by us to evidence the truth of another prophesie, which by the coming of our Saviour Christ Jesus was accomplish'd. For most plainly and expresly of all other, the Holy Scripture in Daniel describing the number of certain weeks unto Christ the Ruler (whereof we have in another (b) place intreated) foretelleth, that after the acccomplishment of those weeks the Jewish anointing should be abolish'd. And this is plainly prov'd to have been fulfill'd at the time when our Saviour Jesus Christ came in the flesh. And let these things necessarily be fore-observ'd by us for the proof of the truth of the times.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Disagreement supposed to be among the Gospels about the Genealogy of Christ.

BUT in as much as Matthew and Luke, committing the Gospel to writing, have differently delivered unto us the Genealogy of Christ, and are thought by many to disagree very much among themselves, so that almost every one of the faithful through ignorance of the truth, hath ambitiously striven to comment upon those places; Come on, let us rehearse a certain History which is come to our hands concerning the premises, the which Africanus (whom we mention'd a little before) hath set down in an Epistle written to Aristides about the Concordance of the Genealogy of Christ in the Gospels: and having indeed (a) blamed the opinions of others, as wrested and false, he delivereth the History that he himself had met withal, in these very words: 'For seeing that the names of kindred 'in Israel were numbred either after the line of 'nature, or after the rule of the law; after the 'order of nature, as by succession of natural 'seed, after that of the law, as when any one 'begetteth a son in the name of his brother who 'deceased without issue: for because a perspicuous hope of the Resurrection was not yet granted them, they shadow'd out in some sort the promise to come with this kind of mortal resurrection, that the name of the deceased might 'continue and never be quite blotted out. Because therefore, of them that are reckon'd in 'this Genealogy, some succeeded their fathers 'as natural sons, but others received their name 'whence they receiv'd not their nature; mention is made of both; as well of them who were 'truly fathers, as of them who were titular only, and as fathers. Thus neither of the Gospels 'is found false, the one drawing the Pedigree 'by the natural, the other by the legal line. 'For the race both of Solomon, and that also of 'Nathan, are so wrapp'd and twisted together, 'by reviving of persons deceased without issue, 'by (b) second marriages, and by raising up of 'seed, that not without cause the same men 'are supposed to have had divers fathers, where-

(a) Or, Having evidenced them to be false; for so it is in the King's M. S. Vales.

(b) The chief cause of confusing of Families was, when the woman, having had children by a former husband, hastned to remarry, and bore children by her latter also. After which, let us suppose the son, begotten by her first husband, to have married a wife, and afterwards to have died without issue. Then, if his brother by the mother side marry his widow, and beget children of her, in these children there will be a confusedness of families; in so much that by nature they may be called this Man's, and have one name, but by Law the others, and bear another name. Vales.

'of some were only nominative, others fathers Augustus.
'indeed. Thus the account in both Gospels is 'true, and is brought down to Joseph accurately and exactly, tho' by a various and different 'line. And, that what I say may plainly appear, I will recite the 'alteration of families. If 'we count the Generations '(as Matthew doth*) from David by Solomon, Mat- * Matt. 1.
'than will be found the third from the end, 15, 16.
'who begat Jacob the father of Joseph: but if 'from Nathan the son of David, according unto * Luk. 3.
'* Luke, then the third in like manner from the 23, 24.
'end will be (d) Melchi, 'whose son was Heli the 'father of Joseph. For Jo- 'seph was the son of Heli, 'the son of Melchi. Joseph 'therefore being as it were 'the mark we shoot at, we 'must shew how each per- 'son is term'd his father, as well Jacob who deriveth his pedigree from Solomon, as Heli who 'descended from Nathan.; and besides, how, in 'the first place, these two, Jacob and Heli, were 'brethren; then, in the next place, how their 'fathers Matthan and Melchi, born of divers 'kindreds, may be made appear to be grandfathers to Joseph. Now therefore thus it was; 'Matthan and Melchi marrying one after the other the same wife, begat children who were 'brethren by the mother; the law not forbidding a widow, either dismiss'd from her husband, or after the death of her husband, to be 'married to another man. First, therefore Matthan, descending from Solomon, begat Jacob of 'Estha; for that is said to be the woman's name. 'After the death of Matthan, Melchi, who descended from Nathan, being of the same tribe, 'but of another race, (as we said before) took 'this widow to his wife, and begat Heli his son. 'Thus shall we find Jacob and Heli, tho' of a 'different race, yet by the same mother to have 'been brethren. One of whom, namely Jacob, 'after Heli his brother was deceased without issue, married his wife, and begat on her the 'third, Joseph, by nature indeed and reason his 'own son; whereupon also it is written, And 'Jacob begat Joseph; but by the law he was the 'son of Heli: for Jacob being his brother raised up seed unto him. Wherefore neither is that 'Genealogy which concerneth him to lose 'its authority, the which indeed * Matthew the * Matt.
'Evangelist reciting, saith, And Jacob begat Jo- 1. 16.
'seph; but * Luke on the other side, Which was * Luk. 3.
'the son, as it was supposed (for he added this 23, 24.
'withal) of Joseph which was the son of Heli, which 'was the son of Melchi. Nor could he more significantly and properly have expres'd that way 'of generation according to the law. Therefore 'in his recital of procreations of this sort, he 'passeth over in silence even to the end, the 'word of begetting, carrying the whole series 'of families step by step up as high as Adam, 'who was the son of God. Neither is this 'matter destitute of good proof, or rashly and 'haftily devised. For the kinsmen of our Saviour according to the flesh, either out of de- 'sire to make known the nobility of their 'Stock, or simply to tell the story, have very 'truly deliver'd even these things unto us; 'how that Idumæan Thieves invading the City 'Ascalon in Palæstina, took captive together 'with other spoils out of the Temple of Apollo

(c) Or, The succession; So Robert Stephens Edit. and the King's M. S. Vales.

(d) But Melchi is, in St. Luke, the fifth, to wit, Joseph's Great-grand-father's Father. Therefore either Africanus forgot himself; or else in that Copy of the Gospel he used, Melchi was written for Matthat; which is the conjecture of Bede, on the third chap. of Luke. Vales.

Auguſtus. ‘adjoyning unto the walls, (e) Antipater, ſon to ‘one Herod, that was Miniſter in that Temple. ‘But, in that the Prieſt was not able to pay the ‘ranſom for his ſon, Antipater was brought up ‘after the faſhion of the Idumæans, and at length ‘became very familiar with ‘Hyrcanus the High Prieſt ‘of Judea. He, being by ‘Hyrcanus ſent ſent Embaſſador unto Pompey; and ‘having recover'd him the ‘Kingdom free and entire, ‘which his brother Ariſtobulus had in great part uſurped, had the good hap ‘himſelf to gain the title ‘and office of (f) Procurator of Paleſtine, and liv'd ‘in great proſperity. This ‘Antipater being traiterouſly ſlain by ſome who envied his great felicity, Herod his ſon ſucceeded him, ‘whom at laſt Antonius and ‘Auguſtus, by decree of the Senate, conſtituted ‘King over the Jews: whoſe ſons were Herod ‘and the other Tetrarchs. Theſe things are ‘common alſo among the Greek Hiſtories. Now ‘whenas unto that time the Genealogies not ‘only of the Hebrews, but of them alſo who lineally deſcended from ancient Proſelytes, as ‘from Achior the Ammonite, and Ruth the Moabiteſs, and thoſe who came out of Egypt with ‘the Iſraelites and mingled with them, were recorded among the ancient Monuments; Herod conſidering that the Iſraelitical Pedigrees ‘would avail him nothing, and being prick'd ‘in mind with the conſciouſneſs of his baſeneſs ‘of birth, (g) burnt their ‘ancient recorded Genealogies, ſuppoſing thereby ‘to make himſelf to be ‘thought to come of noble ‘parentage, when none other, aſſiſted by publick ‘Records, were able to ‘bring their Pedigrees ‘from the Patriarchs, or ‘ancient Proſelytes, or ſuch ‘as were called (h) Georæ, ‘ſtrangers born, and mingled among the Iſraelites. ‘Yet ſome few ſtudious in ‘this behalf having either ‘kept in memory the ‘names of their Anceſtors, ‘or copied them out of ancient Rolls, have got unto ‘themſelves their proper ‘pedigrees, and glory much ‘that they have preſerved ‘the remembrance of their ‘ancient Nobility. Amongſt whom were thoſe ‘men I mention'd before; who by reaſon of ‘their near kindred with our Saviour, were ‘called Deſpoſyni. Theſe travelling from Nazara and (i) Cochaba, towns of the Jews, into other regions, plainly expounded the foreſaid ‘Genealogy, partly out of the Book of their (k) Ephemerides, and partly out of their Memory, ‘as far as they were able. However then the ‘caſe ſtand, whether thus or otherwiſe, no man Auguſtus. ‘in my judgment, and in the judgment of any ‘other ingenious perſon, ‘can find a plainer expoſition. Let us make much ‘of this therefore, tho' we ‘have (l) no proof to confirm it, ſeeing we cannot ‘produce a better and a ‘truer expoſition. The Goſpel indeed in all reſpects ‘uttereth moſt true things. And about the end of the ſame Epiſtle he addeth theſe words; ‘Matthan deſcending from Solomon begat Jacob. Matthan deceaſed, Melchi of the ‘ſtock of Nathan on the ‘ſame woman begat Heli. (m) So Heli and Jacob were brethren by the mother's ſide. Heli ‘dying without iſſue, Jacob rais'd unto him ‘ſeed by begetting of Joſeph, his own ſon by ‘nature, but Heli his ſon by law. Thus was Joſeph ſon to both. So far Africanus." Now the Genealogy of Joſeph being thus recited, the Stock alſo of Mary, who was of the ſame Tribe together with him, is in effect made apparent. For by the Law of Moſes, mingling of Tribes by marriage was forbidden. For the woman is commanded to be joyn'd in marriage to one of the ſame houſe and of the ſame family, that ſo the inheritance of the kindred might not be removed from Tribe to Tribe. But of theſe matters let thus much ſuffice.

(e) This paſſage is altogether fabulous. For the name of Antipater's father was not Herod, but Antipater an Idumæan; neither was he a Miniſter in the Temple of Apollo. See Joſephus B. 14. Chap. 2. This Antipater, Alexander King of the Jews made Prefect of all Idumæa; and this firſt Antipater ſeems to be the founder of all that Greatneſs, to which his poſterity afterwards arrived. For he had the Prefecture of Idumæa during the reign of Alexander and Alexandria; and, having made an Alliance with the Aſcalonites, Gazites, and Arabians gat great Riches. Valeſ.

(f) Antipater, the Father of Herod, was Procurator of the whole Kingdom of Judea under Hyrcanus, and managed all affairs, both Military, and Civil. Therefore Joſephus, in his 14. B. calls him [ἐπίτροπον, i. e. Procurator.] Valeſ.

(g) I judge this paſſage alſo to have little of certainty in it. For Joſephus, in the book of his own life, mentioning the original and antiquity of his own ſtock, fetches it from the publick Archives. Therefore thoſe publick tables, which contained the originals of the Jewiſh families, were extant in Joſephus's time. And ſo it's falſe to ſay that Herod burnt them. Valeſ.

(h) Two ſorts of Men joined themſelves with the Children of Iſrael when they went up out of Egypt. The one were native Egyptians, whom Moſes (Exod. 12. 19.) calls ἀυτόχθονας, i. e. born in the land: The other ſort were a mixt multitude, whom he there calls γειώρας, i. e. ſtrangers. They were extraneous Perſons amongſt the Egyptians, who took the land to Till at a certain penſion: The Jews were ſuch, before they went up out of Egypt. Both theſe ſorts of Men the ſacred Scripture comprehends under the name of a mixt multitude (Exod. 12. 38.) Valeſ.

(i) Cochaba was a Village near Decapolis. Valeſ.

(k) Many of the Jews, ſtudious of preſerving their Pedigree, had private copies thereof, taken out of the publick Archives; as we often ſee Gentlemen do at this day amongſt us. Valeſ.

(l) How much this explication of the place in the Goſpels is to be valued, appears from theſe words of Africanus; who confeſſes it is not confirmed by the teſtimony of any antient Writer: But he would have us admit of it, becauſe none that is better can be brought. Which if it be ſo, I wiſh our Euſebius had not mentioned this matter in the entrance of his Hiſtory. It had undoubtedly been better and more adviſedly done, to have paſſed over in ſilence this diſagreement of the Evangeliſts, leſt thoſe Readers, who were not believers (many of which there were at that time) might hence take occaſion to doubt of the truth of the Goſpel. Valeſ.

(m) In this way of reconciling this matter, which Africanus relates, two things occur, which ſeem to have ſomething of difficulty in them: Firſt, I doubt whether it were lawful for the Brother by the Mother's ſide to marry his Brother's Widow, and to beget Children of her, which were to ſucceed in the name and be accounted of the Family of his Brother. Tae Law (Deut. 25. 5.) ſpeaks of the Brother that dwells in the ſame Houſe, and that is of the ſame Stock: But the Brother by the Mother's ſide is not of the ſame Houſe, nor of the ſame Stock: Seeing that the Stock, eſpecially amongſt the Jews, was deduced from the Father's Race. Secondly, it may be deſervedly queſtioned, whether in reckoning up the Generations, there be any account had of the adoptive Fathers. Obed, who is mentioned in the Genealogy of Chriſt, is an eminent example hereof. For when Maalon was dead in the land of Moab, and Ruth left a Widow without Children, Booz the kinſman of Maalon (he that was a nearer kinſman than he giving up his right) took Ruth to Wife, whereby he might raiſe up Seed to Maalon. Yet Obed that was begotten of her, is by the Evangeliſts, and in the Book of Ruth not called the Son of Maalon, but the Son of Booz. Valeſ.

CHAP. VIII.

Of Herod's Cruelty towards the Infants, and after how miſerable a manner he ended his life.

NOW Chriſt being born in Bethlehem of Judea at the time before manifeſted, according to the Predictions of the Prophets, Herod upon an enquiry made by the * wiſe men that came from the East, asking where he was that was born King of the Jews? For they ſaid they had ſeen his Star, and had therefore made ſuch a long journey with diligence, becauſe they moſt ardently deſired to worſhip him that was born, as God. Herod, I ſay, being not a little troubled, judging his Government to be in very imminent danger, demanded of the Doctors of the Law, then in the nation, where they expected Chriſt ſhould be born. When he knew of the Prophecy of * Micah, who foretold he was to be born in Bethlehem; by one expreſs Edict he commands all the young children both in Bethlehem and in all the coaſts thereof from two years old and under, according to the time which he

Augustus. he had diligently enquired of the Wise-men, to be slain. For he supposed, as it was very likely, that Jesus would be involved in the same calamity with them that were about his age. But his Parents having had notice of the whole matter by an Angel that appeared to them, convey'd the young child into Egypt, and so he escaped the King's bloody Plot. Thus much indeed the sacred writing of the Gospel sets forth. And now moreover it would be worth the while to see what immediately befel Herod upon account of his audacious wickedness acted towards Christ and those of the same age with him; how forthwith, without all delay, the Divine vengeance seized him whilst alive after such a manner, as to foreshew some beginnings of those torments which awaited him after this life. And how he clouded these prosperous successes of his reign, as he judges them to be, with domestick calamities following one upon another, with the murthers of his wife and children, and others of his neerest relations and dearest friends, I shall not now be able particularly to recount, in as much as the rehearsal of this matter would far surpass even all the most savage cruelty of every Tragedy; which Josephus in his History has at large declared. But, how after his cruel plot form'd against our Saviour and the other infants, he was forthwith smitten from heaven with a disease, as with a scourge, whereof he died, it will not be unfit to understand from the Author himself, who in his * seventeenth Book of Antiquities relates after how lamentable a manner he ended his life, writing word for word thus; 'But the disease 'of Herod grew yet more bitterly violent, God 'exacting this judgment of his enormities upon 'him. He had a gentle fever not expressing it 'self so much to the outward touch and feeling, 'as more grievously burning him within. 'Moreover, he had a vehemently strong appetite after meat, but nothing could suffice 'him; he had an ulcer of the intrails, with sharp 'conflictations especially of the Colick-gut. 'a phlegmatick and shining humour appear'd 'about his feet. Moreover, the disease had gotten about the lower belly, and more than that, 'there was a putrefaction of his genitals, and it 'bred worms; besides, he had a shortness of 'breath, which was also unsavory; a troublesome flux of Rheum, which caused a perpetual difficulty of breathing. And the Patient 'having not strengh to resist these things, there 'follow'd a convulsion of all the parts. It was 'said therefore by the Divines, and those who 'made it their business to give judgment of 'such things, that the hand of God was upon 'the King to punish him for his so oft repeated horrible offences." Thus much therefore the aforeiaid Writer relates in the fore-mention'd Book. And in the Second (a) Book of his History he speaks of him after the same manner, in these words: 'After that he was taken 'with a disease, which seising upon the whole 'state and habit of his body, tormented him 'exceedingly with several pains: He had a fever, but not of any acute kind, an insufferable 'itching over all his body, with continual tortures of the Colon: by the humours about 'his feet you would judge him to have been 'hydropical; besides this, a strange inflammation of the lower belly, and such a putrefaction of the genitals as bred worms: moreover, 'a shortness and difficulty of breathing, with a 'convulsion of all the parts. This moved those Augustus. 'of that time who pretended to know the mind 'of God, to term these diseases a punishment inflicted on him from heaven. But altho' he 'struggled with so many distempers, yet he 'hoped to live and recover, and sought for remedy. Passing therefore over Jordan he made 'use of the hot-waters that are near Callirhoe. 'They fall into the lake Asphaltites, but are so 'sweet that they are potable. There, when 'his Physicians thought it good to bathe his 'whole body in warm oyl, being set into a bathing-vessel filled with oyl, he was so weaken'd all over his body, that he turn'd up his 'eyes as if he had been dead. But at the noise 'of his attendants outcries he came to himself 'again. After this, despairing of recovery, he 'gave order for the distribution of fifty (b) Drachms 'to every one of his common soldiers, but to his 'commanders and friends 'he gave great sums of 'money. From thence he 'return'd to Jericho; and 'being now grown very 'melancholy, he did as it 'were threaten death it 'self, and resolv'd upon the 'commission of a most horrible and villanous fact. 'For he commanded all 'the eminent personages 'that were in every town 'of Judæa to be summon'd 'together and imprison'd in the Hippodrome. 'Then calling for his sister Salome and her husband Alexander, I know, said he, the Jews will 'rejoyce mightily at my death; but if you will 'obey my commands, I can make my self to be 'lamented by many, and obtain an honourable 'funeral: As soon as breath is out of my body 'do you, being guarded with soldiers, kill all 'these men whom I have imprison'd; so all 'Judea, yea every family shall, tho' against 'their wills, mourn at my death. And a little 'after he says, and again when he was tortured, 'partly by want of sustenance, and partly by 'convulsions of his violent cough, being overcome with continual torments he resolved to 'hasten his own death. And having taken an 'apple, he ask'd for a knife, for his manner 'was to cut them himself when ever he eat 'them; then looking round left there should 'be any one that might hinder him, he lifted 'up his right hand, as about to do violence to 'himself. Moreover, the same Writer relates farther, 'how that a little before his death 'he most wickedly commanded (c) another of 'his own sons, having slain '(d) two of them before, 'to be put to death, and 'then soon after died in 'most exquisite torture. And such was the end Herod made, suffering a due punishment for his cruelty towards the infants of Bethlehem, which he contrived on purpose to destroy our Saviour. After his death an Angel appeared to Joseph then in Egypt, and commanded him to take the young Child and his Mother and return into Judea, telling him they were dead who sought the young Child's life. To which * the Evangelist farther adds,

* Joseph. Antiq. B. 17. c. 8.

(a) These words of Josephus we meet with now in the 1. B. 21. c. of his History. But in the M. S. Copies of Josephus, the Books were otherwise divided than now they are. That division Eusebius followed, and therefore no alteration is here to be made. Vales.

(b) The word δραχμὴ is deriv'd from δραγμὴ, that is, an handful, as containing so many pieces of Brass-money as would make an handful, to wit, six. This word from the Greeks came not only to the Romans, but, after the time of the Selucidæ, to the Jews also; so Ezr. 2. 69. דרכמונים, the Greek word with a very little alteration, rendred by the 72 δραχμαὶ, by us Drachms. Now four Attick Drachms make one ordinary Shekel (so I call it to distinguish it from that of the Sanctuary which was twice as much) an ordinary Shekel is two Shillings and Six pence in our Coin. So that according to this account. Herod's largess came to six pounds and five shillings a Man. Suid.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Times of Pilate.

Tiberius. THE ſaid Hiſtorian agrees alſo concerning the reign of Archelaus after the death of Herod, declaring the manner of it, how both by his Father's Teſtament, and alſo by the Decree of Auguſtus Cæſar, he obtained the Kingdom of Judea: And how, when after ten years he was depoſed from his Government, his brethren, Philip and Herod Junior, and (a) Lyſanias govern'd their Tetrarchies. The ſame Author, in the eighteenth Book of his Antiquities, makes it plainly appear, that Pontius Pilate was made Procurator of Judea in the twelfth year of the reign of Tiberius (who then was Emperor, ſucceeding Auguſtus, who had reigned fifty ſeven years) and continued ſo full ten years, almoſt as long as Tiberius lived. From whence their fiction is manifeſtly confuted, who of late have publiſh'd (b) Acts againſt our Saviour. In which chiefly the title or note of time, inſcrib'd upon the ſaid Acts, does evidently ſhow the Authors thereof to be liars. For thoſe things which theſe men have impudently feign'd concerning the ſalutary paſſion of our Lord, are ſaid to have been done when Tiberius was Conſul the fourth time, which fell out to be the ſeventh year of his reign. At which time it is certain Pilate was not come as Governour into Judea, if we may believe Joſephus; who in his foreſaid Book does expreſly ſhew, that Pilate was made Procurator of Judea by Tiberius, in the twelfth year of his Reign.

(a) Saint Luke mentions this Lyſanius. chap. 3. 1. But Joſephus mentions him not in his account of this matter. 'Tis certain he was not Herod's Son, nor yet his Succeſſor. Valeſ.

(b) Acts were Books wherein the Scribes that belonged to the ſeveral places of judicature, recorded the ſentences pronounced by the Judges. See Calvin's Lex. Jurid. the word Acta. Theſe Acts of Pilate were counterfeited by the Enemies of Chriſtianity, in the Perſecution under Maximinus, as Euſebius affirms, Lib. 9. c. 5.

CHAP. X.

Of the High-Prieſts among the Jews, in whoſe time Chriſt preach'd the Goſpel.

* Luk. 3. 1, 2. AT this time therefore, namely in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius, according to the * the Evangeliſt, and the fourth of Pilate's Procuratorſhip of Judea, Herod, (a) Lyſanias and Philip being Tetrarchs over the reſt of Judea, our Lord and Saviour Jeſus, the Chriſt of God, being about thirty years of age, was baptized by John, and then firſt began to preach the Goſpel. And the ſacred Scripture ſays, that he finiſh'd the whole time of his preaching under Annas and Caiphas being (b) High-Prieſts, meaning thereby that all his preaching was terminated within that ſpace of time wherein they executed the High-Prieſt's Office. Altho' therefore he began when Annas was High-Prieſt, and continued till Caiphas came on, yet there are ſcarce full four years contained within this ſpace of time. For, ſince from the time now mention'd, the Laws and Sanctions about holy matters were almoſt aboliſh'd, the High-Prieſthood alſo ceaſed to be for life and hereditary, neither was the worſhip of God rightly performed. But the Roman Governours made ſometimes one, ſometimes another High-Prieſt, none bearing that office above a year. (c) Joſephus indeed in his Book of Antiquities does relate, that from Annas to Caiphas there were in one continued order four High Prieſts. His words are theſe; 'Valerius 'Gratus having put out Annas from being High-'Prieſt, made Iſmael the ſon of (d) Baphi High-'Prieſt; not long after he removed him, and 'made Eleazar, ſon of the High-Prieſt Annas, 'High-Prieſt; within a year after he deprived 'him, and gave Simon the ſon of Camithus the 'High-Prieſthood. He, after he had held that 'honour not more than a year, had (e) Joſephus, 'whoſe name alſo was Caiphas, for his Succeſſor.' It is manifeſt therefore that the whole time of our Saviour's preaching was not compleat four years, within which ſpace of time there were as many High-Prieſts made, reckoning from Annas his bearing that office, to Caiphas his promotion to it, (f) every of which bore the office one year. The Holy (g) Goſpel therefore is right in noting Caiphas to be the High-Prieſt that ſame year in which our Lord's ſalutary paſſion hapned. From which authority of the Goſpel alſo it is evident, that the time of Chriſt's preaching does not diſagree with the account we have laid down. Now our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, not long after his beginning to preach, called twelve men, whom he named Apoſtles, giving to them in particular a title more honourable, and preferring them before the reſt of his Diſciples. Beſides, he choſe other ſeventy men, whom he ſent two by two before his face, into every of thoſe places and cities whither he himſelf would come.

Tiberius. (b) In all our copies this word is in the ſingular number [High-Prieſt] but in St. Luke it is in the plural [High-ieſts.] But theſe words of St. Luke do no way mean what Euſebius perſwades himſelf they do; to wit, that Chriſt began to Preach in that year wherein Annas was High-Prieſt, and continued till Caiphas came on. For firſt, Luke ſpeaks there concerning John's preaching, which was before Chriſt's, and not concerning our Saviour's: Then he ſays, that that preaing of John was begun under Annas and Caiphas being High-Prieſts; not that there were two High-Prieſts at the ſame time, which is abſurd and was never heard of, but that Luke means by theſe words, that in this fifteenth year of Tiberius, Caiphas was High-Prieſt, and Annas was one that had born that Office very lately. (See Dr. Hammond's note on Luke chap. 3. v. 2. where he treats of this matter learnedly and largely.) Whoſoever had born the High-Prieſts Office, thoſe were called High-prieſts during their lives, and took Tythes; So Joſephus declares B. 20. of Antiq. Valeſ.

(a) I know not why Euſebius put Lyſanias in the middle between Herod and Philip, the ſons of Herod the great. For Luke, whoſe words Euſebius does here profeſs that he follows, in that famous place concerning the Baptiſm of Chriſt, names Lyſanias in the third place. Wherefore Euſebius ſhould have obſerved the ſame order, eſpecially becauſe Lyſanias was neither Son, nor Succeſſor to Herod. Euſebius alſo ſeems to be reproveable here, in that after he had ſaid Pilate was then Procurator of Judea, he adds, that the reſt of Judea was governed by the Tetrarchs, Herod, Philip, and Lyſanias. But Lyſanias never had any part of Judea. For Abila was not a City of Judea, but of Syria. Yet Euſebius may be excuſed, if we ſay, that by Judea he underſtood the whole Dominion of Herod the Great: For it's manifeſt that he had the Tetrarchy of Lyſanias given him by Auguſtus. For the Roman Emperors uſed to beſtow theſe Tetrarchies on thoſe Kings that were their Confederates and Friends, that they might thereby the more oblige them. It's ſtrange that there is no mention of this Lyſanius, of whom St. Luke ſpeaks, either in Joſephus, Dion, or the reſt.

(b) In the Greek it is, 'Under the High-Prieſts Annas and Caiphas.' Which words are not to be underſtood as if there were two High-Prieſts at the ſame time, but that Annas was High-Prieſt, and continued till Caiphas came on. Valeſ.

(c) Joſeph. Antiq. B. 18. chap. 4. Euſebius is here very much miſtaken; for Joſephus does not ſpeak of the ſame times that St. Luke does; Joſephus ſpeaks of the firſt ten years of Tiberius's Reign, in which time Valerius Gratus was Procurator of Judea; but Luke ſpeaks of Tiberius's ſecond ten years, when Pilate was Governour of Judea. Valeſ.

(d) Or Phabi, as ſome Copies read it. Valeſ.

(e) Or Joſeppus, or, Joſepus, as it is in the old Editions of Ruſinus. Valeſ.

(f) Euſebius underſtands Joſephus, ſo, as if Joſephus had ſaid, that thoſe four High-Prieſts, Annas, (or Ananus,) Iſmael, Eleazar, and Simon executed the High-Prieſthood, each the ſpace of one year. Indeed Joſephus ſays this expreſly of the two laſt; but not ſo of the two firſt. For he declares that Iſmael indeed was put out a little after he was made High-Prieſt by Valerius: But Joſephus is ſo far from making Ananus to have been High-Prieſt but one year, that from his words it is plainly gathered, he held the High-Prieſthood three years at leaſt. See Joſephus's Antiq. B. 20. chap. 8. Valeſ.

(g) He means John 11. 18. but the Evangeliſt does not ſay there, that he was made High-Prieſt that ſame year.

What hath been testified concerning John the Baptist, and concerning Christ.

(a) THE sacred History of the Gospel also mentions the beheading of John the Baptist, by Herod Jun. to have been not long after this. To which also agrees Josephus, who both makes mention particularly of Herodias by name, and also expresly declares, how that Herod, having put away his former wife lawfully marry'd to him, took this woman his brother's wife by force from him being yet alive, and married her: she was the daughter of Arethas King of the Arabians: and that upon her account, Herod having slain John, went to war with Arethas, incensed at the disgrace of his daughter. In which war, he relates that Herod and his whole Army were vanquish'd in a Battel, and that these things befel him upon account of his cruelty towards John. The same Josephus does agree with the Evangelical History in the account it gives of this John, especially as to his confessing him to have been a most righteous Man and a Baptist. He says further, that Herod was depriv'd of his kingdom for the sake of this Herodias, and was together with her banish'd to (b) Vienna a City of Gallia. All this he relates in his 18th Book of Antiquities, where also he writes these very words concerning John: 'But some of the Jews 'judg'd Herod's Army to have been overthrown 'by God, he avenging justly on him the mur- 'ther of John call'd the Baptist. For him Herod 'had slain, who was a good man, and one that 'exhorted the Jews to the exercise of virtue, 'commanding them to deal justly with one a- 'nother, and to behave themselves piously to- 'wards God, and so to come to be baptized. 'For Baptism, said he, was then only well- 'pleasing to God, when it was used, not for the 'excusing of some certain offences, but in or- 'der to the cleansing of the body, the soul being 'before purified by righteousness. Now when 'many flock'd to him from every quarter (for 'they were strangely taken with hearing of 'such discourses) Herod fearing lest thro' the 'powerful perswasion of the man, his subjects 'should revolt, (for they seem'd ready to do 'any thing that he advised) judg'd it better to 'cut him off before any innovation hapned by 'him, than, after it was come to pass, and had 'greatly endangered his affairs, to repent he 'did not, when it was too late. Upon this 'very mistrust of Herod's, he being put into 'bonds, was sent to the aforesaid Castle of 'Machærous and there slain. Thus far he concerning John. The same Author in the same Book makes mention also of our Saviour in these words; 'About that time there was one Jesus, a 'wise man, if he may be called a man; for he 'wrought wonderful miracles, and taught all 'that with delight would embrace the truth. 'He had many followers, both Jews and Gentiles. 'This was he that was * called Christ. Whom 'tho' he was accused by the chief men of our 'Nation, and Pilate condemned him to be cru- 'cified, yet those who at first loved him for- 'bore not to worship him. For he appeared 'unto them alive on the third day, as the holy 'Prophets had predicted, who foretold these 'and many more wonderful things concerning 'him. And till this day that Sect continues, 'which of Him are call'd Christians. Seeing therefore that this Writer, being a Jew born and bred, has in his works recorded thus much of our Saviour and John the Baptist, what evasion can remain to the Forgers of those Acts against them, that they should not evidently be prov'd to be the most impudent of Men? But thus far of these Matters.

(a) I began the 11 chap. at these words; following the authority of the King's, the Maz. and the Fuketian M. SS. Vales.

(b) Josephus, in his 18 B. of Antiquit. 9 chap. says he was banish'd by Caius Cæsar to Lions in France. Vales.

* Λεγόμενον, i. e. called, is to be understood, as Valesius supposes.

CHAP. XII.

Concerning our Saviour's Disciples.

MOreover, the names of our Saviour's Apostles are to all apparently manifest in the Gospel, but as to the seventy disciples, a particular * catalogue of them is no where extant. But Barnabas is said to have been one of them, of whom we have frequent mention both in the Acts of the Apostles, and also most especially in Paul's Epistle to the Galatians. Sosthenes also, they say, was another of them, he that together with Paul wrote to the Corinthians: For so says Clemens in the fifth Book of his Institutions; where also he affirms Cephas (that Cephas of whom Paul speaks, † But when Cephas came to Antioch I withstood him to the face) a namesake of Peter's, to have been one of the seventy disciples. Matthias also, who was numbred with the Apostles in the room of the Traitor Judas, and the other who had the honour to be proposed in the same lot with him, are reported to be of the number of the Seventy. Thaddæus likewise, of whom I will by and by adjoin an History as it came to our hands, is reported to have been one of them. But he that shall attentively observe, will find, even from Paul's testimony alone, that our Saviour's disciples were more in number than Seventy. For he * says, Christ after his Resurrection was seen first of Cephas, then of the twelve, after that he was seen of above five hundred Brethren at once; of whom some were fal'n asleep, but the greatest part, he declares, were alive when he wrote these things. Then, says he, he appeared to James. (a) He is said to have been one of the Seventy disciples of our Saviour, and also one of the Lord's Brethren. Lastly, there being many more besides the twelve, who were called Apostles by way of imitation, of which sort Paul himself was one, he farther adds, saying, Then he was seen of all the Apostles. But so much of this. The fore-mentioned History concerning Thaddæus was thus:

* There is a Catalogue of the 70 Disciples, written by Dorotheus, but it was not extant in Eusebius's time.

† Gal. 2. 11. where instead of Cephas we now read Peter.

* 1 Cor. 15. 5, 6, 7.

(a) Many of the antient writers affirm, that James the brother of our Lord, he that was Ordained the first Bishop of Jerusalem, was not of the Number of the Twelve Apostles but of the Disciples of the Lord. Indeed Paul, in his first Epist. to the Corinthians, chap. 15. v. 7. seems to favour this opinion, where reckoning up those to whom Christ appeared after his death, after he hath named the Twelve Apostles, and five hundred others, he adds, After that he was seen of James, &c. Vales.

CHAP. XIII.

The History of the Prince of the Edessens.

THE Divinity of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ being every where famous by reason of his wonderful power, by which he wrought Miracles, drew together an innumerable company even of foreigners, and inhabitants of Countreys far remote from Judea, who were sick and troubled with all sorts of pains, hoping to be recovered. Therefore King (a) Agbarus, the then worthy worthy Governour of the (b) nations lying beyond Euphrates, being much weakned with a sore disease, incurable by human skill; as soon as he heard of the great Name of Jesus, and of his wonderful Works attested by all, sent a Letter to him by a Letter-carrier, humbly beseeching him to vouchsafe to cure his distemper. Now tho' he did not then hearken to his request, yet he vouchsafed to give him answer by his own Letter; wherein he promised to send one of his Disciples, who should both cure him, and also bring salvation to him, and his Relations and Friends. Soon after therefore this promise was exactly fulfill'd: For after his Resurrection from the dead, and Ascension into Heaven, Thomas, one of the Twelve Apostles, moved thereto by Divine Impulse, sent Thaddæus, chosen one of the Seventy Disciples of Christ, to Edessa, to be a Preacher and Evangelist of the Doctrine of Christ. By whom all that which our Saviour had promised was fulfill'd. The written evidence of this matter we have taken out of the Office of Records within the princely City of Edessa, in which Agbarus then was Governour. For among the publick Records there, wherein the Antiquities of the City and the Acts of Agbarus are contain'd, are found these things, there preserved to our days. Nothing hinders but that we may hear the very words of the Letter, which we have taken out of the ancient Rolls, and faithfully translated out of the Syriack tongue in these words, thus;

(b) Agbarus was Ruler over one nation only; for he was Prince of the Arabians, but not of them all: For the Arabians were divided into many Tribes; and each Tribe had its distinct Præfect. This name was common to the Princes of Edessa. It is an Arabick term, and signifies most powerful. Vales.

A Copy of the Letter written by King Agbarus to Jesus, and sent to him to Jerusalem by Ananias the Courier.

'Agbarus Prince of Edessa, to Jesus the Good 'Saviour, who hath manifested himself within 'the Confines of Jerusalem, sendeth greeting. 'I have heard of thee, and of the cures wrought 'by thee without Herbs or Medicines; for, as 'it is reported, thou dost restore Sight to the 'Blind; thou makest the Lame to walk; thou 'cleansest the Leprous, and thou dost cast out 'Devils and unclean Spirits, and thou healest 'those that are tormented with Diseases of a 'long continuance, and thou dost raise the Dead. 'When I heard all this of thee, I was fully per'swaded to believe one of these two things, ei'ther that thou art very God, and art come 'down from Heaven to do such things, or else 'the Son of God, and so performest them. 'Wherefore, I have now written to thee, be'seeching thee to come to me, and cure my 'disease: for I have heard that the Jews mur'mur against thee, and contrive to do thee mis'chief. I have a City, a little one indeed, but it 'is beautiful, and capable of receiving us both." Thus wrote Agbarus, as then but a little enlighten'd from above. It is also worth while to hear the Answer of Jesus, return'd to him by the same Courier; short indeed it is, but it has much of power and efficacy in it: It was thus:

The Answer of Jesus to Agbarus the King, sent by Ananias the Courier.

'Blessed art thou, Agbarus, who hast believ'd 'in me whom thou hast not seen. For it is '(c) written of me, that they which have seen 'me should not believe in me, that so they which 'have not seen me may believe and be saved.

(c) In what part of the Old Testament these words occur I am yet to seek. Indeed, in the Gospel of St. John it is written, that our Lord said to Thomas after his Resurrection, Joh. 20. 29. Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. But this Epistle of Christ to King Agbarus, if it be genuine, preceded that Reprehension of the Apostle Thomas some years. Vales.

Tiberius.

'But as concerning what thou writest about my 'coming to thee, know, that all things for which 'I am sent must be here by me fulfilled; which 'being finish'd, I shall be taken up and return 'to him that sent me: but after I am ascended, 'I will send thee one of my Disciples, who shall 'cure thy distemper, and give life to thee, and 'to them that are with thee." To this Letter there is this farther added in the Syriack Language; 'After Jesus was ascended, Judas, called also (d) Thomas, sent 'Thaddæus the (e) Apostle, 'who was one of the Seventy Disciples, to Agbarus. When he was come 'thither, he abode with Tobias the son of Tobias. As 'soon as it was heard that 'he was come, having manifested himself by the 'miracles he wrought; Agbarus was told, that the Apostle of Jesus was come 'thither according to his promise in his Letter. Now 'Thaddæus began to cure every disease and distemper 'by the power of God to the wonder of all. 'When Agbarus heard of the great and wonderful works wrought by him, and how in the 'name and by the power of Jesus Christ he cured diseases, he had some suspicion, that this 'was the person about whom Jesus wrote to 'him, saying, when I am taken up, I will send 'thee one of my Disciples, who shall heal thy 'distemper. Having therefore called for Tobias, 'with whom Thaddæus abode, I have heard, said he, 'that there is a certain powerful man come from 'Jerusalem, who lodges at thy house, that performs many cures in the name of Jesus. There 'is a stranger, Sir, replied he, come to my house 'who does many miracles: Bring him, said Agbarus, to me. Tobias went home to Thaddæus, 'and told him, Agbarus the Governour of this 'City having sent for me, commands me to 'bring thee to him, that thou may'st cure his 'distemper. I will go, replied Thaddæus, for it 'is chiefly upon his account that I am with 'power sent hither. Tobias therefore getting 'up early next morning, took Thaddæus along 'with him, and went to Agbarus. When he was 'come to Agbarus (his Nobles being present 'and standing round him) there appeared a 'wonderful sight in the face of the [illegible] 'Thaddæus, as he came in to him, and [illegible] 'he worship'd him. All that were pre[illegible]-'dred at that, for they saw nothing [illegible]nt 'which appear'd only to Agbarus [illegible] he 'ask'd Tha[illegible]æus, Art thou in tru[illegible]ciple 'of Jesus the Son of God, who [illegible]thus to 'me, I will send thee one of my D[illegible]es, who 'shall cure thy distemper, and gi[illegible] to thee, 'and to all with thee? Thaddæus [illegible]ered, For 'as much as thou hast firmly belie[illegible] the Lord 'Jesus who sent me, therefore [illegible] I sent to 'thee, and if thy faith in him does [illegible]ll increase, 'according to thy belief thou shalt have the de'sires of thine heart fulfilled. Agbarus made him 'answer, I did so firmly believe in him, that I 'would have raised forces to have destroy'd the 'Jews who crucified him, had I not been inhi'bited from that purpose by the Roman Empire. 'Jesus Christ, replied Thaddæus, our Lord God 'fulfilled the will of his Father, and having finished

(d) Thomas indeed, that was one of the Twelve Apostles, was called Didymus; but that the same person was sirnamed Judas, is not, that I know, any where else to be found. Upon this account therefore this Story is deservedly to be suspected. Vales.

(e) Apostle here is to be taken in a large sense; (see Eusebius at the latter end of the foregoing Chapter:) after the same manner every Nation and City termed them Apostles, from whom they first received the truth of the Gospel. This name was not only given to the Twelve, but all their Disciples, Companions and Assistants, were generally called Apostles. Vales.

Tiberius. ‘nished that, was taken up to his Father. Agbarus said unto him, I believed both in Him ‘and in his Father. Therefore, said Thaddæus, I ‘lay my hand on thee, in the name of the same ‘Lord Jesus Christ: and having done so he was ‘presently cured of the disease and distemper ‘that he had. Agbarus wondred greatly when ‘he saw that really accomplish'd which he had ‘heard concerning Jesus, by his Disciple and ‘Apostle Thaddæus, who without the help of ‘Herbs or Medicines, restored him to his for‘mer soundness: and not only him, but one ‘Abdus also, the son of Abdus, who had the Gout; ‘he coming and falling down at Thaddæus's feet, ‘receiv'd a blessing by prayer and the laying on ‘of his hands, and was healed. Many others al‘so of the same City with them were cured by ‘the Apostle, who wrought wonderful miracles ‘and preached the word of God. After all this ‘Agbarus spake thus, We believe, Thaddæus, ‘whatever thou dost, thou performest by the ‘power of God, and therefore we greatly ad‘mire thee. But, we pray thee moreover, give ‘us some farther account of the Advent of Je‘sus, how and after what manner it was; of ‘his power also, and by what virtue he wrought ‘those mighty works we have heard. I shall ‘now be silent, replied Thaddæus, because I am ‘sent to publish the word of God: but assem‘ble all the men of thy City together to me ‘to morrow, and I will preach the word of God ‘to them, and will disperse the word of life a‘mong them, and expound the Advent of Je‘sus, after what manner it was, his Commission, ‘and for what reason his Father sent him; the ‘power of his works, the mysteries he declar'd ‘to the world, by what power he wrought so ‘great miracles, his new preaching, the slen‘der and mean reputation he made himself of, ‘the despicableness of his outward man, how Tiberius. ‘he humbled himself even unto death, how ‘he lessen'd his Divinity, how many and great ‘things he suffer'd of the Jews, how he was ‘crucified, how he descended into Hell, and ‘rent asunder that Inclosure never before se‘vered; how he rose again, and together with ‘himself, raised those from the dead who had ‘lain buried many ages; how he descended ‘from Heaven alone, but ascended to his Fa‘ther accompanied with a great multitude; ‘how with glory he is set down at the right ‘hand of God his Father in Heaven, and how ‘he will come again with power and glory to ‘judge both quick and dead. Agbarus therefore ‘commanded the men of his City to come to‘gether very early and hear Thaddæus preach. ‘After this he commanded, that gold and silver ‘should be given to Thaddæus; but he refused ‘it, saying, how shall we, who have left all ‘that was our own, take any thing that is ano‘thers? These things were done in the (f) three (f) This Three hundredth and fortieth year according to the account of ‘hundredth and fortieth year. All this being ‘translated word for word out of the Syriack ‘tongue, and not unprofitable to be read, we ‘have thought good to set down opportunely ‘in this place.

the Edessens, falleth with the first year of the two hundredth and second Olympiad. For the Edessens numbred their years from the hundredth and seventeenth Olympiad, fixing their Æra upon the first year of Seleucus his Reign in Asia (as Eusebius writes in his Chronicon) from which time to the beginning of the two hundredth and second Olympiad, there are just three hundred and forty years. Now the beginning of the two hundredth and second Olympiad falleth with the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar; in which year, as many of the Antients believed, our Blessed Saviour suffered and ascended. So that this account falls right, placing Thaddæus his coming to Edessa, and his curing King Agbarus on the same year, in which our Blessed Saviour suffered. Note, that the Edessens began their year, from the Autumnal Æquinox, according to the custom of the Syrians, and almost all the Eastern Nations. Vales.

Of the Ecclesiastical History

EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS.

The PREFACE.

WHatsoever was necessary to be premised by way of Preface to Our Ecclesiastical History, both concerning the Divinity of the comfortable Word, the Antiquity of the Points of our Doctrine and Evangelical Polity; and also moreover concerning the Manifestation our Saviour lately made of himself, his Passion and the Election of the Apostles, we have treated of in the foregoing Book, and briefly summ'd up the Proofs thereof. Now therefore in this, we will diligently look into what followed upon his Ascension; partly from what we find noted in Holy Writ, and partly from other Records, which we will mention in due place.

CHAP. I.

Of those things which were instituted by the Apostles after the Ascension of Christ.

(a) At these words we began the first Chapter, following the Authority partly of Rufinus, partly of the King's, Maz. and Fuk. M. SS. or, what goes before is a Preface. Vales.

(a) FIRST of all therefore, Matthias, who, as before, has been manifested, was one of the Lord's Disciples, by lot was elected into the Apostleship of the Traitor Judas. Then, seven approved men were by prayer and imposition of the Apostles hands ordain'd Deacons for the publick administration of the Churches affairs; of which number Stephen was one: who (b) immediately after his Ordination, as if he had been made Deacon only for this, was the first that, after the Lord, was slain by those very Jews that had been the Lord's mur-

(b) The year wherein Stephen suffered Martyrdom is not agreed on by all: Some say it was the third year after Christ's passion, which was the last of Tiberius, so Syncellus. Others say he was martyr'd on the 7th of the Calend. of Jan. that same year in which Christ suffered. So Scaliger says in his Excerpt. Chronolog. which he puts out with Euseb. Chronicon. p. 68. and this seems to have been the opinion of Eusebius, as appears from this place. Vales.

Tiberius. therers, who ſtoned him to death: And thus he, being the firſt of the worthily victorious Martyrs of Chriſt, gain'd a crown (c) anſwerable to his name. Then James alſo, who was term'd the (d) brother of our Lord, becauſe he alſo was called the ſon of Joſeph: for Joſeph was the father of Chriſt, to whom Mary being eſpouſed, before they came together ſhe was found with child of the Holy Ghoſt, as the ſacred Hiſtory of the Goſpel doth declare: This ſame James, I ſay, who for his eminent virtue the Antients, ſirnamed the Juſt, was, as they relate, the firſt that had the Epiſcopal ſeat of the Church at Jeruſalem deliver'd to him. So Clemens affirms in the ſixth Book of his Inſtitutions. For he ſays, That after our Saviour's Aſcenſion, Peter, James, and John, altho' our Lord had preferr'd them before the reſt, did not contend for the dignity, but choſe James the Juſt Biſhop of Jeruſalem. The ſame Author in the ſeventh Book of the ſame Work, ſays this farther of him; The Lord after his Reſurrection conferred the gift of knowledge upon James the Juſt, John and Peter, which they delivered to the reſt of the Apoſtles, and thoſe to the Seventy Diſciples, one of whom was Barnabas. But there were two James's; the one ſirnamed the Juſt, who was caſt head-long from the Battlements of the Temple, and beaten to death with a Fuller's Club: The other was beheaded. Paul makes mention of this James the Juſt, writing thus:

* Gal. 1. 19. * Other of the Apoſtles ſaw I none ſave James the Lord's brother. At this time alſo all that our Saviour had promiſed to the King of the Oſdroëni-ans was fulfilled. For Thomas, moved thereto by Divine impulſe, ſent Thaddæus to Edeſſa to be a Preacher and Evangeliſt of the Doctrine of Chriſt, as from a Record there found we have a little before manifeſted. He, when he was come thither, did in the name of Chriſt both cure Agbarus, and alſo aſtoniſh'd all the Inhabitants of the Country with the wonderfulneſs of his Miracles. And when he had ſufficiently prepared them with ſuch works, and brought them to an adoration of Chriſt's power, he made them Diſciples of his wholſome Doctrine. From that very time until now the whole City of the Edeſſens has continued to be conſecrated to Chriſt's name, enjoying no trivial evidences of our Saviour's graciouſneſs towards them. And theſe things are ſaid as from the Hiſtory of the old Records. We will now return again to Holy Writ. After the Martyrdom of Stephen, when the firſt and ſoreſt perſecution of the Church at Jeruſalem by the Jews aroſe, all the Diſciples of Chriſt, except the Twelve only, being ſcatter'd throughout Judea and Samaria, ſome of them travelling as far as Phœnice and Cyprus and Antioch, as holy Scripture teſtifieth, were not able to be ſo bold as to communicate the word of Faith to the Gentiles, but preach'd

* Acts. 8. 3. to the Jews only. At that time * Paul alſo until then made havock of the Church, entring into every houſe of the faithful, halling men and women, and committing them to priſon. Moreover * Philip, one of thoſe who was ordain'd Deacon with Stephen, being one of them that were diſperſed, went down to Samaria, and being full of the Divine Power, was the firſt that preach'd the Word to thoſe Inhabitants. And the Grace of God did ſo effectually co-operate with him, that by his preaching he drew after him Simon Magus with many other men. This Simon, at that time very famous, did ſo far prevail with thoſe whom he had deceiv'd by his impoſture, that they thought him to be the Great Power of God. Then therefore this very perſon, being greatly amazed at the miracles Philip wrought by the power of God, craftily inſinuated himſelf, and ſo far counterfeited a faith in Chriſt, that he was baptized. The ſame thing with admiration we ſee now done by the followers of his moſt filthy Sect, who creeping into the Church, as their Fore-father did, like ſome peſtilent and leprous diſeaſe, do deeply corrupt all thoſe into whom they are any way able to inſtil that pernicious and incurable poiſon which lies conceal'd within them. But many of them were caſt out of the Church, as ſoon as their viciouſneſs was diſcover'd: in like manner Simon himſelf being at length detected by Peter, was deſervedly puniſh'd. Furthermore, when the wholſome preaching of the Goſpel daily increaſed, Divine Providence brought out of the land of Æthiopia a man of great authority under the Queen of that Country; for thoſe nations are according to their country faſhion govern'd by a woman, who being the firſt of the Gentiles, that by Philip, warn'd of God by a viſion, was made partaker of the myſteries of the Divine Word; was alſo the firſt fruits of the faithful throughout the world: returning into his own country, he is reported to have been the firſt publiſher of the Knowledge of the Great God, and of the comfortable Advent of our Saviour in the fleſh: and ſo by him was really fulfilled that prediction of the Prophet, * Æthiopia ſhall ſtretch out her hand unto God. At this time, † Paul, that choſen veſſel, was made an Apoſtle, not of men, neither by men, but by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, and God the Father, who raiſed him from the dead; being vouchſafed this calling by a viſion, and a voice from heaven, which came to him at the Revelation thereof.

(d) That this James was not the Son of the B. Virgin, nor yet of Joſeph by one Eſeba a former wife; but of Mary the wife of Cleophas ſiſter to the B. Virgin, may thus be made appear: We read Jo. 19. 25. that there ſtood by the Croſs of Chriſt his Mother, and his Mother's ſiſter Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalen: In the reſt of the Evangeliſts we find at the ſame place (Matth. 27. 56.) Mary Magdalen, and Mary the mother of James and Joſes; and again at the Sepulchre (Matth. 28. 1.) Mary Magdalen and the other Mary. Wherefore that other Mary by the conjunction of theſe Teſtimonies, appeareth to be the ſiſter of the B. Virgin, to be the wife of Cleophas, and the mother of James and Joſes; and conſequently James and Joſes the brethen of the Lord, were not the ſons of Mary his mother, nor of Joſeph by a former wife, but of the other Mary, and therefore called his brethren, according to the language of the Jews [See Gen. 13. 8. & 12. 5. & 29. 12. [becauſe that other Mary was the ſiſter of his mother. See Biſhop Pearſon on the Creed. p. 176. Edit. Lond. 1669.

CHAP. II.

How Tiberius was affected at the Relation Pilate ſent him of thoſe things concerning Chriſt.

WHen the wonderful Reſurrection of our Saviour and his Aſcenſion into Heaven was now divulg'd among all men; becauſe it was of old coſtomary that the Governours of Provinces ſhould communicate to the Emperor every ſtrange and unuſual accident that hapned within their charge, that ſo nothing that was done might eſcape his knowledge; Pilate acquainted the Emperor Tiberius with the Reſurrection of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, now much talk'd of over all Paleſtine; giving him an account that he had alſo heard of many other miracles of his, and how that riſing again after he had been dead, he was now by many believ'd to be God. And they ſay that Tiberius referr'd this matter to the Senate, but the relation was rejected by them; upon pretence, that they had not firſt approved of the matter, Tiberius. matter; there being an old law among the Romans, that no one should be Deified but by the suffrage and decree of the Senate; but in reality, that the wholsome preaching of the Divine Doctrine might not stand in need of any human approbation or assistance. When therefore the Senate had rejected the Relation concerning our Saviour, Tiberius persisted in his former judgment, attempting nothing prejudicial to the Doctrine of Christ. Thus much (a) Tertullian, a man incomparably well skill'd in the Roman Laws, and every way famous, and most renown'd among the Latin Writers, in the Apology for the Christians written by him in Latin, but afterwards translated into Greek, does declare in these very words: 'And (b) 'that we may discourse 'concerning the Original 'of these Laws, there was 'an old Decree, that the 'Emperor should conse-'crate no God, before he was approved by the 'Senate. Marcus Æmilius knows this concer-'ning his God Alburnus. And this makes for 'our advantage, because among you Divinity 'is weigh'd by human approbation. If God 'please not man, he shall not be God. Man 'now must be propitious to God. Tiberius there-'fore, in whose time the Christian name made 'its entry into the world, communicated to 'the Senate the account he had received out 'of Syria Palestine, whereby the Truth of the 'Divinity of Christ was made apparent; which 'he confirm'd with his own Suffrage. But be-'cause the Senate had not approved of it, it 'was rejected: The Emperor persisted in his 'judgment, threatning the Accusers of the 'Christians with death." Which Opinion Divine Providence, according to his dispensation, instill'd into the mind of Tiberius Cæsar, that the Preaching of the Gospel then in its infancy, might without impediment spread over the whole world.

(a) Tertullian was by birth a Carthaginian; his father was a Centurion of the Proconsular-Office. He wrote many volumes in Latin, of which his Apology only was done into Greek, but by whom, it is uncertain: He flourish'd under Severus and Antoninus Caracalla. Vales.

(b) In our translation of this quotation out of Tertullian, we have followed the Original expression of the Author, according to Rigaltius his Edition of him: This Greek Translation being not fully expressive of the Author's mind, as Valesius thinks.

CHAP. III.

How the Doctrine of Christ spread in a short time over the whole World.

AND thus by the co-operation of Divine Power, the comfortable Word of God, like the beams of the Sun, on a sudden enlightned the whole world, and presently, agreeable to the Divine * Scriptures, the sound of the heavenly Evangelists and Apostles went out into all lands, and their words unto the ends of the earth. And indeed in a short time there were throughout all Cities and Villages Churches gather'd, which like a Threshing-floor filled with corn, were throng'd with infinite multitudes. And they, who deriving their ignorance from their Ancestors and their errors of old, were ensnared as to their Souls with the superstitious worship of Idols, as in an inveterate disease, being freed as it were from their cruel masters, and loosned from their heavy bonds by the power of Christ, and the preaching and miracles of his Disciples, did with scorn reject the multitude of of Gods brought in by Devils, and acknowledged there was one only God the maker of all things; and him they worship'd with the Holy Rites of true Religion, by that divine and sober way of worship which our Saviour had spread among mankind. When therefore the Grace of God diffused it self into rest of the Nations; and Cornelius of the City (a) Cæsarea in Palestine, in the first place together with his whole household by a vision from Heaven and the ministry of Peter, embraced the Faith of Christ; and many others of the Gentiles at Antioch did the same, to whom the Disciples, dispersed upon the Persecution that arose about Stephen, preach'd the word of God; the Church at Antioch now increasing and prospering, in which many were gather'd together, both Prophets from Jerusalem, with whom were Paul and Barnabas, and besides, all other brethren, in number not a few: The appellation of (b) Christians then and there first sprang up, as from a pleasant and fertile soil: And Agabus also, one of the Prophets there present, foretold the Dearth that afterwards hapned; and (c) Paul and Barnabas were sent to relieve the Brethren by the Ministration.

Tiberius.

(a) It was call'd Cæsarea in Palestine to distinguish it from Cæsarea Philippi, which was in Phœnice. Vales.

(b) That our Saviour's followers were first named Christians in Tiberius his Reign, Tertullian affirms in his Apology; the place quoted by Eusebius in the preceding Chapter. Vales.

(c) This journey of Paul's to Jerusalem can no way fall upon the times of Tiberius. For Luke writes expresly in the Acts, chap. 11. v. 29, 30. that it happened about that time when Herod Agrippa was smitten by the Angel of the Lord: Which it is most certain, happened in Claudius his time. Vales.

CHAP. IV.

How, after the Death of Tiberius, Caius made Agrippa King over the Jews, and punished Herod with perpetual Banishment.

C. Caligula. BUT Tiberius having reigned about two and twenty years, died. Caius succeeding him in the Empire, presently gave (a) Agrippa the Kingdom of Judea, and made him King over the Tetrarchies both of Philip and Lysanias. Besides, not long after he gave him Herod's Tetrarchy also, having condemned Herod to perpetual banishment, being together with Herodias his wife deservedly punished for divers enormities: (This was the Herod that was present at our Saviour's Passion:) Josephus is a witness of these things also. Moreover, in this Emperor's time Philo flourish'd, a man highly esteem'd of for his learning by many, not only among us, but also among foreigners. He was indeed by original extract an Hebrew, inferior to none of those that were illustrious in dignity at Alexandria. Moreover, what and how great pains he bestow'd about Divine matters, and in the learning of his own nation, it is to all evidently manifest. Besides, how excellent he was at Philosophy and Human Learning, it is needless to relate; for he is said to have excell'd all of his own time in the Platonick and Pythagorean Philosophy which he much affected.

(a) Caius Cæsar about the the beginning of his Reign made Agripa King first of Trachonitis, which was Philips Tretarchy. After that, when Herod, Tetrarch of Galilee, by the perswasion of his Wife Herodias, went to Rome to get the Regal Dignity of Caius the Emperor, Caius took from Herod his Tetrachy of Galilee, and gave it to Agrippa. At length, after the death of Caius, Claudius confirm'd the Kingdom to Agrippa which Caius had given him, and gave him also Judea and Samaria, which his Grandfather Herod had. And so the whole Kingdom of Herod the great was pusse ed by Agrippa. See Philo in Flaccum & in Legat. ad Caium sub finem; and Joseph. Hist. B. 18. so that Eusebius is mistaken, in that he says, Caius made Agrippa King of Judea. Vales.

CHAP. V.

How Philo went on an Embaſſage to Caius upon the Jews account.

MOreover this man compriz'd in (a) five Books the calamities that befel the Jews in Caius's Reign; wherein he ſets forth both the madneſs of Caius proclaiming himſelf to be God, and alſo his inſolent carriage in his Government in innumerable inſtances; likewiſe the diſtreſſes the Jews underwent in his Reign; and declares how himſelf went Embaſſador to Rome upon account of his country-men that dwelt at Alexandria; and how that, reaſoning before Caius for the Laws and Cuſtoms of his own nation, he obtain'd nothing beſides laughter and reproaches, and narrowly eſcaped the danger of being put to death. Joſephus mentions all this in his eighteenth Book of Antiquities, writing thus much word for word: 'Moreover, there hapning a ſedition at Alexandria among the Jews that dwelt there, and the 'Greeks, (b) three of each 'Faction were ſent Embaſſadors to Caius. Now Apion was one of the Alexandrian's Embaſſadors, who 'railed bitterly againſt the 'Jews, laying many things 'to their charge, and amongſt the reſt that they 'neglected to worſhip Cæſar. For when all the ſubjects of the Roman Empire built Temples and 'Altars to Caius, and at all points worſhip'd him 'as they did their Gods, the Jews only, ſaid he, 'accounted it a vile thing to erect Statues to 'him, and to ſware by his name. When Apion 'had urg'd theſe and many other vehement accuſations againſt them, whereby he hoped, as 'it was likely, to incenſe Caius, Philo chief of 'the Jewiſh Embaſſy, a man every way famous, 'brother to Alexander (c) Alabarthes, and not unskilful 'in Philoſophy, was able 'and ready with an Apology to anſwer his Accuſations. But Caius forbad 'him, commanding him to depart immediately from his preſence. And the Emperor was 'ſo highly incenſed, that none doubted but he 'would moſt ſeverely puniſh the Jews. But 'Philo being much reviled went out, and, as they 'ſay, ſpake to the Jews that were about him to 'be of good courage, for 'altho' (d) Caius was angry 'with them, yet he had now 'really rendred God his adverſary." Thus much Joſephus relates. And Philo himſelf, in the account which he wrote of this his Embaſſy, does exactly relate every particular thing that was then done. Whereof omitting moſt part, I will hereunto annex only ſo much as ſhall make it evidently plain to the Readers, that theſe miſeries ſtraightway without any delay befel the Jews upon account of their enormous impieties committed againſt Chriſt. Firſt of all therefore he relates, that in the Reign of Tiberius one Sejanus of the City of Rome, a perſon who then could do much with the Emperor, did uſe his utmoſt endeavour to deſtroy that whole nation: and that in Judea, Pilate, in whoſe time that horrible wickedneſs was moſt audaciouſly committed againſt our Saviour, attempting ſomething about the Temple at Jeruſalem which yet ſtood, contrary to the Cuſtoms and Ordinances of the Jews, rais'd vehement commotions among them. C.Caligulæ.

(a) There are now extant only two Books of Philo's concerning this Subject, the one entitled in Flaccum, the other de Legatione ad Caium; ſo that either Euſebius forgot their number, or elſe they were heretofore divided into five Volumes; Neither can any one ſuſpect the other three to be loſt: For in thoſe two, we now have, are contained all that happened to the Jews under Caius his Empire. Valeſ.

(b) Philo ſays there were five Embaſſadors of the Jews ſide ſent to Rome; See his de Legat. ad Caium ſub finem. Theſe Embaſſadors were ſent upon two accounts, firſt, the Jews complained that the Alexandrians defiled their Proſeucha's by bringing the Emperor's Statues into them; and then, that the Alexandrians went about to deprive the Jews of their freedom of the City Alexandria. Valeſ.

(c) So that the chief Magiſtrate among the Jews at Alexandria was called: He held his place as long as he lived; and at his death the Jews choſe another into his room. See Philo in Flaccum. Valeſ.

(d) Philo's meaning here is, that Caius indeed was angry with the Jews as to appearance, and in words; but that in reality he did arm God, and ſet him in arry againſt himſelf. For, in that Caius would have himſelf called god, he provoked God to take vengeance of him. Ἀνθιπαρεξάσεν (whence the word here uſed is derived) is a military term, and ſignifies, to ſet an army in array againſt an enemy. Valeſ.

CHAP. VI.

How great Miſeries befel the Jews, after their audacious Wickedneſs committed againſt Chriſt.

HE relates further how, after the death of Tiberius, Caius aſſuming the Government, was every way ſorely injurious towards many, but above all he moſt heavily annoy'd the whole Jewiſh nation, which in ſhort we may underſtand from Philo's own (a) words, writing thus word for word: 'So great therefore was the 'extravagancy and pride of Caius's carriage to-'wards all, but more eſpecially towards the 'Jewiſh nation, which he bitterly hated, and appropriated to himſelf all 'their (b) Proſeucha's in the 'reſt of the Cities, beginning with thoſe at Alexandria, filling them with 'his own Images and Statues. For in that he ſuffered others to conſecrate 'Statues to him, he ſeem'd 'in a manner to dedicate 'them to himſelf. And he 'changed and transform'd 'the Temple at Jeruſalem, 'which hitherto had remain'd undefiled and dignified with all the priviledges of a Sanctuary, 'and made it into a Temple dedicated to himſelf, 'cauſing it thence-forward 'to be called the Temple of 'CAIUS (c) JUNIOR 'JUPITER (d) CONSPICUOUS." Moreover, the ſame Author, in his ſecond Book which he entitled Of (e) Virtues, relates innumerable other calamities, ſuch as are grievous beyond all expreſſion, that befel the Jews dwelling at Alexandria, during the Government of the foreſaid Caius. To whom Joſephus agrees, who notes that thoſe troubles with which the whole Jewiſh nation was moleſted, began even from the times of Pilate, and from thoſe enormous facts committed againſt our Saviour. Let us therefore hear what he alſo declares in his ſecond Book of the Jewiſh Wars, in theſe (f) words, ſaying, 'Pilate being by Tiberius ſent Procurator 'into Judea, brought into Jeruſalem by night 'the veiled Images of Cæſar, which are called 'his

(a) Philo in Legat. ad Caium about the end.

(b) The Jews had two ſorts of places, beſides their Temple, (which was for ſacrifice) for religious duties; viz. their Proſeuchæ, and Synagogues; the difference between them was this; the Proſeucha was a Plot of ground encompaſſed with a wall or ſome other incloſure, and open above; the uſe of it was properly for Prayer; a Synagogue was a covered Edifice, where the Law and Prophets were read and expounded, and the People inſtructed in divine Matters; beſides, the Synagogues were within, the Proſeuchæ without the Cities. They were in uſe before the Captivity, as may be gathered from Joſ. 24. 26. Pſal. 74. 7. See Acts 16. 13. Mr. Mede.

(c) So Caligulæ was called, to diſtinguiſh him from Julius Cæſar, who was alſo called Caius, and was deified. Valeſ.

(d) Ἐπιφανὴς, Conſpicuous. Valeſius tranſlates it præſens; præſentes dii ſunt vel qui ſtatim præſtant, vel qui coluntur & videntur. Donat. in Terent. Phorm. That is, the Propitious or Conſpicuous Gods were ſuch, as were at hand, or ſuch as were viſible to the worſhippers. Hence Antiochus King of Syria was called Epiphanes by his flatterers.

(e) Valeſius thinks that by this Second Book of Virtues muſt be underſtood Philo's Book in Flaccum; and his reaſon is, becauſe Philo does no where elſe but in that Book, relate the calamities that befel the Jews of Alexandria.

'his Statues. As soon as it was day this raised 'a great commotion among the Jews. For those 'who were near were astonish'd at the sight, 'in that their Laws were violated and tram-'pled on. For they account it a detestable thing 'to place any graven image in the City." These things if thou compares't with the Evangelical writing, thou shalt understand that that voice they utter'd before Pilate, crying out they had no other King but* Cæsar, was soon (g) after revenge'd upon them. The same Writer relates another following calamity inflicted on them by Divine Vengeance, in these words: 'After 'this Pilate raised another commotion amongst 'them; exhausting the Stock of the sacred 'Treasury (it is called the (h) Corban) in making a Conduit; wherein the water that was 'to be brought was at three hundred furlongs 'distance. For which there was great indignation amongst the populace: And when Pilate was at Jerusalem, they flock'd about the 'Judgment-seat, and began to exclaim. But he '(for he foresaw there would be a tumult amongst them) mingled armed Soldiers, clad 'like the common people, amongst the multitude, and, forbidding them to use their swords, 'but commanding them to strike those that cried out with clubs, gave them a sign from his 'Tribunal. So the Jews were beaten, and many of them killed, some by the blows they receiv'd perish'd, others being trodden to death 'in the crowd by those of their own party that 'fled. And so the multitude, being astonish'd at 'the calamity of those that were slain, were silent." Moreover, the same writer relates innumerable other commotions raised in Jerusalem; and shews, that even from that time forward both the City and all Judea was distracted with seditions, wars, and continual contrivances of mischief following one upon another, until at last the siege in the Reign of Vespasian by way of revenge befel them. After this manner therefore hath Divine Vengeance pursued the Jews for their execrable wickedness committed against Christ.

* Joh. 19. 15.

(g) In this place Eusebius is mistaken, in that he thought that those things which Josephus relates concerning the images of Tiberius brought into the City of Jerusalem by Pilate, happened after the death of Christ. But Josephus attests (in the 2d. B. of the Jewish wars, and in his 18 B. Antiq.) that this happened at the beginning of Pilate's Government. Now Pilate was sent by Tiberius into Judea in the twelfth year of his Reign. It's absurd therefore to say, that those mischiefs, which befel the Jews long before Christ's death, happened to them for no other cause than for their wickedness committed against Christ. Besides, Eusebius thought, that one and the same Act of Pilate's was mentioned both by Philo and Josephus. But Josephus speaks of the Images of the Emperor; and Philo, of the gilded Bucklers, which had no Image, but only the name of the Emperor to whom they were dedicated, and Pilate's name that made that dedication. Moreover, what Josephus relates, happened in the first year of Pilate's Government; but, what Philo reports, came to pass when Pilate had been many years Governour. Vales.

(h) Corban comes from קרב, which signifies promiscuously to draw nigh, and to offer: The Evangelist renders Corban, a gift (Matth. 15. v. 5.) i. e. that which is presented and consecrated to God in the Temple: It signifies also the place where the Offerings so called were laid up. Dr. Hammond.

CHAP. VII.

That Pilate made himself away.

IT is also worth knowing, how that this same Pilate, who condemned our Saviour, in the Reign of Caius, whose times we now treat of, fell, as it is famed, into so great troubles, that he was (a) forc'd to be his own murderer and revenger, laying violent hands on himself: Divine Justice, as it was meet, not long deferring his punishment. This those Grecians do record, who have written (b) Olympiads, giving an account of what was done, and in what time perform'd.

C.Caligula.

(a) That is, by reason of despair. This is confirm'd by Eusebius in his Chronicon; In the 3d year of Caius Caligula, says he, P. Pilate falling into great troubles killed himself. King Agrippa (apud Philon. in Legat. ad Caium) gives this description of this Pilate, ἦν γὰρ τὴν φύσιν ἀκαμπὴς, καὶ μετὰ τοῦ αὐθαδοῦς ἀμείλικτος; That is, he was of an inflexible nature, and withal arrogant and cruel: Which testimony is so much the more considerable, because it came out of Agrippa's mouth, who was an eye-witness of Pilate's detestable Acts. A character well befitting him that condemn'd our Saviour. Vales.

(b) There were amongst the Grecians, games instituted for the exercise of their youth, to the honour of Jupiter Olympus, near unto whose Temple they were performed in the Olympian field. The time was (as only Pindar has revealed) at the full Moon which followed the Summer Solstice. They were celebrated every fifth year: And the interval was called an OLYMPIAD, consisting of four Julian years, and the odd Bissextile day. The restitution of these Games by Iphitus, is so much more taken notice of than the first celebration by Hercules. That this, which was many years after, is yet accounted for the first Olympiad, upon which the Grecian Chronology fixeth it self, as upon the certain term, to which their reckoning does refer. See Mr. Jo. Gregory of Oxford, de Æris & Epoch.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Dearth that hapned in Claudius's Time.

Claudius.

BUT Caius having held the Empire not full out four years, Claudius the Emperor succeeded him. In whose times a Dearth oppress'd the whole world, of which those Historians make mention, who are wholly averse from our Religion. And so the prediction of the Prophet Agabus, of whom there is mention in the Acts of the Apostles, concerning this Dearth that should come upon all the world, was compleated. Luke having in the Acts mentioned this Dearth that happened in the time of Claudius, adds this farther, saying, That the brethren which were in Antioch, every one according to his ability, sent to them who were in Judea by the hands of Barnabas and Paul. Acts 11. 28, 29, 30.

CHAP. IX.

The Martyrdom of James the Apostle.

NOW about that time, to wit, in the Reign of Claudius, Herod the King stretch'd his hands to vex certain of the Church: and he killed James the brother of John with the sword. Concerning this James, Clemens, in the Seventh Book of his Institutions, relates a memorable History, speaking as he had heard from his Predecessors: For he says, 'That he that '(a) accused him before the 'Judgment-seat, seeing him 'openly and willingly te-'stifie and declare the faith 'of Christ, was moved 'thereat, and profess'd that 'he also was a Christian. 'And so, says he, they were 'both together led away to 'suffer. And as they were 'going, he besought James 'to pardon him; who, af-'ter a short deliberation, 'said, peace be to thee, 'and kissed him; and so 'they were both beheaded 'together." Then also, as Holy *Writ declares, (b) Herod perceiving that the killing of James very much pleased the Jews, set up Peter also,

Acts 12. 1, 2.

(a) It was usual for those that were accused, to be brought before the judgment-seat by a Soldier or Apparator: The Greek word (ὁ εἰσαγωγεύς) will bear that sense, as well as Accuser, but we have translated it Accuser, upon the account of Clemens his following words, saying, that this person asked James forgiveness, which, if he had accused him, he had reason to do; but had he been only an Officer or Soldier, and had done no more but brought in James before the Judge, he may seem to have done no more than the duty of his place, what he was commanded; and so needed not have asked James forgiveness. Vales.

CHAP. X.

How Agrippa, called alſo Herod, perſecuting the Apoſtles, preſently felt Divine Vengeance.

BUT the King's attempt to do violence to the Apoſtles remain'd not long unreveng'd; for a chaſtiſing Miniſter of Divine Juſtice purſued him: He therefore, ſoon after his bloody plot againſt the Apoſtles, going down to Cæſarea, as it is related in the Acts of the Apoſtles, and being there upon the great feſtival-day dreſs'd in a white and royal garment, made an Oration to the people from his lofty throne; and when all the multitude gave a ſhout with loud acclamations at his Oration, as at the voice of God and not of Man, Sacred Writ declares that he was immediately ſmitten by an Angel, and was eaten up of worms and gave up the ghoſt. But the conſent between Holy Writ and the Hiſtory of Joſephus, in the account given of this ſtrange thing, is worthy of admiration. In which he, giving evident teſtimony to the truth in his nineteenth * Book of Antiquities does plainly declare this wonderful thing in theſe words thus, 'The 'third year of his Reign over all Judea was now 'compleated; when he went to the City Cæ- 'ſarea, heretofore call'd the Tower of Straton. There 'he exhibited ſhows in honour of Cæſar, know-'ing that (a) Feſtival to 'have been inſtituted for 'the proſperity of him. 'Hereunto flock'd a great 'multitude of thoſe who 'were honourable and ex-'cell'd in dignity, through-'out that (b) whole Pro-'vince. On the ſecond day 'therefore of the ſhews, be-'ing cloath'd with Robes 'made all of ſilver admira-'bly wrought, he entred 'the Theatre early in the 'morning. When the ſilver 'of his Robes, ſhining by reaſon of the beams 'the riſing-ſun caſt on them, made a wonderful 'gliſtering, ſtriking thoſe who ſtedfaſtly look'd 'on him with wonder and amazement, preſently 'his Flatterers, ſome from one place, ſome from 'another, cry'd out with voices moſt pernicious 'to him, terming him God; and beſeeching him 'to be propitious to them. Hitherto, ſaid they, 'we have reverenced thee as a Man, but now 'we acknowledge thee to be above mortal na-'ture. But the King neither rebuked them, nor 'rejected their impious flattery, preſently after 'looking up he eſpy'd an (c) Angel ſitting over 'his head; whom he forthwith underſtood to be 'the cauſe of miſchief towards him, having '(d) heretofore been the foreteller of his proſpe-'rity. A pain that pierced his very heart im-'mediately ſeiz'd him. He had beſides a griping 'all over his belly, which began with a vehement 'ſharpneſs, and was continual and without in-'termiſſion. Looking therefore upon his friends, 'I your God, ſays he, am now compelled to end 'my life; fatal neceſſity forthwith demonſtrating 'the falſhood of your boaſting acclamations e-'ven now utter'd concerning me: I, who by 'you was ſtiled immortal, am now ſnatch'd a-'way by death. But that deſtiny is to be born 'with which God hath decreed. We have in no 'wiſe liv'd ill and deſpicably, but in ſuch ſplen-'dor as was look'd upon to be moſt fortunate. 'When he had ſpoken theſe words, he was ſpent 'with the vehemency of his pain. Being there-'fore preſently carried into the Palace, a ru-'mour was immediately ſpread abroad that the 'King was in imminent danger of his life; 'ſtraightway the whole multitude with their 'wives and children (e) ſit-'ting upon ſpread ſack-'cloth, after their country 'faſhion, made ſupplicati-'ons to God for the King. 'Every place was fill'd with 'wailings and lamentati-'ons. But the King lying in 'an high Bed-chamber, 'look'd down upon them as 'they lay proſtrate, and 'could not refrain weeping. 'At length having been for 'five days ſpace continual-'ly tormented with pains of 'his belly, he died in the 'fifty fourth year of (f) his 'Age, and the ſeventh of 'his Reign. For firſt he 'reign'd four years under 'Caius Cæſar, having go-'vern'd the Tetrarchy of 'Philip three years; in the 'fourth he had Herod's Te-'trarchy annex'd: the three 'laſt years of his Reign he 'paſs'd under Claudius Cæ-'ſar. Thus far Joſephus: wherein, as alſo in other paſſages, I much admire him, in that he agrees ſo exactly with the Holy Scripture. But if any one ſhould think that there is ſome diſagreement about the name of the King; both the time and the action do evidently ſhew that he was the ſame perſon: ſo that either his name was changed by ſome miſtake of the Tranſcriber, or elſe this King had, as many others have, two names.

Note here that the Reverſes made to commit victories to memory were always writen upon with ſome repreſentation of proper reſpect to the place conquered. Of the Impoſtor Theudas, and his Aſſociates.

BUT becauſe Luke does moreover in the * Acts bring in one Gamaliel ſpeaking in the conſultation the Jews had about the Apoſtles, of one (a) Theudas that aroſe up in thoſe days boaſting himſelf to be ſome body, who was ſlain; and all, as many as obey'd him, were ſcatter'd: we alſo will adjoyn the relation of Joſephus concerning this very perſon. Who, in the Book before cited expreſly declares thus much word for word: 'When 'Fadus was Procurator of Judea, a certain Impo-'ſtor, by name Theudas, perſwaded a multitude 'of people to take their Goods with them and 'follow him to the River of Jordan: For he 'ſaid that he was a Prophet, and that he would 'by his command, part the Waters of the 'River,

* Acts 5. 36.

(a) This Theudas Joſephus mentions Antiq. B. 20. c. 5. but that was in Claudius's reign, in the time of Fadus's Preſecture. And ſo that cannot be the perſon

'river, and afford them an easie passage over. 'By such speeches he deceived many. But Fadus suffered them not to take the benefit of 'their madness, but sent out a body of horse a-'gainst them, which falling on them at un-'awares, partly killed them, and partly took 'them prisoners. And having taken Theudas a-'live they beheaded him, and carried his head 'to Jerusalem." After this the same Writer makes mention of the Dearth which hapned in the Reign of Claudius, after this manner.

Governour of Syria. That Theudas in the Acts there fore must needs be some other Person, whom the Jews had recorded in their Writings, and from thence Gamaliel there recites the story, though we have no other record of it. This is the opinion of Scaliger, in L. 6. de Emendat. Tempor. and of Casaubon in Exercitat. 2. c. 18. and of Dr. Hammond in his notes on Acts 5. 36. Valesius, in his annotations, dissents from all these learned Men, and says that by those words of St. Luke [after this man rose up Judas of Galilee] is meant, that Judas his insurrection was before that of Theudas; which exposition he confirms, by saying, that when ever we begin to reckon from the last, as nearest to us, (so he supposes St. Luke there does) we must necessarily place the last person first in such a reckoning, and the first last: So that notwithstanding St. Luke says (after this man rose up Judas of Galilee) yet Judas his insurrection was long before Theudas's. This he illustrates by two examples of such an expression, one taken out of Tertullian in Apologet. the other out of Clemens Alexandr. Lib. 7. stromat. But then being not able to reconcile the time of Theudas his insurrection with the time Josephus places it in, to wit, in the time of Fadus his Procuratorship, he says Josephus was mistaken, placing it later than he should have done. For he will by no means allow two Theudas's. Another way he has to make up this difference, that is, he thinks St. Luke in his expression used a Prolepsis, anticipating the insurrection of Theudas ten years, and makes Gamaliel speak that which was agreeable to his present purpose: And thus Eusebius, he thinks, understood St. Luke's words. The Reader has here the opinion of both sides, and is left to his liberty to believe which he pleases.

All which we find agreeable to what is related in the Acts of † the Apostles; where we have this moreover, That the Disciples which dwelt at Antioch, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea; which also they did, and sent it to the Elders by the hands of Barnabas and Paul. But of this Helena, which Josephus has mentioned, there is an illustrious (b) Sepulchral-monument yet to be seen, standing in the Suburbs of Jerusalem, which is now called Ælia; and she is said to have been Queen of the Adiabeni.

(b) There were three Pyramids standing three furlongs from Jerusalem, where the bones of this Helena were buried, says Joseph. Antiq. This Helena had a Palace in Jerusalem, says Josephus, in the 6 B. of the Jews Wars. Vales.

CHAP. XIII.

Of Simon Magus.

BUT the Faith of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ being now every where diffused among all men; that enemy of man's salvation, plotting to possess himself of the Royal City, brings thither the fore-mentioned Simon. And, joyning his enchantments to that man's craftiness, he made many that dwelt at Rome his own by inducing them into error. This Justin evidences; a man very famous amongst the Professors of our Religion soon after the Apostles time; whose worth we will give account of in due place. Let us read what he has writ in his (a) second Apology to Antoninus for our Doctrine, where he says thus: 'And 'after the ascension of our 'Lord into heaven, the Devils sent forth certain men 'who stiled themselves 'Gods: whom you were so 'far from persecuting, that 'you worship'd them. Amongst them there 'was one Simon a Samaritane, of the Village 'named Gitton, who in the Reign of Claudius 'Cæsar, having performed many magical wonders by the assistance and art of Devils within 'your City Rome, the Metropolis of the Empire, 'was accounted a God by you, to whom you 'dedicated an image, as to a God, in an Island 'of the River Tiber, between the two Bridges, 'with this Latin Inscription, (b) SIMONI DEO SANCTO, that is, to Simon the Holy God. Him almost all the Samaritans, and some of other nations, confess to be the great God, and worship him; as also one (c) Helena, at that time a constant companion of his, who heretofore was a Prostitute in the Stews of Tyre, a City of Phœnicia; and her they 'term the prime Notion '(or first Conception) from 'him. Thus far he: with whom agrees Irenæus in his first Book against Heresies, wherein he sets forth the Life of this man, his impious and most impure Doctrine, which it would be superfluous here to relate; since any one that has a desire may fully understand from the foresaid Books of Irenæus, wherein these things are accurately deliver'd, the original, the life, the grounds and reasons of the false opinions, and the endeavours and purposes not only of this Simon, but also of all other Arch-Hereticks. We have heard that this Simon was indeed the chief Captain and first Author of all Heresie. From which time even to our age, those who are followers of his Heresie, altho' they pretend to have embraced throughout their whole lives, the Christian Religion renown'd amongst all men for its modesty and sanctity; yet nevertheless they relapse to the superstitious worship of Devils, which they seem'd to have abandon'd, prostrating themselves before the Images and Pictures of Simon and his forementi-on'd Helena, whom they worship with sweet perfumes, sacrifices and oblations. And those things which are transacted in secret amongst them, which, say they, do forthwith strike terror into the minds of those that at first hear them, and which (to use the terms of their own written Oracle) do make them tremble and shake by reason of astonishment, are in truth full of terror, amazement of mind, and outra-

(a) This place of Justin is now to be found not in his first but in his second Apology. Eusebius in citing Justin's Apologies follows not the order of our common Editions. For he always calls that the first which our Editions term the second; and that the second which they call the first: Of which more hereafter. Vales.

(b) The Learned have long since observed, that Justin, by reason of his unskilfulness in the Latin tongue, was here mistaken; thinking that the Image dedicated to Semon Sancus was consecrated to Simon Magus. 'Tis certain, that image which Justin had seen in the Island of Tiber, was lately dug up, with this inscription upon it, Semoni Sango Deo Fidio. Sancus was a God among the Sabins that had the charge of bargains and contracts, whence he had the names of Sangus and Fidius. By him the Romans were wont to swear. Some Samaritans, no doubt, deceived Justin, making him believe this Image was dedicated to their Simon Magus. Vales.

CHAP. XIV.

Of Peter the Apoſtle's Preaching at Rome.

THE Devil, that hater of all goodneſs and moſt treacherous enemy of man's ſalvation, at this time produced this Simon the author and contriver of ſo much miſchief, that he might be the great Antagoniſt of the Divine Apoſtles of our Saviour. But the Divine and Celeſtial Grace, which is always aſſiſtant to its Miniſters, by their appearance and preſence ſoon quenched the flame, enkindled by the Devil, humbling and depreſſing by them all haughtineſs and ſwelling pride that exalted it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God. Wherefore, neither the devices of Simon, nor of any other which then were hatch'd, became any ways prevalent during the age of the Apoſtles. For the ſplendour of the truth vanquiſhed and prevailed againſt all machinations; and the power of the Divine Word, which had newly enlighten'd mens minds from heaven, did both flouriſh upon earth, and alſo was converſant and did effectually co-operate with the Apoſtles. Straightway therefore the foreſaid Impoſtor, having the eyes of his mind blinded by a divine and wonderful ſplendour and light, as ſoon as he was detected by the Apoſtle Peter in Judæa in what he had wickedly committed, took a a great journey over-ſea, and fled from the Eaſtern to the Weſtern parts; concluding that he could no other way live freely, and according to his own mind. Arriving at Rome, by the help and aſſiſtance of a Devil (a) there lying in wait, he in a ſhort time ſo far perfected his attempt, that the inhabitants of that City ſet up an image to him, and worſhip'd him as God. But all ſucceeded not long according to his mind. For ſoon after, in the Reign of Claudius, the benign and moſt endearing Providence of God brought Peter, that valiant and great Apoſtle, for courage chief of all the reſt, to Rome, againſt this mighty deſtroyer of mankind, who, as a ſtout Leader of God, armed with celeſtial weapons, brought that precious merchandiſe of intelligible light from the Eaſt to thoſe that dwelt towards the Weſt: declaring to them that Light and Doctrine comfortable to the ſoul, to wit, the publication of the kingdom of Heaven.

(a) Euſebius ſpeaks of a Devil, which had made his reſidence and fixt his habitation in Rome, being then the Metropolis of the whole World. Valeſ.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Goſpel according to Mark.

WHen therefore he had publiſh'd to them the Divine Word, immediately the power of Simon was extinct, and, together with the man (a) himſelf deſtroy'd. But ſo great a luſtre of Piety enlightned the minds of them that were the hearers of Peter, that they thought it not ſufficient barely to hear him once, nor were contented to have receiv'd the publication of the Doctrine of the Celeſtial Word by word of mouth and unwritten. Therefore they earneſtly entreated Mark, Peter's follower, whoſe Goſpel is at this day extant, that he would leave with them ſome written record of that Doctrine they had heard. Neither did they deſiſt till they had prevailed with the man; and thus they gave the occaſion of writing that Goſpel, which is called the Goſpel according to Mark. When the Apoſtle Peter underſtood by the Revelation of the Holy Spirit what was done, he was much delighted with the ardent deſire of the men, and confirm'd that writing by his authority, that ſo thenceforward it ſhould be read in the Churches. (b) Clemens in his Sixth Book of Inſtitutions relates this paſſage. To whom the Biſhop of Hierapolis, by name Papius, may be added as a witneſs. Furthermore, Peter mentions Mark, in his former Epiſtle, which, as they ſay, was written at Rome; Peter himſelf does intimate thus much (calling Rome by (c) a figure Babylon) in theſe words; * The Church that is at Babylon elected together with you, ſaluteth you, and ſo doth Marcus my ſon.

Claudius.

(a) From theſe words of Euſebius it is concluded that the death of Simon Magus happened at Rome in the time of Claudius: For Euſebius writeth that Peter came to Rome in Claudius his reign, and that preſently after, Simon's magical arts were by his coming deſtroyed, together with the Author. Though there be others that ſay Simon was deſtroyed in Nero's time. Valeſ.

(b) This place of Clemens is quoted again by Euſebius in his 6 B. Eccleſ. Hiſt. at which place more ſhall be ſaid of it. Valeſ.

(c) Rome was parallel to Babylon in many things. Valeſ.

That Mark firſt preached the knowledge of Chriſt to the Egyptians.

BUT this Mark (a) going into Egypt is reported to have been the firſt publiſher there of the Goſpel he had written, and to have ſettled Churches in the very City of Alexandria. And furthermore, that ſo great a multitude both of men and women, who there embraced the Faith of Chriſt, profeſs'd from the very beginning ſo ſevere and ſo philoſophical a courſe of life, that Philo vouchſafed in his writings to relate their converſe, their aſſemblies, their eating and drinking together, and their whole manner of living.

(a) Euſebius in his Ch. places Mark's going into Egypt on the ſecond year of Claudius: the Author of the Alexandrian Chronic. and Georg. Syncellus ſay he went in the third year of C. Caligula: it's the opinion of Eutychius Patriarch of Alexandria, that Mark went thither in the ninth year of Claudius. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVII.

What Philo relates of the Aſcetæ in Egypt.

IT is reported that this Philo in the times of Claudius came to be familiarly acquainted with Peter at Rome, who then preach'd the word of God there: neither is this unlikely. For that work of his, of which we ſpeak, being by him elaborated a long time after, does manifeſtly contain all the Eccleſiaſtical Rules which are to this preſent obſerved amongſt us. And ſeeing he deſcribes evidently the lives of the (a) Aſcetæ amongſt us, he does make it ſufficiently perſpicuous that he did not only ſee, but alſo very much approve of and admire the Apoſtolical men of his time, who being, as it is probable, originally Jews, upon that account did then obſerve in a great meaſure the Judaical Rites and Cuſtoms. Firſt of all therefore, in that Book which he intitled, Of Contemplative Life, or, of Suppliants, having profeſſed that he would inſert

(a) He means not Monks; for they were an Order of a later date. Valeſius ſays they were Chriſtians who led a retired, and more ſevere and ſtrict ſort of life: So they were called from that Philoſophical term [ἄσκησις] which ſignifies the exerciſe of virtue and abſtinence: And any one that led ſuch a life was called ἀσκητὴς, i. e. Aſceta.] The Reader may have farther ſatisfaction in this matter in Biſhop Montague's Acts & Mon. Chap. 7. where he will find this buſineſs diſcuſſed at large.

Claudius. says that the men were called (b) Therapeutæ, and the women that were conversant among them Therapeutriæ: And he adjoyns the reason of that appellation, either because like Physicians they healed the minds of those that resorted to them, curing them of their vicious affections, or because they worship'd the Deity with a pure and sincere service and adoration. Further, whether Philo himself gave them this name, devising an appellation agreeable to the manners and dispositions of the men; or whether they were really so called from the beginning, the name of Christians having not yet been every where spread and diffused, it is not necessary positively to affirm or contend about it. But he attests that in the first place they part with their goods; saying, 'that as soon as they be-'take themselves to this course of Philosophi-'zing they put over their wealth and posses-'sions to their Relations. Then casting away 'all care of worldly matters, they leave the Ci-'ties, and make their abode in gardens and so-'litary places; well knowing, the conversing 'with men of a different and disagreeing per-'swasion to be unprofitable and hurtful." Which thing the Christians of that time seem to me to have instituted out of a generous and most fervent ardour of faith, endeavouring to emulate the Prophetical severe course of life. Therefore in the * Acts of the Apostles (which contain nothing but the perfect truth) it is shewed, that all the Disciples of the Apostles selling their possessions and goods, divided the price among the brethren according as every one had need, that so there might not be any indigent person among them. For, as the Word says, As many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prizes of the things that were sold and laid them down at the Apostles feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need. After Philo has attested the very same things with these, of the Therapeutæ, he adds thus much farther concerniug them, word for word saying, 'This (c) sort of men in-'deed is diffused far and 'wide over the whole 'world. For it was requi-'site that both Greeks and 'Barbarians should be par-'takers of so excellent a 'benefit. Egypt especially 'is full of them, throughout all its divisions, 'but most of all about Alexandria: but from all 'places the principal of them retire themselves 'into a most commodious place above the Lake 'Maria, situate upon a little rising hill, excel-'lently well seated both for wholsomeness of 'air and safe conveniency of abiding, as into the 'Country of the Therapeutæ." Then, after he had described their houses, after what manner they were built, he speaks thus of the Churches they have in divers places. 'In every house 'there is a Chapel they called a Semnæum, and 'Monasterium, in which alone by themselves 'they perform the mysteries of an holy life. 'They bring in thither neither meat nor drink, Claudius. 'nor any corporal provisions or necessaries; 'but only the Law, and the Divine Oracles of 'the Prophets, and Hymns and such like, 'whereby knowledge and piety are increased 'and perfected." And a little after he says; 'All the interval of time from Sun-rising to the 'Evening they spend in meditations of Phi-'losophy: For reading the holy Scriptures, they 'philosophize after their Country way, and ex-'pound allegorically. For they suppose that 'the words are only Notes and Marks of some 'things of a mystical nature, which are to be 'explained (d) figuratively. 'They have writings of 'some ancient persons, 'who have been heretofore 'famous Leaders of their 'Sect, and have left them 'many monuments of that 'learning which consists in 'dark and secret expressi-'ons, which they using as 'originalplatforms, do imi-'tate thereby that course 'of study." These certainly seem to be words of such a man as had heard some of our Religion expounding the Holy Scriptures. And it is very likely that the writings of those ancient persons, which he says they had, were the Gospels and Writings of the Apostles, and certain Expositions of the ancient Prophets, of which sort many are contained both in other Epistles of Paul, and also in that written to the Hebrews, Afterwards Philo thus writeth concerning the new Psalms composed by them. 'They do 'not only spend their time in contemplation, 'but they (f) compose 'Songs and Hymns to the 'praise of God of all sorts 'of metre and musical verse, 'which they write in grave 'and seemly Rhimes." He relates many other things of them in that Book I mention'd: but I judg'd these fittest to be selected and pick'd out, in which certain marks of Church discipline are proposed. But if any one shall think what Philo here says to be in no wise proper to the Evangelical Polity, but may be adapted to others besides those I have mention'd, he will certainly be convinc'd by Philo's following words; in which, if he shall duly weigh the matter, he will receive a most undoubted testimony of this thing. Now he writes thus: 'Having first laid temperance as a certain 'foundation, they build thereupon the other 'virtues: for none of them takes either meat or 'drink before sun-set; for they hold it requisite 'to spend the day in the study of Philosophy, 'and the night in making necessary provision 'for the body. Therefore they allot the whole 'day to study, but allow a very small portion 'of the night for bodily provision. Some of 'them forget to eat for three days together, so great

(b) That these Therapeutæ were not Christians we will shew hereafter. Some think they were Essens; but that is unlikely; for Philo never terms them so in that Book wherein he describes them, but at the very beginning calls them Therapeutæ: besides, the Essens (as Philo himself witnesses in his Apology for the Jews, cited by Eusebius, Lib. 8. De Preparat.) were only in Judæa and Palæstine; but these Therapeutæ, he says were scatter'd all over the (then known) world. Lastly, Philo attributes many things to these Therapeutæ, which the Sect of the Essens by no means allowed: as for example, that they had women conversant among them called Therapeutriæ: Now Philo says expresly that the Essens hated womankind: See Philo de vita Contemplat. and Joseph. Hist. of the Jewish Wars, Book 2. Chap. 12. Vales.

(c) Philo's Description of these Therapeutæ in these following words can no way agree with the Christian Professors in those times. For they were then few in number, neither did they look upon any Country as their own, besides the Heavenly Jerusalem. Vales.

(d) Ἐν ὑπονοίαις, that's the term in the original. So the ancient Greeks called that which the latter call ἀλληγορίας; that is, an Allegory, as they term it; when one thing is said, another is to be understood. Vales.

(e) From these words of Philo we may easily perceive that these Therapeutæ were not Christians. For the Professors of Christianity were then of a very fresh date. Besides, what writings could these be? The Books of the Prophets they were not, for Philo separates them from these, speaking of them a little before: They could not be the Gospels, nor the Epistles of the Apostles, for they were scarce written in Philo's age, however they could not then be call'd the writings of ancient persons, at least by Philo. Val.

(f) The composition of Psalms and Hymns was not in use so early in the Church, as these words of Philo must suppose, if we understand them to be spoken of the Christians, that came in after the times of Antoninus, when learned men began to embrace the Christian Faith. So that neither can these words of Philo be any ways understood of Christians. The junior Pliny indeed (in his Epistle to Trajan, Lib. 10. Epist. 97.) says it was a custom of the Christians in their Cœtus, carmen Christo tanquam Deo dicere secum invicem; i. e. to say one with another by turns a Verse or Hymn to Christ as unto God. But there is a difference between saying and composing a Song or Hymn; and besides, this was long after Philo's time. See Dr. Hammond's Preface to his Exposition on the Psalms; and Mr. Gregory's Posthumous Works, Discourse 2d.

But if after all this any one ſhall ſtill perſiſt in a peremptory denial of theſe things, he will at length recede from his obſtinate difficulty of belief, being perſwaded to ſubmit to ſuch manifeſt demonſtrations as are no where to be found but in the Chriſtian Religion, compoſed according to the rule of the Goſpel. ‘Philo ſays further

‘ly to ſearch into and contemplate, beholding
‘in the words, as in a glaſs, the admirable beau-
‘ty of the meaning.” There is no neceſſity of adding farther here an account of their aſſemblies, of the diſtinct apartments of their men and women, and of their ſeveral ſtudies and holy exerciſes, now in uſe amongſt us, more eſpecially about the feaſt of our Lord's Paſſion, when we are wont to practiſe them in faſtings, watchings, and attentive reading of holy Scriptures. All which the man we have ſo often mention'd, does relate in his writings accurately, after the ſame manner in which we only at this time obſerve them: Eſpecially he mentions the (g) Vigils of the great Solemnity, the holy exerciſes therein, and the Hymns we are wont to recite. And how, when one has begun to ſing a Pſalm harmoniouſly and gravely, the reſt, ſilently hearkening, do after ſing out in Chorus the latter parts only of the verſes. ‘And how through‘out thoſe days lying in ſtraw upon the ground, ‘they wholly abſtain from wine (as he has ſaid in ‘theſe expreſs words) and eat nothing that has blood
‘in it: water is their only drink, and their ‘food is bread with ſalt and hyſſop. Farther he deſcribes the order and degrees of their Governors, to wit, (h) thoſe who perform the Eccleſiaſtical Offices, then the Miniſtrations of the Deacons, and laſtly the Epiſcopal preſidency over all. He that deſires to know theſe things more accurately, may be therein informed from the fore-mentioned Hiſtory of Philo. It is therefore apparently evident to every one, that Philo writing thus, did mean thereby thoſe firſt Preachers of the Evangelical Doctrine, and the Diſcipline, at the beginning delivered by the Apoſtles. Claudius.

(g) Euſebius means that whole week which precedes the feaſt of Eaſter, which the Greek Fathers call μεγάλην ἑβδομάδα, the great week, and we the Paſſion week. But in Philo's Book there is no mention of this feaſt of Eaſter. He ſpeaks indeed μεγάλης ἑορτῆς, of a great ſolemnity; but by his following words 'tis evident he means the Jewiſh-feaſt of weeks, or, our Pentecoſt. Valeſ.

(h) He means the Presbyters; concerning whom, ſee Philo, in his ſaid Book, De vitâ contemplat. p. 899. Edit. Par. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVIII.

What Writings of Philo's have come to our hands.

MOreover this Philo being a man of a fluent utterance, and abundant in ſentences, alſo lofty and high in contemplations upon the holy Scriptures, compiled a diverſe and variable expoſition of the ſacred Volumes of holy Writ: partly explaining in a fit and agreeable ſeries and order, the ſubject-matter of the things contain'd in Geneſis, which he entitled The Allegories of the Holy Laws: and partly making particular and diſtinct explications of thoſe Chapters in Scripture which contain any thing in them that is dubious, with objections thereupon and ſolutions thereof; which alſo he fitly entitled Queſtions and Solutions upon Geneſis and Exodus. There are beſides elaborate tracts of his peculiarly written concerning certain Problems; ſuch as are, two Books Of Husbandry, and as many of Drunkenneſs, and ſome others, having different and fit Titles: Such is that, (a) Of the things which a ſober mind prayeth for, and which it deteſteth; and that, Of the confuſion of Languages; and that, Of (b) flight and invention; and that, Of Aſſemblies upon account of obtaining Learning: and concerning the ſubject, Who is the Heir of Divine things, or, of Diviſion into parts equal, and their contraries: and alſo that, Of the three Virtues which with others Moſes wrote of. Beſides, that, Of them whoſe names are changed, and for what reaſon they are changed: In which Book he ſays, he wrote Of Teſtaments the firſt and the ſecond. There is alſo another Book of his, Of removals in journey, or ſhifting of places, and of the life of a wiſe man perfected according to righteouſneſs, or, Of unwritten Laws, and alſo, Of Giants, and, that God is immutable; alſo, (c) That Dreams are ſent from God, according to the opinion of Moſes's five Books. And thus many are the Books he wrote on Geneſis which have come to our hands. We have alſo known five Books of his, of Queſtions and Solutions upon Exodus; and alſo that, of the Tabernacle, and that of the Decalogue, and thoſe four Books, of thoſe Laws which in ſpecie have reference to the chief heads of the Decalogue; and that, of thoſe beaſts fit for ſacrifice, and, what be the kinds of ſacrifices; and that, of the rewards and puniſhments propounded in the Law as well to the Good as to the Evil; and, of curſes. Beſides all theſe, there are extant of his particular Books,

(a) This Book of Philo's is not now extant. Valeſ.

(b) In Suidas this Book is called, περὶ φυσεως καὶ εὑρήματος· which inſcription Suidas took from Sophronius the interpreter of Jerom. But our excellent M. SS. Maz. Med. Fuk. and Sir Henry Savill's have it thus, καὶ ὁ περὶ φύσεως καὶ αἱρέσεως. Wherefore I agree with Nicephorus, who rightly diſtinguiſh'd the two Books of Philo: the one of which was entitled, περὶ φυγῆς καὶ αἱρέσεως, Of flight and choice; the other, περὶ φύσεως καὶ εὑρέσεως, that is, Of nature and invention. Whence it appears that that Book of Euſebius's, which Nicephorus made uſe of, was in this place more correct than our copies. Valeſ.

(c) 'Tis manifeſt that Philo wrote three Books on this Subject, That Dreams are ſent from God. The firſt of which is loſt; the ſecond is extant in the Paris Edition of Philo, pag. 465. in the beginning whereof he makes mention of a former Book which he had written on that ſubject. The third is alſo extant in the ſame Edition, pag. 1108. but miſplaced. Whether he wrote any more than theſe three, is uncertain. Suidas mentions five Books of Philo's De Somniis. Valeſ.

Claudius.

Books, as that, Of (d) Providence, and a Discourse compiled by him; (e) Of the Jews, and, of the man leading a civil life: also, Alexander, or, That Brutes are endowed with Reason. Besides, of this, That every wicked man is a Slave, to which follows in order this Book, That every man studious of Virtue is free. After these he compiled that Book Of Contemplative life, or, of Suppliants, out of which we have cited those things concerning the lives of the Apostolical men. Also, the interpretations of the (f) Hebrew names in the Law and in the Prophets, are said to have been done by his diligence. This Philo coming to Rome in the time of Caius, wrote a Book of Caius's hatred of God, which, by way of scoff and irony, he entitled, Of Virtues; which Book, it's said, he rehearsed before the whole Roman Senate in the time of Claudius; and the piece was so taking, that his admirable Works were thought worthy to be dedicated to the Publick Libraries. At the same time, when Paul travel'd from Jerusalem round about to Illyricum, (g) Claudius expel'd the Jews from Rome. (h) At which time Aquila and Priscilla, with other Jews, departing from Rome, arrived in Asia, where they conversed with Paul the Apostle, then confirming the foundations of those Churches there newly laid by him. Even the lost. But Holy Book of the Acts teaches us these things.

(d) In the Mar. and Fuk. M.SS. it's written τὸ περὶ σπουδαίας, truer; for there was only one Book that bore this Title. In a M. S. Copy of Philo's Works in the Library of Auspurg, this Book of Philo's, De Providentiâ, is confounded with another of his Adversus Flaccum. Indeed this Book, De Providentiâ, is there is an eminent fragment of it in Eusebius De preparat. Libr. 8. cap. Ultim. and in Libr. 7. cap. 21. Vales.

(e) I doubt not but it should be written ὑπὲρ Ἰουδαίων, For the Jews, for so this Book is quoted by Eusebius in his 8 B. De Preparat. Evangel. chap. 10. where there is a most elegant place produced ἐκ τῆς φίλωνος ὑπὲρ Ἰουδαίων ἀπολογίας, i. e. out of the Apology of Philo for the Jews. Rufinus confirms this our emendation; who turns this place thus, de Judæis Apologeticus Liber. Vales.

(f) Jerome makes mention of this Book of Philo's, in his interpretation of the Hebrew names. Moreover, Philo having only interpreted those names that occur in the Law and the Prophets, Origen added afterwards an interpretation of the words and names of the New Testament; supplying that which seemed to be wanting in Philo's Book, as Jerome writes in that Book of his now mentioned. Vales.

(g) Eusebius took this out of the Acts of the Apost. chap. 18. v. 2. And Orosius writes, as he had it out of Josephus, that this was done in the ninth year of Claudius. But that place of Josephus which Orosius quotes is not now extant. Therefore Orosius seems to me to have forgotten himself. And truly, it is not very likely, that Claudius the Emperor, who had so great a kindness for the Jews, as appears by his many Edicts extant in Josephus, should drive the Jews in particular out of the City. I should rather think, whenas there was a great famine at Rome (which in Eusebius's Chronicon is said to have happened in the tenth year of Claudius) that Claudius expelled all Foreigners out of the City, amongst whom were the Jews also. For so Augustus did before; and 'twas frequently practised by the following Emperors, as oft as the City of Rome was in any scarcity of Provision: And so I judge that place of Luke in the Acts is to be understood. But if any one, relying on the Authority of Suetonius (whose Words are these; Judæos impulsore CHRISTO assiduè tumultuantes Româ expulit; in the Life of Claudius. See Dr. Hammond's Annot. on Acts 26. v. 31.) does reject this our Opinion, I will not much withstand him. All the Chronologers downwards follow Orosius; as does also Baronius in his Annals. Whom I much wonder at, in that when he had placed this Edict of Claudius on the ninth year of his Reign, he should also cast the Jerusalem Council upon the same year. Which is manifestly repugnant to the History of the Acts of the Apostles. For, after the Jerusalem Council, which is related Acts 15, Paul going back to Antioch, delivered the Epistle of the Apostles to the brethren, and is said to have tarried there some time. After this, being parted from Barnabas, he went into Syria and Cilicia, Preaching the Word of God. Then he travelled into Phrygia, Galatia, and Mysia, where he was warned by the Holy Spirit in a dream to sail into Macedonia, and first Preach'd the Faith of Christ at Philippi; after that, at Thessalonica and Berea. Sailing thence to Athens, he stayed there a good while expecting Timothy and Silas; and Preach'd the Word of God to the Athenians. Then going to Corinth he found Aquila and Priscilla there, who were lately come from Italy thither, upon account of the Edict of Claudius, commanding all Jews to depart from Rome, as it is in the 18 chap. Acts. From all this it's apparent, that there was a good distance of time between the Council held at Jerusalem, and the Edict of Claudius; in which space all this we have related was dispatch'd by Paul the Apostle. In Chronico Alexandrino, the Council at Jerusalem is placed on the sixth year of Claudius; he had better have said the seventh. For so all things agree exactly. For Paul staid at Antioch the remaining months of that year wherein the Council was; then the following year he travelled through Syria, Cilicia, Phrygia, and Galatia. At length in the ninth year of Claudius, he came into Greece. Vales.

(h) Ὅτε ἀκύλας, that is, at which time Aquila, &c. for it may be read in two words, thus ὅ τε, as I found it written in the King's, and the Fuk. M. SS. Vales.

CHAP. XIX.

Claudius.

What a Calamity befel the Jews at Jerusalem on the very Day of the Passover.

BUT Claudius yet ruling the Empire, there hapned to be so great a tumult and disturbance at Jerusalem on the Feast of the Passover, that there were (a) thirty thousand Jews slain, being those only who by force were press'd together about the Gates of the Temple and trodden under-foot by one another. So that that Festival was turn'd into mourning over the whole Nation, and lamentation throughout every Family. Thus much also Josephus relates almost word for word. But Claudius made Agrippa, the son of Agrippa, (b) King of the Jews; having sent (c) Felix Procurator of the whole Country of Samaria and Galilee, and also of the Region beyond Jordan. And when he had reigned thirteen years and eight months, he died, leaving Nero his Successor in the Empire.

(a) The same number he sets down in his Chronicon. But Josephus, in his 2 B. of the Jewish Wars, says there was somewhat more than ten thousand kill'd. But in his 20th B. of Antiquities, which Work he compiled after his History, he accounts the number of the slain to be twenty thousand. Which number I would rather agree too, because these Books, as I said, were written last by him. Vales.

(b) This Agrippa the younger, to speak properly, was never King of the Jews. For after the death of Agrippa his father, who dy'd the fourth year of Claudius, Claudius took him being very young and kept him with him, neither did he permit him to succeed in his father's Kingdom. Afterwards Herod the King of Chalcis being dead, Claudius gave Agrippa his Uncle's Kingdom; which when he had held 4 years, Claudius in the twelfth year of his Reign gave him Thraconitis, which was the Tetrachy of Philip, and also the Kingdom of Lysanias; having first taken Chalcis from him: He transferred to him also the authority over the Temple, and the power of electing the High-priests, which his Uncle Herod had. A little after, Nero added to his Kingdom part of Galilee, as Josephus writes in his twentieth B. of Antiq. Which being thus, it's apparent Eusebius was mistaken, who wrote both here and in his Chronicon, that Agrippa the younger succeeded in his father's Kingdom presently after the death of his father, and was made King of the Jews by Claudius. Altho' Eusebius says not here expresly that he was by Claudius made King presently after his father's death. Indeed, out of Josephus it may be evidently shown that the younger Agrippa was not made King immediately after his father's death. For in his second Book of the Jewish Wars, chap. 13. he makes the twelfth year of Nero, wherein the Jewish War began, to be the same with the seventeenth of King Agrippa. Therefore the younger Agrippa began to reign the eighth year of Claudius. Moreover, I will not deny that he was King of the Jews, seeing he was King of Galilee, and is by Justus reckoned among the Kings of the Jews. But I deny that ever he was King of Judea. For after the death of the Seniour Agrippa, which happened in the fourth year of Claudius, Judea was brought into the form of a Province, and every year the Procurators of Cæsar were sent thither, as Josephus relates. Vales.

(c) In the Chronicon of Eusebius, Felix is said to have been sent Procurator into Judea by Claudius, in the eleventh year of his Reign. But in Scaliger's Edition of that Work, it is more rightly placed on the tenth year of Claudius. Yet it seems to be truer, that Felix was sent into Judea in the ninth of Claudius. For Tacitus, in his twelfth Book, says, That Felix was lately set over the Jews, (Sulla and Otho being Consuls, which was the tenth year of Claudius:) And in Acts 24. Paul, pleading his cause before this same Felix, which was done on the thirteenth year of Claudius, speaks thus to him: For as much as I know that thou hast been for many years a Judge unto this Nation. Moreover Rufinus is mistaken, in that he thinks these are Josephus's Words, when as it appears that they indeed are Eusebius's. Vales.

CHAP. XX.

What was done at Jerusalem in the Reign of Nero.

Nero.

NOW in Nero's time, Felix being Procurator of Judea, Josephus relateth in the twentieth Book of his Antiquities, that there

Nero. was again a Sedition of the Prieſts one againſt the other, in theſe words: 'There aroſe alſo a Sedition of the Chief Prieſts, againſt the Prieſts and the Chief of the People of Jeruſalem. And each of them forming for themſelves a company of moſt audacious fellows, and ſuch as endeavoured to make innovations, behaved themſelves as Captains; and encountring they railed againſt each other, and threw ſtones at one another. There was no body to rebuke them; but, as in a City deſtitute of a Governour, theſe things were licentiouſly done. And ſo great impudence and preſumptuous boldneſs poſſeſt the Chief Prieſts, that they dared to ſend their ſervants to the Threſhing-floor, and take the Tythes due to the Prieſts. Whence it came to paſs that the pooreſt of the Prieſts were ſeen to periſh for want of ſuſtenance. In ſuch ſort did the violence of the Seditious prevail over all juſtice and equity." And again the ſame Writer relates, that at the ſame time there aroſe a ſort of Thieves in Jeruſalem, who in the day-time, as he ſays, and in the very midſt of the City, kill'd thoſe they met with; but eſpecially on the Feſtivals, being mix'd among the crowd, and hiding little daggers under their garments, they ſtabb'd the moſt eminent (a) perſonages; and when they fell, theſe murtherers would diſſemble themſelves to be of the number of thoſe that grieved. Whereby they were undiſcovered, becauſe of the good opinion all men had of them. And firſt, he ſays, Jonathan the High-Prieſt was killed by them, and after him many were ſlain daily; and, he ſays, the fear was more grievous than the calamity, in that every one, as in war, hourly expected death.

(a) Τὰς διαφόρους; ſo it is in Joſephus. Gelenius renders it, enemies: which I like not. For Joſephus by that term means τὰς διαφέροντας; the moſt eminent Perſonages. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXI.

Of that Egyptian who is mentioned in the Acts of the Apoſtles.

AFter theſe things Joſephus adds, having interpoſed ſome other words: 'But the 'Egyptian Falſe Prophet annoy'd the Jews with 'a greater miſchief than theſe. For he, coming 'into the Country, being a Magician, and having gotten himſelf the repute of a Prophet, gather'd together about thirty thouſand men 'ſuch as he had ſeduced; and leading them out 'of the Wilderneſs to the Mount called the Mount of Olives, prepared by force from thence to 'enter Jeruſalem; and having vanquiſh'd the 'Roman Guards, to ſeize the Principality over the people, reſolving to make them his 'Guard, who together with him by violence entred the City. But Felix prevented his attempt, 'having met him with the Roman Soldiers; and 'all the people joyn'd their aſſiſtance in repelling his injurious violence. So that, the aſſault 'being made, the Egyptian fled with a few, and 'moſt of his party were ſlain and taken priſoners." Theſe matters Joſephus relates in the ſecond Book of his Hiſtory; and it's worthy our (a) obſerving, together with what is here related of this Egyptian, thoſe things which are declared of him in the Acts of the Apoſtles: There, in the time of Felix it is ſaid by the Chief Captain at Jeruſalem unto Paul, when the multitude of the Jews raiſed a tumult againſt him; * Art not thou the Egyptian which before theſe days madeſt an uproar, and leddeſt into the Wilderneſs (b) four thouſand men that were murtherers? But thus much concerning the Times of Felix.

(a) Ἐπισῆσαι, ſignifies properly to attend to, or obſerve. In this ſenſe Euſebius uſes the word chap. 18. of this Book, and in B. 3. chap. 24. This word occurs in Athenæus, Polybius, and others. Valeſ.

* Acts 21. 28. See Joſephus Antiq. B. 20. c. 6, & 7. See alſo Dr. Hammond on Acts 21. 38.

Nero. (b) Joſephus ſays there were thirty thouſand Men: Which is to be underſtood, as that the number of the whole multitude was 30000, of which 4000 only were murtherers. And ſo Joſephus will be reconciled to Luke. But I agree not with Euſebius, who writes that this was done in Nero's time. For in Acts 21. this Egyptian is ſaid to have been overthrown a little before Paul's coming to Jeruſalem. Now Paul came thither in the laſt year of Claudius: which may be gathered from the 24 chap. Acts, where Luke writes that Portius Feſtus was ſent as ſucceſſor to Felix. Seeing therefore Feſtus was ſent into Judea in the ſecond year of Nero, the overthrow of this Egyptian muſt neceſſarily fall on the laſt year of Claudius. The narration of Joſephus, who ſeems to refer all this to the times of Nero, deceived Euſebius. But Euſebius ought to have conſidered, that Joſephus does in that place relate all the Acts of Felix together, as well what he did under Claudius, as what under Nero. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXII.

How Paul, being ſent bound from Judea to Rome, having made his defence, was wholly acquitted.

BUT Feſtus is by Nero ſent as Succeſſor to this Felix: in whoſe time Paul having pleaded for himſelf is carried bound to Rome; Ariſtarchus was with him, whom ſomewhere in his Epiſtles he deſervedly ſtiles his Fellow-priſoner: And Luke, who committed to writing the Acts of the Apoſtles, concluded his Hiſtory here, having ſhew'd that Paul lived two full years at Rome, enjoying in a great meaſure his liberty; and, that he preached the Word of God, no man forbidding him: Then, having made his defence, it is moreover reported that the Apoſtle travel'd again upon account of the miniſtration of preaching; and that, coming the ſecond time to the ſame City, he ended his life by Martyrdom in this Emperor's Reign. At which time, being in bonds, he wrote the ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, ſignifying therein both his former defence, and alſo his approaching death. Take his own teſtimony hereof. At my firſt anſwer (ſays he) no man ſtood with me, but all men forſook me, I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge: notwithſtanding the Lord ſtood with me, and ſtrengthned me, that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear; and I was delivered out of the mouth of the Lion. By which words he makes it plainly evident, that at the firſt time, that his preaching might be fulfill'd, he was deliver'd out of the mouth of the Lion; ſpeaking, as it was likely, of Nero, becauſe of his cruelty. (a) But afterwards he has not added any thing like unto theſe words [He ſhall deliver me out of the mouth of the Lion:] for by he Spirit he ſaw that his end was now near at hand: wherefore, having ſaid [and I was delivered out of the mouth of the Lion] he adds this, [The Lord ſhall deliver me from every evil work, and will preſerve me unto his heavenly Kingdom;] evidently ſignifying that his Martyrdom was at hand; which he more plainly foretels in the ſame Epiſtle, ſaying, For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. Moreover, in this ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, he manifeſtly declares, that only Luke was then with him when he wrote it; but, at his firſt anſwer, that not ſo much as he was with him then. Whence 'tis agreeable to reaſon to think, that Luke concluded the Acts of the Apoſtles at that time, having continued the Hiſtory ſo long as he accompanied Paul. Theſe things we have ſpoken, that

(a) Indeed this place is very obſcure; and therefore Muſculus (as alſo Dr. Hammer) omitted it. But, having conſidered upon it long and much, at length I apprehended the true ſenſe of this place. Euſebius therefore ſays, that from the ſecond Epiſtle of Nero. that we may make it manifeſt that the martyrdom of Paul was not conſummated at that firſt coming of his to Rome, which Luke mentions. For it's likely, that Paul's apology for his opinion was more eaſily admitted by Nero, he behaving himſelf more mildly at the beginning of his Empire; but proceeding afterwards to the commiſſion of moſt horrid and villainous acts, thoſe things againſt the Apoſtles together with many other perſons, were by him taken in hand.

Paul to Timothy this may be gathered, to wit, that Paul in his firſt defence was acquitted by the Judges ſentences; but afterward at his ſecond defence he was condemned. The former part hereof he apparently manifeſts in theſe words [At my firſt defence no Man ſtood with me;] and whenas he ſays [I was delivered out of the mouth of the Lyon,] which is as much as if he had ſaid, I was ſnatch'd from Nero's jaws. But Paul ſpeaks far otherwiſe of his ſecond accuſation. For he does not ſay [The Lord delivered me out of the mouth of the Lyon] as he had ſaid before. For he foreſaw, God revealing it to him, that he ſhould by no means any longer avoid the ſword of the perſecutor, but ſhould end his life by a glorious martyrdom. Therefore when he had ſaid of his firſt accuſation [I was delivered out of the mouth of the Lyon] concerning his ſecond, with which he was then charged, he adds theſe words [The Lord ſhall deliver me from every evil work, and will preſerve me unto his heavenly Kingdom] apparently manifeſting his death by theſe words. This is the meaning of this place, which neither the the Tranſlators, nor I my ſelf at firſt underſtood. Wherefore in the words of Euſebius, it muſt be read [ἔτι ἓν] in two diſtinct words, or elſe the accent muſt be changed, thus ἔτιεν. Indeed, in the Maz. M.S. it is thus written [ἐπ ἓν] in two diſtinct words. Moreover Jerome, in his Book De Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis, has quoted this place of Euſebius, where he ſpeaks of Paul; but he apprehended not Euſebius's meaning, as it will be apparent to the Reader. Wherefore Sophronius alſo, when he tranſlated this place of Jerome, into Greek, omitted ſome words, which ſeemed to hinder the meaning. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXIII.

MOreover Paul having appealed to Cæſar, and being by Feſtus ſent to Rome, the Jews, who had plotted a deſign againſt him, being now diſappointed of their expectation, ſet upon James the Brother of the Lord, to whom the Epiſcopal ſeat at Jeruſalem was given by the Apoſtles. And of this ſort were their villainous practices againſt him: leading him forth publickly, they required him to renounce the faith of Chriſt before all the people. But when he, contrary to the expectation of all, had ſpoken freely and with a greater boldneſs than they look'd for, before the whole multitude, and had confeſs'd that our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt was the Son of God; being no longer able to endure the teſtimony of the man, they ſlew him, who was believed by all to be a moſt juſt perſon, by reaſon of that ſingular eminence he arriv'd to, in his leading a philoſophical and pious courſe of life; taking the vacancy of the Government as a fit opportunity for this their licentiouſneſs. For Feſtus being at that time dead in Judea, that Province was without a Preſident and Procurator. Now the manner of this James's death, the words of Clemens before quoted by us have manifeſted; he having declared, that he was caſt headlong from the battlement of the Temple, and beaten to death with a club. But moreover, (a) Hegeſippus, being one of thoſe who were of the firſt ſucceſſion after the Apoſtles, does in the Fifth Book of his Commentaries moſt accurately relate theſe things concerning this James; ſpeaking after this manner: 'James, the Brother of our Lord, undertook, together with the Apoſtles, the government of the Church: That James who was ſurnamed the Juſt by all, even from the times of our Lord until ours. For many were called by the name of James; but this man was holy from his mother's womb. He drank neither wine nor ſtrong drink; nor eat any creature wherein there was life. There never came razor upon his head; he anointed not himſelf with oyl, neither did he uſe a bath. To (b) him only it was lawful to enter into the Holieſt of Holies. He wore no woollen, but linnen garments; and went into the Temple alone, where he was found upon his knees, making ſupplication for the forgiveneſs of the people: in ſo much that his knees were become hard and brawny, like thoſe of a Camel, by reaſon of his continual kneeling to worſhip God, and to make ſupplication for the remiſſion of the people. Wherefore upon account of his moſt eminent righteouſneſs he was called Juſtus and (c) Oblias, which ſignifies in Engliſh, the defence and righteouſneſs of the people, as the Prophets declare concerning him. Therefore certain men of the (d) ſeven Hereſies among that people of the Jews, which we have before written of in our Commentaries, ask'd him, which is the (e) gate of Jeſus? And he ſaid, that that Jeſus was the Saviour. Some of them believ'd that Jeſus was the Chriſt: but the forementioned Sects believ'd neither the (f) Reſurrection, nor that he was come to reward every man according to his works. But as many as believed, believed by the means of James. Therefore many of the chief men believing there was a commotion among the Jews, and Scribes and Phariſees, who ſaid that all the people were in danger to think Jeſus to be the Chriſt. Coming altogether therefore unto James, they ſaid unto him, we beſeech thee reſtrain the people, for they are in an error concerning Jeſus, ſuppoſing him to be the Chriſt; we entreat thee, perſwade all thoſe who come together at the day of the Paſſover, that they may think aright concerning Jeſus: for we all put our confidence in thee; and we and all the people bear thee witneſs that thou art juſt, and reſpecteſt not the perſon of any man: perſwade the multitude therefore that they be not deceiv'd about Jeſus: for we and all the people put our confidence in thee: ſtand therefore upon the battlement of

(a) The firſt ſucceſſion of the Apoſtles is extended to the times of M. Aurelius Antoninus. For in his Reign Polycarp the diſciple of John the Apoſtle was crowned with Martyrdom. Hegeſippus therefore is rightly ſaid to have lived in the firſt ſucceſſion of the Apoſtles, in that he flouriſhed in the Reign of the Sons of Antoninus Pius. And coming to Rome when *Aniceta*s was Biſhop, he ſtayed there to Eleutherus's time. In the Alexandrian Chronicle (which I would more willingly call the Antiochian) Hegeſippus is ſaid to have died in the Reign of Commodus. He was therefore cotemporary with Ireneus: who alſo was next to the firſt ſucceſſion of the Apoſtles, as Euſebius teſtifies, Book 5. chap. 20. Valeſ.

(b) Scaliger, in his Animadverſ. Euſebian. p. 178. has examin'd this whole paſſage of Hegeſippus's, and finds fault with many things in it; which are well worth reading. See alſo Dionyſius Petavius in Not. ad Hereſim 78. Epiphanii, & P. Halloixius, in his Notes on the Life of Hegeſippus, chap. 3. Valeſ.

(c) The learned Nich. Fuller, Book 3. chap. 1. of his Miſcellan, has thus corrected this place. ἑκαλεῖτο τὸ σαδδίκ, καὶ Ὠζλεὰμ, ὅ ἐστιν, δίκαιος, καὶ περιοχὴ τοῦ λαοῦ; i. e. He was called Saddick, and Ozleam, which ſignifies in Engliſh, a juſt man, and the defence of the people. For צַדִּיק in Hebrew ſignifies, a juſt man. And Ozleam is made up of theſe two Hebrew words עֹז לְעַם, which ſignifie, the ſtrength, or, defence of the people; the Letter ל being the ſign of the Genitive or Dative caſe with the Hebrews. The original of this appellation is taken from Pſalm 28. 9. where we meet with theſe words in the original, יְהוָה עֹז לְעַמּוֹ יִתֵּן The Lord ſhall give ſtrength to his people. Fuller's Miſcell. B. 3. chap. 1.

(d) This place of Hegeſippus, wherein, he ſays, he wrote concerning the ſeven Hereſies, we ſhall meet with in the 4 B. of Euſeb. Eccleſ. Hiſt. where we will ſpeak more concerning them. Valeſ.

(e) By Gate here, is meant nothing elſe, but the way of Entrance to Chriſt; which is, by Faith in God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt. Agreeable hereto it's ſaid Pſal. 118. 20. This is the gate of the Lord, the righteous ſhall enter into it. Valeſ.

(f) The Phariſees, who were one branch of theſe Sects, believ'd the Reſurrection from the dead. Valeſ.

Nero. 'the Temple, that from an high thou may'ſt 'be conſpicuous, and thy words readily heard 'by all the people; for upon account of the 'Paſſover, all the Tribes, together with the '(g) Nations are come together. Therefore the foreſaid Scribes and Phariſees 'placed James upon the battlement of the Temple, and 'cried out to him, and ſaid, 'O Juſtus! whom we all 'ought to put our confidence in; becauſe the people are miſled after Jeſus 'who was crucifi'd, declare 'to us, which is the gate of 'Chriſt who was crucified: 'and he anſwer'd with a 'loud voice, Why do ye 'queſtion me about Jeſus 'the ſon of man? He even 'ſits in heaven at the right 'hand of great power, and 'will come in the clouds of 'heaven. Now when many 'were fully ſatisfied and 'confirmed and glorified God for this teſtimony of James, and cry'd, 'ſaying, (h) Hoſannah to the '(i) ſon of David, then the 'ſame Scribes and Phariſees 'ſaid again to one another, 'we have done ill in exhibiting ſuch a teſtimony 'to Jeſus; but let us go up 'and caſt him down, that 'ſo the people being terrified may not give credit 'to him. And they cried 'out, ſaying, O, O, even 'Juſtus himſelf is alſo ſeduced. And they fulfill'd that 'which was written in Iſaiah. (k) We will deſtroy the righteous, for he is troubleſome to us; wherefore they ſhall eat the fruit of their doings. 'They went up therefore 'and caſt down Juſtus, and 'ſaid amongſt themſelves, 'Let us ſtone James the Juſt; and they began 'to ſtone him, for he was not fully dead after his 'fall; but turning he kneeled, ſaying, I intreat 'thee, O Lord God the Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. As they were thus 'ſtoning of him, one of the Prieſts of the ſons 'of Rechab the ſon of (l) Rechabim, teſtified of by Jeremy the Prophet, cried 'out, ſaying, (m) Ceaſe, 'what do ye? Juſtus prays 'for us. And one of them, 'being one of the Fullers, 'took a leaver, with which 'he uſed to ſqueeze garments, and ſmote Juſtus 'on the head; and ſo he 'was martyr'd. (n) And 'they buried him in that place, and (o) his Grave-ſtone as yet remains near the Temple. This man 'was a true and ſubſtantial witneſs both to Jews 'and Gentiles, that Jeſus was 'the Chriſt: and ſoon after 'Veſpaſian beſet Judea round 'about, and took the Jews 'captive.' Theſe things Hegeſippus, having related fully and largely, does therein agree with Clemens. But James was a perſon ſo admirable, and ſo much cried up amongſt all men for his righteouſneſs, that the moſt ſober men of the Jews were of opinion that this was the cauſe of the ſiege of Jeruſalem, which immediately follow'd upon his Martyrdom: and that this ſiege befel 'em upon no other account than that audacious villany committed againſt this James: Joſephus therefore was not afraid to teſtifie this in writing, declaring himſelf in theſe words: 'Theſe things 'befel the Jews in the way 'of revenge for James the 'Juſt, who was the Brother of Jeſus call'd Chriſt; 'becauſe the Jews had murther'd him, being a 'moſt righteous perſon." And the ſame Author in the twentieth Book of his Antiquities, relates his death in theſe words: 'C*æſar*, being certified of 'Feſtus's death, ſent Albinus Procurator into Judea: but Ananus the younger, who as we ſaid 'before had gotten the High-Prieſthood, was 'a man as to his diſpoſition raſh and exceſſively 'bold. He embraced the Sect of the Sadduces, 'who in matters of judgment are cruel above 'all the Jews, as we before manifeſted. Ananus 'therefore, being ſuch an one as we have deſcrib'd him to be, ſuppoſing he had a fit opportunity, in that Feſtus was dead, and Albinus 'yet upon his journey, call'd an aſſembly of the 'Judges; into which he cauſed the Brother of 'Jeſus call'd Chriſt (whoſe name was James) 'with certain others to be brought, whom he 'accuſed as violators of the Law, and ſo deliver'd them up to be (p) ſtoned. But as many 'as ſeem'd to be the mildeſt and moſt modeſt in (g) Petavius does here deſervedly reprove Scaliger, who had denied, that it was lawful for any Gentile to be preſent at the Feſtival of the Jews. For beſides that place which Petavius quotes; John 12. 20. we are ſupplied with many teſtimonies out of Joſephus, to evidence this matter. Vitellius the Preſident of Syria went up to Jeruſalem at the feaſt of the Paſſover, and was honourably entertained by the Jews: As we may read chap. 6. B. 18. of Joſephus's Antiq. He writes the ſame concerning Quadratus the Preſident of Syria, B. 20. of his Antiq. Valeſ.

(h) This word Hoſanna, is a corruption of the Hebrew word, הוֹשִׁיעָנִי (which ſignifies, preſerve me, or, make me ſafe,) being the Imperative mood Hiph. with the Affixe נִי derived from the Theme יָשַׁע. See the original Text of Jer. 17. 14. And alſo, ſee Biſhop Pearſon on the Creed, in his marginal notes, pag. 70. Edit. Lond. 1669.

(i) Theſe words, which Hegeſippus ſays the Jews then utter'd, ought to be underſtood of Chriſt, rather than of James. For when James was ſet upon the battlement of the Temple, and had declar'd Jeſus to be the Chriſt and Redeemer of mankind, thoſe that embraced the Faith of Chriſt began to cry out Hoſanna, to the Son of David, that is, to Jeſus Chriſt. Valeſ.

(k) So the 72 Tranſlate Eſai. 3. v. 10. Their words are theſe, Νῦν σωιῶμεν τὸν δίκαιον, ὅτι δύσχρηστος ἡμῖν ἐστί· τοίνυν τὰ γενήματα τῶν ἔργων αὐτῶν φάγονται. But the Hebrew copy differs much from this Tranſlation, אִמְרוּ צַדִּיק כִּי־טוֹב כִּי פְרִי מַעֲלְלֵיהֶם יֹאכֵלוּ. Which our Tranſlation following, renders thus in Engliſh, Say ye to the righteous, that it ſhall be well with him; for they ſhall eat the fruit of their doings. Compare the Sept. Tranſlat. of Iſai. 3. 10. with the Hebrew Text of that place.

(l) As if he had ſaid, one of the Prieſts, the ſon of Rechab, of the family of the Rechabites; which laſt words [υἱῶν ῥαχαβείμ] are therefore added, that Rechab, the father of this Prieſt, might be diſtinguiſh'd from other Rechabs. For many were call'd by the ſame name of Rechab: But this Man, of whom Hegeſippus ſpeaks, was of the ſtock of the Rechabites, ſpoken of by the Prophet Jeremy, chap. 35. Valeſ.

(m) Epiphanius, in Hæreſ. 78, writes, that theſe words were not ſpoken by the Rechabite Prieſt, but by Simeon the Son of Cleopas. Valeſ.

(n) Ἔθαψαν αὐτὸν ἐν τῷ τόπῳ; ſo the King's M. S. reads it; which Stephens followed in his Edit. But our other three M. SS. Mag. Med. and Fuk. have it thus, καὶ ἔθαψαν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τῷ τόπῳ παρὰ τῷ ναῷ; that is, and they buried him in that place, near the Temple; which reading Nicephorus and Ruſinus do confirm. Valeſ.

Nero. (o) How can it be that the Grave-ſtone, or Monument of this James ſhould remain after the deſtruction of the City by the Romans? Neither is that very likely, which Hegeſippus ſays, to wit, that James was buried near the Temple. For the Jews uſed to bury their dead without the City; as appears from the Goſpel, and from the Sepulchre of Helena, which before we ſpoke of, at chap. 12. of this Book. Ruſinus therefore leaves out this whole clauſe, in his Verſion. In the moſt antient Mag. M. S. I found (at the Grave-ſtone) this note written in the margin: Ἰσέον ὅτι ἡ στήλη αὕτη λίθος ἦν ἀμορφος, ἐπιγραφὴν ἔχων τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ τεθαμμένου Ἰακώβου; ἀλλ' οὐκ ἔτι νῦν οἱ χειμαρροὶ ἐν τοῖς μνήμασιν αὐτῶν λίθους ἰσᾶσιν, οὐδὲ γράμματα ἐν αὐτοῖς γράφουσιν, ἢ τὸ σημεῖον τοῦ σταυροῦ ἐγχαράττουσιν; That is, you muſt know that this Monument was nothing elſe but a ſtone not formed into any ſhape, upon which the name of James there buried was cut: From whence even to this time the Chriſtians ſet up ſtones on their Sepulchres, and either write Letters thereon, or engrave the ſign of the Croſs. Valeſ.

(p) What can be more different, yea contrary, than this relation of Joſephus's, and that of Hegeſippus, about James's Martyrdom? For Joſephus ſays, he was condemned in a publick Council of the Jews; and Hegeſippus, that he was murthered in a ſedition and tumult of the people: Hegeſippus relates, that he was killed with a Fuller's Club in the midſt of the City: But Joſephus declares that he was ſtoned; which was always done without the Gates of the City. Farther, Joſephus ſhews us the year, wherein James died, by theſe two Remarks, to wit, that it was when Ananus was High-prieſt, and when Albinus came firſt into Judea. Euſebius, in his Chronicon, writes that Albinus ſucceeded Feſtus in the ſixth year of Nero's Empire; and yet the ſame Author places the Martyrdom of James on the year following, which manifeſtly contradicts what Joſephus has related: For he expreſly ſays that James was murthered before Albinus came into that Province. Euſebius therefore ought to have included the beginning of Albinus his Procuratorſhip, and James his Martyrdom in the ſame year. But Baronius denies all this, and proves, that the Martyrdom of James happened on the ſeventh year of Nero; which aſſertion he confirms both from the conſent of all the Antients, and alſo from Joſephus his Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Wars, B. 2. chap. 12. But I judge that the conſent of Jerome, Nicephorus, and others, who wrote from, and follow'd Euſebius's Chronicon (Euſebius's opinion not being diſcus'd) is not much to be eſteem'd of: Now the place in Joſephus proves nothing elſe, than that Albinus was Procurator of Judea in the fourth year before the Jewiſh War began, and in the ſeventh before the City was taken. But from that place in Joſephus it cannot be concluded that Albinus began his Procuratorſhip in the ſeventh year before the taking of Jeruſalem. Yea, it ſeems truer in my judgment, that Albinus came came into Judea in the fourth year of Nero. For Porcius Festus Governed Judea two years, as appears by his Acts, of which Josephus relates but few. To him succeeded Albinus in the fourth year of Nero, and continued there to the tenth of that Emperor, as Eusebius has out of Josephus rightly observed. Therefore James was Martyred in the fourth year of Nero. Epiphanius confirms this our conjecture (in Heres. 78.) where he says James presided over the Church at Jerusalem about twenty four years, from the Lord's Ascension. Vales.

Nero.

'the City, and who were the strictest observers of the Law, were very much offended 'hereat; and sending privately to the King, they intreated him to write to (q) Ananus, to warn him that he should not any more attempt any such thing. For that he had not done this first fact regularly and legally. And some of them also went to meet Albinus journeying from Alexandria, and informed him, that it was not lawful for Ananus without his consent to assemble the Sanhedrim. Albinus being induced to believe what they said, wrote in great anger to Ananus, threatning that he would punish him. And King Agrippa for this very thing took the High-Priesthood from him, which he had held three months, and constituted Jesus the son of (r) Dammæus High-Priest." Thus much concerning James, whose the first of those called the General Epistles is reported to be. But you must know it is (f) suspected to be spurious. Therefore not many of the Antients have made mention of it, like as neither of that called Jude, being also one of the Seven, termed the General Epistles: Yet notwithstanding we know, that these with the rest have been publickly read in most Churches.

(q) Nicephorus (in his second B. chap. 4.) thinks this Ananus to be the same with that Ananias, who commanded Paul to be smitten; of whom Luke speaks Acts 23. 2. But herein he is much out: for Ananias the Son of Nebedæus (of whom Luke there speaks) was High-priest in Claudius's Empire, from his seventh year to the beginning of Nero's reign; a Man that was the most potent of all the Jews in his age, as Josephus testifies in his twentieth Book of Antiq. But moreover, that Catalogue of High-priests, which is there put down by Nicephorus, is to be made up out of Josephus's Books: And after Joseph the Son of Cama, Ananias the Son of Nebedæus is to be placed, of whom Josephus speaks in the 3 chap. of his twentieth Book. After him was Ishmael the Son Phabæus, made High-priest by Agrippa junior. After whom succeeded Joseph, surnamed Cabus, the Son of Simon; and then Ananus, the Son of Ananus, who is here spoken of. Vales.

(r) In Josephus and Nicephorus it is Damnæus. Vales.

(f) Rufinus and Christophorson translated this place so, as if this were the opinion of some; which sense we have followed in our Version. But, having now considered the matter better, we think otherwise, to wit, that Eusebius did absolutely pronounce this Epistle to be Spurious. Jerome (de Jacobo) says thus, Unam scripsit Epistolam, quæ & ipsa ab alio quodam sub nomine ejus edita asseritur, licet paulatim tempore procedente, obtinuerit autoritatem: That is, He wrote one Epistle, which is affirmed to have been set forth by another, under his name; though by degrees in process of time it hath obtained authority. Vales.

CHAP. XXIV.

How, after Mark, Annianus was constituted the first Bishop of the Church of the Alexandrians.

BUT Nero being in the eighth year of his Reign, Annianus, the first after Mark the (a) Apostle and Evangelist, succeeded in the publick charge of the Church at Alexandria; (b) being a man beloved of God, and in all respects admirable.

(a) In the King's M. S. it is written, μέγκον τὸν ἀπόστολον καὶ εὐαγγελιστὴν, that is, Mark the Apostle and Evangelist; but in the rest of the M. SS. Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil. these words [ἀπόστολον καὶ, i. e. Apostle and] are wanting: which neither are in Rufinus's translation. I know indeed, that Mark may deservedly be called an Apostle; in that he was the first that Preach'd the faith of Christ to the Alexandrians. Athanasius (in Synopsi) indeed calls Mark and Luke Apostles. Idatius also (in Fastis) stiles Luke and Timothy Apostles. See what we noted above at the last chap. of the first Book. But we do not here enquire what title Mark deserv'd, but only what Euseb. wrote. Vales.

(b) This whole clause is wanting in our three M. SS. copies, Maz. Med. and Fuk. and in the translation of Rufinus. But because it was in the King's M. S. we have put it in. We have also written the name of Annianus with a double n; from the authority of the Maz. and Med. M. SS. To which agree Rufinus, Jerom, and others. For Annianus is a Roman name, and is derived from Annius. Vales.

CHAP. XXV.

Nero.

Of the Persecution in the time of Nero, in which Paul and Peter were for Religion graced with Martyrdom at Rome.

THE Empire being now confirm'd to Nero, he giving his mind to the commission of nefarious facts, arm'd himself against the very worship of the Supream God. Indeed, how wicked a person he was, our present leisure will not permit us to describe. But, in as much as many have related in most accurate Treatises those things that were done by him, he that is desirous may from thence see the cruelty and insolent rage of the man. Whereby having without all consideration destroy'd an infinite number of men, he arriv'd to such an height of murdering cruelty, that he forbore not his most familiar and most beloved friends; but slew his Mother and his Wife, with innumerable others that were related to him, as if they had been enemies and adversaries, by sundry kinds of death. This indeed also ought together with the rest to have been ascrib'd to him as one of his titles, That he was the first of the Emperors that demonstrated himself to be an Adversary to the worship due to God. Thus much again Tertullian the Roman does record, saying after this manner: '(a) Consult your 'Records. There you will 'find that Nero was the first, 'who with the Imperial 'Sword raged against this 'Sect then greatly flourish-'ing at Rome. But we even 'boast of such a beginner 'of our persecution: for he 'that knows him, may un-'derstand that nothing but 'some great Good was con-'demned by Nero." Thus therefore this man, being proclaim'd the first and chiefest enemy of God, set upon slaughtering the Apostles. Wherefore they relate that in his time Paul was beheaded at Rome, and also Peter crucified. And the name of Peter and Paul unto this present time remaining upon the Burial-places there doth confirm the story. In like manner, even an (b) Ecclesiastical man, by name Caius, who flourish'd in the time of Zephyrinus Bishop of Rome, and wrote against Proclus a great defender of the opinion of the Cataphrygians, says these very words concerning the places where the sacred bodies of the aforesaid Apostles were deposited: 'I am a-'ble to shew the Trophies 'of the Apostles: For if 'you would go to the Va-'tican, or to the way O-'stia, you will find the 'Trophies of those who 'founded this Church. And

(a) He that translated Tertullian's Apology into Greek, (were it Eusebius, which I think not to be true, or whoever it was;) he understood not Tertullian's words. Neither is this true of this place only, but of many others also of Tertullian, which are produced in Greek by Eusebius in this Work. Vales. Tertullian's Words are these: Consulite commentarios vestros; illic reperietis primum Neronem in hanc Sectam, tum maxime Romæ orientem Cæsariano gladio ferociisse. Sed tali dedicatore damnationis nostræ etiam gloriamur. Qui enim scit illum, intelligere potest, non nisi grande aliquod bonum à Nerone damnatum. Tertul. Apolog. p. 6. Edit. Rigal.

(b) The term [Ecclesiastical] is used in three senses. Sometimes it's taken for a Christian, and opposed to an Heathen, or Gentile: So Jerome in his Preface to his Book, De Scriptor. Eccleiast. Sometimes it denotes a Catholick, and is opposed to an Heretick; So Jerome also in his Preface to St. Matthew, and on Chap. 13. Ezechiel. So Origen also, Tome 16. Explanat. on St. John's Gospel. Lastly, sometimes it signifies a Clergy-man, and is opposed to a Laick, or Secular Person. So Jerome again, in his Epistle to Pammachius, and in his 46 Epist. to Rusticus. I would rather take this word in the second sense here, both because that signification of this word is more frequent, and also in regard Eusebius, speaking here of Caius's Book against Proclus, gives each of them his proper Epithet: he stiles Caius [an Ecclesiastical Man] and Proclus he calls [the defender of the opinion of the Cataphrygians,] i. e. an Heretick. The Sect of the Cataphrygians was divided into two parts; the Ringleader of the one party was Proclus; of the other Æschynes. So Tertullian, in his Book De præscript. Hæret. Vales.

(c) Peter was buried in the Vatican; Paul in the Viâ Ostia. Vales.

Nero. that they both ſuffer'd martyrdom at the ſame time, Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth, writing to the Romans, doth thus affirm; 'So alſo you, (d) by 'this your ſo great an admonition, have joyn'd 'together the plantation both of the Romans, 'and alſo of the Corinthians, made by Peter and 'Paul. For both of them coming alſo to our 'City of Corinth, and having planted us, did in 'like manner inſtruct us. Likewiſe they went 'both together into Italy, and having taught 'there, ſuffer'd martyrdom at (e) the ſame 'time." And thus much I have related, that the Hiſtory hereof might be yet farther confirm'd.

(d) Dionyſius here anſwers the Epiſtle of Soter and of the Roman Clergy; who, writing, to the Corinthians, had in a friendly way admoniſhed them, as Euſebius hereafter declares, B. 4. Chap. 23. The ſame thing Clemens Romanus in his Epiſtle had before done. Dionyſius therefore ſays to Soter; You by this your admonition have again united the Plantation of the Roman and Corinthian Churches heretofore made by Peter and Paul. This I have the more largely explained, becauſe the Tranſlators, and eſpecially Chriſtophorſon, have been much miſtaken in the Verſion of this place. Valeſ.

(e) Dionyſius does not expreſly ſay that Peter and Paul ſuffered on the ſame day, but only at the ſame time; which may be ſo underſtood, as that there might be an interval of many days between their ſufferings. Prudentius [περὶ στεφάνων] ſays that they were both Martyr'd on the ſame day, but not in the ſame year: And that there was a years ſpace between their deaths. With Prudentius agrees Auguſtine, in his 28 Sermon, De Sanctis; And Arator. Lib. 2. Hiſt. Apoſt. But Simeon Metaphraſtes takes theſe words of Dionyſius ſo, as if he ſaid that Peter and Paul were Martyred on the ſame day together. His words are to be found in Comment. de peregrinat. Pauli ac Petri, apud Surium, Tome 3. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXVI.

How the Jews were vex'd with innumerable Miſchiefs, and how at laſt they entred upon a War againſt the Romans.

(a) MOreover Joſephus, diſcourſing at large about the calamities that hapned to the whole Jewiſh Nation, makes it manifeſt in expreſs words, amongſt many other things, that a great number of the moſt eminent perſonages amongſt the Jews, having been cruelly beaten with ſcourges, were crucified even in Jeruſalem by the command of Florus. For it hapned that he was Procurator of Judea, when the War at firſt broke out, in the twelfth year of Nero's reign. Afterwards, he ſays, that, 'After the revolt of the Jews there followed great 'and grievous diſturbances throughout all Syria, thoſe of the Jewiſh Nation being by the 'Inhabitants of every City every where deſtroy'd as enemies, without all commiſeration: In ſo much that a man might ſee the '(b) Cities filled with dead bodies that lay unburied; and the Aged together with the Infants caſt forth dead; and Women, not having ſo much as any covering upon thoſe parts which nature commands to be conceal'd; and the whole (c) Province was full of unſpeakable calamities: But the dread of what was threatned was greater and more grievous than the miſchiefs every where perpetrated." Thus much Joſephus relates word for word. And ſuch was the poſture of the Jews affairs at that time.

Nero.

(a) At theſe words I began the chapter, following the authority of the King's M. S. But in the Maz. M. S. we found another reading, and a different diſtinction. For that begins the Chapter from theſe words (which are the concluſion of the foregoing Chapter) [And thus much I have related, &c. and it points the whole place thus, [And thus much I have related that the Hiſtory hereof might be yet farther confirmed. Moreover, Joſephus, diſcourſing, &c.] and puts the full point after theſe words [makes it manifeſt in expreſs words.] The ſame reading is obſerved by the Med. and Fuk. M. SS. But the reading and punctation in the King's M. S. ſeems to me to be much better; which both Nicephorus and Ruſinus followed. I had almoſt forgot to put you in mind, that theſe words [τὸ ὕσσαλον] in the title of this Chapter, ought to be taken adverbially; for ſo Ruſinus tranſlates it; Ut innumeris Judæi malis afflicti ſint, ac noviſſimè contra Romanos arma moverint. Valeſ.

(b) Theſe are the words of Joſephus in his ſecond Book of the Jews Wars, p. 814. Edit. Genev.

CHAP. I.

In what Parts of the World the Apoſtles preached Chriſt.

NOW the affairs of the Jews being in this poſture, the Holy Apoſtles and Diſciples of our Saviour, being diſperſed over the whole world preached the Goſpel. And Thomas, as tradition hath it, had Parthia allotted to him; Andreas had Scythia; John Aſia, where after he had ſpent much time he died at Epheſus. Peter, 'tis probable, preached to the * Jews (a) ſcattered throughout Pontus and Galatia, and Bithynia, Cappadocia and Aſia. (a) The Jews were diſperſed at ſeveral times, and for ſeveral cauſes. Firſt, when they were carried Captive into Babylon and into Egypt and Syria; and alſo when they were ſubdued by Pompey. Then, in the times of the Maccabees, they did of their own accord remove out of Judea into Egypt. For the Law forbad not the Jews to remove into other Countreys, as it is manifeſt from the Book of Ruth. Thirdly, they diſperſed themſelves upon account of gaining Proſelytes, which they admitted of all Nations, whence it came to paſs that they were ſcattered over the whole World. Valeſ. Thoſe Jews that were diſperſed in Europe had their chief Aſſembly at Alexandria; and there the Septuagint Tranſlation of the Bible was in uſe; and thence they were called (John 7. 35.) διασπορὰ Ἑλλήνων, the diſperſion of the Helleniſts: And of theſe there were many alſo in Jeruſalem, which uſed the ſame tranſlation of the Seventy

* 1 Pet. 1. 1.

Seventy two, being thus skill'd in the Greek tongue; and these living not in Greece are yet call'd (Acts 6. 1.) Ελληνισαὶ, because they used the Greek language and the 72 translation, whereas the other are called there (See Acts 6. 1.) Ἑβραῖοι, Hebrews, who used the Jerusalem Paraphrase. The Asian dispersion is mentioned 1 Pet. 1. 1. they had Babylon for their Metropolis, and used the Targum, or Caldee Parapraſe of Onkelos in their Synagogues.

Nero. Who at last coming to Rome, was crucified with his head downwards; for so he desired to suffer. It is needless to say any thing of Paul; who having fully preach'd the Gospel of Christ from Jerusalem unto Illyricum, at last suffer'd Martyrdom at Rome in the time of Nero. Thus much (b) Origen declares word for word in the Third Tome of his Expositions on Genesis.

(b) It is very doubtful where these words of Origen's, whom Eusebius here quotes, do begin; whether it be at those words, And Thomas, &c. or rather at those, Peter 'tis probable, &c. For Eusebius has not shown us where they begin. Vales.

CHAP. II.

Who first presided over the Roman Church.

AFter the Martyrdom of Paul and Peter, Linus was the First that was elected to the Bishoprick of the Roman Church. Paul, writing from Rome to Timothy, makes mention of him in the Salutation at the end of the Epi-
* 2 Tim. 4. 21. stle; saying, * Eubulus greeteth thee, and Prudens, and Linus, and Claudia.

CHAP. III.

Concerning the Epistles of the Apostles.

INdeed, one Epistle of Peter's, called his First, hath by general consent been receiv'd as genuine; for that the worthy Antients in former ages quoted in their writings, as being unquestionable and undoubted. But as for that called his (a) Second Epistle, we have been inform'd by the tradition of our Predecessors that it was not acknowledged as part of the New Testament. Yet, because to many it seem'd useful, 'twas diligently read together with the other Scriptures. But the Book called his Acts, and the Gospel that goes under his name, and that Book termed his Preaching, and that stiled his Revelation, we know these have in no wise been accounted genuine Writings: because no Ecclesiastical Writer either ancient or modern hath quoted any authorities or proofs taken out of them. But in the procedure of our History we will make it our chief business to shew, together with the Successions, what Ecclesiastical writers in every age have used the authority of such Writings as are question'd as spurious: likewise what they say of those Scriptures that are canonical and by general consent acknowledged as genuine, and also what concerning those that are not such. And thus many are the Writings ascribed to Peter, of which I have known only one Epistle accounted to be genuine, and universally acknowledged as such by the Antients. But of Paul's there are fourteen Epistles manifestly known, and undoubted. Yet it is not fit we should be ignorant, that some have rejected that to the Hebrews, saying, it is by the Roman Church denied to be Paul's. Now what the Antients have said concerning this Epistle, I will in due place propose. But as for those Acts that are called his, we have been inform'd from our Predecessors, that they are not accounted as unquestionable and undoubted. And whereas the same Apostle, in his Salutations at the end of the Epistle to the Romans, makes mention among others, of one Hermas, who, they say, is Author of that Book intitled Pastor; you must know that that Treatise also has been question'd by some; upon whose account it must not be placed amongst those which by general consent are acknowledged as genuine: but by others it has been judged a most useful Book, especially for such as are to be instructed in the first Rudiments of Religion. Whereupon we know it is at this time publickly read in Churches; and I do find that some of the most ancient Writers do quote it. Let thus much be spoken in order to a representation of the Holy Scripture, to discriminate those Books, whose authority is in no wise contradicted, from those that by general consent are not acknowledg'd as genuine.

Nero.

(a) That this 2d Epistle of S. Peter was not at first receiv'd in the Church of Christ with so universal agreement and consent as the former, may be concluded from this passage in Eusebius. But notwithstanding, there are great and sure evidences of this Epistles being written by the acknowledg'd Author of it, as (1.) the Title of Simon Peter with the Addition of An Apostle of Jesus Christ (Chap. 1. v. 1. (2.) There is a whole passage in this Epistle (Chap. 1. v. 16, 17.) which doth signally belong to Peter, that of having been on the holy Mount with Christ, and hearing those words, This is my beloved Son, &c. which certainly belongs to the transfiguration, Matth. 17. where only Peter and James and John were present with Christ. (3.) This is said to be a 2d Epistle (Chap. 3. v. 1.) written much to the same purpose with the former. (4.) St. Jude speaking (v. 18.) Of the scoffers that should come, &c. cites that Prediction from the Apostles of our Lord Jesus (v. 17.) where it is reasonable to believe that this Epistle (Chap. 3. v. 3.) is referred to; for in it those very words are met with (and are not so in any other Apostolick writing) Knowing this first, &c. Compare Jude the 17 and 18. v. with 2 Epist. Pet. 3. chap. v. 3. All this in all Copies stands unmoved to secure the authority of this Epistle, and to convince us of the author of it. See Dr. Hammond's Preface to the 2d. Epist. Pet.

CHAP. IV.

Of the first Succession of the Apostles.

THat Paul therefore, preaching to the Gentiles, laid the foundations of those Churches from Jerusalem, and round about unto Illyricum, is manifest both from his own * words, and also from what Luke has related in the † Acts. Likewise in what Provinces Peter, preaching the Gospel of Christ to those of the Circumcision, deliver'd the Doctrine of the New Covenant, is sufficiently apparent from his own * words out of that Epistle of his, which, we have said, is universally acknowledg'd as genuine; which he wrote to the Jews that were dispersed throughout Pontus and Galatia, Cappadocia, and Asia, and Bithynia. Now how many and what sincere followers of them have been approved as sufficient to take the charge of those Churches by them founded, it is not easie to say; except such and so many as may be collected from the words of Paul. For he had very many fellow-labourers, and, as he termed them, fellow-soldiers; many of which were by him vouchsafed an indeleble remembrance, he having in his own Epistles ascrib'd to them an everlasting commendation. But Luke, enumerating in the Acts, the Disciples of Paul, makes mention of them by name. Moreover, Timothy is reported to have been the first that was chosen to the Bishoprick of the Ephesian Church: as also Titus, of the Churches in Crete. Luke, by original extract an Antiochian, by profession a Physician, for the most part accompanied Paul; and being diligently conversant with the rest of the Apostles, has left us, in two Books written by Divine inspiration, Lessons that are medicinable for our

The one is the Goſpel, which he * profeſſes he wrote as they delivered it unto him, who from the beginning were Eye-witneſſes and Miniſters of the Word, in all which things, he ſays, he had perfect underſtanding from the very firſt. The other is the Acts of the Apoſtles, which Treatiſe he compoſed now not of ſuch paſſages as he had received by report, but of what he had ſeen with his own eyes. They ſay alſo that Paul was wont to mean the Goſpel according to Luke; when, ſpeaking as it were of his own Goſpel, he ſays, † According to my Goſpel. Of the reſt of the Followers of Paul, Creſcens is by the Apoſtle himſelf declared to be one; who was ſent by him into (a) Gallia. Linus alſo, whom, in his ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, he mentions to be at Rome with him, who was before manifeſted to have been the firſt that was choſen to the Biſhoprick of Rome, after Peter. Clemens alſo, who was likewiſe conſtituted the third Biſhop of Rome, is atteſted by Paul himſelf to have been his Fellow-labourer and Companion in ſufferings. Furthermore, that Areopagite (by name Dionyſius, whom Luke in the Acts records to have been the firſt that believed after the Sermon made by Paul to the Athenians in (b) Areopagus) another Dionyſius, one of the Antients, a Paſtor of the Corinthian Church relates to have been the firſt Biſhop of the Athenian Church. But as we go on with this Work of ours, we will in due place declare the Succeſſions of the Apoſtles in their ſeveral times. Now we will proceed to that part of our Hiſtory which follows in order.

But the other reading is the trueſt, which Clemens confirms in his Conſtitut. Apoſt. Theodoret reads Galatia, but ſays that thereby is meant Gallia. Valeſ.

(b) Areopagus was the Senate or ſtanding Court of Judicature in Athens, by whoſe Laws and Orders any new Gods were received among them; and therefore as ſoon as they perceived that Paul was a promulger of ſtrange Deities, they bring him to the Areopagus to have him examined what Gods they were that he thus Preached. Two Judicatures they had at Athens; one every year changed, made up of 500 choſen Men, of whom the Republick conſiſted; the other perpetual, which judged of Murthers and the like capital Offences; and this was in Areopago; of which and the cuſtoms thereof, See Budæus on the Pandects. Why it was called Areopagus, ſee St. *Aug. de civit. CHAP. V.

Veſpaſian. AFter Nero, who held the Government thirteen years, Galba and Otho having reigned a year and ſix months; Veſpaſian grown famous in the Wars againſt the Jews, was made Emperor in Judea, being proclaimed by the Army there. He therefore going immediately to Rome, committed the management of the War againſt the Jews to his ſon Titus. Moreover, after the Aſcenſion of our Saviour, when the Jews, beſides the audacious wickedneſs committed againſt him, had now contrived and executed very many cruel deſigns againſt his Apoſtles; (firſt Stephen being ſtoned to death by them; then after him James the ſon of Zebedee and brother of John beheaded, and laſt of all that James who was firſt choſen into the Epiſcopal ſeat there, after our Saviour's Aſcenſion, murther'd according to the forementioned manner;) when the reſt of the Apoſtles, were by innumerable wiles laid wait for to be put to death; and being driven out of Judea, were gone to preach the Doctrine of the Goſpel to all Nations, aſſiſted by the power of Chriſt who had ſaid unto them; * Go and teach all nations in my name: And furthermore, when the whole Congregation of the Church in Jeruſalem, according to an Oracle given by revelation to the approved perſons amongſt them before the War, were commanded to depart out of the City, and inhabit a certain City (they call it (a) Pella) beyond Jordan; into which when thoſe that believed in Chriſt had remov'd from Jeruſalem, and when the Holy Men had as it were totally relinquiſh'd the princely Metropolis of the Jews, and the whole Country of Judea: then at length Divine Vengeance ſeiz'd them who had dealt ſo unjuſtly with Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and utterly deſtroy'd that wicked and abominable Generation from among men. But, how great calamities then befel the whole Nation in every place; and how they eſpecially who were Inhabitants of Judea were driven to the extremity of miſery; and how many * Myriads of men, together with women and children, were deſtroy'd by Sword and Famine, and by infinite other kinds of death; and how many and what Sieges there were of the Jewiſh Cities; and how great miſeries and more than miſeries they beheld who fled into Jeruſalem it ſelf, as into the beſt fortified Metropolis; and alſo the manner and order of the whole War, and every particular action therein; and how at length the abomination of deſolation predicted by the Prophets was ſet up in the very Temple of God, heretofore famous, but now about to ſuffer all manner of pollution, and to undergo its laſt deſtruction by fire: He that is deſirous to know it, may accurately read all this in the Hiſtory written by Joſephus. But, how the ſame Writer relates, that a multitude of about thirty hundred thouſand perſons aſſembled together from all parts of Judea at that time of the Paſſover-feaſt, were ſhut up in Jeruſalem (as it were, ſays he, in a priſon) I think it requiſite to ſhew in thoſe his own words. (b) For it was fit, that at that very time (wherein they had kill'd the Saviour and Benefactor of all, Chriſt the Son of God,) that in the ſame days, I ſay, they ſhould be ſhut up as it were in a priſon, to receive that deſtruction from Divine Vengeance which awaited them. But I will omit the particular relation of thoſe miſeries which befel them, and their great ſufferings by the Sword and otherwiſe, and do think it neceſſary to propoſe only the Calamities of the Famine; that ſo they who ſhall read this our Work may from that part of their Sufferings underſtand, that the Divine Puniſhment for their enormous Impieties committed againſt the Chriſt of God, did not long after light upon them.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Famine that oppressed the Jews.

COme on therefore, let us again take the fifth Book of Josephus's History into our hands, and rehearse the Tragedy of those things then and there done. * "Moreover, (says he) for 'those that were rich to stay it was equally de-'structive. For they were slain for their wealth 'under a pretence of their revolting to the ene-'my. Together also with the famine, the in-'solent rage of the seditious increased, and both 'those mischiefs daily grew more extreamly 'sharp and violent. Besides, there was no 'food any where openly to be seen; but they 'rush'd violently into houses, and made a strict 'search: and when they had found any, they 'beat the masters of the houses after a most cruel 'manner, because they denied they had any: 'but if they found none, they tortured them, 'as if they had most carefully hid it. Moreover, 'the bodies of the wretches were a certain sign 'whether they had any food or no: for those 'who were yet strong and lusty they supposed 'had plenty of provision; but such as were al-'ready lean and macerated, they medled not 'with. For it seem'd irrational to kill those that 'were ready to die for want of sustenance. Ma-'ny also privately exchanged their estates, the 'richer sort for one measure of wheat, the poo-'rer for one of barley: then locking themselves 'up in the inmost receſſes of their houses, some 'of them by reason of their excessive want of 'food, eat the unground corn; others made 'bread of it after such a manner as necessity 'and fear advised them. Indeed there was no 'where any table furnish'd; but they snatch'd 'the meat while it was raw from the fire, and '(a) tore it from one another. The food was 'miserable, and the spectacle truly worthy of 'lamentation; in that the stronger sort got all, 'whilst the weaker bewailed their own condi-'tion. Famine doubtless is superior to all the 'affections of the mind; but nothing is so ut-'terly destroy'd by it, as is a dutiful and obser-'vant behaviour. For that which otherwise is 'worthy of a reverent regard, in this case (to wit, in the necessity of famine) is contemn'd. 'Therefore the wives tore the meat from their 'husbands, the children from their parents; and, 'which was most exceedingly lamentable, the 'mothers snatch'd it out of the very mouths of 'their infants; yea, they spared not to deprive 'them of those very drops of milk which were 'their only sustenance to keep them alive, whilst 'their most beloved babes languish'd in their 'arms. And whilst they eat such food as this, 'they notwithstanding could not secure them-'selves from being discover'd; because the sedi-'tious were every where at hand, preying upon 'them: for when they at any time saw a house 'shut, that was a sign that those within were 'eating victuals; and immediately breaking o-'pen the doors they rush'd in, and squeezing the 'bits of meat even out of their very jaws, they 'took them away. The old men, who would 'not part with their food, were beaten; and the 'women which hid what they had in their 'hands were drawn about by the hair of the 'head. No compassion was shewn to the hoa-'ry-head, or to infants; but lifting up the lit-'tle children on high, hanging at their morsels 'of meat, they dash'd them against the pave-'ment. Now to those who prevented their in-'cursion, and before-hand devoured what they 'would by force have taken away, they were 'more inhuman, as if such had done them an 'injury. Moreover, they invented cruel ways 'of torments for the searching out of provision; 'for they stop'd up the passage of the Privities 'of those miserable men with the pulse called 'Orobos, and thrust sharp rods up their funda-'ments; and to force any person to confess he 'had but one loaf of bread, or to extort from 'him a discovery of his having but one hand-'ful of meal hidden, he underwent such tor-'ments as are most horrible to be heard. Now 'the tormentors themselves were not oppress'd 'with hunger; for it would have seem'd less 'cruel for them to have done all this out of ne-'cessity: but they did it to exercise their outra-'gious insolence, and to procure themselves 'provision for the following days. Those also, 'who by night crept out as far as the Roman 'watch to gather wild herbs and grass, they 'met; and when they supposed they had now 'escaped the enemy, these men by force took 'from them what they had gotten. And when 'they often intreated, and by the most sa-'cred name of God beseech'd them to commu-'nicate some part of that to them which they 'had brought off with the hazard of their lives, 'they imparted nothing thereof to them; yea, 'they were to look upon it to be a kindness, 'that they were not also kill'd, as well as rob'd 'of what they had gotten." To this, after some other words, he adds, saying, 'The Jews, after 'they were hindred from going out of the Ci-'ty, were depriv'd of all hope of relief. And the 'famine encreasing extreamly, consumed the 'people throughout every house and family. 'The houses were fill'd with women and infants 'destroy'd by the famine: and the narrow streets 'with dead old men: the children and young 'men as pale as ghosts wander'd up and down 'the market-places, and fell down where-ever 'the distemper seiz'd any of them; neither were 'the sick able to bury their relations: and those 'who were strong were loth to undertake it, 'both upon account of the vast numbers of the 'dead, and also because of the uncertainty of 'their own condition. For very many dropt 'down dead upon those whom they were in-'terring. Many also betook themselves to their 'Coffins or Sepulchres before death seiz'd 'em. 'Neither was there mourning or lamentation 'in these calamities; but the famine had sup-'press'd every one's affection. And they who 'struggled with the very pangs of death, with 'dry eyes beheld those who went to rest before 'them. A profound silence and darkness loa-'den with death encompass'd the City. But the 'thieves were more pernicious than all this; for 'they digg'd through into houses, now turn'd 'into burial-places, and rob'd the dead: and 'taking away the coverings from off the corps, 'went out laughing. They also tried the (b) edges 'of their swords upon the dead bodies: and some 'of those that lay along, and yet alive, they 'run through, to make trial of the sharpness of 'their weapons: but those that beseech'd 'em 'to make use of their hand and sword upon 'em, 'by way of scorn they let alone to be destroy'd 'by the famine. And every one of them that di-'ed, leaving the seditious yet surviving, (c) fix'd 'their

* Joseph. Hist. of the Jewish Wars, Book 5. Chap. 26.

(a) Josephus means that those wretched people tore the meat from one another; not that they greedily devoured it, as Christophorson took his meaning to be, he translating it, avidè ore abripiebant. That is the meaning of those words ἐφέλκοντες δι' ἑαυτῶν. Vales.

(b) In Josephus it is ἀίχμας ἀπ' ξιφῶν; but in the M. SS. copies of Eusebius it is ἀκμὰς, &c. which is the better reading: For the Greeks call that ἄκμην, which the Latines call aciem, and we in English the edge, &c. Vales.

(c) Observe here the religion of the Jews, who in what parts of the world soever they were always prayed to God with their Eyes turn'd towards the holy City, and Temple. We have an example of this custom in Dan. 6. 10. and 1 Kings 8. 48. and 1 Esdr. 4. 58. Hence perhaps was derived the custom of the Christians, to pray towards the East. Vales.

'their eyes ſtedfaſtly upon the Temple. At firſt 'they gave command that the dead ſhould be 'buried at the charge of the publick Treaſury, 'not being able to endure the ſtench of the 'dead bodies: but afterwards being inſufficient 'to continue ſo doing, they caſt them from the 'walls into deep pits; which Titus having view'd 'round, when he beheld them fill'd full with 'the dead, and a thick gore iſſuing from the 'putrified bodies, he ſigh'd, and ſtretching forth 'his hands, call'd God to witneſs, that it was 'not his fact." To all this, after the interpoſition of ſome words, he adds, ſaying; 'I will 'not be afraid to declare what grief commands 'me to ſpeak; I think, had the Romans been 'ſlack to deſtroy thoſe flagitious wretches, that 'either they would have been ſwallow'd by 'the earth opening under them; or that the 'City would have been drown'd by an inun'dation; or, that, like Sodom, it would have 'been deſtroy'd by lightning. For it had brought 'forth a generation of men by far more abomi'nably impious than thoſe, who had ſuffer'd 'ſuch things. By reaſon therefore of the deſpe'rate outragiouſneſs of thoſe men, the whole 'body of the people was together with them 'deſtroy'd." And in his Sixth Book he writes thus: 'Of thoſe who periſh'd being deſtroy'd 'by the famine throughout the City, the mul'titude was innumerable; the afflictions that 'befel them can't be utter'd. For in every houſe 'where there appear'd but the leaſt ſhadow of 'proviſion, there was fighting; and ſuch as 'were deareſt friends ſtrove one with the other, 'ſnatching from one another the miſerable pro'viſion of their life. Neither were thoſe that di'ed believed to expire for want of ſuſtenance. 'But the Thieves ſearch'd thoſe that gave up the 'ghoſt, leſt any one having meat in his boſom 'ſhould feign himſelf to die. The Thieves 'themſelves, empty and hollow for want of ſu'ſtenance, wandred and hunted up and down 'like mad dogs, ſtriking againſt the doors like 'drunken men; and by reaſon of their ſtupified 'condition, breaking into the very ſame houſes 'twice or thrice in one hour. Neceſſity made 'all things to be eaten: and what was unfitting 'to be given to the moſt ſordid irrational crea'tures, they gather'd up, and endured to eat. 'Therefore at the laſt they did not forbear to 'eat girdles and ſhoes; and pluck'd the leather 'from off their bucklers and eat it. The ſtumps 'of old hay were made food by ſome; and o'thers gather'd the very ſtalks or ſmall fibres of 'plants, and ſold the leaſt weight of them for 'four (d) Attick drachms. But what need I ſpeak 'of the ſharpneſs and extremity of the famine, 'as to the eating things without life? for I will 'declare ſuch a fact, the like whereof is no where 'recorded either among the Grecians or Barba'rians; which may ſeem both horrid to be re'lated, and alſo incredible to be heard. And 'indeed leſt I might ſeem to poſterity to feign 'monſtrous ſtories, I could very willingly leave 'this ſad accident unmention'd; but that I have 'innumerable witneſſes thereof, to wit, men 'that are cotemporary with me: And beſides, 'I ſhould do my Country a very frigid and in'conſiderable kindneſs, ſhould I go about to 'conceal the rehearſal of what it really ſuffer'd. Veſpaſian.

'flying with the reſt of the multitude into Je'ruſalem, was there together with them beſieg'd. 'All her goods, which ſhe had taken with her 'out of the Region beyond Jordan and brought 'into the City, the Tyrants robb'd her of. The 'remains of what ſhe had, which was of grea'teſt value and price, and what ever proviſion 'of food ſhe could any way procure, the Spear'men breaking in daily took from her. A moſt 'vehement indignation moved the woman; and 'oftentimes ſhe reviled and curſed thoſe rave'nous pillagers, and provok'd them againſt her 'ſelf. But when none of them could be either 'inſtigated by anger, or moved by compaſſion 'to kill her; and ſhe being grown weary of 'finding victuals for (e) others; and proviſion 'being now no where to be found; the famine 'alſo having entred her very bowels and mar'row, and her anger being more exceedingly 'hot than the famine was ſharp; ſhe took Fury 'and Neceſſity as her adviſers, and in a hoſtile 'manner invaded nature it ſelf. And having 'ſnatch'd up her ſon (for ſhe had a ſucking-'child) Miſerable Babe, ſaid ſhe, amidſt theſe Wars, 'Famine and Sedition, for whom ſhall I preſerve 'thee? Amongſt the Romans if they let us live, we 'ſhall be Slaves; and the Famine muſt precede that 'Servitude; but the Seditious are more miſchievous 'than both thoſe evils. Be thou therefore my food, a 'Fiend to take revenge upon 'the Seditious, and a Story for 'men to talk of, which is on'ly yet wanting to compleat 'the Calamities of the Jews. 'Having ſaid this, ſhe kills 'her ſon; then roaſting him, 'ſhe eat half of him; the 'remainder ſhe kept co'ver'd. The Seditious came 'immediately, and having 'ſmelt the horrible ſavour, 'threatn'd to kill her forth'with, if ſhe would not 'bring out to them what 'ſhe had provided. But 'ſhe, anſwering that ſhe 'had reſerv'd a good part for them, uncover'd 'the remains of her ſon. Horror and aſtoniſh'ment of mind ſuddenly ſeized them; and they 'ſtood benumm'd as it were, with amazement 'at the ſpectacle. This, ſaid the woman, is the 'ſon of mine own womb, and this mine own 'fact: eat, for I have eaten of him already; 'be not you nicer than a woman, or more com'paſſionate than a mother. But if you are re'ligious and abhor this my ſacrifice, I have ea'ten the one half already, and let the reſt alſo 'remain with me. After this they went out 'trembling, abaſh'd at this very one thing, and 'with much ado yielded to leave this food with 'the mother. Immediately the whole City was 'filled with the noiſe of this deteſtable fact; 'and every one ſetting before his eyes this un'natural deed was horribly afraid and trembled 'as if it had been audaciouſly perpetrated in '(g) his own houſe. And now all who were ſore'ly preſs'd with the famine, earneſtly haſtned 'to die, and happy were they accounted, who 'were taken away by death before they heard 'and ſaw ſo great calamities." Such was the puniſhment the Jews underwent for their iniquity and impiety againſt the Chriſt of God.

(e) That is for the Thieves, not for her ſelf: And therefore it is in the original ἐυρεῖν σιτίον ἄλλοις; not ἄλλας, as the Genева Edit. of Euſebius adds in the margin. Valeſ.

(f) The Jews, as well as the Grecians, believed, that the Ghoſts of ſuch as had been murdered followed thoſe that kill'd them, to take revenge of them. In this ſenſe thoſe words may be taken, that occur Gen. 4. 10. The voice of thy brother's blood cryeth unto me from the ground: i. e. thy brother, whom thou haſt wickedly ſlain, requires that I ſhould revenge him, and puniſh thee for his murder: Then it follows v. 12. A fugitive and a vagabond ſhalt thou be in the earth; i. e. thy brother's Ghoſt, whom thou haſt ſlain, ſhall follow thee every where, and be always troubleſome to thee. Valeſ.

(g) That is; all the Citizens were ſtricken with ſuch an horror at this fact, as if it had been done in their own houſes. Valeſ.

CHAP. VII.

Of Christ's Predictions.

BUT it is worth while to adjoyn hereunto the most true Prediction of our Saviour, wherein he manifestly foretels these very things after this manner: And wo unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days. But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the sabbath-day: for then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no nor ever shall be.* But the same Writer adding together the whole number of those that were destroy'd, says, that by the Famine and by the Sword an hundred and ten Myriads perish'd: and that the Seditious and the Thieves that were left, discovering one another, after the City was taken, were put to death: that the tallest and comliest of the young men were reserv'd to adorn the triumph: that of the rest of the multitude, such as were above seventeen years of age were sent bound to the Mines in Egypt; and that very many were distributed through the Provinces to be destroy'd in the Publick Shews by the Sword and by Wild Beasts: that those who were under seventeen years of age were carried Captive and sold; and that the number of those only amounted to (a) ninety thousand. These things were done after this manner in the second year of the Reign of Vespasian, agreeable to the Presages and Predictions of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who by his Divine Power foreseeing these things, as if they had been present, wept and lamented, according to the History of the Holy Evangelists, who have related his very words; one while speaking as it were to Jerusalem it self: If thou hadst known (said he) even thou at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee. Then speaking concerning the people: For there shall be (said he) great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled: And again, when ye shall see Jerusalem compass'd with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh. Now whosoever does compare the words of our Saviour with the rest of our Writers relations of the whole War, he can't but with admiration confess the Prescience and Prediction of our Saviour to have been truly divine, and exceeding wonderful. Therefore concerning those things which befel the whole Jewish Nation after the Salutary Passion of Christ, and after those words, whereby the multitude of the Jews desired a Thief and a Murderer should be released from his punishment of death, and that the Prince of Life should be destroy'd, it is needless to (b) add any thing to the relation given by Josephus. So much only is requisite further to be annex'd, as may represent the endearing Goodness of the most excellent Providence of God, deferring the destruction of these men full forty years after their most audacious Villany committed again Christ. During which space, many of the Apostles and Disciples, (and James himself the first Bishop there, he that was called the Brother of the Lord) being yet alive, and making their abode in the City of Jerusalem, continued to be a most impregnable Fortification to that place: Divine visitation hitherto patiently forbearing them; that, if peradventure they would yet repent of what they had done, they might obtain remission and salvation; and to so great a patience and forbearance, adding wonderful signs from Heaven, foreshewing what was about to befal them unless they repented. Which signs, having been accounted worthy to be recorded by the foresaid * Writer, nothing hinders but we may here propose to those that shall look upon this our Work.

*Matt. 24. v. 19, 20, 21.

(a) Eusebius is here mistaken; for Josephus does not say so; but only affirms that the number of those that were taken captive, during the whole War, by the Romans, amounted to ninety thousand Men. The Words of Josephus are to be seen at the latter end of his sixth Book of the Hist. of the Jewish Wars. Vales.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning the Prodigies that appear'd before the War.

LET us then take the sixth Book of his History, and rehearse what is therein related by him in these words; 'Therefore those Impostors, and such as feign'd themselves to be sent 'of God, and by their false perswasions deceiv'd 'the wretched people at that time: so that they 'neither gave heed to, nor believed those evident Prodigies which foreshew'd their desolation to be at hand. But being like persons 'thunder-struck, and having neither eyes nor 'understanding, they contemned and disregarded the fore-warnings of God. First, a Star in 'the likeness of a Sword stood over the City; 'and then a (a) Comet continued a whole year. Further also, when, before 'the revolt and the first beginnings of the War, the 'people were gather'd together to the feast of Unleavened Bread, on the 'eighth day of the month April, at the (b) ninth hour 'of the night, so great a 'light shined round about 'the Altar and the Temple, 'that it seem'd to be bright 'day; and so continued for 'the space of half an hour: 'And this was judged by 'those that were unskilful 'a good sign; but by the '(c) Scribes that were skill'd in the Law, it was 'immediately concluded to portend those ca-'lamities which afterwards hapned: and at 'the same Feast, a Cow, led to be sacrificed by (a) We read ὅτε, as it is in Josephus B. 7. pag. 960. But Nicephorus thought that this Star which appeared in the likeness of a Sword, and the Comet which continued a whole year, was all one; which as we judge, is not right. Vales.

(b) The Jews divided the whole νυχθήμερον, i. e. night and day, or four and twenty hours, into eight parts, each of them containing 3 hours; the 3d, the 6th, the 9th, and the 12th hour of the day; and the like again for the several watches of the night: The ninth hour of the night (or third watch) according to their account, was commonly betwixt our hours of twelve and three a clock in the Morning. See Buxtorf. Synag. Judaic. Chap. 13.

(c) The Scribes amongst the Jews were the same with the Doctors of the Law, as Petavius has well observed, in Animadvers. ad Hæres. 15 Epiphanii. Their office it was, to keep the holy Books of the Law, and to read them in the presence of the People, in the Temple and in the Synagogues. But their principal Office was to be assessors with the chief Priests and Elders in the great Council called the Sanhedrim. See the 6 and 23 Chapters of the Acts. The name of Scribe therefore was the name of a Magistrate among the Jews as well as the among Grecians. And as the [γραμματεῖς] Scribes in Greece were to be present at Assemblies and Judicatures, and to have the custody of the Laws and Statutes made by the People, and Decrees made by the Senate; so also were the Scribes amongst the Jews the keepers of the Law. That this was no small honour, appears from many places in the Gospel; where our Blessed Saviour reproves their pride and insolence. After the same manner, amongst the Grecians, cians, the Scribes [γραμμ τῆς] were in great authority, as appears from that which S. Luke relates Acts 19. 35. [our tranſlation calls him Town-Clerk, how truly, Mr. Jo. Gregory of Oxford will tell you in his Notes on the Text; chap. 9. p. 43. of his Works.] Amongſt the Jews the Scribes were ſo much the more reſpected by how much that Nation above all others eſteemed their own Laws: Of which the Scribes were not only the keepers, but the interpreters alſo. Moreover they were conſulted as being taken to be Men of great knowledge and skill, and who were beſt able to interpret Signs and Prodigies; and alſo who beſt knew the myſteries of the Law. So we read Matth. 2. 4. Herod there conſults the Scribes; and in this place of Joſephus here, the Scribes foretel the meaning of the Prodigies. Moreover the Magiſtrate of the City of Jeruſalem who was called Στρατηγὸς, had his Scribe, as Joſephus tells us B. 20. But whether this Scribe was among the number of thoſe that were interpreters of the Law, it is hard to ſay. Farther, the [Ἱερογραμματεῖς] amongſt the Egyptians were certain Prieſts who look'd after the Ordinances about the things Sacred, and had the keeping of the myſtical Learning, and foretold things to come; concerning whom ſee Joſeph. L. 2. c. 5. where he calls them Ἱερέας. Theſe, after the Cantor and the Horoſcopus went in the third place into the Temple, wearing Wings on their Heads, and carrying before them in their Hands, Ink, and a Pen, with a Book. They had alſo the Hieroglyphical Books of Mercury, and thoſe of Coſmography, and of the ſcituation of Countries, and of Egypt, and of the Nile, and of the places conſecrated in honour of their Gods, committed to their cuſtody, as Clem. Alexandrinus writes in his 6 B. Lucianus ſaith that theſe ſort of Men had been of long continuance in Egypt. Valeſ.

Veſpaſian. 'the High-Prieſt, brought forth a Lamb in the 'midſt of the Temple. Alſo the Eaſtern-Gate 'of the Inner-Temple made all of Braſs, exceeding maſſy, and ſcarcely to be ſhut in the evening by twenty men, (being made alſo very 'ſtrong by vaſt iron hinges on which it moved, 'and having bolts that went into the ground a 'great depth,) was ſeen to open of its own accord about the ſixth hour 'of the night. (d) Not many days after the Feaſt, 'upon the one and twentieth of May, was ſeen a 'Ghoſt for Prodigiouſneſs wholly incredible. 'But that which I am now 'about to ſay would ſeem an idle ſtory, were 'it not related by thoſe that ſaw it, and had 'not the ſubſequent calamities been anſwerable to ſuch Prodigies. For before Sun-ſet 'there was ſeen in the air over the whole Country, Chariots, and whole Companies of armed 'men, running up and down in the Clouds, 'and inveſting Cities. Alſo at the feaſt, called 'Pentecoſt, the Prieſts, as it was their manner, 'going by night into the Temple to perform 'their offices, reported that they perceived at 'firſt indeed a motion and heard a noiſe; but 'that afterwards they heard a voice as of a great 'multitude, ſaying, Let us depart hence: But what 'was more dreadful than all this; one Jeſus, 'the ſon of Ananias, a country-man of the ordinary rank, four years before the War, (the 'City being then in perfect peace and in a flouriſhing condition) coming to the Feaſt in 'which it's cuſtomary for all to make Tabernacles to the honour of God near the Temple; 'on a ſudden began to cry out with a loud voice: 'A voice from the Eaſt, a voice from the Weſt, a voice from the four Winds, a voice againſt Jeruſalem and the Temple, a voice againſt the Bridegrooms and the Brides, a voice againſt all the People. This 'he went up and down crying, day and night throughout all the narrow ſtreets and croſsways of the City. But ſome of the chief of 'the people were very much diſturb'd at this ominous cry, and, being highly incenſed, took 'the man and beat him with many and alſo 'grievous ſtripes. But he neither ſpoke any 'thing for himſelf, nor ſaid any thing in private to thoſe that (e) beat him, but perſiſted 'crying thoſe very words he did before. Then Veſpaſian. 'the (f) Magiſtrates, ſuppoſing (as indeed it was) that the man was moved by Divine impulſe, bring him to the Roman (g) Preſident, 'where being beaten with 'ſtripes till his very bones 'were bare, he neither intreated for himſelf, nor ſhed a tear: but to the 'utmoſt of his power changing his voice into 'a doleful tone, he anſwer'd every ſtripe, Wo, Wo to Jeruſalem." There is another thing alſo more wonderful than this, which the ſame Writer relates, ſaying, that a Prophecy was found in the Holy Scriptures comprehending thus much, to wit, That about that time one was to come out of their Country who ſhould rule over the whole world; which this Writer underſtood to have been fulfilled in (h) Veſpaſian. But he did not rule over the whole world, only obtain'd the Roman Empire. This therefore may more juſtly be referr'd to Chriſt, to whom it was ſaid by the Father: * Deſire of me and I ſhall give thee the Heathen for thine inheritance; and the utmoſt parts of the earth for thy poſſeſſion: And the † ſound of whoſe Holy Apoſtles at the very ſame time went out into all Lands, and their words unto the ends of the world.

(d) After theſe Words Euſebius omits ſome paſſages that are extant in Joſephus, as, of this Prodigies being told to the Στρατηγὸς, or Magiſtrate; for an account of whom, and his office ſee the Learned Hammond in his Notes on Luke 22. 52.

(e) The reading muſt be, πρὸς τὸς παίοντας, i. e. thoſe that beat him, as it is in Joſephus; not παόντας, i. e. thoſe that were preſent; although Ruſinus followed that reading. Valeſ.

(f) That is, the Magiſtrate of the Temple, the chief Prieſts, and the Scribes. Valeſ.

(g) That was Albinus, who then was Procurator of Judea. Valeſ.

CHAP. IX.

Of Joſephus, and the Writings he left.

AFter all this, it is fit that we ſhould not be ignorant of this ſame Joſephus, who has given us ſo great aſſiſtance in the Hiſtory we now have in hand, from whence, and of what ſtock he came. And he himſelf does manifeſt even this alſo, ſaying after this manner: 'Joſe-'phus the ſon of (a) Mattathias, a Prieſt of Jeruſalem, 'who my ſelf alſo at firſt 'fought againſt the Romans, 'and was by neceſſity forc'd 'to be preſent at what was 'done afterwards." This man was eſteem'd the moſt eminent perſon of all the Jews of thoſe times, not only by his own country-men, but alſo by the Romans: inſomuch that he was honour'd with a Statue dedicated to him in the City of Rome, and the Books compiled by him were accounted worthy to be placed in the Publick Library, He wrote all the Jewiſh Antiquities in twenty entire Books; and the Hiſtory of the Jewiſh War, in his own time, in ſeven Books; which Hiſtory he himſelf teſtifies, he put forth not only in Greek, but alſo in his own Country language; and he is worthy to be credited both in this, and in other things. There are alſo two other Books of his extant very worthy to be read, which are about the Ancientneſs of the Jews: in which he anſwers Apion Grammaticus, who at that time wrote a (b) Volume againſt the Jews, and ſome others who had attempted

(a) In the King's M. S. it is Μαθίας· and ſo alſo in Joſephus, in the Book of his own Life, and in the proeme to his Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Wars. In Sophronius's Book, De ſcriptoribus Eccleſ. it is, Ἰώσηπος μαθίου ὑός. So alſo Sozomen calls him in the beginning of his firſt Book. And Ruſinus calls the father of Joſephus Matthias; Joſeppus, ſays he, Mathiæ filius, ex Hieroſolymis ſacerdos. So it is written in the moſt excellent M. S. of the Pariſian Church. Valeſ. Suetonius, in the Life of Veſpaſian, has this paſſage of Joſephus; Unus ex nobilibus captivis Joſephus, cùm conjiceretur in vincula; conſtantiſſime aſſeveravit fore, ut ab eo brevi ſolveretur, verum jam Imperatore.

(b) The Words of Euſebius are σωλάξαλα λόγον; but Nicephorus writes λόγους, which Joſephus ſeems to confirm, who teſtifies that Apion wrote more Books than one againſt the Jewiſh Nation. But Jerom, in Catalogo, where he ſpeaks of Joſephus's Writings, defends the ordinary reading. Valeſ.

Vespasian. attempted to calumniate the (c) Antiquity and Laws of the Jewish Nation. In the former of these he sets forth the number of the Canonical Books of that called the Old Testament, which of them are among the Hebrews unquestionable and undoubted, as being received from ancient Tradition; discoursing of them in these words.

(c) Josephus in his Books against Apion, answers not only those who had calumniated the Laws and Institutions of the Jews; but also he more especially writes against those who had forged certain Falsities concerning the Original and Antiquity of the Jews, as appears by his first Book. But about the end of his second Book he answers Apollonius, Molon, and Lysimachus, who had written some lyes about the Laws and Institutions of the Jews. The word πάτεια therefore in this place must mean both these, to wit, the Antiquity, and the Laws of the Jewish Nation. Vales.

CHAP. X.

How Josephus makes mention of the Holy Bible.

'THere are not therefore amongst us an innumerable company of Books disagreeing and contradicting one another; but only (a) two and twenty, containing an historical account of all times; which are worthily believed to be Divine. And five of these are the Works of Moses, which comprehend both the Laws, and also a continued Series of the Generations of Men, and what was done by them from their first Creation until his own death. This space of time wants little of three thousand years. And from the death of Moses until the Reign of Artaxerxes King of the Persians, Successor to Xerxes, the Prophets, who succeeded Moses, wrote what was done in their Ages, in thirteen Books: The remaining four contain Hymns to God, and Precepts and Admonitions for the well-ordering of Men's lives. Also from Artaxerxes until our own times every thing is indeed recorded, but these Books have not been accounted worthy of the like authority with the former, in that the Succession of the Prophets was not so accurately known. But it is manifestly apparent how highly we revere our own Writings: For in so many Ages now pass'd over, no one has dared either to add or to diminish from them, or to change any thing therein; but it is implanted upon all us Jews immediately from our very birth, to think that these are the Precepts of God, and to persevere in them, and, if need so require, willingly to die for them." And let these words of this Writer be profitably here inserted. He compiled also another elaborate Work not unworthy of himself, about the Empire of Reason, which some have entitled Maccabees, because it contains the Conflicts of those Hebrews, in the Writings called the Maccabees, so termed from them, who valiantly fought for the Worship of God. And, at the end of his twentieth Book of Antiquities, he intimates, as if he purposed to write in four Books (according to the opinion of the Jews, which they had received from their Ancestors) of God, and of his Essence, also of Laws, why according to them some things are lawful to be done, and others forbidden. Himself also in his own Books mentions other Works compiled by his diligence. Moreover it is also consonant to reason to adjoyn those words of his which he has inserted at the (b) Conclusion of his Antiquities, for the Confirmation of the Quotations and Authorities we have taken out of him. He therefore, blaming (c) Justus Tiberiensis, (who had taken in hand, as well as he, to write an History of those very Times,) as having not related the Truth, and accusing the Man of many other faults, at last adds thus much in these words: 'But I was not, in that manner 'as you were, timerous concerning my Writings, 'but gave my Books to the Emperors themselves, 'when the deeds done were fresh and almost yet 'to be seen: For I was conscious to my self, 'that I had all along faithfully observed the deli-'very of the Truth; upon account whereof, ho-'ping for their evidence, I was not disappointed 'of my expectation. And moreover I com-'municated my History to many others, some 'of whom were actually present in the War; 'as was King Agrippa, and (d) several of his 'Relations: Also Titus the Emperor was so wil-'ling that the knowledge of what was done 'should be delivered to Men solely out of them, 'that he (e) subscribed my Books with his own 'Hand, and gave command they should be

(a) There were so many Books of the Scripture amongst the Jews, as they had letters in their Alphabet; So Origen tells us in his exposition of the first Psalm, and Jerom in præmio galeato; where also he says that there were among them three ranks of these Holy Volumes; the first contained the Law; the second the Prophets; the third the Hagiography. All which agrees very well with Josephus. But in this they differ; Josephus makes thirteen Books to be of the second Order; to wit, following the Series of the times. But of the third, he reckons only four, disagreeing from St. Jerom; who in the foresaid Preface, and in that of his before the Prophecy of Daniel, reckons up eight Books of the Prophets, and nine of the Hagiography. But Josephus seems to have placed the Book of Joshua and Judges, also those of the Kings, Chronicles and Ezra, amongst the Prophetical Writings; not that they contain Prophecies, as the Books of the Prophets do; but because they were written by Men that were Prophets. Vales.

Vespasian.

(b) To wit, in the Book of his own Life, pag. 1026 Edit. Genev. which Book is the conclusion of his twentieth and last Book of his Antiquities; from which it is separated unadvisedly in the Greek and Latin Editions. Now that it is the conclusion of the 20 B. of Antiquities, Josephus himself tells us at the close of that Book, and at the end of this Book, of his own Life. Scaliger therefore is mistaken, in his Animadvers. on Euseb. p. 188. where he says, Eusebius forgot himself here; and so is Christophorson, who, supposing this place in Eusebius to be corrupted, alter'd it. But had they seen the Greek MSS. Copies of Josephus, or had they consulted the Basil. Edit. of him, they might easily have found, that which I have said to be true, to wit, that this Book of Josephus's, of his own Life, was nothing else but an Appendix or Conclusion of his 20 Book of Antiquities. Vales.

(c) Our MSS. Copies, Maz. Med. and Fuk. have it thus written, Τιβερέα; corruptly as I judge. For both Stephanus Byzantius doth acknowledge it to be Τιβεριέα; and also Jerom, in his Book De Scriptorib. Ecclesiast. calls him Justus Tiberiensis; whom we have followed. But Scaliger stiles him Tiberiadensis. This Justus wrote an History of the Jewish Wars, as Josephus tells us in his Book, De vitâ suâ; and Stephanus, in the word Τιβεριάς. Besides, this History he wrote a Chronicle of the Kings of the Jews, as Photius testifies, in Bibliotheca: Which Work he dedicated to King Agrippa, as Scaliger affirms, in Animadvers. Euseb. pag. 176. And he adds these Words: Nemo de obitu Regis Agrippæ certiùs pronuntiare potuit quam is qui illi opus suum dedicavit, i. e. No body could speak more certainly of the death of King Agrippa, than he who dedicated his Work to him. Which I indeed wish had not dropt from so acute a Man. For how can an Historian testifie of the death of him to whom he dedicates his History? Unless we say that Justus dedicated his Chronicle to Agrippa, when he was dead, which is absurd. But as Scaliger without all ground asserted, that Justus Tiberiadensis dedicated his Chronicle to King Agrippa; so what he infers therefrom is also absurd. But from Photius his testimony it is manifest, that that Work was put forth by Justus after the death of King Agrippa. Josephus relates that the History of the Jewish Wars was published by Justus also after the death of Agrippa, although it was written twenty years before. A Book of this same Justus's, whose title was Στέμματα, is quoted by Laërtius, in the Life of Socrates; which Photius says was the same with his Chronicle. Vales.

(d) He means Julius Archelaus and Herod, as Josephus himself declares, in his first Book against Apion. Julius Archelaus was Brother-in-law to King Agrippa; for he had married his Sister Mariamne; so says Josephus at the end of his 19 and 20 Books of Antiquit. Vales.

(e) Nicephorus, in his 3 Book, Chap. 11. interpreting these Words of Josephus, says that Titus with his own hand copied out the Books of Josephus his History of the Jewish Wars. See what Johannes Langus has noted at that place of Nicephorus. But all Interpreters who have translated this place of Josephus into Latin, understand thereby that Titus only subscribed the Books of Josephus with his own hand, and did not copy them out himself. But I would rather follow the opinion of Nicephorus. Neither do these Words of Josephus [ὥστε χαράξας τῇ ἀυτῇ χειρὶ τὰ βιβλία, δημοσιεύεσθαι προσέταξεν] seem to sound any thing less to me. Thus this place is pointed in all Copies as well as MS. as Printed. But if this place of Josephus were to be understood only of Titus his subscribing Josephus his Books with his hand, then the distinction or comma ought to be put after the word χειρὶ: But here you see it put after the word Βιβλία. Vales.

(f) publickly read. And King Agrippa wrote ſixty two Epiſtles, teſtifying therein, that the Truth was delivered by me." Two whereof Joſephus there adjoyns. But let thus much be thus far manifeſted concerning him. We will now proceed to what follows.

(f) In the moſt excellent MSS. Maz. Med. Fuk. and in Sir Henry Savil's MS. it is written [ἀμοσιεύεσθαι;] which reading all Interpreters ſeem to have followed: But I like Ruſinus his Verſion beſt, who tranſlates it: To be publickly read; in which ſenſe the ſame Word is uſed by Euſebius in chap. 22. of his ſecond Book, where he ſpeaks of the General Epiſtles of James and Jude; and in chap. 3. of his third Book. But from theſe Words of Joſephus we may gather, that the Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Wars was put out by him in the Reign of Veſpaſian; but his Antiquities were publiſhed by him in the thirteenth year of Domitian, as he himſelf teſtifies at the end of his 20 Book, and at the cloſe of his Book, of his own Life. But, that which Scaliger affirms, in Animad. Euſeb. p. 187. to wit, that the Book of Joſephus his own life was by him put out ſeven years after his Antiquities, ſeems not probable to me; for that Book is, as we made it out before, only the concluſion of his twentieth Book of Antiquities; and at the end of it Joſephus reckoning up the Roman Emperors, concludes with Domitian. CHAP. XI.

How, after James, Simeon governed the Church at Jeruſalem.

After the Martyrdom of James and the taking of Jeruſalem, which immediately followed thereupon, report goes, that the Apoſtles and Diſciples of our Lord, who were yet alive, met together from all parts in the ſame place, together alſo with the Kinſmen of our Lord according to the fleſh, (for many of them hitherto ſurvived,) and that all theſe held a conſultation in common who ſhould be adjudg'd worthy to ſucceed James: And moreover, that all with one conſent approved of (a) Simeon the Son of Cleophas, of whom the Hiſtory of the Goſpel makes mention, to be worthy of the Epiſcopal Seat there; which Simeon, as they ſay, was Couſin-German by the Mother's ſide to our Saviour: For Hegeſippus relates, that Cleophas was the (b) Brother of Joſeph.

(a) This account of Euſebius's here, agrees not with what he has written in that work of his called his Chronicon: For there he writes, that preſently after the death of James, Simeon was elected; to wit, in the ſeventh year of Nero. But here he makes it evident, that after the murder of James, the Epiſcopal See was vacant for the ſpace of about eight or nine years. Which interval of time, that the Author Chronici Alexandrini might fill up, he places the death of James on the firſt year of Veſpaſian. Valeſ.

(b) That is, becauſe (as we conjecture) he married Mary which was Siſter to the Bleſſed Virgin; upon which account Simeon the Son of this Cleophas is here called Couſin-German by the Mother's ſide to our Saviour; for ſo we tranſlate the word [ἀνεψιὸν;] not patruelem, i. e. Couſin-German by the Father's ſide, as it is in the Verſion of Valeſius; but conſobrinum, i. e. Siſter's Son. For Mary the Wife of Cleophas, and the Bleſſed Virgin were Siſters. See Jo. 19. 25. and ſo Simeon the Son of the former Mary, and our Saviour the Son of the latter, were Siſters Children. See the Learned Bp. Pearſon on the Creed, p. 175, & 176. Edit. Lond. 1669. And Petavius, in Hæreſ. 78. Epiphan. cap. 7, & 14. and alſo St. Jerom, in Catalog.

CHAP. XII.

How Veſpaſian commanded that the Deſcendants of David ſhould be ſought out.

And moreover, it is reported, that Veſpaſian after the taking of Jeruſalem, commanded all thoſe that were of the Kindred of David to be diligently ſought out, leſt any one of them who were of the Royal Race ſhould be left remaining amongſt the Jews; and that a moſt ſore Perſecution was thereby again brought upon the Jews.

CHAP. XIII.

That Anencletus was the Second Biſhop of the Roman Church.

But when Veſpaſian had reigned ten years, his Son Titus ſucceeded him in the Empire: In the ſecond year of whoſe Reign, Linus Biſhop of the Roman Church, having held that publick Charge twelve years, delivered it to (a) Anencletus. And Titus, after he had reigned two years and as many months, was ſucceeded by his Brother Domitian

(a) I know not why Rob. Stephens read Anacletus, ſeeing that all our Books have it written Anencletus. And ſo Nicephorus Conſtantinopolitanus, and his Tranſlator Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius in Chronolog. Tripartit. reads it. So alſo Nicephorus Caliſtus in Libr. 3. cap. 2. and Georgius Syncellus, and the MSS. copies of Ruſinus. So likewiſe Irenæus (in Lib. 3. where he reckons up the Roman Biſhops in order) names him Anencletus; and omits the name of Cletus, which to me ſeems to be made of a piece of the word Anencletus. Neither does Optatus, nor St. Auguſtine, in his 165 Epiſtle (where he counts up the Romiſh Biſhops) acknowledge Cletus. But on the contrary, in two very ancient Catalogues of the Roman Biſhops, one whereof is in the Monaſtery of S. German, and the other in the Jeſuits Colledge at Clermont ——there is no mention of Anencletus; but only of Cletus, who ſucceeded Linus, and ſat eleven years, one month, and two days. From whence 'tis evident that Cletus and Anencletus was the ſame Man. See more of this in P. Halloixius, in notat. ad cap. 7. vitæ Irenæi. Valeſ.

CHAP. XIV.

That Avilius was the Second Biſhop of Alexandria.

Domitian.

Furthermore, in the fourth year of Domitian, (a) Annianus the firſt Biſhop of the Alexandrian Church, having there ſpent two and twenty years compleat, died. After whom ſucceeded (b) Avilius, being the ſecond Biſhop there.

(a) That is, the firſt after Mark. So Euſebius ſaid before, concerning Linus Biſhop of Rome, at the 2 Chap. of this Book. For Mark was the Apoſtle of the Alexandrians, as we before have ſaid. But the Apoſtles were not reckoned amongſt the number of the Biſhops. There was therefore no need of putting in here μετὰ Μάρκον, as Nicephorus did. See Selden's Notes ad Eutychium patriarcham Alexandr. Valeſ.

(b) Ruſinus and the other Tranſlators call this Man Abilius; and alſo Jerom himſelf, in Chronico, not ſo rightly as I judge. For he ought to be called Avilius, which is a Roman name; as well as Annianus, who was Biſhop before Avilius. Beſides, the order of the Chapters is here diſturbed in the common Edition; this Chap. of the ſucceſſion of Avilius being put before that of the ſucceſſion of Anencletus: But we by the direction of the MSS. Copies Maz. and Fuk. have placed them in their true order. This was a very ancient miſtake; for in the Index of the Chapters prefixed before the 3 B. of Ruſinus his Tranſlation, and in all the Greek Copies except in that of Fuk. the ſame Error is committed. But in the Body of the Maz. MS. (which Book has the Titles of the Chapters exactly placed in their order) this Error is corrected. Valeſ.

CHAP. XV.

That Clemens was the Third Biſhop of the Roman Church.

Also in the twelfth year of this Emperor's Reign, Anencletus having been Biſhop of the Roman Church twelve years, had to his Succeſſor Clemens; whom the Apoſtle, writing an Epiſtle to the Philippians, declares to be his Fellow-labourer, ſaying; * with Clement alſo, and with other my fellow-labourers, whoſe names are in the book of life.

CHAP. XVI.

Concerning the Epistle of Clemens.

MOreover, there is extant one Epistle of this Clemens's, which by general consent is acknowledged as genuine, and is singularly excellent and admirable; which he wrote in the name of the Roman Church to that of the Corinthians, there being at that time a Faction raised in the Corinthian Church: which Epistle also we have known to have been publickly read in many Churches before the whole Congregation, both in times past, and also in our own memory. Now, that in the time of the aforemention'd Clemens there was a Faction raised in the Corinthian Church, Hegesippus is a Witness worthy to be credited.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the Persecution in Domitian's Time.

(a) Rufinus thought these words that follow here, were the words of Hegesippus, whom Eusebius quoted at the end of the foregoing chapt. whence it appears that Rufinus read as it is in our MSS. copies, Maz. Med. and Fuk. μάρτυς ὁ ἡγήσιππος λέγων. πολλήν γε μὴν, &c. Moreover in Rufinus the chap. 17. begins at those words, Now that in the time of the forementioned, &c. as I observed it to be also in the Maz. and Fuk. M.SS. But I rather approve of the ordinary writing and distinction. Vales.

(a) BEsides, Domitian having shown much cruelty towards many, and by unjust sentences put to death no small company of Men of Rome that were nobly descended and illustrious, and having punish'd innumerable other most eminent Persons undeservedly with Banishment and loss of Goods, at length rendred himself the Successor of Nero as to his hatred of God, and his fighting against him: For he raised the second Persecution against us; altho' his Father Vespasian had design'd nothing injurious towards us.

(b) Εὐπατρείδης has the same import with εὐγενὴς, that is, it signifies one that is descended from an illustrious and noble stock. So Gregor. Nazianz. in Oration 40. μὴ ἀπαξιώσης συμβατρίδην σε πενήτι, πλούσιος ὢν· ὁ εὐπατρείδης τῷ δυστυχεῖ. St. Jerom. in Chronico Anno 8. Domitian. says, Domitianus plurimos nobilium in exilium mittit, atque occidit. Vales.

CHAP. XVIII.

Concerning John the Apostle, and his Revelation.

IN this Persecution 'tis reported, that John the Apostle and also Evangelist, who yet lived, was banish'd into the Isle Patmos, upon account of the Testimony he exhibited to the Word of God. Indeed, * Irenæus, writing concerning the number of the name of Antichrist mentioned in the † Revelation of John, does in these very words, in his fifth Book against Heresies, thus speak concerning John: 'But if at this present time * his 'name ought publickly to be preach'd, it would 'have been spoken of by him who saw the Revelation. For it was seen not a long time since, 'but almost in our age, about the latter end of 'Domitian's Reign." But so mightily did the Doctrine of our Faith flourish in those foremention'd times, that even those Writers, who were wholly estranged from our Religion have not thought it troublesome to set forth in their Histories both this Persecution, and also the Martyrdoms suffer'd therein. And they have also accurately shewn the very time; relating, that in the fifteenth year of Domitian, Flavia Domitilla, Daughter of the Sister of Flavius Clemens at that time one of the Consuls at Rome, was, together with many others also, banish'd into the Island Pontia, for the Testimony of Christ.

CHAP. XIX.

How Domitian commanded that the Descendants of David should be slain.

WHen the same Domitian gave command that the Descendants of David should be slain, there goeth an ancient report that some Hereticks accused the Posterity of Jude, (who was the Brother of our Saviour according to the flesh) as being of the Off-spring of David, and bearing affinity to Christ himself. And this Hegesippus manifests word for word, saying thus.

CHAP. XX.

Concerning those that were related to our Saviour.

'THere were yet surviving (who were related to our Lord) the Nephews of that 'Jude, who was called the '(a) Brother of Christ after 'the flesh, whom they accused as being descended 'from David. And these '(b) Evocatus brought to 'Cæsar Domitian. For Do'mitian was afraid of the 'coming of Christ, as well 'as Herod. And he asked 'them, if they were of the 'Stock of David; and they 'acknowledged it. Then 'he questioned them how 'great Possessions they had, 'or what quantity of Mo'ney they were Masters of; 'and they said, that they 'both had but nine thou'sand (c) Pence, a moiety 'whereof belonged to each 'of them: and these they 'said they had not in rea'dy Money, but in Land 'of that value, being only 'thirty nine Acres; of which 'also they paid (d) tribute, 'and themselves were main'tained by their own la'bour. And then they 'shewed their Hands; pro'ducing, as an evidence of 'their working, the hard'ness of their Skin, and a 'brawniness imprinted on 'their Hands by reason of 'their assiduous labour. Be'ing also ask'd concerning 'Christ and his Kingdom, 'of what sort it was, and 'when and where it would 'appear; they return'd an'swer, that it was neither 'Worldly nor Terrestrial, 'but Celestial and Angeli'cal, that it should be at the 'end of the World, when he 'would come in Glory to 'judge the Quick and Dead,

(a) So he is called Matt. 13. 55. But it was the usual language of the Jews to call the first Cousins brethren. See Bishop Pearson on the Creed, pag. 175, 176. Edit. Lond. 1669. See also Bishop Montague's Acts and Mon. chap. 4. S. 6. concerning the Despoyni.

(b) Rob. Stephens, in his Edition of Eusebius calls him Ἰούκατος, and so does the Med. M. S. but in the King's M. S. I found it written [ὁ Ἰκκαβάτος] which Rob. Stephens observed also in his Notes added at the latter end of his Edition. Georg. Syncellus, in Chronico, reads it ὁ Ἰσόκατος. We from our three M.SS. Copies, to wit, Maz. Fuk. and Sir Henry Savil's, have made good the true writing of this place, τούτους δ' ὁ Ἰσόκατος ἤγαγε, and these Evocatus brought, &c. This reading Nicephorus and Rufinus do confirm; the Words of Rufinus are, Hos Revocatus quidam nomine, qui ad hoc missus fuerat, perduxit ad Domitianum. Nicephorus, Lib. 3. cap. 10. has it written ὁ Ἰκκάτος. These Evocati were Soldiers of an higher degree who having performed their service and being dismiss'd, were upon occasion summon'd by the Emperor himself. There is mention of these in the ancient Inscriptions, Evoc. Aug. i. e. Evocatus Augusti. No Man need wonder, that Hegesippus, a Greek writer, should make use of a Latin word here; for that is usual with him; and in this very relation of his he has [δηλατωρεύειν] and [δηνάρεια] both Latin words. Vales.

(c) So we translate the word [δηνάρεια] warranted thereto by the same translation of that word, occurring Matth. 22. 19. The value of that Peny there shewed Christ, was, says Dr. Hammond on the place, a whole Attick Drachm; but what value these here were of, it is hard to say, in regard there were several sorts of these Denarii, which were also of a different value. See Voss. Etymol.

(d) Φόροι were Tributes, or Taxes, raised upon Lands, and they were commonly paid in Wheat, Barley, Wine, and the like; as it appears from Cod. Theodosian. Τέλη was the Toll gathered by the Publicans, who farmed it commonly; it was paid in ready money. The word here is φόρους; which we therefore render Tribute. Vales.

Domitian. ‘and reward every Man according to his deeds. ‘Upon which anſwer Domitian condemn'd them ‘not, but ſcorning them as deſpicable perſons, ‘he diſmiſt them unbound, and by Edict appeaſed ‘the Perſecution raiſed againſt the Church. But ‘they, thus releaſed, (as 'tis ſaid) afterwards pre- ‘ſided over Churches, as being both Martyrs, ‘and alſo allied to our Lord; and, peace enſu- ‘ing, they liv'd till the Reign of Trajan." So far Hegeſippus. But moreover, (e) Tertullian alſo makes mention of Domitian: Domitian alſo attempted a Perſecution, who was a Limb of Nero as to cruelty. ‘But being alſo but a Man, he ſoon de- ‘ſiſted from his Enterprize, reſtoring even thoſe ‘whom he had baniſh'd." But after Domitian had reign'd fifteen years, Nerva, having ſucceeded him in the Empire, the Roman Senate decreed that Domitian's Titles of Honour ſhould be abrogated, and that ſuch as were by him unjuſtly baniſh'd ſhould return to their Houſes, and have their Goods reſtored. This they relate who committed to writing the Hiſtory of thoſe Times. Moreover, the Account of the Antients amongſt us declares that then alſo the Apoſtle John, was releaſed from his Baniſhment in the Iſland, and took up his habitation again at Epheſus.

(e) Tertullian's words are theſe, Tentaverat & Domitianus, portio Neronis de crudelitate. Sed quia & homo, facilè cœptum repreſſit, reſtitutis etiam quos relegaverat: They are in his Apolog. But whoſoever it was that tranſlated his Apology into Greek, he has not rendred his words well. For Tertullian's words are to this effect, That after Nero, who firſt raged againſt the Chriſtians, Domitian alſo, like another Nero, attempted the ſame; but as Men are fickle and mutable, he ſoon deſiſted from his enterprize. But Euſebius, or whoſoever he was that tranſlated Tertullian's Apology, takes the meaning of thoſe words [Quia & homo] to be, as if Tertullian had ſaid, That Domitian was ſomething of a Man, but Nero was rather a ſavage Beaſt than a Man. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXI.

That Cerdo was the third that preſided over the Alexandrian Church.

Trajanus. BUT Nerva having reign'd ſomething more than a year, Trajan ſucceeded him. It was his firſt year, wherein Cerdo ſucceeded Avilius who had govern'd the Alexandrian Church thirteen years. This Cerdo was the third from Annianus, who firſt preſided there. At this time alſo Clemens yet govern'd the Roman Church, he being alſo the third that after (a) Paul and Peter had the Epiſcopal Dignity there: Linus being the firſt, and after him Anencletus.

(a) Here, and before, we may obſerve Paul put before Peter by Euſebius. In the Seals of the Roman Church Paul is put on the right hand, and Peter on the left, as Baronius obſerves, in Expoſitione Concil. Nicen. and Euſebius ſeems to make them both Biſhops of Rome together. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXII.

That Ignatius was the ſecond that preſided over the Alexandrian Church.

MOreover, Euodius having been conſtituted the firſt Biſhop at Antioch, the ſecond was Ignatius, a man famous in thoſe times: Simeon likewiſe was the ſecond, who, after our Saviour's Brother, at the ſame time (a) entred upon the publick charge over the Church at Jeruſalem.

(a) The King's M.S. reads according to our tranſlation, τὴν λειτουργίαν ἐγκεχειρισμένος ἦν. But the other four M. SS. i. e. Maz. Med. Fuk. and Sir Henry Savil's have it written τὴν λειτουργίαν εἶχεν, had the publick charge, &c. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXIII.

A Relation concerning John the Apoſtle.

AT the ſame time the Apoſtle and alſo Evangeliſt John, (the ſame whom Jeſus loved) remaining yet alive in Aſia, govern'd the Churches there, being return'd from his Exile in the Iſland after the death of Domitian: for that he was hitherto alive, it is ſufficiently confirm'd by two, who evidence the matter: and they are very worthy of credit, having been conſtant Aſſertors of Catholick ſound Doctrine: I mean theſe perſons Irenæus and Clemens Alexandrinus: the former of whom, in his ſecond Book againſt Hereſie, writes thus word for word: * ‘And all the Elders that * Irenæus. ‘were converſant in Aſia with John the Diſci- Lib. 2. ‘ple of our Lord, do teſtifie that John deliver'd cap. 39. ‘it to them: for he continued among them un- ‘til Trajan's time." And in the third Book of that Work he manifeſts the ſame thing in theſe words: ‘Moreover, the Church at Epheſus was ‘founded indeed by Paul, but John, continuing ‘among them until Trajan's time, is a moſt faith- ‘ful Witneſs of the Apoſtolick Tradition." And Clemens likewiſe, having evidently ſhown the time, adds withal a Relation very neceſſary for thoſe who delight to hear good and profitable things (in that Work of his which he entitled, Who that rich man is that ſhall be ſaved.) Let us therefore take his Book and read the Story, which is thus. ‘Hear a Relation, which is not a feign'd ‘Story, but a real Truth, delivered concerning ‘John the Apoſtle, and kept in remembrance. For ‘after the death of the Tyrant he return'd from ‘the Iſland Patmos to Epheſus, and being thereto ‘requeſted, he went to the neighbouring Pro- ‘vinces, in ſome places conſtituting Biſhops, in ‘others ſetting in order whole Churches, (a) and ‘other where electing into the Clergy ſome one ‘or other of thoſe who were made known to him ‘by the Spirit. Coming therefore to one of the ‘Cities not far diſtant, the (b) name whereof ſome ‘mention; and moreover having (c) refreſh'd ‘the Brethren; at length caſting his eyes upon a ‘Youth of a goodly ſtature of Body, comely ‘Countenance, and lively Diſpoſition, he look'd ‘upon him whom he had Ordain'd Biſhop, and ‘ſaid, This Youth I do with all imaginable care ‘commit to thy charge, in the preſence of the ‘Church, and of Chriſt as a Witneſs. And when ‘he had undertaken this charge, and promiſed ‘his utmoſt care thereof, John declared and de- ‘fired the ſame again; and afterwards returned ‘to Epheſus. But the (d) Presbyter, taking home ‘the Youth committed to his cuſtody, educated ‘him, and kept him within compaſs, and che- ‘riſhed him, and at length baptized him: but af- ‘ter that he abated ſomething of his great care ‘and caution over him, becauſe he had fortifi'd him ‘with that moſt abſolute defence, to wit, the (e) Seal

(a) The Words of Euſebius in the Edit. of Valeſius (which in our tranſlation we follow) are theſe, ὅπου δὲ κλήσῳ ἕναγέ τινα κληρώσων, &c. In Rob. Stephen's Edit. of Euſebius, it is thus, ὅπου δὲ γε κλῆσον ἕνα τινὰ κληρώσων, &c. Valeſius ſays, he alter'd the reading here upon account of the Authority of the three M. SS. Maz. Med. and Fuk. rejecting the reading of the King's M. SS. (which Rob. Stephens followed) in that he was not able to make ſenſe of it: And moreover, ſays Valeſius, Ruſinus his Verſion confirms this our Emendation; for he tranſlates this place thus: Rogabatur etiam vicinas luſtrare provincias, quò vel Eccleſias fundaret, in quibus non erant locis; vel in quibus erant, ſacerdotibus ac miniſtris inſtrueret, ſecundùm quod ei de unoquoque Spiritus Sanctus indicaſſet. Valeſ.

(b) The Author of the Chronicon Alexandrinum calls the name of this City Smyrna. Valeſ.

(c) Ἀναπαύσας τὸς ἀδελφός. This Verb occurs often in the New Teſtament, as in 1 Cor. 16. 18. 2 Cor. 7. 13. &c. where our Engliſh tranſlation generally renders it [to refreſh] upon which account we thus tranſlate it here.

(d) See Dr. Hammond, concerning the uſe of this word Presbyter by the Apoſtles and Writers of the New Teſtament, and by the Fathers in the firſt Apoſtolical times, in his Notes on Acts 11. 30.

(e) The Primitive Chriſtians ſo termed Baptiſm, as Gregor. Nazianz. Orat. 40. where he obſerves that Baptiſm is called by Chriſtians by divers names; δώρεαν καλοῦσιν χάρισμα, Βάπτισμα, χρῖσμα, φώτισμα, ἀφθαρσίας ἔνδυμα, λουτρὸν παλιγγενεσίας, σφραγῖδα πᾶν ὅτι τίμιον, &c. Now the reaſon why Baptiſm is called σφραγῖδα, a Seal, is annex'd by the ſame Gregory Nazianz. becauſe, to wit, Baptiſm is, as it were, a preſervation, or a mark of dominion. Valeſ.

'the Lord. But, having obtain'd his freedom 'a little too early, some idle dissolute young 'men, that were inured to all manner of Vice, '(f) keep him company: 'And first of all, they entice him with sumptuous 'Banquets; then going out 'by night to rob and strip 'those they could meet 'with, they carry him along 'with them; afterwards they desire him to be 'their Complice in greater Rogueries: So by 'little and little he was accustom'd to lewdness; 'and because he was high-spirited, having once 'left the right way (like a strong hard-mouth'd 'Horse holding the Bitt between his Teeth,) he 'was so much the more fiercely hurried into de- 'struction. In fine, despairing of the Salvation 'of God, he spent not his thoughts now upon 'any trifling design; but attempted some enor- 'mous wickedness, and in as much as he was whol- 'ly past all hope, he (g) scorn'd to run the hazard 'of so mean a punishment as other Thieves did. 'Taking therefore those his Accomplices, and ha- 'ving form'd them into a troop of Thieves, he 'was readily made their Commander in chief; 'being the fiercest, the most bloody, and cruellest 'person of them all. Some time after, and there 'hapning some necessity for it, they send again 'for John; who, after he had set in order those 'things upon account whereof he came, said; 'Come on, Bishop, restore us that which was com- 'mitted to thy custody, which I and Christ deli- 'ver'd to thee to take care of, in the presence of 'the Church as witness, over which thou dost pre- 'side. But he at first was astonish'd, supposing him- 'self to be falsely accused about money which he 'had not receiv'd; neither could he give credit to 'John concerning his demand of what he had 'not, nor yet durst he disbelieve him. But when 'John had said, I demand the young Man and 'the Soul of our Brother; the old Man, fetching 'a deep sigh, and also weeping, said, he is dead. 'How? and what kind of death? To God, said 'he, he is dead; for he proved wicked, and ex- 'treamly naught, and in conclusion a Thief. And 'now in stead of continuing in the Church, he 'hath taken possession of the Mountain with a 'troop of Associates like himself. The Apostle 'therefore having rent his Garment, and with a 'great outcry smiting his Head, I left, said he, 'an excellent Keeper of our Brother's Soul! But 'let an Horse be presently brought me, and let 'me have a Guide to direct me in the way. He 'rode (as he was) forthwith from the Church, 'and coming to the place, is taken by the Watch 'which the Thieves had set; he flies not, nor 'makes entreaty, but calls out, For this purpose I 'came, bring me to your Captain: He in the 'mean time, armed as he was, stood still; but as 'soon as he knew John approaching, being a- 'shamed, he fled: but he, forgetful of his Age, 'with all possible speed pursued him; crying out, 'Son, why dost thou flee from thy Father, un- 'arm'd and aged? Have compassion on me, my 'Son; fear not; as yet there is hopes of thy sal- 'vation; I will intercede with Christ for thee; if 'need require, I will willingly undergo death for 'thee, as the Lord underwent it for us; I will by 'way of recompence give my Soul for thine; 'stand still; believe me, Christ hath sent me. He, 'having heard this, first stood still looking down- 'ward; then he threw away his Armour; after- 'wards trembling, he wept bitterly, and embrac'd 'the approaching old Man, craving pardon as 'well as he could for crying, and being as it were 'baptized the second time with tears; only he hid 'his Right Hand. The Apostle promising him, 'and solemnly swearing that he had obtain'd re- 'mission for him of our Saviour, praying, knee- 'ling, and kissing the young Man's Right Hand, 'as being now cleansed by repentance, brought 'him into the Church again. And partly by a- 'bundant prayers making supplication for him, 'partly with continual fastings striving together 'with him, and also comforting his Mind with divers (h) Sentences out of Holy Scripture, he 'departed not, as they say, until he had (i) re- 'stored him to the Church; having hereby shown 'a great example of true repentance, an illustri- 'ous instance of Regeneration, and a Trophie 'of a conspicuous Resurrection.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning the Order of the Gospels.

THese words of Clemens we have here inserted, upon account both of the Story it self, and the Profit it may yield to the Readers. But, we will now declare and recount the unquestionable Writings of this Apostle. And indeed the Gospel according to him, well-known to all the Churches throughout the World, must in the first place be without controversie acknowledg'd and received as undoubted and genuine. Now that it was truly, and upon a good account put in the fourth place after the other three Gospels by the Ancients, may after this manner be made apparent. Those Heavenly and truly Divine Persons (I speak of the Apostles of Christ) having been as to their Lives and Conversations perfectly purified, and as to their Souls adorn'd with all manner of Vertue, were indeed rude of speech and uneloquent; but they put their confidence in that divine and wonderful power of working Miracles bestow'd on them by our Saviour, and neither attempted nor knew how to be (a) Embassadors of their Master's Precepts in wittiness of words and artificiousness of language. But they solely made use of the demonstration of the Divine Spirit cooperating together with them, and the power of Christ with which they were fully endow'd, and which by them perform'd Miracles; and so they publish'd the knowledge of the Kingdom of Heaven to the whole world; making it the least of their care to be diligent about writing Books: And this they did, because they were employ'd about a more excellent and more than human work. Indeed Paul, who was the most powerful of them all in the furniture of words, and the most able in weighty expressions, hath left in writing nothing more than some very (b) short Epistles; although he could have disclosed innu-

(a) The word in the Original is πρεσβεύειν, which we translate, to be Embassadors of, warranted thereto from the same word occurring 1 Cor. 5. 20. and there so translated. This Word signifies the Apostolical Office, and that from God to Men, offering pardon on his part, and requiring on their part reformation for the future. See Dr. Hammond on 2. Cor. 5. 20.

(b) It is doubtful whether Eusebius would call Paul's Epistles short or few: Both may be said of them; to wit, that they are few, being in number not above fourteen; and they are short to them that Piously and Religiously read them over. Origen in Libro 5. Expositionum in Evangeli. Johan. calls them, ὀλιγοστίχους, that is, containing few Verses: He that desires to read Origen's Words, will find them hereafter quoted in the sixth B. of Eusebius, chap. 25. Vales.

Trajan. merable ſecrets, becauſe he attained unto a contemplation of thoſe things that are in the third Heaven, and being caught up into the divine Paradiſe, was vouchſafed to hear there unſpeakable words. Moreover, the reſt of our Saviour's Preachers, both the Twelve Apoſtles, and alſo the Seventy Diſciples, together with innumerable others beſides them, were not unexperienced in theſe things. And yet of all the Diſciples of the Lord, only Matthew and John have left us written Records; who alſo, as report ſays, were neceſſitated to write. For Matthew, having preach'd firſt to the Hebrews, and being about going to other Nations, did in his own Country language pen the Goſpel according to him; ſupplying by writing the want of his preſence and converſe among thoſe, (c) whom he was now to leave. Now, when ſoon after Mark and Luke had ſet forth the Goſpels according to them, John they ſay, ſpent all that time only in Preaching, and at length came to Write for this reaſon. The three firſt written Goſpels having been now deliver'd into the hands of all, and of John himſelf, they ſay, that he approved of them, and confirm'd the truth thereof by his own teſtimony; only there was wanting in writing an account of thoſe things done by Chriſt at the firſt beginning of his Preaching. And the thing is true: for 'tis evidently perſpicuous, that the other three Evangeliſts have committed to writing only thoſe things which were done by our Saviour in one years ſpace, after John the Baptiſt's being ſhut up in priſon; and that they have expreſly evidenc'd the ſame at the beginning of their Hiſtory. For, after the forty days Faſt, and the Temptation that follow'd thereupon, Matthew does plainly ſet forth the time of his own writing, ſaying, * When he had heard that John was caſt into priſon, he departed out of Judea into Galilee. And in like manner Mark; † Now after that John, ſays he, was put in priſon, Jeſus came into Galilee. And Luke alſo, before he begins the relation of the Acts of Jeſus, does in like manner make this remark, ſaying, that Herod, adding yet this to all the evils he had done, ſhut up John in priſon. Therefore they ſay, that the Apoſtle John, being for theſe cauſes thereto requeſted, has declared in a Goſpel according to him, the time paſſed over in ſilence by the former Evangeliſts, and what was done by our Saviour therein, (and they were the things that he did before the impriſonment of the Baptiſt;) and that he manifeſts the ſame thing, partly when he ſays thus; This beginning of miracles did Jeſus; and partly when he makes mention of the Baptiſt, whilſt he is ſpeaking of the Acts of Jeſus, as being at that time * Baptizing in Arnon, near to (d) Salem: And this he evidently declares by ſaying thus; For John, ſays he, was not yet caſt into priſon. Therefore John indeed in the penning of the Goſpel according to him, declares thoſe things that were done by Chriſt, the Baptiſt being as yet not caſt into priſon; but the other three Evangeliſts give an account of thoſe things Chriſt did after the Baptiſt's confinement to priſon. And to him that ſhall attentively conſider theſe things, it will not appear that the Goſpels diſagree one with the other; ſeeing the Goſpel according to John contains the firſt part of the Acts of Chriſt; but the remaining three give a relation of what was done by him at the latter end of the time. With good reaſon therefore has John paſs'd over in ſilence the Genealogy of our Saviour after the fleſh, as having been before written of by Matthew and Luke; and has begun with his Divinity, reſerv'd as it were by the Divine Spirit for him, as being the more excellent perſon. Let thus much therefore be ſpoken by us concerning the writing of the Goſpel according to John. Now what was the occaſion of writing the Goſpel according to Mark hath been manifeſted by us in what we ſaid * before. And Luke alſo himſelf, in the beginning of his Goſpel, hath ſhewed the cauſe for which he compiled that Hiſtory; for he makes it manifeſt that, becauſe many had raſhly taken in hand to make a declaration of thoſe things which he himſelf moſt certainly knew, he judg'd it neceſſary to diſengage us from the uncertain conjectures made by others, and therefore hath in his own Goſpel deliver'd a moſt firm and true account of thoſe things, the evidence whereof himſelf had ſufficiently obtain'd, having been aſſiſted therein both by the company and converſe of Paul, and alſo by his familiarity with the reſt of the Apoſtles: And thus much now concerning theſe things. But at a more opportune ſeaſon we will endeavour to manifeſt, by a Quotation of the ancient Writers, what has been ſaid by others concerning this very matter. Among the Writings of John, beſides his Goſpel, alſo the former of his Epiſtles hath without controverſie been admitted as genuine, both by thoſe men that are Modern, and alſo by the Antients: the two other Writings of his are queſtion'd. The Opinion concerning his Revelation is even at this time on both ſides much controverted among many: But this Controverſie alſo ſhall at a ſeaſonable opportunity be diſcuſs'd by the authority of the Antients.

(c) Nicephorus, Libr. 2. chap. 45. reads it τὸ λεῖπον τῆς αὐτῦ παρεσίας; and Ruſinus and Muſculus tranſlate it as we have done. But Chriſtophorſon interprets it otherwiſe; thus, and what ſeemed to be wanting to thoſe from whom he departed whilſt he was preſent with them, that he fully made up by his ſedulity and labour in writing. In which tranſlation this is to be blamed, to wit, in that he ſays Matthew wrote his Goſpel after his departure from the Hebrews, when as Euſebius ſays the contrary; For in the Greek it is, ἀφ' ὧν ἐξέλλεσο, i. e. from whom he was going. Athanaſius in his Tract de Libr. S. Scrip. and Chryſoſtome, write that Matthew firſt wrote his Goſpel at Jeruſalem: And Nicephorus and the Author of Chronic. Alexandr. ſay he wrote it in the 15th year after Chriſt's Aſcenſion. Chriſtophorſon referred thoſe Words τότοις ἀφ' ὧν ἐξέλλεσο to the Words λεῖπον; whereas they are referred to the Word ἀπεπλήρε. And in the King's Maz. and Med. M. SS. after the word παρεσία and ἐξέλλεσο, the comma is put. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXV.

Concerning thoſe Divine Writings, which are without controverſie acknowledged; and thoſe which are not ſuch.

BUT it will in this place be ſeaſonable ſummarily to reckon up thoſe Books of the New Teſtament which have been before-mention'd. In the firſt place therefore is to be ranked the four Sacred Goſpels: Next to which follows the Book of the Acts of the Apoſtles: After that are to be reckon'd the Epiſtles of Paul; after which follows that which is called the Firſt Epiſtle of John, and in like manner the Epiſtle of Peter is to be admitted as authentick. Then is to be placed, if you think good, the Revelation of John: the Opinions concerning which I will in due place declare. And theſe are the Books that with general conſent are acknowledg'd. Among thoſe which are queſtion'd as doubtful, which yet are approved and mention'd by many, is that which is called the Epiſtle of James, and that of Jude, alſo the Second Epiſtle of Peter, and thoſe called the Second and Third Epiſtles of John, whether they were written by the Evangeliſt, or another of the ſame name with him. Amongſt the the (a) Spurious Works let there be rank'd, both the Work intitled The Acts of Paul, and the Book called Pastor, and the Revelation of Peter; and moreover that which is called the Epistle of Barnabas, and that named the (b) Doctrines of the Apostles; and moreover, as I said, the Revelation of John (if you think good) which some, as I have said, do reject, but others allow of, and admit among those Books that are received as unquestionable and undoubted. And among these some do now number the (c) Gospel according to the Hebrews, with which those of the Hebrews that have embraced the Faith of Christ are chiefly delighted. All these Books may be question'd as doubtful. And I thought it requisite to make a Catalogue of these also, that we may discriminate those Scriptures that according to Ecclesiastical Tradition are true and unforg'd, and with general consent receiv'd as undoubted, from those other Books which are not such, nor incorporated into the New Testament, but are question'd as doubtful; which yet have been acknowledg'd and allow'd of by many Ecclesiastical Persons: And further that we may know these very Books, and those others that have been put forth by Hereticks under the name of the Apostles, containing as well the supposed Gospels of Peter, Thomas, and Matthias, and of some others besides them; as also the supposed Acts of Andrew and John, and other of the Apostles. Of which Books no (d) Ecclesiastical Writer even from the Apostles times hitherto hath in any of his Works vouchsafed to make the least mention. But moreover also, the manner of the Phrase and the Stile wherein they are written are much different from the Apostolick natural propriety and innate simplicity: and the meaning and drift of those things delivered in these Books, being mightily dissonant from Orthodoxal truth, doth manifestly evince that they are the forgeries of Heretical Men. Upon which account they are not to be rank'd amongst the spurious Writings, but altogether to be rejected, as wholly absurd and impious. But we will now proceed to what follows of our History.

(a) Eusebius does here use this word [νόθοις] very improperly, to wit, to signifie those Books whose Authority is doubtful; whereas those Books are to be called νόθοι, which are adulterated and forged by Hereticks, of which sort he makes mention at the end of this Chapter; which that it may more manifestly appear, you must understand, there are three sorts of Sacred Books. Some are without Controversie true; others without Controversie false; a third sort are those, of which the antients doubted. This latter sort can't be called νόθοι, because many accounted them to be genuine: It remains therefore that the second sort only be called νόθοι, i.e. Spurious Books. Of which sort is Paul's Epistle to the Laodiceans, which St. Jerome says was with one consent exploded by all. But Eusebius corrects himself in chap. 31. of this Third Book, where he manifestly differences the Spurious Books from those which are doubtful. See his Words there. Gregory Naz. in Iambico carmine ad Seleucum, manifestly confirms our opinion. For of the Books of Sacred Scripture, some, says he, are genuine and true, which he there reckons up; others are supposititious, which he calls νόθους, Spurious; a third sort he makes those to be, which come neerest to those Books that are genuine; which division Gregory had from Origen, out of his 13 Tome of Explanat. in Johan. But to speak properly, there are but two sorts of Sacred Books, those namely that are true, and those whose authority is asserted by some, and questioned by others. For the Spurious Books deserve not to be reckoned amongst the Sacred Books. Vales.

(b) Concerning this Book see the Learned Arch-Bishop Usher in his Dissertation on Ignatius's Epistles, Chap. 7. Edit. Oxon. 1644.

(c) Concerning this Gospel, St. Jerome, in Catalogo, where he is speaking of James the brother of our Lord, says thus, Evangelium quoque quod appellatur secundùm Hebræos, & à me nuper in Græcum Latinumque Sermonem translatum est, quo & Origenes sæpe utitur, &c. Julianus Pelagianus, Lib. 4. speaks of this Gospel, where he accuses Jerome, because in his Dialogue against the Pelagians, he made use of an authority of a fifth Gospel, which he himself had translated into Latin. But that which Eusebius adds, that the Jews which embraced Christianity are chiefly delighted with this Gospel, makes him seem to mean the Nazareans and Ebionites; for they use to read that Gospel written in Hebrew, as St. Jerom shews, in Esai. c. 11. and in Ezech. c. 18. Vales.

(d) Eusebius speaks not here of the Successors of the Apostles, which title belongs only to Bishops; but he speaks of the Ecclesiastical Writers, who in a perpetual succession have flourished in the Church. Therefore τῆς κατ' διαδοχὰς ἐκκλησιαστικῶν, is the same as τῆς κατὰ γενεὰς ἐκκλησιαστικῶν, i.e. of the Ecclesiastical Writers in every Age. For, as heretofore among the Jews there was a succession of Prophets, tho' sometimes interrupted (as Josephus says in his first Book against Apion;) so in the Church there always was a succession of Learned Men and Writers which were called Ecclesiasticks. Moreover in the M. SS. Maz. Med. and Fuk. it is written κατὰ τὰς διαδοχὰς, with the Article. Vales.

CHAP. XXVI.

Of Menander the Impostor.

MEnander, succeeding Simon Magus, shew'd himself to be, as to his Disposition and Manners, a second (a) Dart of Diabolical force no whit inferior to the former. He also was a (b) Samaritan; and, arriving to no less height of imposture than his Master, abounded much more in greater and more monstrous illusions: for he said that he himself was a Saviour, sent from above for the salvation of men from invisible ages; and he taught that no man could otherwise overcome the Angels the makers of this world, unless he were first instituted in the magical knowledge delivered by him, and initiated in the Baptism by him imparted. Of which Baptism those that were adjudg'd worthy, they, he affirmed, would be partakers of a perpetual immortality in this very life; they should be no longer subject to death; but continuing in this present life should be always young and immortal. And indeed 'tis easie to know all this from the Books of Irenæus. And Justinus in like manner having made mention of Simon, adds also a Narration of this Man, saying; 'And we knew one Menander a Samaritan also of 'the Village Caparattæ, a Disciple of Simon's, who 'being moved by the fury of Devils, and coming 'to Antioch, seduced many by magical art; who 'also perswaded his followers that they should not 'die; and at this time there are some of his Sect 'that profess the same." Wherefore it was the device of the Diabolical power by such Impostors, going under the name of Christians, to endeavour to calumniate by Magick the great Mystery of Godliness, and by them to expose to reproach the Ecclesiastical opinions concerning the Immortality of the Soul, and the Resurrection of the Dead. But those who joyn'd themselves to such Saviours as followers of them, were frustrated of the true hope.

(a) I wonder that all Interpreters have err'd in the translation of this word. Rufinus renders it Scutum, a buckler; Langus and Musculus, armaturam, armour; Christophorson, propugnaculum, a bulwark. But ὅπλον here signifies telum, a dart. Therefore ὅπλον τῆς διαβολικῆς ἐνεργείας is the same with ὄργανον, an instrument of diabolical force. Val. (b) In four of our M. SS. copies, to wit, Maz. Med. Fuk. and Sir Hen. Savil's, I found a far different punctation of this place from that which Christophorson followed, as appears by his Version. For in the said M. SS. it is thus pointed, ὅπλον δεύτερον ὑ χεῖρον τῦ πρώτου, τῆς διαβολικῆς ἐνεργείας ἀποδείκνυσθαι τ τρόπον· ἦν γ οὗτος σαμαρεύς. And truly this punctation is far better than the vulgar. For what can the meaning of these words be [τ τρόπον ἦν γ αὐτὸς σαμαρεύς?] I know the Jews hated the Samaritans, as the worst of Men; insomuch that the name of Samaritan was accounted by the Jews the greatest reproach. But here Menander's Country is spoken of; his Manners Eusebius speaks of hereafter. Moreover he is said to be a Samaritan in the same sense that Justin in Apologet. and Clemens in Libr. Recognit. calls Simon a Samaritan; i.e. he was of the Province or Country of Samaria, he came not out of the very City Samaria. For Simon was of the Village Gitton; but Menander of the Village Caparattæ. Vales.

THE malicious Devil being unable to remove others from the love of the Christ of God, finding that they might (a) some other way be surpriz'd, he made them his own. But others among them being of the ſame name have eſchewed the monſtrous abſurdity of the fore-cited Opinions, denying not that the Lord was begotten of the Virgin by the Holy Ghoſt: But notwithſtanding, theſe in like manner alſo, not confeſſing that he exiſted before all things, as being God the Word, and the Wiſdom of the Father, are led into the ſame impiety with the former; eſpecially in that they make it their buſineſs to maintain and obſerve the bodily worſhip of the Law. They alſo think that all the Epiſtles of the Apoſtle Paul ought to be rejected, calling him an Apoſtate from the Law: they made uſe only of the Goſpel called The Goſpel according to the Hebrews; the reſt they made ſmall account of: They obſerv'd alſo the Sabbath and all other Judaical Rites in like manner as the Jews do; but on Sundays they perform'd the ſame things with us in remembrance of the Lord's Reſurrection. From whence, becauſe of ſuch opinions by them held, they got this name, to wit, the appellation of Ebionites, a name that betokens the poverty of their underſtanding. For by this name a Beg-

WE have heard that at the ſame time there was one Cerinthus a Founder of another Hereſie. Caius, whoſe words I before quoted, in that Diſputation of his now extant, writes thus concerning him. And Dionyſius alſo, who in our time was choſen Biſhop of the Church of Alexandria, (b) in his ſecond Book concerning Promiſes, ſpeaking ſomething of the Revelation of John, as from ancient tradition, mentions this Man in theſe words: 'But Cerinthus, the 'Founder of the Hereſie called from him the 'Cerinthian Hereſie, was, they ſay, the Author of that Book, (c) being deſirous to put a creditable name upon his own forgery. For this was one of the Tenets of his Doctrine, that the Kingdom of Chriſt ſhould be terreſtrial: And thoſe things which he, being a lover of his body, and altogether carnally minded, earneſtly luſted after, in them he dreamt the Kingdom of Chriſt conſiſted, to wit, in the Satiety of the Belly, and of thoſe parts beneath the Belly; that is, in Meats, Drinks and Marriages, and in thoſe things whereby he thought theſe might with a (d) greater pretence and ſhew of piety be procured, that is, in Feaſts, Sacrifices, and in the ſlaying of Offerings." Thus far Dionyſius. But Irenæus, in his firſt Book againſt Hereſies, does recite ſome more ſecret falſe Opinions of this Man's; and in his third Book he delivers in writing a certain Story (unworthy to be forgotten) as from the Tradition of Polycarp, ſaying, that John the Apoſtle going on a time to the Bath to bath himſelf, and underſtanding that Cerinthus was within, retired in great haſte from that place, and fled out at the door, not enduring to go under the ſame roof with him; and that he perſwaded thoſe who were with him to do ſo alſo, ſaying, Let us be gone, leſt the Bath fall, Cerinthus.that enemy of the Truth being within it.

For Clemens does not ſay that that fact, or that ſaying was done or ſaid by Nicholas raſhly and inconſiderately. Yea, he delares in the 2d of his Stromatῶn about the latter end, that this ſaying [δεῖ ὧδε χρᾶσθαι τῇ σαρκί] was one of Nicholas his Apophthegms, or Pithy Speeches. Which ſaying of his, his followers interpreted ſo, as if Nicholas had commanded every one to abuſe his Fleſh with all manner of voluptuouſneſs and laſciviouſneſs: But Nicholas meant the clean contrary by this his ſpeech, to wit, that the Fleſh ought not to be indulged to, but to be kept under, and wearied out with continual exerciſes of Vertue. Valeſ.

Which things being thus, his bringing of 'his Wife, (over whom he was said to be jealous) 'forth before the Apostles, was a sign of his re-'jecting and bridling his passion; and by those 'words of his [that we ought to abuse the Flesh,] '(c) he taught Continence, and an abstaining 'from those Pleasures which are with so much 'earnestness desired by men. For, I suppose, he 'would not (according to our Saviour's com-'mandment) serve two Masters, Pleasure and the 'Lord. Moreover, they say, that Matthias taught 'the same Doctrine, that we should war against 'the Flesh, and abuse it, allowing it nothing of 'pleasure; but that we should enrich the Soul 'by Faith and Knowledge." Let thus much therefore be spoken concerning those who endeavour'd about that time to deprave the Truth, but on a sudden were wholly extinct.

(c) These words are spoken by Clemens Alexandrinus by way of Enallage; for thus they are to be taken, as if he had said, τὸ διδάσκειν τὴν σαρκὶ τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν ἡδονῶν ἐν ᾗ λέγει, i.e. by those words of his [that we ought to abuse the flesh] He taught Continence and an abstaining from pleasures, &c. Vales.

CHAP. XXX.

Concerning those Apostles that are found to have been married.

BUT Clemens, whose words we even now recited, after that Passage of his before-quoted, does reckon up those Apostles that are found to have been married, upon account of such as despise Marriage; saying, What will they repre-'hend even the Apostles also? For Peter and Philip 'begat Children; and Philip match'd his Daugh-'ters to Husbands. Paul also, in one of his E-'pistles, fears not to name his Wife, whom he 'carried not about with him, that he might with more expedition perform his Ministration." But because we have mention'd these things, it will not be troublesome to produce also another Story of his worthily memorable, which he hath set forth in the seventh of his Stromatωn, after this manner: 'Now they say that St. Peter, seeing his 'Wife led to be put to death, rejoyced because she 'was call'd by God, and because she was return-'ing home: and that calling her by her name he 'exhorted and comforted her, saying, O woman 'remember the Lord. Such was the Wedlock of the 'Saints, and such the entire Affection of most dear Friends." And thus much, being pertinent to the subject now in hand, we have here seasonably plac'd.

CHAP. XXXI.

Of the Death of John and Philip.

INdeed, both the time and manner of the death of Paul and Peter, and moreover the place where after their departure out of this life their Bodies were deposited, we have before manifested: concerning the time of John's death we have already also in some sort spoken; but the place of Sepulchre is demonstrated by the Epistle of Polycrates (who was Bishop of the Ephesian Church) which he wrote to Victor Bishop of Rome; wherein he mentions both him and also Philip the Apostle and his Daughters after this manner. 'For 'also in Asia the Great (a) Lights are dead, which 'shall be raised again at the last day, the day of 'the Lord's coming, wherein he shall come with 'Glory from Heaven, and shall find out all his 'Saints: I mean (b) Philip one of the Twelve A-'postles who died at Hierapolis; and two of his 'Daughters who continued Virgins to the end 'of their lives. Also his other (c) Daughter, who 'having lived by the guidance of the Holy Ghost, 'died at Ephesus. And moreover John, who leaned 'on the Breast of the Lord, and was a Priest and 'wore a (d) plate of Gold, and was a Martyr and 'a Doctor; this John, I say, died at Ephesus." And thus much concerning their deaths. And also in the Dialogue of Caius, of which we a little before made mention, Proculus, against whom he instituted the dispute, agreeing with what we have inforced concerning the death of Philip and his Daughters, says thus; 'After that also, 'the four Propheteses the Daughters of Philip 'were at Hierapolis a City of Asia, their Sepulchre 'is there, and also their Father's." Thus he, Luke likewise in the Acts of the Apostles makes mention of the Daughters of Philip that lived then at Cæsarea of Judea with their Father, who were endow'd with the gift of Prophecy, saying word for word thus: 'We came unto Cæsarea, and we 'entred into the House of Philip the Evangelist, '(which was one of the Seven) and abode with 'him. And the same Man had four Daughters, 'Virgins, which did Prophecy." Having thus far therefore treated of those things which came to our knowledge, both concerning the (e) Apostles and the Apostolick times, and the Sacred Writings they left us, both those that are question'd as doubtful, which yet are publickly read by many in most Churches, and those also that are altogether spurious and repugnant to Apostolical sound Doctrine, we now proceed to the subsequent part of our History.

Trajan.

(a) Μεγάλα στοιχεῖα. Jerome and Musculus translate it Elementa, elements, or foundations. Christophorson turns it Seminaria, Seedplots: But Rufinus best of all, calls it Lumina, Lights. For the Grecians were wont to call the Signs of the Zodiack στοιχεῖα. So Diogen. Laert. in the Life of Menedemus. Now the Heathens call'd those Signs so, because they thought the Principles of the lives and fortunes of Men were placed in them. See Epiphan. in Hæres. Pharisæorum. Vales.

(b) Christophorson in this place did in no wise perform the office of a good translator, who for Philip one of the Twelve Apostles put in Philip one of the seven Deacons. It was an ancient mistake, to confound Philip the Deacon and Evangelist with Philip the Apostle. And because they read Acts 21. v. 8, 9. that Philip had four daughters, Virgins, that Prophecied, they asserted Philip the Apostle was married and begot daughters. So, besides Polycrates, Clemens Alexandrinus said in the foregoing chap. and so said Papias, as we shall see hereafter. But from the Acts of the Apostles it may be manifestly gathered, that Philip the Deacon (he that Baptized the Eunuch, and that had the four Daughters that were Propheteses) was not the same with Philip the Apostle, but another Man. See Isidore Pelusiota, in his first Book Epist. 447. and so on, where he evidently demonstrates this. Vales.

(c) This third Daughter of Philip, Polycrates separates from the other two which died Virgins; whence it may be collected that she was married. Neither is this repugnant to the Acts c. 21. For it may be answered that then when these things were done that Luke mentions, Philip's Daughters were Virgins: But afterwards one of them was given in marriage by her Father. And Clemens Alexandrinus seems to intimate thus much in those words of his, which Eusebius quotes in the foregoing chap. Moreover Christophorson confounds this third daughter of Philip's with the two former. Whose translation did much trouble Baronius as appears from his Annals, ad Annum Christi 58. chap. 113. Eusebius repeats this passage of Polycrates in his fifth Book chap. 24. where Christophorson does rightly distinguish the three Daughters of Philip, and amends his former error. But it may here be deservedly questioned, why Polycrates mentions only three Daughters of Philip's, whereas in the Acts they are counted four. I answer Polycrates mentioned only those that died and were buried in Asia, as may be seen from his whole Epistle which is recited in the fifth Book of Euseb. Hist. seeing therefore one of the four Daughters died at Cæsarea, or some where else, upon that account Polycrates mentions her not. Moreover of these Daughters of Philip, one was called Hermione, the other Eutychis. For so it is in Menæo Græcorum die 4. Sept. See the place. Vales.

(d) Τὸ πέταλον, that's the word in Polycrates here quoted by Eusebius. The 72 use this word Exod. 28. 36. for so they translate צִיץ the Hebrew word there, which properly signifies a floor, but by our translators is in English rendred a plate there, and afterwards, Exod. 39. 30. it is called a plate of the Holy Crown. It was a long plate of Gold, two fingers broad, and reach'd from one Ear of the Priest to the other, says Maimon. in his Treatise of the Implements of the Sanctuary, Chap. 9. Sect. 1. See Ainsworth on the Pentat.

(e) In our four MSS. copies, Maz. Med. Fuk. and Sir Hen. Savil's, I found it written περὶ τε τῶν ἁγίων ἀποστόλων αὐτῶν, i.e. concerning the Apostles themselves, the word ἀυτῶν being in them added. Vales.

CHAP. XXXII.

How Simeon the Biſhop of Jeruſalem ſuffered Martyrdom.

AFter the Perſecution of Nero and Domitian, report goes, that under this Emperor, whoſe times we now recount, there was a Perſecution raiſed againſt us by piece-meal throughout every City, which proceeded from a popular Inſurrection. In which we have by tradition received, that (a) Simeon the ſon of Cleophas, who we declar'd was conſtituted the ſecond Biſhop of the Church at Jeruſalem, finiſh'd his life by Martyrdom. And this the ſame Writer atteſteth, ſeveral words of whoſe we have before quoted, that is, Hegeſippus: Who, giving a relation of certain Hereticks, adds, that this Simeon, being at that time by them accuſed and tormented divers ways, and for the ſpace of many days, becauſe he was a Chriſtian, ſtruck with a great amazement both the Judge and thoſe about him, and at length died by the ſame kind of ſuffering that the Lord did. Nothing hinders but that we may hear the Writer relating theſe things word for word, thus: 'Some of thoſe Hereticks accus'd 'Simeon the ſon of Cleophas, as being a Deſcendant 'from David, and a Chriſtian; and ſo he ſuffered 'Martyrdom when he was an hundred and twenty years old, under Trajan the Emperor, and '(b) Atticus of the Conſular 'order then Preſident of Syria." And the ſame Author ſays, that thoſe his accuſers, (ſuch as were of the Royal Family of the Jews being at that time ſought for) hapned to be convicted, as belonging to that Family. Now, ſhould any one ſay that this Simeon was one of thoſe who both ſaw and heard the Lord, he would ſpeak what is in no wiſe abſurd, having as an undoubted Evidence thereof the great length of his life, and the mention made in the Goſpels of Mary the Wife of Cleophas; whoſe Son that he was, * our former words have manifeſted. Alſo the ſame Writer ſays, that others, related to one of thoſe called the Brethren of our Saviour (whoſe name was Judas) lived until this † Emperor's Reign, after their profeſſion of the Faith of Chriſt under Domitian, * which we mentioned before. For thus he writeth, 'They 'come therefore and preſide over the whole 'Church, as being Martyrs, and of the Kindred 'of our Lord. And a profound Peace enſuing over the whole Church, they continued alive till 'the times of Trajan the Emperor, until the foreſaid Simeon, the ſon of Cleophas (who was (c) Unkle to our Lord) being accuſed by the (d) Hereticks, was in like manner alſo impeach'd for the '(e) ſame thing before Atticus the Preſident. And 'being cruelly tortured for many days he with 'conſtancy profeſſed the Faith of Chriſt; in ſo much that the Preſident and all thoſe about him 'wondred greatly, how a man of an hundred 'and twenty years old as he was, could have endured ſuch torments. And in fine, it was order'd he ſhould be crucified." Moreover the ſame Man, relating what was done in thoſe times, adds, that until then the (f) Church continued a pure and undefiled Virgin; thoſe who endeavour'd to corrupt the ſound Rule of wholeſome Doctrine, if any ſuch perſons there were, abſconding themſelves hitherto in obſcure darkneſs. But after the ſacred company of the Apoſtles was by various kinds of death become extinct, and that generation of thoſe men, who were accounted worthy to hear with their own ears the Divine Wiſdom, was gone, then the conſpiracy of impious Error took its riſe from the deceit of Falſe Teachers; who, in as much as not one of the Apoſtles was then ſurviving, did now at length with a bare face attempt to preach up —— the knowledge falſely ſo call'd, in oppoſition to the Doctrine of the Truth. (g) And thus much this Author, treating of theſe things, has after this manner ſaid. But we will proceed to what in order follows of our Hiſtory.

Trajan.

(a) In the King's MS. it is Σίμων, Simon, as Rob. Stephens obſerved. Jerom, in Chronico, teſtifies that the name of this Biſhop of Jeruſalem was written two ways, to wit, Simeon and Simon. The ſame Georg. Syncellus obſerves, and alſo the Author Chronici Alexandrini. Valeſ.

Moreover, of the Emperor's Deputies ſome were of the Conſular Order; others of the Pretorian. Wherefore Atticus is here called ὑπατικὸς, to ſhew that he was of the Conſular Order, or had been Conſul. In the MS. Copies of Ruſinus his tranſlation (that is in the King's Library) it is, Martyr effectus eſt cum eſſet annorum centum XXV. i.e. he was Martyred when he was 125 years old. Valeſ.

(d) The Author Chronici Alexandrini ſuppoſes that the Cerinthian Hereticks and the Nicholaites are here meant: To whom I do not aſſent. Hegeſippus means thoſe Sects which at that time were potent at Jeruſalem, to wit, the Phariſees, Sadduces, and others, of whom hereafter, at Book 4. Chap. 22. Valeſ.

(e) That is, becauſe he Preach'd the Faith of Chriſt, as he ſaid before, and ſays again, Book. 4. Chap. 22. Valeſ.

(f) This Hegeſippus ſpoke of the Church of Jeruſalem in particular, to wit, that it continued a Virgin until the death of Simeon, unto Trajan's time. The words of Hegeſippus you will meet with hereafter, at chap. 22.

(g) All theſe Words, to the end of the Chapter, are wanting in the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. neither doth Ruſinus acknowledge them in his tranſlation, as appears therefrom. And this whole Clauſe ſeems to me to be Spurious and ſuppoſititious. For whoſoever added it, thought the Words that went before were Hegeſippus's; whereas they are not his, but Euſebius's, as we may ſee from chap. 22. B. 4. Valeſ.

B. 4. Euſebius ſeems to have attributed that to the whole Church which Hegeſippus ſpake of the Church at Jeruſalem in particular. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXIII.

How Trajan forbade that the Chriſtians ſhould be ſought after.

MOreover, ſo great a Perſecution raged againſt us at that time in many places, that Plinius Secundus the moſt eminent amongſt the Governours of Provinces, being moved at the multitude of Martyrs, gave the Emperor an account of the great numbers of thoſe that were deſtroy'd becauſe of their Faith; and together therewith certified him, that he found they did nothing of Impiety, nor acted any thing contrary to the Laws; only that they roſe at break of day, and ſung Hymns to Chriſt, as unto God; but that they abhor'd the commiſſion of Adultery and Murther, and ſuch-like horrid crimes; and that they did all things conſonant to the Laws. Upon account of which Trajan made this Edict, That the Chriſtians ſhould not be ſought out; but if by accident they were lighted on, they ſhould be puniſh'd. Which being done, the moſt vehement heat of the Perſecution that lay heavy upon us, was in ſome meaſure quench'd: but to thoſe who had a mind to do us miſchief there remain'd Pretexts no whit leſs fair and ſpecious; in ſome places the People, in others the Rulers of the Provinces, forming treacheries againſt us; in ſo much that even when there was no open and general perſecution, yet there were particular ones throughout the Provinces, and very many of the Faithful underwent various ſorts of Martyrdoms. We have taken this account out of Tertullian's Apology, written in Latin (of which we before made mention) the Tranſlation whereof is thus; 'But we 'have found that the inquiſition after us has been 'prohibited. For Plinius Secundus, when he 'was Governour of the Province, having con'demned ſome Chriſtians, and deprived other 'ſome

Trajan. ‘some, being at length troubled at their great ‘number, asked advice of Trajan then the Em‘peror, what he should do with the residue, say‘ing, that, besides their obstinacy in not sacri‘ficing, he found nothing of impiety in their re‘ligious Mysteries, only that they held early As‘semblies in singing Hymns to Christ as unto ‘God, and that they had a (a) certain Symbol or ‘Signal of their Polity; that they forbade Mur‘ther, Adultery, Fraud, Perfidiousness, and such‘like crimes. Then Trajan returned answer, that ‘those sort of Men should not indeed be diligent‘ly sought out, but if by chance (b) they were ‘lighted on and brought before the Governours, ‘they should be punished.” And this was then the posture of Affairs.

(a) He that translated the Words of Tertullian into Greek, has rendred them unhappily. For neither does ἐπιστήμη signifie discipline, nor διαφυλάσσειν, to agree together. I would therefore rather translate these Words of Tertullian thus, ᾗ ἵνα ὥσπερ τὶ σύμβολον ἔχωσι τῆς αὐτῶν πολιτείας, i. e. and that they had a certain Symbol or Signal of their Polity. Vales.

(b) Here also the Greek Translator of Tertullian hath done ill; for Tertullian, or rather Trajan, calls those Oblatos, who were brought in before the Judges; for so the Latines use to speak. The sense therefore of the Emperor Trajan's Rescript against the Christians is this, that the Governours of Provinces should not too diligently hunt after the Christians by sending out Spies and Officers to take them, but if any Christians were by chance found out by their Officers, or if they were made appear to be such by their Accusers, that then they ought to be punished. Vales.

CHAP. XXXIV.

That Evarestus was the Fourth that governed the Roman Church.

CHAP. XXXV.

That Justus was the Third that governed the Church at Jerusalem.

BUT moreover, Simeon having finished his life after the foresaid manner, a certain Jew, by name Justus, succeeded in the Episcopal Seat at Jerusalem; there being then an innumerable company of the Circumcision (of which he was one) that believed in Christ.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Concerning Ignatius and his Epistles.

MOreover, at this time Polycarp a Disciple of the Apostles flourished in Asia, to whom was committed the Bishoprick of the Church at Smyrna, by those that saw and ministred to the Lord. At the same time (a) Papias was famous, who also was Bishop of the Church at Hierapolis, a man most eminently learned and eloquent, and knowing in the Scriptures. Ignatius also, renown'd amongst many even to this day, who was chosen Bishop of Antioch, being the second in succession there, after Peter. Report goes that this Man was sent from Syria to Rome to be made food for Wild Beasts, upon account of the Profession of his Faith in Christ. And being led through Asia under the custody of a most watchful Guard, he confirm'd the Churches in every City through which he passed, by Discourses and Exhortations; warning them most especially to take heed of the Heresies, which then first sprung upand increased: And he exhorted them firmly to keep the Traditions of the Apostles, which he thought necessary for the more certain knowledge of Posterity to be put in writing, having confirm'd them by his own testimony. Coming therefore at length to Smyrna, where Polycarp then was, he wrote one Epistle to the Church at Ephesus, mentioning Onesimus the Pastor there; and another to the Church at Magnesia standing on the River Meander, wherein again he makes mention of Damas the Bishop: and another to the Church at Trallis, the Governour whereof at that time he declares was Polybius. Besides these Epistles he wrote also to the Church at Rome, wherein he earnestly beseeches them that they would not intreat him to avoid Martyrdom, lest they should defraud him of his desired hope. Out of which Epistle 'tis worth our quoting some short Passages for the confirmation of what we have said. Thus therefore he writes word for word: ‘From Syria ‘to Rome I fight with Beasts, by sea and land, day ‘and night, bound to ten Leopards, that is, to a ‘File of Soldiers, who being kindly treated by me, ‘become (b) worse. But by ‘their Injuries I am the ‘more instructed; but for ‘all that I am not justified. ‘Oh! that I might enjoy the ‘Wild Beasts that are pro‘vided for me! which I e‘ven heartily wish may be ‘found to be fierce! which ‘I will allure to devour me ‘immediately, that they ‘spare me not, as out of ‘fear they have left some ‘untouch'd. But if they be ‘unwilling to do it, I will ‘compel them by force. ‘Pardon me; I know what ‘is good for me: Now I ‘begin to be a Disciple: ‘(c) Let nothing visible or ‘invisible divert me from, ‘or envy my happiness of ‘attaining Christ Jesus. Let ‘Fire and the Cross, the As‘saults of the Wild Beasts, ‘the pulling asunder of ‘Bones, the cutting off of Members, the stam‘ping in pieces of the whole Body, the punish‘ment of the Devil, come upon me; so I may ob‘tain Christ Jesus. And thus much he wrote from the foresaid City to the Churches before named. Being now gone beyond Smyrna, he from Troas again sent Letters to those at Philadelphia, also to the Church at Smyrna, and privately to Polycarp the Prelate thereof: To whom, because he well knew him to be an Apostolical Man, he entrusted his Flock at Antioch, being a very true and good Pastor; requesting him, that he would have a diligent care thereof. The same person writing to those of Smyrna, borrows some words, which whence he had I (d) know not;

Trajan.

(b) In the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. 'tis read χείρονες γένωμαι. A little after I read, with Isaac Vossius, ἃ ἐγὼ εὔχομαι σύντονά μοι εὑρεθῆναι, that is, which I heartily wish may be found to be fierce, which amendment Rufinus his Translation confirms. For thus he turns it, Quas & ergo opto acriores parari. Therefore Rufinus read, σύντονα, not σύντομα, which signifies [soon, or straight-ways.] The same Error is amended by us hereafter, in the sixth Book; for there συντόμως was Printed for συντόνως. Vales. But Bishop Usher reads χείρες; and also, σύντομα. See his Annotat. on this Epistle, Number 48.

(c) It is as much as if Ignatius had said, Let nothing envy me the Glory of being a Disciple of Christ; Let no Man pluck me from his Embraces. The holy Martyr alludes, as he uses to do, to those Words of St. Paul, Who shall separate us from the Love of Christ? Rom. 8. 35. Vales. See Bishop Usher's Notes on Ignatius Epist. to the Romans, Number 52.

(a) This whole Elogie of Papias is wanting in our MSS. copies, Maz. Med. and Fuk. Neither did Rufinus read these Words in his Copies, as may be gathered from his Translation. Wherefore I doubt not but they were inserted by some unskilful Scholiast, against the mind and opinion of Eusebius. For how can it be, that Eusebius should here stile Papias a Man most excellently learned, and very skilful in the Scriptures, whenas himself does at the end of this Book expressly affirm, that Papias was a Man of an ordinary Wit, and altogether ignorant and simple. Vales.

(d) This passage of Ignatius's concerning Christ is taken out of the Gospel according to the Hebrews; which was either omitted by Eusebius, or unknown to him. Jerome, in his Book De Eccles. Scriptor. informs us hereof; as also in his 18 B. of Commentaries on Esaiah. See Usher's Annotat. on Ignatius his Epistles, pag. 48. number 23.

Trajan. ſpeaking thus much concerning Chriſt; 'But I 'both know and believe that after the Reſur-'rection he was in the fleſh; and that, coming 'to Peter and thoſe who were about him, he ſaid 'unto them, take hold of me, handle me, and 'ſee, for I am not an incorporeal Spirit: And 'ſtraightway they touch'd him, and believed." Irenæus alſo ſpeaks of his Martyrdom, and mentions his Epiſtles, ſaying thus: 'As one of our 'Men, condemn'd to the Wild Beaſts for his Faith 'in God, ſaid, I am the Bread-corn of God, and 'I muſt be ground by the Teeth of Wild Beaſts, 'that I may be found to be pure Bread." And Polycarp mentions the ſame Epiſtles in that of his to the Philippians, in theſe very words: 'I therefore 'beſeech you all to obey thoſe that are over you, 'and to exerciſe all manner of Patience, which 'you have evidently ſeen, not only in thoſe Bleſ-'ſed Men Ignatius, Rufus, and Zoſimus, but alſo 'in others of us; likewiſe in Paul himſelf, and in 'the other Apoſtles; being fully perſwaded that 'all theſe ran not in vain, but proceeded in Faith 'and Righteouſneſs; and that they are in that 'place due to them from the Lord, together with 'whom they ſuffer'd. For they loved not this 'preſent World, but him who died for us, and 'was by God raiſed for us again." And a little after he adds; 'Both you and Ignatius wrote to 'me, that if any one went into Syria, he ſhould 'carry your Letters thither: Which I will do if 'I can get a fit opportuity; either I my ſelf, or 'ſome other, whom I will ſend as a Meſſenger 'on purpoſe for you. Thoſe Epiſtles of Ignatius 'ſent by him to us, and all the other we had 'here with us, we have ſent to you, according 'as you enjoyn'd us; they are made up with this 'Letter; from which Epiſtles you may profit ve-'ry much; for they contain Faith, Patience, 'and whatever is conducible to our Edification 'in the Lord." And thus much concerning Ignatius: After whom ſucceded Heros in the Biſhoprick of Antioch.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Concerning thoſe Preachers of the Goſpel who at that time were eminent.

AMong thoſe who were illuſtrious in thoſe times Quadratus was one, who, as fame ſays, flouriſhed at the ſame time with the Daughters of Philip, in the gift of Prophecy. Many others alſo beſides theſe were famous at that time, having obtain'd the firſt place among the Succeſſors of the Apoſtles: Who, becauſe they were the (a) eminent Diſciples of ſuch Men, built up thoſe Churches, the Foundations whereof were every-where laid by the Apoſtles; promoting greatly the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and ſcattering the ſalutary Seed of the Kingdom of Heaven at large over the whole World. For many of the then Diſciples, whoſe Souls were inflamed by the Divine Word with a more ardent deſire of Philoſophy, firſt fulfilled our Saviour's Commandment, by diſtributing their Subſtance to thoſe that were neceſſitous; then after that travelling abroad, they perform'd the work of Evangeliſts to thoſe who as yet had not heard the word of Faith; being very ambitious to preach Chriſt, and to deliver the Books of the Divine Goſpels. And theſe Perſons, having only laid the foundation of Faith in remote and barbarous places, and conſtituted other Paſtors, committed to them the culture of thoſe they had perfectly introduc'd to the Faith, departed again to other Regions and Nations, accompanied with the Grace and Cooperation of God. For the Divine Spirit as yet wrought many wonderful works by them; inſomuch that at the firſt hearing, innumerable multitudes of men did with moſt ready minds altogether admit of and engage themſelves in the worſhip of that God who is the Maker of all things. But it being impoſſible for us to recount by name all thoſe who in the firſt Succeſſion of the Apoſtles were Paſtors or Evangeliſts in the Churches throughout the world, we will here commit to writing the mention of their names only, whoſe writings, containing the Apoſtolical Doctrine they delivered, are to this day extant amongſt us. Trajan.

(a) In our MSS. Maz Med. Fuk. and Sir Henry Savil's, it is written, διαπρεπεῖς μαθηταί, i. e. eminent, or excellent Diſciples. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Concerning the Epiſtle of Clemens, and thoſe other Writings, which are falſly attributed to him.

AS for example, the Epiſtles of Ignatius, which we have reckoned up, and that of Clemens acknowledg'd by all as undoubted, which he wrote in the name of the Roman to the Corinthian Church. Wherein, ſeeing he has inſerted many Sentences taken out of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, and ſometimes had made uſe of the expreſs words of it, it evidently manifeſts that that Work is not new; whence it has ſeem'd agreeable to reaſon to reckon this Epiſtle amongſt the reſt of the Writings of that Apoſtle. For Paul having written to the Hebrews in his own Country-Language, ſome ſay that Luke the Evangeliſt, but others that this Clemens, of whom we ſpeak, tranſlated that Work. Which latter ſeems the trueſt Opinion, becauſe both the Stile both of Clemens's Epiſtle, and alſo of that to the Hebrews appears to be very like; and the Senſe and Expreſſions in both the Works are not much different. You muſt alſo know that there is a ſecond Epiſtle, which is ſaid to be Clemens's: But we know for certain that this is not ſo generally acknowledg'd, nor approved of as the former, becauſe we are ſure the Antients have not quoted any Authorities out of it. Further alſo, ſome have of late produced other voluminous and large Works, as if they were his, containing the (a) Dialogues of Peter and (b) Apion; (c) of whsch there is not the leaſt mention extant amongſt the Antients; neither does there appear in them the (d) pure Form of Apoſtolical ſound Doctrine. Now therefore 'tis apparent which are the genuine and undoubted Writings of Clemens: we have alſo ſpoken ſufficiently concerning the Works of Ignatius and Polycarp.

(a) In the 10th Book Recognit. of Clemens Romanus there is mention of Appion, who is ſaid to have come to Antioch with Anubion about the ſame time that the Apoſtle Peter came thither. But there is nothing ſaid there of Peter's diſpute with Appion. What ſhall we ſay then? That the Book of Clemens which contains Peter's diſpute with Appion is different from his Books Recognit.? To me indeed they ſeem not to be two Books. For if there had been two Books of Clemens's, the one Recognit. the other containing the diſpute of Peter with Appion, why ſhould Euſebius mention one only, and omit the other; There was therefore but one Book of Clemens's, entitled πράξεις, or περίοδοι Πέτρου. But 'twas divided into two parts; the former mentioned Matidia and Fauſtinianus to be acknowledged of their Children; in the ſecond part was contained the Dialogues of Peter and Appion. Indeed Rufinus, who tranſlated that Book of Clemens's into Latin, does teſtifie, in his Epiſtle to Gaudentius the Biſhop, that there were two parts of this Book in the Greek; in the one of which ſome things occurred which the other had not: He writes alſo, that on ſet purpoſe he omitted ſome things, becauſe they diſagreed from ſound Doctrine. Valeſ.

(b) This name is written with a double p, in all our MSS. but that of Mr. Fukett, where 'tis writ with a ſingle p, as it is in Joſephus and others. Photius, in Biblioth. chap. 112. agrees with our Copies; and and Clemens also in B. 10. Recognit. where he says that Appion Pliſtonicenſis came to Antioch with Anubion. Lastly Agellius, in his 6 B. says Appiõn Græcus homo qui Pliſtonices eſt appellatus. Undoubtedly Appion is a Roman name, wrested into a Greek form, as is μαρκίων, κοσπατίων, and the like. Appion was a common name amongst the Egyptians derived from Apis, whom they worshipped; as, Serapion, Anubion, and the like. Ptolemæus King of the Cyrenæ was called Apion. Wherefore seeing this Grammarian the Son of Pliſtonices was an Egyptian, it seems that he should be called Apion, rather than Appion. For Appion that was Consul in Justinian's time, the Latin Annals calls Appion, but the Chronicon Alexandrinum calls him Apion. Valeſ.

(c) But Origen, in his 3d Book Explanat. on Geneſis, makes mention of these Books of Clemens's; and quotes a passage out of them, which is still extant in the Books of Clemens's Recognit. This quotation of Origen's is in the 22 chap. Philocal. (pag. 81. Edit. Cambr. 1658.) and in the common Editions of that piece the place is said to be taken out of his B. 2. against Celsus; but in the Books of Origen against Celsus now extant, it is not to be found. This quotation out of Clemens is indeed in his 3d B. Explanat. on Geneſis. ——But I have observed that Origen does often quote Books, whose Authority is unknown; wherein he does, like the Bee, gather Honey from venomous Flowers. Valeſ.

(d) Photius testifies the same, chap. 112. Biblioth. and before him, Rufinus in his Epistle to Gaudentius the Bishop, to wit, that in those Books Recognit. of Clemens's there are some things said concerning the Son of God, which disagree from the true rule of Faith, and make for the opinion of the Arrians. Epiphanius, in Hæreſ. Ebionæorum chap. 15. does expressly affirm, that those Books of Clemens Romanus, entitled ὡς ὑπὸ πέτρου, were corrupted and falsified by the Ebionites. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Concerning the Book of Papias.

THE Books of Papias now extant, are five in number, which he entitled, An Explication of the Oracles of the Lord. Irenæus mentions no more than these five to have been written by him, saying thus; 'And these things Papias, the Auditor 'of John, the Companion of Polycarp, one of the 'Ancients, attests in writing, in the fourth of 'his Books; for he compiled five." Thus far Irenæus. But Papias, in his Preface to his Books, does not evidence himself to have been a Beholder or an Auditor of the Holy Apostles, but only, that he received the Matters of Faith from those who were well-known to them; which he declares in these words: 'But it shall not be tedious to 'me, to (a) set down in order, together with my Interpretations, those things 'which I have well learn'd 'from the Elders, and faithfully remembred, the truth 'whereof will be confirm'd 'by me. For I delighted not 'in those who speak much, 'as most do, but in those 'that teach the truth: Nor 'in those who recite strange and unusual Precepts; but in such as faithfully rehearse the Commandments given by the Lord, and which proceed from the Truth. Now if at any time I met 'with any one that had conversed with the Elders, I made a diligent enquiry after their sayings, what Andrew, or what Peter said; or what 'Philip, or Thomas, or James, or John, or Matthew, or any other of the Lord's Disciples, were 'wont to say; and what Aristion, and John the 'Elder (the Disciples of our Lord) utter'd. For 'I thought that those things contain'd in Books 'could not profit me so much, as what I heard from 'the Mouths of Men yet surviving." In which words 'tis very observable that he recounts the name of John twice; the former of whom he reckons among Peter, James, Matthew, and the rest of the Apostles; manifestly shewing thereby that he speaks of John the Evangelist: But, making a distinction in his words, he places the other John with those who are not of the number of the Apostles; putting Aristion before him; and expressly calls him The Elder. So that hereby is shown the truth of their Relation, who have said that there were two in Asia who had that same name; and that there are two Sepulchres at Ephesus, and each of them now called the Sepulchre of John. Now I judg'd it very requisite to make this observation. For 'tis likely that the second, (unless any one would rather have it to be the first) saw that Revelation which goes under the name of John. Further, this Papias, whom we speak of, professes he received the sayings of the Apostles from those who had been conversant with them; and was, as he says, the Hearer of Aristion and John the Elder. Indeed he mentions them often by name, and has set down in his Works those Traditions he receiv'd from them. And thus much has been said by us, not unprofitably, as we judge. It is also worth our adding to the fore-quoted words of Papias, other Relations of the same Authors, wherein he gives an account of some Miracles, and other Passages, which he received by tradition. Indeed, that Philip the Apostle together with his Daughters lived at Hierapolis, has been manifested by what we said * before. Now we are to shew, that Papias, who liv'd at the same time, mentions his receiving a wonderful Narration from the Daughters of Philip. For he relates, that in his time a dead was Man raised to life again: And further, that there came to pass another Miracle about Justus who was sirnamed (b) Barsabas, how that he drank deadly Poison, and by the Grace of the Lord sustain'd no harm. That this Justus, after our Saviour's Ascension, was together with Matthias set forth by the Holy Apostles, and that they pray'd that one of them might in stead of the Traytor Judas be allotted to fill up their number; the Book of the Acts of the Apostles doth after this manner relate — And they appointed two, Joseph called Barsabas, who was sirnamed Justus, and Matthias. And they pray'd and said. Moreover the same Writer has set down some other things which came to him barely by word of mouth, to wit, certain strange Parables of our Saviour's, and Sermons of his, and some other more fabulous Relations: Among which he says there shall be a thousand years after the Resurrection from the Dead, wherein the Kingdom of Christ shall be corporally set up here on earth: And, I judge, he had this opinion from his misapprehending the Apostolical Discourses, in that he did not see through those things they spake mystically by way of similitude. For he seems to have been a man of a very narrow understanding, as it may be conjectur'd from his Books. Yet he gave occasion to very many Ecclesiastical Persons after him to be of the same erroneous Opinion with him; who had a regard for the Antiquity of the Man, as for example, to Irenæus, and to every one also who has declared himself to be of the same Opinion. He relates also in his Books other Interpretations of the aforesaid Aristion's, of the sayings of the Lord; and the Traditions of John the Elder. To which we do refer the studious Readers, and judge it requisite now only to adjoyn to his fore-mentioned words a Passage he relates concerning Mark the Evangelist, in these words; 'This also the Elder said; Mark, being the (c) Interpreter of

(a) In the King's MS. it is συνκαλαξαι ταῖς ἑρμηνείαις, agreeable to our Translation. Rufinus reads this place so, as appears by his Translation. For he renders it thus, Non pigebit autem nos tibi omnia quæ quondam à Presbyteris didicimus, & benè retinemus, recordantes exponere cum interpretationibus noſtris. But in the other MSS. Maz. Med. Fuk. and Nicephorus, it is, συνλαξαι. Valeſ.

Acts 1. 23, 24.

(c) Jerom, in Catalogo, calls Mark the interpreter of Peter from this place of Papias, as I judge. Hence 'tis, that many of the Greeks write, that the Gospel of Mark was dictated by Peter. So Athanasius in his Treatise, de Libris Sacræ Scripturæ. Which, how it's to be understood, Papias declares in this place. For it is not to be supposed that Mark wrote his Gospel from the mouth of Peter dictating to him; but, when he heard Peter Preaching the Word of God to the Jews in Hebrew, Mark carefully digested those things in the Greek Language, which concerned Christ. Valeſ.

Trajan. ‘ Peter, accurately wrote whatever he remembred; ‘ but yet not in that order, wherein Chriſt either ‘ ſpake, or did them: For he was neither an ‘ Hearer of the Lord's, nor yet his Follower; ‘ but, as I ſaid, he was afterwards converſant ‘ with Peter, who preach'd the Doctrine of the ‘ Goſpel profitably to thoſe that heard him, but ‘ not ſo as if he would compoſe an Hiſtory of the ‘ Lord's Sayings. Wherefore Mark committed ‘ nothing of error, in that he wrote ſome things ‘ ſo as he had remembred them. For he made ‘ this one thing his chiefeſt aim, to wit, to omit ‘ none of thoſe things he had heard, nor yet to ‘ deliver any thing that was falſe therein.” Thus much Papias relates concerning Mark. Concerning Matthew, he ſays this; Moreover Matthew wrote his Divine Oracles in the Hebrew tongue, and every one interpreted them, as they were able. This Papias alſo has quoted Authorities taken out of the Firſt Epiſtle of John, and likewiſe out of the former Epiſtle of Peter. He has ſet down alſo another Relation about a Woman who was accuſed of many Crimes before the Lord; which Relation is contain'd in the Goſpel according to the Hebrews. And thus much we have uſefully and diligently obſerved, and added to thoſe things which before he had ſet down. Trajan.

THE FOURTH BOOK Of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory OF EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS.

CHAP. I.

Who were the Biſhops of the Roman and Alexandrian Churches in the Reign of Trajan.

ABOUT the (a) twelfth Year of Trajan's Empire, Cerdo the Biſhop of the Alexandrian Church, * whom we a little before mentioned, departed this life; and Primus, the fourth from the Apoſtles, was elected to the publick charge of that Church. At the ſame time alſo, Evareſtus having finiſh'd his eighth Year, Alexander undertook the Biſhoprick of Rome, who was the fifth in ſucceſſion from Peter and Paul.

(a) In the Chronicon of Euſebius, the beginning of Primus his being Biſhop of Alexandria falls upon the 10th year of Trajan, Alſo the beginning of Alexander's being made Biſhop of Rome is placed on the 10th year of Trajan. But in the digeſting of the years of the Biſhops both of Rome, and alſo of other Cities, I have obſerved that Euſebius's Chronicon does often diſſent from his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. Whether it be the fault of the Tranſcribers, or of Jerom the Tranſlator, or of Euſebius himſelf, I cannot poſitively affirm: For in ſo great a diverſity it's difficult to aſſign the cauſe of the miſtake. But, ſeeing that the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory was written by Euſebius after his Chronicon, whereſoever ſuch a diſagreement occurs, that ſeems rather to be followed, which is aſſerted in the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. CHAP. II.

What the Jews ſuffer'd in this Emperor's Time.

MOreover, the Doctrine and Church of our Saviour flouriſhing daily, increaſed more and more: But the Calamities of the Jews were augmented by continual Miſchiefs following one upon another. For, the Emperor entring now upon the eighteenth Year of his Reign, there aroſe again a Commotion of the Jews, which deſtroy'd a very great number of them. For both at Alexandria, and over, all the reſt of Egypt; and moreover throughout Cyrene, they being ſtirr'd up as it were by ſome violent and contentious Spirit, raiſed Sedition againſt the (a) Greeks and Gentiles with whom they dwelt. And they increaſing the Faction very much, on the enſuing Year enkindled a great War; Lupus was at that time Governour of all Egypt. Moreover it hapned that in the firſt encounter they were too hard for the Greeks; who flying to Alexandria, took the Jews that were in the City alive, and ſlew them. But thoſe Jews who inhabited Cyrene, being fruſtrated of aſſiſtance in the War from them, perſiſted to infeſt and deſtroy the Country of Egypt and all its (b) Prefectures, by Pillages and Robberies, one Lucuas being their Leader: Againſt whom the Emperor ſent Marcius Turbo with Horſe and Foot, and alſo with Naval Forces: He in many Engagements, having made the War againſt them long and tedious, deſtroy'd many Myriads of Jews, not only of thoſe of Cyrene, but alſo of thoſe of Egypt, who flockt together to give aſſiſtance to their King Lucuas. But the Emperor ſuſpecting that thoſe Jews in Meſopotamia would alſo ſet upon the Inhabitants there, commanded (c) Lucius Quietus to clear that Province of them: who engaging with them, deſtroy'd a very great number of them that dwelt there: for which ſucceſsful piece of ſervice he was appointed Deputy of Judea by the Emperor. And thus much thoſe Heathens, who committed to writing the Tranſactions of thoſe times, do almoſt in the very ſame words relate.

(a) The Jews who dwelt in the Cities & Towns with the Grecians and Gentiles, and had equal freedom thereof with them, did frequently diſagree with them; tumults being uſually raiſed by reaſon of their different Religions. For the Grecians ſcorned that the Jews ſhould be fellow-citizens with them and enjoy the ſame priviledges they did; on the other hand, the Jews would not live in a meaner condition, than the reſt of the Citizens did. Hence aroſe frequent Contentions, both in Egypt, and alſo in Syria, as Philo and Joſephus do atteſt. Therefore in our Tranſlation we have inſerted both [Grecians and Gentiles] becauſe one word ſeemed not to ſuffice. For the Jews did not only aſſault the Grecians, but the Natives alſo of Egypt and Lybia: Nor again, the Gentiles only, but the Chriſtians likewiſe, of whom there was then no ſmall number in Egypt and Cyrene. Valeſ.

(b) This deſtroying of all Egypt and Lybia by the Jews, beſides Dion, Oroſius mentions, in his 7 B. Valeſ.

(c) This

(c) This Man was a Moor, not of the Province of Mauritania, but of the barbarous Moors, who were Allies of the Roman Empire. At first he commanded a Troop of Moors; not long after he was condemned for his lewdness, and in disgrace cashiered. But afterwards in the Dacick War, when the Army stood in need of the assistance of the Moors, he did a brave piece of Service. Upon which account being rewarded and honoured, he did more and braver exploits in the second Dacick War. At length, in the Parthian War, which Trajan waged against the Parthians, he was so valiant and fortunate, that he was chosen into the Prætorian Order, bore a Consulship, and Governed the Province of Palestine, which Promotion first made him to be envied, then hated, and at last ruined him. Thus much Dion Cassius relates, in Excerpt. Vales.

CHAP. III.

Who, in the Time of Adrian, wrote Apologies in defence of the Faith.

Adrian. WHen Trajan had held the Empire twenty years compleat, excepting six months, Ælius Adrianus succeeded in the Government: To whom Quadratus dedicated and presented a Book, wherein he had comprized an Apology for our Religion; because certain malicious Men endeavour'd to molest the Christians. This Work is still extant amongst many of the Brethren, and we also have it. From which Book may be seen perspicuous evidences of the Man's Understanding, and of his truly (a) Apostolical Faith and sound Doctrine. The same Writer makes his own Antiquity sufficiently evident, by what he relates in these very words: 'The Works of our 'Saviour were always conspicuous, for they were 'true. Those that were healed, such as were 'raised from the dead, did not only appear after 'they were healed, and raised; but also were afwards seen of all; and that not only whilst our 'Saviour was conversant upon earth, but also after he was gone they continued alive a great 'while; insomuch that some of them survived 'even to our Times." Such a person indeed was Quadratus. Aristides also, a faithful Man of that Religion profess'd by us, left in like manner, as Quadratus did, an Apology for the Faith, dedicated to Adrian. And this Man's Book is, to this day, preserved by many persons.

(a) The Phrase in the original is [ἀποστολικῆς ὀρθοτομίας, i.e. of his Apostolical right division. This word occurs (2 Tim. 2. 15.) In the Old Testament the Greek Translators use of the word belongs to a way or path to go in, which was wont to be cut out that it might be fitter for use; thence the Latin Phrase, viam secare, i.e. to cut a way, that is, to go before and direct any in their journey. And with the word [ὀρθὸς, right] joined with it, it is to go before one, and direct him in the straight way to such a place. Hence the Syriack Version of the New Testament renders this Phrase in Timothy [ὀρθοτομεῖν τὸν λόγον,] recte prædicare sermonem, i.e. rightly to preach the word. Fuller's Miscellan. B. 3. chap. 16.

CHAP. IV.

Who were ennobled with the Title of Bishops over the Roman and Alexandrian Churches in this Emperor's Time.

IN the third year of Adrian's Empire, Alexander the Bishop of Rome died, having compleated the tenth year of his Administration. Xystus was Successor to him: and about that time, Primus dying in the twelfth year of his Presidency over the Alexandrian Church, Justus succeeded him.

CHAP. V.

Who were Bishops of Jerusalem from our Saviour, even to these Times.

MOreover, the space of time which the Bishops of Jerusalem spent in their Presidency over that See, I could in no wise find preserved in writing. For, as report says, they were very short-lived: But thus much I have been informed of from old Records, that unto the Siege of the Jews in Adrian's Time, there were in number fifteen Successions of Bishops there: All whom they say, were by birth Hebrews, who had sincerely embraced the knowledge of Christ; insomuch that by those, who were then able to give judgment as to such matters, they were approved to be worthy of the Episcopal Office. For that whole Church at Jerusalem was made up of believing Jews, who had continued stedfast in the Faith from the Apostles Times even to the then Siege; wherein the Jews, revolting again from the Romans, were vanquished and destroyed by no small Wars. The Bishops therefore that were of the Circumcision then ceasing, it will be now requisite to give a Catalogue of them in their Order from first to last. The first therefore was James, called the Brother of the Lord; after him the second was Simeon; the third Justus; the fourth Zaccheus; the fifth Tobias; the sixth Benjamin; the seventh John; the eighth Matthias; the ninth Philip; the tenth Seneca; the eleventh Justus; the twelfth Levi; the thirteenth Ephres; the fourteenth (a) Joseph; the fifteenth and last Judas: And thus many were the Bishops of the City of Jerusalem, from the Apostles to this time we are now treating of; all which were of the Circumcision. But now, Adrian being in the twelfth year of his Empire, Telesphorus the seventh from the Apostles, succeeded Xystus, who had compleated the tenth year of his Episcopal Office over the Romans; and within a years space and (b) some months Eumenes, the sixth in Order, succeeded in the Presidency over the Alexandrian Church; his immediate Predecessor there having sat eleven years.

Adrian.

(a) Eusebius in his Chronicon, calls him Joses. So Joseph the Brother of the Lord, of whom Matthew and Mark speak in their Gospel, is by Jerom and others called Joses.

Ephres also is, by Nicephorus, called Ephrem. Vales.

CHAP. VI.

The last Siege of the Jews in the Time of Adrian.

BUT when the Rebellion of the Jews again increased exceedingly, * Rufus the President of Judea, having had Auxiliary Forces sent him from the Emperor, marched out against them; and, making use of their Madness and Desperation as an occasion of his sparing none, he slew Myriads together both of Men, Women and Children; and by the Law of War reduced their Country to servitude and subjection to the Romans. The Leader of the Jews at that time was by name Barchochebas, a name indeed that signifies a Star, but otherwise he was a Man that was a Murderer and a Robber; who by reason of his name did monstrously pretend to his Followers, being (a) Slaves, that he was a Star come down from Heaven to enlighten them who were now oppressed with servitude. But the War growing sharp in the eighteenth year of Adrian's Empire at the City (b) Betthera, which was the best fortified place, and not far distant from Jerusalem; and the Siege continuing a long time; the Innovators also having been utterly destroy'd by famine and thirst; and the Author of this their Madness undergone condign puniſhment; from that time that whole Nation was (c) altogether interdicted to enter into the Country about Jeruſalem; the Law, Edict and Sanctions of Adrian having commanded them, that they ſhould not ſo much as from afar off behold their Paternal Soil. Ariſton of (d) Pella relates this. Thus the City being made deſtitute of the Jewiſh Nation, and wholly cleared of its old Inhabitants, was poſſeſs'd by Foreigners that dwelt there, and (e) afterwards made a Roman City; and, changing its name, was, in honour of the Emperor Ælius Adrianus, called Ælia. And when there was a Church there gather'd of the Nations that dwelt in it, Mark was the firſt who, after the Biſhops of the Circumciſion, undertook the publick Adminiſtration of Matters there.

(c) The ſame is atteſted by Tertullian, Apologet. c. 16. by Celſus in the latter end of B. 8. of Origen againſt him; and by Gregor. Naz. in his 12 Orat. Only on one day (that whereon Jeruſalem was taken and deſtroyed by the Romans) the Jews out of all Nations were wont to meet in Paleſtine, and having paid a ſum of Money to the Soldiers, they entred into that part of the City where Solomon's Temple heretofore ſtood; and there they bewailed the deſtruction of the City and Temple. See Scaliger in Animadverſ. Euſeb. p. 198. Valeſ.

(d) That was a City of Syria, which, after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus, was the Seat of the Biſhops of Jeruſalem; as Euſebius teſtifies. This Ariſton of Pella wrote a Book entitled a Diſpute of Jaſon and Papiſcus; this Book Origen makes mention of in his 4 B. againſt Celſus: But the Preface of it is only now extant amongſt the Works of Cyprian. Valeſ.

(e) Euſebius is here doubly miſtaken; both in that he ſays Jeruſalem was wholly deſtroyed in Adrian's time; and alſo becauſe he thought that Ælia Capitolina was built by the ſame Adrian after the Siege of Betthera. As to the firſt; it's evident from Joſephus, that Jeruſalem was totally deſtroyed by Titus, in ſo much that it was ploughed. As to the ſecond, Ælia was ſo far from being built by Adrian after this Victory obtained over the Jews, that this War was begun by the Jews upon that very account. For when the Jews ſaw the Soil of their City occupied by Strangers; and perceived that in that very place where the Temple had been, Jupiter Capitolinus was worſhipped and ſacrificed to; being not able to endure that, they took Arms, and began this War which Euſebius here relates. Which was begun in the 16 year of Adrian, and ended the 18 of his Empire. But Ælia Capitolina was built long before, to wit, in the ſecond year of Adrian: From whoſe times to thoſe of Conſtantine the Great it was always called Ælia. But from the time of Conſtantine the Great it recovered again the name of Jeruſalem, both upon the account of the honour of that name, and alſo becauſe of its Prerogative, being the firſt Epiſcopal Seat. Valeſ.

CHAP. VII.

Who at that time were the Authors of falſe Doctrine.

NOW, the Churches throughout the whole World ſhining like moſt bright Stars, and the Faith in our Saviour and Lord Jeſus Chriſt flouriſhing among all Mankind, the Devil that Hater of Good, as being always the Enemy of Truth, and moſt malicious Impugner of Man's Salvation, uſing all his Arts and Stratagems againſt the Church, at firſt arm'd himſelf againſt it with outward Perſecutions: But then afterwards being excluded from them, he made his aſſaults by other methods, making uſe of evil Men and Impoſtors, as being the pernicious Inſtruments for deſtroying of Souls, and Miniſters of Perdition; deviſing all ways, whereby theſe Impoſtors and Deceivers, cloathing themſelves with the title of our Religion, might both lead into the Pit of Deſtruction, thoſe of the Faithful whom they had enticed to themſelves, and alſo divert ſuch as were unskilful in the Faith from the way that leads to the comfortable Word, by ſuch means as they attempted to put in practice. From that Menander therefore, whom we a little * before manifeſted to have been the Succeſſor of Simon, there was hatch'd a Serpentine Breed, double-mouth'd as it were, and double-headed, which conſtituted the Founders of two different and diſagreeing Hereſies; Saturninus, by birth an Antiochian, and Baſilides, an Alexandrian; whereof the former in Syria, the other in Egypt, ſet up Schools of moſt deteſtable Hereſies. Moreover, Irenæus makes it manifeſt that Saturninus feign'd moſtly the ſame things that Menander did; but that Baſilides under a pretext of more myſtical matters, moſt mightily enlarged his Inventions, forming monſtrous and fabulous Fictions for the making up of his impious Hereſie. There being many Eccleſiaſtical Men therefore, who at that time were Defenders of the Truth, and eloquent Maintainers of the Apoſtolical and Eccleſiaſtical Doctrine, ſome of them forthwith comprized in writing explanatory accounts of the fore-manifeſted Hereſies, which they left as Cautions and Preventions to Poſterity: of which there is come to our hands a moſt ſtrenuous Confutation of Baſilides, of Agrippa Caſtor's, a moſt eminent Writer in thoſe times; wherein he diſcovers the horrible impoſture of the Man: Diſcloſing therefore his Secrets, he ſays that he made four and twenty Books upon the (a) Goſpel, and that he counterfeited for himſelf Prophets named by him (b) Barcabbas and Barcoph, and ſome (c) others who never were in being; and that he gave them barbarous names to aſtoniſh thoſe who were admirers of ſuch things; and that he taught that it was a thing indifferent to taſte of Meats offer'd to Idols, and that in times of Perſecutions thoſe did not imprudently who abjured the Faith: and that, after the manner of the Pythagoreans, he enjoyn'd a five years ſilence to his Followers: the foreſaid Author having recounted theſe things and others like them concerning this Baſilides, hath moſt diligently detected and brought to light the error of the forementioned Hereſie. But Irenæus writeth alſo, that Carpocrates, the Father of another Hereſie termed the Gnoſtick Hereſie, was Cotemporary with theſe. Theſe Gnoſticks thought that thoſe magical Deluſions of Simon's were not to be expoſed covertly as he did, but publickly and openly; boaſting of amorous Potions accurately and curiouſly made by them, and of certain Spirits that were cauſes of Dreams, and (d) Familiars, and of certain other ſuch-like Deluſions, as if theſe were the greateſt and only excellent things. And agreeable hereunto they taught, that thoſe who would arrive to perfection in their Myſteries, or rather deteſtable Wickedneſſes, muſt act all things that were moſt filthy and unclean; being no other ways able to avoid the Rulers of the World (as they call them) unleſs they diſtributed to all of them their dues by moſt filthy and deteſtable acts of obſcenity. The Devil therefore who delights in miſchief, making uſe of theſe Inſtruments, it came to paſs that he both miſerably enſlaved ſuch as were ſeduc'd by them, and ſo led them into deſtruction; and alſo gave thoſe Nations that were unbelievers a great occaſion of abundantly ſlandring the Divine Doctrine; a report ariſing from them being diffuſed to the reproachful detraction of the whole Chriſtian Religion. Upon this account therefore chiefly it happened that an impious and moſt abſurd ſuſpicion concerniug us was ſpread abroad amongſt thoſe who then

Adrian.

(a) Euſebius ſays not upon what Goſpel Baſilides wrote theſe Books, perhaps Baſilides made theſe Books upon his own Goſpel; for he wrote one, and ſet his own name to it, and called it [the Goſpel according to Baſilides] as Origen atteſts in his 1 Homil. on Luke; and Jerom in his Preface to St. Matthew. Theſe Books were called Baſilides's Exegeticks. Clemens (Lib. 4. Stromat.) quotes ſome places out of the 23d of theſe Books. Valeſ.

(b) Or, Barcabas: Upon theſe Prophets, Barcabbas and Barcoph, Iſodore the Son of Baſilides wrote ſome Books of Expoſitions, as Clemens Alexandr. ſhews, B. 6. Stromat. Valeſ.

(c) Euſebius ſpeaks here of thoſe Prophets whom Baſilides feigned for himſelf. Our Author is right in his ſaying that Baſilides's Hereſie ſprang up in Adrian's Reign. For then the Hereticks began to creep out of their holes: They thought (the Apoſtles being all dead) that they had then an opportune time to divulge their Errors. Valeſ.

(d) So they were called, becauſe they were ſuppoſed to be aſſiſtant to Men; and kept them from Diſeaſes, and unfortunate Accidents. Magicians had ſuch Spirits as theſe at their command, by whoſe help they did miraculous things. Valeſ.

* Book 3. chap. 26.

Adrian. then were Unbelievers; as if we used detestable carnal Copulation with Mothers and Sisters, and fed upon nefarious Meats. But these Crafts of the Devil's did not long succeed with him; the Truth asserted and confirmed itself, and in process of time shone forth most clearly and apparently. For these Devices of the Adversaries, being repelled by their own force, forthwith became extinct; Heresies of a different sort newly design'd and cut out, and succeeding one after the other, the former forthwith melted and fell away, and being dissolved into kinds that were of divers sorts and fashions, were, some one way, some another, destroy'd. But the brightness of the Catholick and only True Church, being always the same, and so continuing stedfast and like itself, was greatly increased and augmented; the Gravity, the Sincerity, the Ingenious Freedom, the Modesty, and Purity of an Holy Conversation and Philosophical Course of Life, shooting forth a splendor over all Nations both Grecians and Barbarians. That reproachful Detraction therefore wherewith our Religion had been overspread, was instantly suppress'd. Wherefore our Doctrine continued to be the only, and the (e) prevailing Opinion among all Men, and was confess'd to be most eminently flourishing upon account of its Gravity, its Prudent Modesty, and its Divine and Wise Precepts; in so much that no one hitherto hath been so audacious, as to charge our Faith with any foul Slander, or any such reproachful Detraction, as those our old Adversaries were formerly ready and willing to make use of. But moreover, in these times the Truth again produced many that were its Defenders, who engaged these impious Heresies, not only with unwritten Arguments, but also with penn'd Demonstrations.

(e) Κρατοῦσα is the term in the original, hence the Christian Religion was by the Heathens call'd κρατοῦσα δόξα, i. e. the prevailing opinion; and the Christians were termed κρατοῦντες by Porphyrius, in his Book *da Oraculor. CHAP. VIII.

What Ecclesiastical Writers there were in those Times.

(a) In my opinion Hegesippus is not rightly placed in the times of Adrian; neither do his words, here quoted by Eusebius, evince so much. It's certain, Hegesippus wrote his Books when Eleutherus was Bishop of Rome, as he himself attests in the 22 chap. of this Book. He was contemporary therefore with Irenæus, who then composed his Elaborate Books against the Heresies. Indeed our Eusebius, retracting as it were his former opinion, does, in the 21, and 22 chap. of this Book, place Hegesippus in the times of Marcus Antoninus. Val.

A Mongst which flourish'd (a) Hegesippus, out of whom we have quoted many words in our foregoing Books, when we delivered some Passages of those things done in the Apostles Times from his relation thereof. He therefore having in five Books set forth the certain relation of the Apostolick Doctrine in a most plain Series, evidently shews the time wherein he flourished; writing thus concerning those who at first set up Images ——— For whom they made Monuments and Temples, as until now they do. Of which number is Antinous the Servant of Cæsar Adrianus, in honour of whom there is a Sacred (b) Game instituted, called Antinoium, which is celebrated now in our days. For Adrian also built a City, and named it Antinous, and instituted (c) Prophets. At the same time also Justin, a sincere lover of the true Philosophy, as yet spent his time about, and was studious in, the Writings of the Gentile Philosophers: He in like manner declares this very time, in his Apology to Antoninus, writing thus: We judge it not absurd here to mention Antinous also who lived very lately; whom all men through fear have undertaken to worship as a God, notwithstanding they evidently know who he was, and from whence he had his Original. The same Author, mentioning also the War then waged against the Jews, adds thus much; For in the (d) late Jewish War, Barchochebas, who was the Head of the Jewish Rebellion, gave command that the Christians only should be most cruelly tormented, unless they would deny Jesus Christ, and blaspheme. But moreover, declaring in the same Book, his own Conversion from the Gentile Philosophy to the Worship of the True God, that it was not done by him rashly and unadvisedly, but with judgment and consideration, he writes thus: 'I also my-'self, being much addicted to, and affected with 'the Platonick Philosophy, hearing the Christi-'ans calumniated, and seeing them undaunted at 'Death, and at whatever else is accounted ter-'rible, thought it impossible that such Men 'should live wickedly and be given to Voluptu-'ousness. For, what sensual or intemperate per-'son, and one who accounts Human Flesh good 'food, could willingly embrace death, which 'would deprive him of his desires? and would not 'rather use his utmost endeavour to live continu-'ally in this life, and conceal himself from the 'Magistrates? much less would he voluntarily 'offer himself to be put to death." Moreover, the same Author relates, that Adrian (having received Letters from that most Eminent Governour (e) Serenius Granianus concerning the Christians, setting forth how unjust it was they should be slain uncondemn'd, meerly to gratifie the clamours of the People, when no accusation appear'd against them) wrote an Answer to (f) Minutius Fundanus Proconsul of Asia, wherein he commanded that no one should be put to death without a judiciary Prosecution, and an Accusation lawful and allowable. And Justin there produceth the Copy of the Rescript in Latin, the Language wherein it was originally written. But before it he premiseth these words: '(g) And altho' from 'the Letter of the most Excellent and Renowned 'Cæsar Adrianus your Father, we might request 'you would give command, that the judiciary 'Proceedings against us be made according as we 'desire; yet we crave this, not so much because 'it was commanded by Adrian, but, in regard 'we know and understand our Petition to be just: 'And moreover, that you may perceive what we 'say herein to be true, we have inserted the Co-'py of Adrian's Letter;" which is thus. To these words Justin hath annexed the Latin Copy of the Letter; which we, as well as we could, have done into Greek, after this manner.

(b) Which was celebrated every fifth year, at Mantinea in Arcadia, says Pausanias, in Arcad. Vales.

(c) Amongst the Egyptians, the Chief Priest, who was over the other Priests, and distributed to them the Revenue of the Temple, was called a Prophet. For the first Officer of the Temple was the Cantor, then the Horoscopus, after him the Scriba, then the Vestitor; last of all the Propheta took his place, who carried a Water-pot in his bosom. See Epiphan. in 3 B. adverss. Hæres. &c. Concerning these Prophets of Antinous instituted by Adrian there is mention made in an old Greek Inscription, quoted by Casaubon in his Notes on Spartianus. Wherefore it's no wonder that Antinous, deified by Adrian, had his Prophets, seeing he was worshipped chiefly by the Egyptians. Vales.

(d) Ἐν τῷ νῦν γενομένῳ, &c. i. e. in the Jewish war which was not long since. For the Greek word [νῦν] is sometimes us'd in such a sense, as to signifie [nuper] i. e. lately. In which sense Justin uses it, when he speaks of Antinous in this chap. Vales.

(e) Or, Serennius; he was Proconsul of Asia, and Predecessor to Minutius Fundanus in that Government. Vales.

(f) It may be deservedly questioned, why Adrian answer'd not Granianus, from whom he received these Letters, but wrote to Minutius Fundanus his Successor: The reason, as I suppose, might be this; either Granianus died soon after he wrote to Adrian; or else he left that Government; For the Proconsuls were annual. Vales.

Adrian. ‘ſor. Indeed, this buſineſs, as I judge, is not ‘to be paſs'd by undiſcuſs'd; leſt both the Chri‘ſtians be moleſted, and alſo an occaſion of do‘ing miſchief given to Sycophants. Wherefore, ‘if the Men of your Province can by a due way ‘of complaint openly charge the Chriſtians with ‘any accuſation, and ſo do it, as that they ap‘pear and anſwer it before the Seat of Judica‘ture; let them make it their buſineſs only to ‘take ſuch a courſe as this againſt them; but let ‘them not uſe (a) tumultuous outcries and cla‘mours. For 'tis moſt requiſite, if any perſon pre‘fers a complaint, that you ſhould have the cog‘nizance of the matter. If therefore any one ‘does accuſe them, and make out that they do a‘ny thing contrary to the Laws, do you give ‘ſentence according to the nature of the offence. ‘But if it be certain, that any does frame an ac‘cuſation meerly out of a malicious detraction, ‘do you determine according to the heinouſneſs ‘of the crime, and take care that due puniſhment ‘be inflicted on him. And thus much concer‘ning the Reſcript of Adrian.

(a) He means the out-cries, which the People were wont to make in the Theatres, The Chriſtians to the Lyons! as Tertullian atteſts. Sometimes it ſo happened that the Proconſuls and Governours were forc'd to yield to theſe tumultuous Clamours, tho' unwilling to it of themſelves. Wherefore the Emperor Adrian admoniſheth Fundanus the Proconſul not to ſuffer himſelf to be induced by ſuch requeſts to the perſecution and ſlaughter of the Chriſtians. It was an old cuſtom in the Roman Empire, for the populace both in the City and in the Provinces, as oft as they met at the publick Shews, to ask of the Emperor, or Governour what they had a mind to, with loud outcries all at once. Inſtances hereof are frequent in the Writers of the Roman Hiſtory. Valeſ.

Who in the Reign of Antoninus were Biſhops of the Roman and Alexandrian Sees.

Antoninus Pius. BUT, Adrian having paid the dues of nature after he had reigned one and twenty years, Antoninus, ſirnamed Pius, ſucceeded in the Roman Empire. In whoſe firſt year Teleſphorus departing this life in the eleventh year of his Preſidency, Hyginus aſſumed the Epiſcopal Government of the Roman Church. Moreover, Irenæus relates that Teleſphorus ended his life with a glorious Martyrdom; manifeſting in the ſame place, that in the times of the foreſaid Hyginus Biſhop of the Romans, flouriſh'd at Rome both Valentinus the Introducer of his own Hereſie, and alſo Cerdo the Founder of the Error of the Marcionites; his words are theſe.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning thoſe who were Arch-Hereticks in thoſe Times.

‘FOR Valentinus came to Rome when Hyginus ‘was Biſhop there: but he flouriſh'd in the ‘Times of Pius, and continued to thoſe of Ani‘cetus. Cerdo alſo, who was Maſter to Marcion, ‘flouriſh'd in the Times of Hyginus, who was the ‘(a) ninth Biſhop; he went into the Church, and ‘openly confeſſing his error, ſo continued at ‘Rome; ſometimes teaching privately, other ‘while again acknowledging his error; but be‘ing now and then reprehended for his impious ‘Doctrine, he (b) withdrew himſelf from the Aſ‘ſembly of the Brethren. Thus far Irenæus, in his Third Book againſt Hereſies. Moreover, in his Firſt Book he again ſays this concerning Cerdo: ‘But ‘one Cerdo, deriving the original of his Errors ‘from the Tenets of Simon, came to Rome in the ‘times of Hyginus (who was the ninth that in the ‘Epiſcopal Succeſſion from the Apoſtles had that ‘See) and taught, that that God, who was ‘preach'd under the Law, and by the Prophets, ‘is not the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: for ‘the one is known, the other unknown; the one ‘is juſt, the other good. Marcion of Pontus, an ‘impudent Blaſphemer, ſucceeding him, did ‘mightily propagate that Opinion.” But the ſame Irenæus, having ſounded the bottom of that immenſe depth of matter, full of various errors, which Valentinus had put together, does fully diſcover the ſecret and occult Deceit and Wickedneſs, that like a Serpent lurking in its hole, lies hid within him. Moreover, he ſays, there was at the ſame time another perſon (by name Mark) who was moſt expert at Magical Deluſions; and further he declares their prophane Rites of Initiation, and their moſt deteſtable Myſteries in theſe very words: ‘For ſome of them prepare a ‘Nuptial-Bed, and perform a ſecret Ceremony ‘by pronouncing ſome words over ſuch as are to ‘be initiated; and a Marriage, they ſay, thus ‘made by them, is ſpiritual, and conformable to ‘the Celeſtial Nuptials: But others of them bring ‘[thoſe that are to be initiated] to the Water, and ‘dipping them, uſe this form of words, In the ‘name of the unknown Father of all, In the ‘Truth the Mother of all, In Him who deſcen‘ded upon Jeſus. Another ſort of them pronounce ‘Hebrew names, to put thoſe that are to be initia‘ted into the greater Conſternation.” But Hyginus dying, (c) after he had been Biſhop four years, Pius undertook the Government of the Roman Church. Moreover, at Alexandria Mark was choſen Paſtor, Eumenes having ſat there thirteen years compleat. Which Mark dying after he had preſided there ten years, Celadion aſſumed the Government of the Alexandrian Church: And at Rome, Pius departing this life in the fifteenth year of his Preſidency, Anicetus was preferred to that See. In whoſe time Hegeſippus relates that he himſelf came to Rome, and continued there until Eleutherus was made Biſhop. But at that time flouriſh'd Juſtin, and was ſingularly eminent, one that in a Philoſophical habit was an Aſſertor of the Divine Word, and earneſtly contended for the Faith in his Writings: Who, in the (d) Book he wrote againſt Marcion, mentions the Man to be alive at that time when he compiled that Work. His words are theſe: ‘And one Marcion ‘of Pontus, who now at this ‘time teacheth his Followers, and inſtructs them ‘[to believe] there is another God greater than ‘him that made the World. This Man alſo, aſ‘ſiſted by Devils, hath perſwaded many through‘out the World to ſpeak Blaſphemy, to deny the ‘Maker of the Univerſe (e) to be the Father of ‘Chriſt, and to affirm there is another greater

Antoninus Pius.

(a) These Words of Irenæus are extant in his 3 B. chap. 4. where the old Tranſlator ſeems to have read the eighth: Which reading is moſt agreeable to Irenæus, as appears from the 3 Chapt. of the ſame Book; where he reckoning up the Roman Biſhops, counts Hyginus the 8th from the Apoſtles. But in the 1 B. of Irenæus chap. 28. it's written [the 9th] ſo alſo in Epiphan. in Hæreſ. Cerdon. and in the Epiſtle of Cyprian to Pompeius. Valeſ.

(b) Irenæus does not ſay he was excommunicated; but that he ſeparated himſelf from the Church; whence it appears, that Cerdo condemned himſelf, in his own judgment, and ſo prevented the ſentence of the Church. Val.

(c) Ruſinus ſeems to have read it otherwiſe; for he tranſlates it thus; Quarto autem Epiſcopatûs ſui anno cùm deceſſiſſet Hyginus, &c. i.e. Hyginus, dying in the fourth year of his being Biſhop, &c. Valeſ.

(d) Our Euſebius forgot himſelf here, in that he ſays, that theſe following Words of Juſtin's were taken out of his Book againſt Marcion: They are taken out of Juſtin's ſecond Apology, pag. 70. Edit. Pariſ. Valeſ.

(e) The words [to be the Father of Chriſt] are wanting in the common Editions of Juſtin; and they ſeem to be ſuperfluous. Marcion aſſerted, there were two Gods, the one the Creator, by whom this World was made; the other ſuperior to him, who framed the better and more excellent things: This God, he ſaid, we ought to confeſs, and to deny the other. This is the meaning of Juſtin's Words; to whom agrees Epiphan. in Hæreſ. Marcion. Marcion held, that that moſt High God was the Father of Chriſt; and that Chriſt came down from Heaven to reprehend the other God the Maker of this World, whom he called the God of the Jews. Valeſ.

'than he that made it: And all their Followers, 'as we said, are called Christians, after the same 'manner as the name of Philosophers, derived 'from Philosophy, is in common given to all 'that profess it, though they differ as to their 'Sects and Opinions." To this he adds further, saying, 'We have compiled a Book against all 'the Heresies that ever were, which, if you be 'willing to read it, we will deliver to you." The same Justin, having wrote many elaborate Works against the Heathens, dedicated also some other Books, containing an Apology for our Faith, to the Emperor Antoninus, sirnamed Pius, and to the Roman Senate; for he dwelt at Rome: But in his Apology, he makes known himself, who and whence he was, in these words.

CHAP. XII.

Concerning Justin's Apology to Antoninus.

'TO the Emperor Titus Ælius Hadrianus Antoninus Pius Cæsar Augustus, and to Verissimus his Son the Philosopher, and to Lucius (by (a) Nature Son of Cæsar the Philosopher, but by Adoption Son to Pius) the lover of Learning: To the Sacred Senate also, and People of Rome, I Justin the Son of Priscus, the Grandchild of Bacchius, who were of (b) Flavia Neapolis a City of Syria-Palestine, make my Request and (c) Petition in behalf of those Men (being my self one of them) who are unjustly hated and most injuriously treated by all Mankind." And the same Emperor being address'd to by other Brethren, Inhabitants of Asia, who were vexed with all manner of Molestations by the Men of their own Province, vouchsafed to send this Edict to the (d) Common-Council of Asia.

(a) Lucius was by Nature the Son of Ælius Verus Cæsar whom Adrian adopted. He dying, Adrian adopted Antoninus Pius, upon this condition, that Pius should adopt Marcus and Lucius; as Spartianus and Capitolinus do declare. But others say, that Lucius was adopted by Marcus; so Capitolinus in the life of Marcus. Wherefore in these words of Justin, can be no other Person meant by Cæsar the Philosopher, than Ælius Verus, whom Adrian adopted. For Justin says, that Lucius was by nature the Son of Cæsar the Philosopher, and the adoptive Son of Antoninus Pius. Now, it's evident, Lucius was Ælius Verus's own Son: Therefore by Cæsar the Philosopher must be meant Ælius Verus. But there are two things which seem to withstand this Exposition of this Passage. The first is, the surname of Philosopher is no way agreeable to Ælius Verus. Indeed, Ælius Verus (who was adopted by Adrian) was a learned Man, and studious, especially in Poetry, as Capitolinus says in his Life: But his Morals were in no wise agreeable to the study and profession of Philosophy. Then further, if Justin would here mean Ælius Verus, why does he not mention his name? For the Appellation of Cæsar the Philosopher, seems not sufficient to evidence him to be meant; in as much as that Appellation might be common to Marcus also. We could easily clear our selves of these difficulties, by admitting the reading of the four MSS. Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil, where this place is thus written [And to Lucius the Philosopher, by nature the Son of Cæsar] which reading Casaubon approves of, in his Notes on Spartianus. But we judge it not to be good. For it follows in Justin [the lover of Learning] where you see Marcus and Lucius have each their Epithetes: Marcus is termed [the Philosopher] and Lucius [the lover of Learning.] Vales.

(b) Neapolis, a City of Palestine, is called Flavia, because there was a Colony brought thither by Flavius Vespasianus. Before, it was called Sichem. Yet Pliny does not say there was a Colony there. Afterwards, the Emperor Severus deprived it of its priviledges, and reduced it to a Village, because it favoured Niger's side. Vales.

(c) In the Original 'tis [ἔν]δοξον] Rufinus translates it [postulatum, i. e. a Petition] The Greek Word [ἐντυγχάνειν] signifies, to go to the Emperor, and make a request to him; which was most commonly done in Writing: There is extant a form of such a Petition (presented by Marcellinus the Presbyter to Theodosius Augustus) which Syrmondus published lately: It begins thus; Deprecamur mansuetudinem vestram; i. e. We earnestly intreat your Graciousness, &c. Vales.

CHAP. XIII.

Antoninus Pius.

'THE Emperor Cæsar (a) Marcus Aurelius Antoninus Augustus Armenicus, Pontifex Maximus, Tribune of the People XV. Consul III. to 'the (b) Common [Council] of Asia, sendeth Greeting. We know indeed 'that the Gods do take care 'this sort of men should 'not continue undiscover'd. 'For it is much more suitable for them to punish such 'as refuse to pay them adoration, than for you. You 'confirm those, whom you 'molest and disquiet, in 'their Opinion which they 'have embraced, whilst you 'accuse them of Impiety. 'And it would please them much more to seem to be 'accused and put to death 'for their own God, than to live: upon which account 'they are become Conquerors, and do willingly lose 'their lives, rather than they 'will be induced to do what 'you command them. But 'concerning the Earthquakes 'which either have been or 'yet do happen, it will not 'be inconvenient to advertise you (because you despond and are out of heart 'when such accidents come to pass) to compare (c) your [manner of Life and Behaviour] with theirs. They [at such times] put a greater confidence in God; but you, during the whole time (upon which account you seem to us to err through ignorance) neglect the Gods, and are careless both of all other [religious performances,] and also of the worship of the Immortal God: And the Christians, who adore him, you are enraged at, and persecute even to death. Concerning these Men many Governors of Provinces heretofore wrote to (d) our most Divine Father. To whom he return'd answer, 'that such Men should not 'be molested, unless it appeared they attempted any 'thing prejudicial to the 'State of the Roman Empire: And many also have 'given us intimation concerning these Men, whom we answered pursuant to our Father's decree. If therefore any 'one shall still persevere to give disturbance to 'any one of these sort of Men, because he is a 'Christian, the Party accused shall be acquitted, 'although it evidently appears he is a Christian; 'but the accuser shall be obnoxious to punishment. This Edict was (e) published at Ephesus in the

(a) Eusebius is mistaken in attributing this Rescript to Antoninus Pius, whenas it was M. Aurelius's (as appears by the Title) written in the first year of his Reign, when he was Consul III. See Onuphrii Fast. ad ann. Vrb. 914. The testimony of Melito (which Eusebius produces to confirm his opinion in this point) destroys it. For Melito, in his Apology, reckons up all the Rescripts of Antoninus Pius in favour of the Christians; to wit, his Epistle to the Larisseans, to the Thessalonians, to the Athenians, and to all the Grecians: Now if this Rescript to the Common Council of Asia had been Antoninus Pius's, doubtless Melito (being of the Province of Asia) would not have omitted it. For he could not be ignorant of it, since it was publish'd at Ephesus: And, when he had reckoned up the other Rescripts of Pius, why should he not make mention of this, which was written to the people of his own Province? Vales.

(b) Συνέδριον, i. e. Council, is to be understood. For the Asians had a Common Council of the whole Province, to which each City sent its Representatives; as Aristides declares, in the 4. of his Orat. Sacr. And the same Author says there, that this Council met in the upper Phrygia, that is, at Apamea, or Synnada. Yet as it seems, they met in other Cities. There were, in the other Roman Provinces, such Councils as these. Vales.

(c) It should be ὑμέτερα, i. e. Your: as it is in Justin's Apology, at the end. Vales.

(d) Although this Rescript be not Antoninus Pius's; yet it's here produced in an opportune place. For in it is mention made of that Epistle which Antoninus Pius wrote to the Governors of Provinces, when they enquired of him what they should do with the Christians. Melito makes mention of this Epistle of Pius's; whose words Eusebius quotes in chap. 26. of this 4 Book. Vales.

(e) To some Laws in the Codex Theodosian. there is put [P. P.] which mark signifies that that Law of the Emperor was made Publick in such a City. For the Emperors, as oft as they would have any Edict be taken notice of and known to all, were wont to write with their own hand this word [Proponatur, i. e. Let it be publish'd.] Vales.

There is extant an old Coin of Claudius Auguſtus whereon there is a Temple to be ſeen with this Title [R. & AUG.] and this Inſcription [COM. ASIÆ.] on both ſides of the Temple. This Temple, I ſuppoſe, was at Epheſus, wherein all the Cities of Aſia met to ſolemnize their Religious Rites for the proſperity of the Emperor and the Roman People: And this Temple was for the uſe of all Aſia in common, being built at the publick charge. Valeſ.

Some Memoirs of Polycarp the Diſciple of the Apoſtles.

AT this time, Anicetus preſiding over the Roman Church, Irenæus relates that Polycarp (who till now ſurvived) came to Rome and diſcourſed Anicetus about a Queſtion that aroſe concerning Eaſter-Day. And the ſame Author delivers another Relation concerning Polycarp, (in his Third Book againſt Hereſies) which I judg'd requiſite to adjoyn to what has been mention'd concerning him; it is thus: 'And Polycarp, who was 'not only inſtructed by the Apoſtles and con-'verſant with many that ſaw Chriſt, but alſo 'was by the Apoſtles ordained Biſhop of the 'Church of Smyrna in Aſia (whom we alſo ſaw 'in our younger days; for he lived to a great 'age, and being very ancient, ended his life by 'a glorious and moſt renowned Martyrdom) 'This Polycarp, I ſay, continually taught what he 'he had learned of the Apoſtles, ſuch Points as 'the Church now teacheth, and ſuch only as are 'true: All the Churches throughout Aſia do atteſt 'this, and alſo all thoſe who to this day have been 'Succeſſors to Polycarp; who doubtleſs is a Wit-'neſs much more worthy to be credited, and 'gives a firmer aſſurance to the Truth, than ei-'ther Valentinus or Marcion, or any other Au-'thors of corrupt Opinions. This Polycarp com-'ing to Rome in the Times of Anicetus, converted 'many of the foreſaid Hereticks to the Church 'of God, declaring that he had received the one 'and only Truth from the Apoſtles, which was 'taught by the Church. And there are ſome 'yet ſurviving, who heard him relate, that John 'the Diſciple of the Lord going into the Bath 'at Epheſus to waſh himſelf; and ſeeing Cerinthus 'in it, leapt out, having not bathed himſelf, but 'ſaid, let us make haſte away, leſt the Bath fall, 'Cerinthus that Enemy of the Truth being with-'in it. This ſame Polycarp alſo, when Marcion 'on a time came into his preſence and ſaid to him, '(a) Take acquaintance of us; return'd him 'anſwer, I take notice of thee to be the firſt be-'gotten of the Devil. So exceedingly cautious 'were the Apoſtles and their Diſciples, not ſo 'much as by ſpeech to have any converſe with 'ſuch as were corrupters of the Truth; as Paul 'alſo ſaid, * A Man that is an Heretick, after the 'firſt and ſecond Admonition, reject: knowing that he 'that is ſuch is ſubverted, and ſinneth, being con-'demned of himſelf. There is extant alſo of this 'Polycarp's a moſt incomparable Epiſtle, written 'to the Philippians; from which thoſe who are 'deſirous to be careful about their own Salvati-'on, may learn the Character of his Faith, and 'the Publication of the Truth." Thus far Irenæus. But Polycarp, in his ſaid Epiſtle to the Philippians, which is ſtill extant, quotes ſome Authorities out of the Firſt Epiſtle of Peter. Moreover Antoninus, ſirnamed Pius, having compleated the two and twentieth year of his Reign, died, and was ſucceeded by M. Aurelius Verus (who alſo was named Antoninus, and was his Son) and his Brother Lucius.

(a) In the Original the term is [ἐπιγίνωσκε] which in this place is the ſame almoſt in ſignification with the word [Salutare, i. e. to Salute.] For therefore would Marcion have had himſelf taken notice of, that he might be ſaluted. So, anciently in the Church, when the Faithful approach the Holy Table, the Deacon was wont to cry aloud often [ἐπιγινώσκετε ἀλλήλους, i. e. acknowledge one another] to wit, leſt any prophane Perſon or Jew ſhould come to the Sacrament. Valeſ. St. Paul uſes this term (1 Cor. 16. 18.) where our Tranſlation renders it [acknowledge.] * Tit. 3. 10, 11.

CHAP. XV.

How, in the Reign of Verus, Polycarp, together with others, ſuffered Martyrdom in the City of Smyrna.

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

AT this time, when moſt ſore Perſecutions were ſtirr'd up in Aſia, Polycarp ended his Life by Martyrdom: [The Account of] whoſe Death (as it is yet extant in writing) we judg'd moſt requiſite to be inſerted into this our Hiſtory. It is an Epiſtle, written from the Church over which he preſided, to the Churches throughout (a) Pontus, which ſets forth the Sufferings of Polycarp in theſe words: 'The Church of God 'which is at Smyrna, to the Church at Philome-'lium, and to all the Congregations of Holy Ca-'tholick Church everywhere, the Mercy, Peace, 'and Love of God the Fa-'ther, and of our Lord Je-'ſus Chriſt be multiplied: 'We have written unto you, 'Brethren, both concer-'ning others who ſuffered 'Martyrdom, and alſo a-'bout the Bleſſed Polycarp; 'who by his own Martyr-'dom ſealed up, as it were, 'and put an end to the Per-'ſecution." (b) After theſe words, before their Relation concerning Polycarp, they give an account of the other Martyrs; deſcribing their Conſtancy of Mind during their Torments: 'For thoſe, 'they ſay, who ſtood round 'were aſtoniſh'd, when they 'ſaw them firſt lacerated 'with Scourges even as deep as their inmoſt Veins 'and Arteries; (inſomuch that the hidden parts 'of their Bodies, and their Bowels were viſible;) 'then laid upon the Shells of a ſort of Sea-fiſh, 'and on ſome very ſharp Heads of Darts and Ja-'velins ſtrew'd on the Ground, and undergoing 'all ſorts of Puniſhments and Torments; and 'in fine, thrown to the Wild Beaſts to be devour'd." But moſt eſpecially they relate, that Germanicus was moſt ſignally couragious, who being (c) corroborated by Divine Grace, overcame that fear of bodily Death implanted by Nature on the Mind of Man. For when the Proconſul, deſirous by perſwaſion to prevail upon him, propoſed to (a) Inſtead of [κατὰ πόν]τον, i.e. throughout Pontus, the reading, as I judge, ſhould be [κατὰ πάντα τόπον, i. e. Every-where: Which is confirmed by the Inſcription of the Epiſtle, which is thus, κατὰ πάντα τόπον, &c. i. e. every-where, &c. Neither is there any mention of the Churches of Pontus in the title of this Epiſtle. For Philomelium is not a City of Pontus, but of Lycaonia, as Pliny ſays, or (as others) of Piſidia. For ſo in the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon, one Paul, a Philomelian, is named among the Biſhops of Piſidia. Valeſ. In Robert Stephens Edit. it is [κατὰ πόντον,] i. e. throughout Pontus.

(b) This whole Epiſtle, concerning the Martyrdom of Polycarp, is put out by the Learned Biſhop Uſher. Our Euſebius does not inſert the whole Epiſtle; the Learned Reader may ſee it entire in that Edit. of Biſhop Uſher.

him his youthfulness, and earnestly entreated him that, being young and in the prime of his years, he would have some compassion on himself: He made no delay, but readily and couragiously enticed the Wild Beast to devour himself, and almost forced and stimulated it, that he might the sooner be dismist out of this unrighteous and wicked life. Immediately upon his glorious death, the whole Multitude, greatly admiring the Couragiousness of the Divine Martyr, and the Fortitude of all the other Christians, on a sudden began to cry out, Destroy the Impious: Let Polycarp be sought after. Moreover, there following a great tumult upon these clamours, a Man, by name Quintus, by extract a Phrygian, lately come out thence, seeing the Wild Beast, and the other tortures they threatned to make use of, was daunted and dispirited, and at length gave way to a desire of saving his life. The Contents of the foresaid Epistle do manifest, that this Quintus (together with some others) ran with too much rashness, and without any religious consideration, to the place of Judicature; but being forthwith apprehended, he gave all Men a signal example, that none should be so audacious, as to precipitate themselves into such Dangers without a considerate and pious Circumspection. But thus far concerning these Men. Now the most admirable Polycarp, when he first heard these things, was not at all disturb'd, but continued to keep himself in a stedfast, serene, and unmoved temper of mind; and resolv'd with himself to continue in the City. But his Friends and those who were about him, beseeching and entreating him, that he would withdraw himself, he was prevailed with, and went out of the City to a Country-house not far distant therefrom; where he abode with a small company, spending the time day and night (being intent upon nothing else) in continued Prayers to the Lord; wherein he craved and made humble supplications and requests for the Peace of all the Churches throughout the World: For that was his constant and continual usage. Moreover, three days before his apprehension, being at prayer in the night-time, and falling into a sleep, he thought he saw the Pillow, whereon his Head lay, on a sudden consumed by a flame of fire. Whereupon being awaked out of his sleep, he forthwith expounded the Vision to those who were then present, and having little less than predicted what was in future to be, he expresly declared to those that were about him, that he should be burnt to death for [the testimony of] Christ. Further, when those that sought for him used their utmost care and diligence to find him out, he was again constrained through the love and affection of the Brethren to remove, as they say, to another Country-house: Whither his Pursuers soon after came, and catch'd up two Boys that were there; by the one of which, after they had scourged him, they were conducted to the House where Polycarp lodg'd; and coming in the Evening, they found him reposing himself in an upper Room: Whence he might easily have removed into another House, but he would not, saying, The Will of the Lord be done. Moreover, when he understood they were come, as that Epistle relates, he went down, and with a very cheerful and most mild countenance talk'd with the Men: insomuch that they (to whom Polycarp was before unknown) thought they saw a wonder, when they beheld his exceeding great Age, and his venerable and grave (d) Behaviour: and they admired so much diligence should be used to apprehend such an old Man. But he, making no delay, presently order'd the Table to be spread for them; then he invites them to a sumptuous Feast, and requested of them one hours space, which he might without disturbance spend in prayer: When they permitted him that, he arose and pray'd, being so full of the Grace of the Lord, that those who were present and heard him pray were struck with admiration, and many of them alter'd their minds, and were now very sorry that so Venerable and Divine an old Man was forthwith to be put to death. Afterwards, the foresaid Epistle contains word for word this subsequent relation concerning him; 'But after he 'had ended his Prayer (wherein he made 'mention of all Persons who at any time had 'been (e) conversant with 'him, both small and great, 'noble and obscure; and 'also of the whole Catho-'lick Church throughout 'the World) the hour of his 'departure being now come, 'they set him upon an Ass, 'and brought him to the 'City on the day of the '(f) great Sabbath: Herod 'the (g) Eirenarch and his 'Father Nicetes met him; 'who taking him up into 'their Chariot, as they sat 'together, endeavoured to 'perswade him, and said, 'For what harm is it to say 'these words, Lord Cæsar, and 'to sacrifice, and so to evade 'punishment? He at first made 'them no answer; but they 'continuing to be impor-'tunate with him, he said, 'I will never do what you 'endeavour to induce me to. 'They, despairing of per-'swading him, gave him 'opprobrious language, and 'thrust him out of their 'Chariot so hastily, that in 'his going down he very 'much bruised the fore-part 'of his Leg. But he, no more 'concern'd than if he had 'suffer'd no harm, went on 'cheerfully and made haste, 'being brought by [a 'Guard] to the † Stadium: 'but (there being so great a 'noise made in the Stadium 'that few could perfectly 'hear) this voice came from 'Heaven to Polycarp as he 'entred the Stadium, Be coura-'gious, Polycarp, and behave 'thy self valiantly. No person 'indeed saw him that spoke, 'but many of us Christians 'heard the voice. When 'therefore he was brought 'before the Tribunal, a 'great shout was made, be-'cause the Multitude heard Polycarp was appre-'hended. After that, when he was come near 'him, the (k) Proconsul ask'd him whether

(e) In the Maz. and Med. MSS. in stead of [συμβεβηκότων, i. e. which happened, &c.] the reading is [συνδεδηκότων, i. e. which had been conversant] and so Rufinus read this place, as appears from his Version: And the old Translator of this Epistle, put forth by Bishop Usher, is found to have read it so likewise. Vales. In Rob. Stephens Edit. it is [συμβεβηκότων αὐτῷ, i. e. which had happened to him.

(f) So it was called whenever the first day of the feast of unleavened Bread fell on the Sabbath-day. See Jo. 19. 31. & 7. 37. For that which among the Jews is חג a feast, קראי מקרא, the day of solemn assembly in any Feast, (and such were the first day, and the last of the feast of Tabernacles; the first and seventh of the feast of unleavened Bread, and the day of Pentecost) is by the Jews, writing in Greek, called μεγάλη ἡμέρα, a great day. So the 72 render it, Isa. 1. 13. where we read calling of assemblies. See Scalig. proleg. de Emend. Temp. p. 6, & 7. Bishop Usher (in his Tract De anno Macedon. chap. 3.) says, that the great Sabbath, mentioned here, was that which immediately preceded Easter; the Learned Reader may see the Author and his Reasons.

(g) It was the Office of this Magistrate to apprehend seditious Persons, and Disturbers of the publick Peace, and, having before sent their Indictments, to bring them to the places of Judicature: So says August. in his 140, and 159 Epist. Hence 'tis here said, that Herod, the Irenarch of Smyrna, took up Polycarp into his Chariot, whom he had commanded to be found out and apprehended by his guards. These Irenarchs were made of some of the Members of the Court of Judicature, as the 49th Law in the Codex Theodos. does shew. At last Theodosius Junior wholly abolished that Office in the East: His Constitution is extant in the Codex Theodos. They had under their Command Horse-men, and the Diogmitæ, [i. e. pursuers] a sort of Soldiers, that were lightly armed, and so more expedite to pursue and take such as were Thieves. Vales.

† That was the place where their sacred Games and Shews were exhibited.

(h) This Proconsul's name was Statius Quadratus; for so 'tis truly Printed in the old Latin translation of this Epistle, which the most learned Arch B. Usher published. This Man, as I judge, was the same Person with L. Statius Quadratus, who was Consul in the reign of Antoninus, anno urb. condit. 895. Aristides makes makes mention of this Proconſul of Aſia, in the firſt and fourth of his Sacred Orations: Where he alſo calls him a Rhetorician. I doubt not therefore but he was the ſame Man with Quadratus the Conſul, who, as Philoſtratus ſays, was the maſter of Varus Sophiſta, who was wont to declaim extempore upon any ſubject given; and was a great Emulator of Favorinus Sophiſta. In what year he bore the Office of Proconſul of Aſia, Ariſtides indeed ſays not. But that, as it ſeems to me, may be made out from his Relation. For, in the 4 of his Orat. Sacr. Ariſtides ſays, that a little after that Plague which raged in Aſia, Severus was Proconſul. Euſebius, in his Chronicon, places that Plague on the 8 year of M. Aurelius Antoninus. Therefore Severus was Proconſul of Aſia in the 9 of M. Aurelius. When he was Proconſul, Ariſtides writes, that he received Letters out of Italy from the Emperors; to wit, from the ſenior Auguſtus and his Son; where by the name of Auguſtus he underſtands Marcus; and the Son of the Emperor is Commodus, who was then called Cæſar. Next before Severus, Pollio was Proconſul, as Ariſtides atteſts in the ſame place; and immediately before Pollio, our Quadratus was the Proconſul of Aſia: For ſo ſays Ariſtides in the ſame Oration. So that Quadratus was Proconſul of Aſia in the 7 of Marcus's Empire. On which year alſo Euſebius, in his Chronicon, places the Martyrdom of Polycarp. They are in an Error therefore, who ſay the Martyrdom of Polycarp happened on the ninth of Marcus. For, whereas 'tis manifeſt from the atteſtation of Ariſtides, that Quadratus (under whom Polycarp ſuffered) bore the Proconſulate of Aſia in the ſeventh year of Marcus, the death of Polycarp is neceſſarily to be placed on the ſame year. Valeſ.

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

'he were Polycarp; and when he had confeſſed 'he was, the Proconſul endeavour'd to perſwade 'him to renounce [Chriſt] ſaying, Have a reverent regard to thine Age (and ſome other words a-'greeable hereto, which 'tis uſual for them to 'ſpeak) ſwear by the Fortune of Cæſar, change thy 'mind, ſay, deſtroy the Impious: But Polycarp, be-'holding with a grave and ſevere countenance 'the Multitude that was in the Stadium, ſtretch'd 'forth his Hand towards them, and ſigh'd, and 'looking up towards Heaven, ſaid, deſtroy the 'Impious. When the Governour was urgent with 'him, and ſaid, Swear and I will releaſe thee, ſpeak 'reproachfully of Chriſt; Polycarp made anſwer, I 'have ſerved him theſe eighty and ſix years; during 'all which time he never did me injury; how then can I 'blaſpheme my King, who is my Saviour? But when 'the Proconſul was again inſtant with him, and 'ſaid, Swear by the Fortune of Cæſar: Polycarp ſaid, 'Becauſe you are ſo vain-glorious as to be urgent with 'me to ſwear by the Fortune of Cæſar, (as you call it) 'pretending your ſelf ignorant who I am; hear me 'plainly and freely making this Profeſſion; I am a Chri-'ſtian: now if you are deſirous to learn the Doctrine of 'Chriſtianity, aſſign me a Day, and you ſhall hear it. 'The Proconſul ſaid, perſwade the People: I 'have thought good (anſwer'd Polycarp) to give 'you an account; for we are taught to attribute 'due honour (ſuch as is not prejudicial to our 'Profeſſion) to Magiſtrates and Powers which 'are ordain'd of God; but I judge them unwor-'thy of having an account given them of our 'Faith. The Proconſul ſaid, I have Wild Beaſts, 'to whom I will caſt thee, unleſs you alter your 'mind. Command them to be brought forth '(ſaid Polycarp) for our minds are not to be alter'd 'from better to worſe; but we account that 'change good, which is from Vice to Virtuous 'Actions. He ſaid again to him, ſince you con-'temn the Wild Beaſts, I will give order that you 'be conſumed by Fire, unleſs you change your 'mind. You threaten me (replied Polycarp) with 'Fire that burns for an hour, and ſoon after be-'comes extinct; but you are ignorant of that 'Fire of the future Judgment and eternal Puniſh-'ment, which is reſerv'd for the Impious; but 'why do you make delays? order (i) which 'you will to be made uſe of upon me. When 'he had ſpoken theſe and many other words, he 'was filled with confidence and joy, and his 'Countenance was repleniſhed with a comely 'gracefulneſs: inſomuch that he was not only 'not overwhelmed with terror at what was ſaid 'to him, but, on the contrary, the Proconſul 'ſtood aſtoniſhed; and ſent the Cryer to make 'Proclamation thrice in the midſt of the Stadium, 'Polycarp profeſſeth himſelf to be a Chriſtian: 'At which words utter'd by the Cryer, the whole 'Multitude both of Heathens and Jews who were 'Inhabitants of Smyrna, in a moſt furious rage 'and with a great noiſe cried out, This is the 'Teacher of Aſia, The Father of the Chriſtians, 'The Deſtroyer of our Gods, who gives com-'mand to many Men not to ſacrifice, nor adore 'the Gods. Having ſaid theſe words they cried 'out and requeſted Philip the (k) Aſiarch to let 'forth a Lion upon Polycarp. But he made an-'ſwer, that that was not lawful for him to do, 'becauſe the Amphitheatrical Shews, or the hun-'ting of the Wild Beaſts were concluded. Then 'they all cried out with a joynt conſent, that Po-'lycarp ſhould be burnt alive. For it was neceſ-'ſary that the Viſion which appeared to him upon 'his Pillow ſhould be fulfilled; when, being at 'Prayer, he ſaw that burning, he turn'd to the 'Brethren that were with him, and ſaid prophe-'tically, I muſt be burnt alive. Theſe things 'therefore were with no leſs celerity done than 'they had been ſpoken; the Multitude immedi-'ately brought together Wood and dried Branches 'of Trees out of their Shops, and from the Baths; 'but the Jews eſpecially moſt readily (as it was 'their uſage) aſſiſted in this buſineſs. Now when 'the Pile of Wood for the Fire was made ready, 'Polycarp, having uncloathed himſelf, and un-'looſed his Girdle, endeavoured alſo to put off 'his own Shoes; a thing which before he never 'did, becauſe every one of the Faithful continu-'ally ſtrove who ſhould ſooneſt touch his Skin: 'For he was always reverenced for his godly 'courſe of life, even before he came to be gray-'headed, preſently therefore all the (l) Inſtru-

(k) These Aſiarchs were the Prieſts of the Community (or whole Body of Inhabitants) of the Province of Aſia: For as the People of Aſia had Temples built by common charge, ſacred Games, ſacred Feaſts in common, and a Common-Council; ſo alſo they had a Prieſthood called Aſiarchia, that is, the common Prieſthood of Aſia; and thoſe who executed this ſacerdotal Office (which conſiſted in the managing their publick Sports or Spectacles) were termed Aſiarchs. Theſe Aſiarchs were elected after this manner: Each City of Aſia, at the beginning of every year (that is, about the Autumnal Equinox) had a publick meeting, wherein they appointed one of their own Citizens to be an Aſiarch; then they ſent Deputies to the Common-Council of the Province, who declared to them his name whom they had made choice of at home: After which the Common-Council choſe about ten to be Aſiarchs, out of the number of all thoſe, whom each City had elected to that Office. See Ariſtides, in Orat. Sacr. 4ta. Now the difficulty is, whether all theſe, who were elected by the Common-Council, executed this Office all together, or whether only one of them was Aſiarch; Valeſius thinks there was but one Aſiarch; his reaſons are theſe: Though more than one were elected by the Senate of Aſia, yet that perhaps was done that out of them the Roman Proconſul might chooſe one, as he uſually did in the Election of the Irenarchs: Again, the Senate might elect more than one, becauſe if the firſt that was choſen Aſiarch ſhould die, before he had ended his year, there might be another to ſupply his place: Laſtly, that there was but one Aſiarch every year, is apparent from the Words at the latter end of this Epiſtle (which Euſebius leaves out in his quotation, but the Learned Reader may ſee them in Arch-Biſhop Uſher's Edit. of it) where 'tis ſaid, Polycarp ſuffer'd under Philip the Aſiarch, and Statius Quadratus Proconſul of Aſia. This is the opinion of Valeſius, and theſe are his Reaſons for it. On the other ſide, the incomparably learned Uſher affirms, that there were more Aſiarchs than one at the ſame time; which he collects from Acts 19. 31. with whom agrees the learned Dr. Hammond in his Paraphraſe and Notes on that Text, and alſo Mr. Jo. Gregory of Oxford, pag. 49. of his Works, Edit. Lond. 1665. This Office (ſays Valeſius) was very chargeable, therefore the richeſt Perſons were elected to it. Hence 'tis that Strabo affirms, that the Aſiarchs were commonly choſen out of Trallis, the Citizens whereof were the wealthieſt of all Aſia.

'ments

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

'ments prepared for the fiery Pile were applied to, 'and put about him; but when they went about 'to nail him to the Stake, he said, Let me be as I 'am; for he that gives me strength to endure the Fire, 'will also grant that I shall continue within the Pile 'unmoved and undisturbed by reason of my pain, even 'without your securing me with Nails: So they did 'not make him fast to the Stake with Nails, but 'only bound him to it. He therefore, having 'put his Hands behind him, and being bound, '(as it were a select Ram, pick'd out of a great 'Flock, to be offer'd as an acceptable Holocaust 'to Almighty God) said; Thou Father of thy well-'beloved and blessed Son Jesus Christ; through whom 'we have received the knowledge of thee! Thou God of 'Angels and Powers, and of the whole Creation, and of 'all the Generation of the Just who live in thy pre-'sence! I bless thee because thou hast vouchsafed to bring 'me to this Day and this Hour, wherein I may take 'my portion among the number of the Martyrs, and of 'the Cup of Christ, in order to the Resurrection both 'of Soul and Body to Eternal Life, in the Incorruption 'of the Holy Spirit; among whom let me (I beseech 'thee) be this day accepted in thy sight, as it were a 'Sacrifice fat and well-pleasing to thee, according as 'thou hast prepared, foreshewed, and fulfilled, thou 'God of Truth who canst not Lye: Wherefore also I 'praise thee for all these things; I bless thee, I glorifie 'thee, through the Eternal High-Priest Jesus Christ 'thy Well-beloved Son, through whom to Thee, together 'with him, in the Holy Ghost be glory both now and 'for ever, Amen. (m) When 'with a loud voice he had 'said Amen, and made an 'end of praying, the Of-'ficers who had the charge 'about the Fire, kindled it; 'and when there arose a 'great flame, we (who 'were permitted to see it 'and who are hitherto pre-'served alive to relate to 'others what then hapned) saw a wonderful 'sight. For the Fire, composing it self into the 'form of an Arch or Half-circle (like the Sail of 'a Ship swell'd with the Wind) immured within 'a holly space the Body of the Martyr; which, 'being in the middle of it, look'd not like burnt 'Flesh, but like Gold, or Silver refined in a 'Furnace; and forthwith we smelt a most fra-'grant Scent, as if it had been the smell of Fran-'kincense, or of some other of the precious 'sweet-scented Spices. In fine therefore, when 'those impious Wretches saw the Body could 'not be consumed by the Fire, they commanded 'the (n) Confector to ap-'proach it, and sheath his 'Sword in it; which when 'he had done, there issued 'forth so great a quantity 'of Blood, that it extin-'guish'd the Fire; and the 'whole Multitude admired, 'in that there was so great a difference shew'd 'between the Infidels and the Elect: Of which 'number this most admirable person was one, 'who was the Apostolical and Prophetical Do-'ctor of our Age, and Bishop of the Catholick 'Church at Smyrna. For every word which pro-'ceeded out of his mouth, either hath been, or 'shall be fulfilled. But the envious and malevolent 'Devil, that deadly Enemy to the Generation of 'the Just, understanding the couragiousness of his 'Martyrdom, and his unblameable Conversation 'even from his youth, and [perceiving] that he 'was now encircled in a Crown of Immortality, 'and had most undoubtedly obtained the glori-'ous Reward of his Victory; the Devil, I say, used 'his utmost diligence that his Body should not be 'born away by us Christians, altho' many of us 'were desirous to do it, and 'to have (o) been conversant 'with his sacred dead Body. 'Some therefore suggested 'to Nicetas the Father of 'Herod, but the Brother of '(p) Dalcis; to address to the 'Governour, that he would 'not give us his Body; lest '(as they said) they leave 'him that was crucified, and 'begin to worship this Per-'son: And this they spoke 'upon account of the Sug-'gestion and Importunity 'of the Jews, who very di-'ligently watch'd us when 'we were about to take his 'Body out of the Fire: but 'they were ignorant, that 'we could never at any 'time relinquish Christ '(who suffer'd for the salva-'tion of all those through-'out the World who were 'to be saved) nor yet wor-'ship any other. For we adore him as being the 'Son of God; but we have a worthy affection for 'the Martyrs (as being the Disciples and Fol-'lowers of the Lord) because of their most excee-'ding great love shown to their own King and 'Master; whose (q) Com-'panions and Fellow-Disciples 'we wish our selves to be. 'The Centurion therefore 'perceiving the contentious 'obstinacy of the Jews, 'caused the Body to be brought forth, and (as 'tis 'customary with them) burnt it; and so we at 'length gather'd up his Bones, more highly to be 'prized than the most precious Gems, and more 'refined than the purest Gold, and deposited them 'in a decent place of burial: whereat being as-'sembled together, the Lord grant we may with 'joy and gladness celebrate 'the (r) Birth-day of his 'Martyrdom, both in me-'mory of those who have 'heretofore undergone and 'been victorious in this glo-'rious conflict, and also for 'the instruction and preparation of such as here-'after shall be exercised therein. Thus much con-'cerning the Blessed Polycarp, who together with '(s) twelve Philadelphians was crown'd with Mar-'tyrdom at Smyrna: who alone is so eminently 'famous and memorable amongst all Men, that 'even the Heathens every-where do make men-'tion of him. (t) Such was the glorious Exit of

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

(m) From this passage I conjecture, that Polycarp said this foregoing Prayer of his with a low voice; but pronounced Amen aloud. That this of old was the custom of the Christians (that is, loudly to resound the Amen at the end of the Prayer) the rite now observed in the Church does demonstrate, to wit, that after each Prayer repeated by the Priest, all the People do with a loud voice answer, Amen. Vales.

(n) This Officer's charge was (not to fight with the wild Beasts, as the Bestiarii did, but) to dispatch them, if at any time they were enraged, and like to endanger the Spectators, as sometimes it happened. They were also called Lancearii. Vales.

(o) The Phrase in the Original is this [χοινωνῆσαι τῷ ἁγίῳ σώματι] χοινωνῦσιν (says Hesychius) οἱ μεταδιδόντες ἀλλήλοις, καὶ μεταλαμβάνοντες παρ' ἀλλήλων φιλίας ἢ γνώσεως, i. e. They are said to communicate, who distribute to one another, and they that partake and receive from one another, whether friendship, or knowledge. Whence it appears that the word [χοινωνῆσαι] is applicable to friendship or society; which the Primitive Christians expres'd to the Martyrs, &c. departed, when, meeting yearly at the place where their Sacred Reliques were interred, they celebrated the Anniversary Day of their Martyrdom: Thus they maintained a friendship or society (as it were) with the departed Martyr. The following Words of this Epistle do declare the resolution of the Church of Smyrna about the Celebration of the Day of Polycarp's Martyrdom, after this manner, and also the reason of that their so doing.

(p) Or, Alce, for so it is in Bishop Usher's Edit. Vales.

(q) In the learned Usher's Edit. 'tis [χοινωνούς] that is, Companions; from the verb [χοινωνέω] us'd here in the same sense, as we said (note o.) it is sometimes taken to signifie.

(r) Ἡμέραν γενέθλιον is the original phrase: So the primitive Christians called the days whereon the Martyrs suffered, because at their deaths they were born Sons (as it were) and Heirs of the Kingdom of Glory.

(s) This passage is otherwise (and truer) in B. Usher's Edit. thus [who together with those of Philadelphia was the twelfth that suffered Martyrdom in Smyrna.] So that those Martyrs of Philadelphia were not twelve in number, but eleven only; and Polycarp was the twelfth. Vales.

(t) Eusebius purposely omitted the conclusion of this Letter, as being unserviceable to his present design; and because he had inserted the entire Epistle into another Work of his, to wit, into his Book concerning the Sufferings of the Primitive Martyrs: The Learned Reader may see this whole Letter (as before we intimated) put forth by Arch B. Usher, from the conclusion whereof he may observe, (1.) that this Epistle was not written immediately after Polycarp's Martyrdom, but that there was some distance of time between that and the Writing thereof: For the Philomelians, Philomelians, hearing a report of the ſuffering of Polycarp, ſent Letters to the Church of Smyrna, deſiring an account of all Particulars that happened at the ſuffering of this B. Martyr: Which thoſe of Smyrna willingly undertook, and wrote them this Letter, moſt part whereof Euſebius quotes in this Chapter. (2.) That Polycarp's Martyrdom is there called Evangelical; and the reaſon is given, to wit, becauſe Polycarp fled from thoſe who purſued him, (agreeable to the example of our Saviour.) Laſtly, 'tis obſervable therefrom, that Polycarp was Martyr'd the ſecond day of the month Xanthicus, that is, the 7th of the Calend. of March. Valeſ. But Arch B. Uſher diſſents (in this particular, that is, concerning the day of Polycarp's Martyrdom) from Valeſius, as the Learned Reader may ſee in his Notes on that Epiſt. and in his Tract De Anno Solar. Maced. & Aſian.

the Admirable and Apoſtolick Polycarp, whoſe Story the Brethren of the Church in Smyrna have in the fore-cited Epiſtle recorded: And to the ſame Writing concerning him are annex'd other Martyrdoms undergone at the ſame City of Smyrna, and at the (u) ſame Period of Time wherein Polycarp ſuffer'd. Amongſt which number Metrodorus, ſuppoſed to be a Presbyter of the Sect of the Marcionites, was burnt to death. But the moſt famous and eminent Martyr of thoſe Times was one Pionius: whoſe particular Profeſſions, boldneſs and freeneſs in ſpeaking, Apologies and moſt learned Orations in defence of the Faith, made both before the People and in the preſence of the Governours; and moreover his affectionate Invitations and Encouragements to thoſe who in time of Perſecution fell into temptation, and the conſolatory Speeches he uſed to ſuch Brethren as made him Viſits during his Impriſonment; and further than all this, the Torments, and beſides them the exquiſite Tortures he endur'd, his being nailed to the Stake, and his Fortitude amidſt the fiery Pile, and laſtly his Death which was ſubſequent to all theſe miraculous Sufferings; whoſoever are deſirous to know all theſe Particulars, we remit them to the Epiſtle (which contains a moſt ample account concerning him) which we have inſerted into that Collecton we made of the Sufferings of the Primitive Martyrs. Moreover, there are extant the Acts and Monuments of others who ſuffered Martyrdom at Pergamus, a City of Aſia, to wit, of Carpus and Papulus, and of a Woman named Agathonica, who after many and moſt eminent Confeſſions of our Faith, were made perfect by a glorious Death.

(a) Euſebius is here much miſtaken in that he thought, Pionius, Metrodorus, Carpus, and the reſt ſuffered in the Reign of M. Antoninus, at the ſame time when Polycarp was Martyr'd; for 'tis manifeſt from the Acts of Pionius, Carpus, and Papulus, that they were Martyr'd in the Reign of Decius. Valeſ. See Uſher, in his Book De Anno Solar. Maced. & Aſian. cap. 3.

AT the ſame time alſo Juſtin, of whom we made mention a little before, having preſented (a) a ſecond Apology to the aforeſaid Emperors in defence of our Faith, was crowned with Divine Martyrdom. Creſcens the Philoſopher (whoſe Life and Manners were anſwerable to the appellation of a Cynick; of which Philoſophical Sect he was a Follower) form'd and contriv'd the treacherous Plot againſt him; becauſe Juſtin confuted him often in ſeveral Diſputes had in the preſence of many Auditors, at length by his own Martyrdom he obtain'd the reward of that Truth he was an Aſſertor of. Thus much this moſt ſtudious Follower of the Truth (perceiving beforehand what was about to befal him) does, in his foreſaid Apology, expreſly predict in theſe ſame words; '(b) And I alſo my ſelf do expect to be 'treacherouſly betray'd by ſome one of thoſe cal-

(a) Euſebius mentions this ſecond Apology of Juſtin's in the following chapter, and ſo does Jerom in his Work De Script. Eccleſiaſt. But in the vulgar Editions of Juſtin's Works, his Apologies are prepoſterouſly placed: For that which in the Printed Copies is put in the ſecond place, ſhould be placed firſt; and that which in thoſe Editions is ſet firſt, and dedicated to the Roman Senate, ſhould be placed laſt; which we ſhall more fully manifeſt hereafter. Valeſ. (b) This paſſage of Juſtin's is now extant in his firſt Apolog. p. 46. *Edit. 'and perhaps by Creſcens that illiterate Fellow, and
'one who is a lover of vain-glorious boaſting:
'For the Man is unworthy the name of a Philoſo-

'in publick ſuch things as
'he is altogether ignorant
'of, and affirms the Chri-

'irreligious Perſons, mere'ly to pleaſe and delight the 'Multitude; (d) commit-
'ting herein a great error:
'For, in that he inveighs a-

'vulgar ſort of Men, who

'ſtands it, and behaves him-
'ſelf thus becauſe he would not be ſuſpected [to be a Chriſtian:] then he is far more baſe and wicked, in that he makes himſelf the Slave of popular Applauſe and irrational Fear: For I would 'have you to know that when I propoſed to, and
'ask'd him ſome ſuch queſtions as theſe, I perceived and was convinced he indeed underſtood
'nothing at all: And that you may know I ſpeak
'what is true, I am ready (if thoſe our Diſputations have not come to your knowledge) to

'Queſtions, and alſo his Anſwers have been made 'known to you, then it will be apparently manifeſt to you that he is altogether ignorant of our 'Religion: But if he underſtands it, but dares
'not freely declare himſelf becauſe of his Auditors; he is no Philoſopher, (as I ſaid before,)

'popular applauſe, and has no eſteem for that

And, that he was put to death (according to his own Prediction) by a treacherous Plot, of which Creſcens was the framer, Tatianus (a man who in the former part of his life had been a (f) Teacher of Rhetorick, was well-read in the Grecian Learning, and obtain'd no ſmall repute by his being converſant therein; who alſo has left in his Works many Monuments of his Ingenuity) does relate in the (g) Book he wrote

The term [ξύλῳ] we have rendred [ſtocks;] in which ſenſe this word is frequently uſed in Euſebius; for example, in the beginning of his 5 B. The learned Petavius (in his Notes on Themiſtius, Orat. 9.) remarks that the word [ξύλον] which there occurs, is the ſame in ſignification with [nervus, i. e. a kind of ſtocks.] For theſe ſort of fetters were made of wood. (d) In the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. the reading is [πεπλανημένως τοῦτο ποιεῖτων;] i. e. Creſcens did very ill, to defame the Chriſtians, (the points of whoſe Religion he was altogether ignorant of) meerly to win the applauſe of the Multitude. Valeſ. In Rob. Stephens Edit. it is [ἀπεπλανημένων, &c. i. e.] Creſcens did this to pleaſe and delight the erroneous multitude.

(e) He means that incomparable ſaying of Socrates, that is in Plato's Works: Which Valeſius thought good to inſert into his Tranſlation; (ſuppoſing it was left out by the negligence of the Tranſcribers of Euſebius;) and we alſo have expreſs'd it in our Verſion; but it is not in this original Edit. of Euſebius, nor in Rob. Stephens Edit. and is therefore Printed in a different Character.

(f) Σοφιστεύτης is the term in the original; which tho' it be ſometimes taken in that ſignification Euſebius here uſes it in; yet by other Writers (and particularly by Tatianus in his Book here quoted by Euſebius, about the end of it) it is uſed in ſuch a ſenſe, as to comprehend all the Learning of the Grecians, and the liberal Sciences. Valeſ.

against the Grecians in these words: "And the most admirable Justin said truly, that the foresaid Persons were like Thieves." Then, interposing some words concerning these Philosophers, he adjoyns thus much; "Indeed Crescens, who had made his Nest in the great City [Rome,] was most notorious for the Sin of Buggering Boys, and above all Men most addicted to Covetousness; and he who exhorted all Men to despise Death, did so mightily dread it himself, that he made it his business to procure Justin to be put to death, (as judging that to be the worst of Evils) because he preach'd the Truth, and manifestly proved, that the Philosophers were Gluttons and Deceivers. And this indeed was the true cause of Justin's Martyrdom.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning those Martyrs, whom Justin makes mention of in his Apology.

THE same Justin, before his own Martyrdom does in his (a) first Apology make mention of some others who suffer'd as Martyrs before him: Which words of his, because they are accommodate to our Subject, I will here recite: He writes thus; "A certain Woman had a Husband who led a lascivious and libidinous course of life; she herself also had formerly been addicted to lightness and dishoneſt behaviour; but after she had been acquainted with the Doctrine of Christ, she became modest and chaste, and made it her business to perswade her Husband to live in like manner continently and chastly; advertizing him of the Christian Precepts, and declaring to him the future punishment in eternal Flames prepared for such as lead an obscene and disorderly course of life. But he persevering in his wonted Lasciviousness, by such his doings, alienated his Wife's Affection from him. For the Woman at last judg'd it a wicked thing for her to co-habit with a Husband who wholly practised all manner of lustful courses, contrary to the Law of Nature, and disagreeable to Justice and Honesty; and therefore she resolved to be divorced from him. But the Woman was obedient to the Instructions of her Friends, who advised her to continue married a while longer, in expectation that her Husband would in future alter his mind, and ere long lead a more regular course of life; so she constrain'd her self and continued with him. But after this her Husband, having made a journey to Alexandria, was discover'd to have committed more notorious acts of lewdness: The Woman therefore (fearing, that by her continuing married to him, and by her being his Consort at bed and board, she should be partaker of his Wickednesses and Impieties) sent him that which we call a Bill of Divorce, and departed from him. But this excellent Fellow her Husband (who ought to have rejoyced, because his Wife (who formerly had committed lewdness with Servants and mercenary Fellows, and took delight in Drunkenness and all manner of Vice) did now both desist from those wicked doings, and also desired him to leave them off; which because he would not do she was divorc'd from him) drew up an Accusation against her, and said she was a Christian. And she presented a (b) Libel to thee, O Emperor; wherein she requested liberty might be allow'd her first to set in order her Domestick affairs; after which settlement she promised to put in an answer to her accusation. And you granted the Woman's petitions: but her (heretofore) Husband, being within that space (c) unable to say any thing against her, set upon one Ptolemæus (whom (d) Urbicus put to death) who had been the Woman's Instructor in the Christian Religion, after this manner: He perswaded a Centurion, who was his Friend, to apprehend Ptolemæus, and having put him in Bonds, to ask him this one question, Whether he were a Christian? And Ptolemæus, (being a lover of Truth, and no deceitful Person, nor Falsifier of his own Judgment) confessing that he was a Christian, the Centurion caused him to be bound in Fetters, and afflicted him with a long imprisonment. At length, when the Man was brought before Urbicius, he was again ask'd this one question, Whether he were a Christian? And he, assuredly knowing that he should obtain Glory and Happiness by the Doctrine of Christ, again made profession of that Divine and Virtuous Institution. For he that denies himself to be a Christian, declines the Confession of that Religion, either because he is a disallower as a denier of it, or in regard he knows himself to be unworthy of, and estranged from its Rules and Precepts; neither of which can happen to him that is a true Christian. When therefore Urbicius had given command that Ptolemæus should be led away to be put to death, one Lucius, (who also was a Christian,) considering the injustice of the Sen-

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

(a) It should be [in his second Apology, &c.] as the learned Petavius has conjectured (in his Notes on Hæres. 46. Epiph.) For Eusebius does not recount the Apologies of Justin in the same orderwhere-in they are now Printed. For that which in the ordinary Editions is termed the second, and is dedicated to Antoninus Pius, Eusebius calls the first, as appears from Chap. 12. Book 2. and from Chap. 12, and 18. Book 4. And that, which in the vulgar Editions is said to be his first Apology, and is dedicated to the Senate, Eusebius calls the second, (see Chap. 16. of this Book,) and says (Chap. 16 and 18 of this 4 Book,) it was presented to M. Aurelius Antoninus, after the death of Pius. As to the order of Justin's Apologies I agree with Eusebius, and do grant that to be the latter which in the vulgar Editions, is inscribed to the Senate. But whereas Eusebius says, Justin's former Apology was presented to M. Aurelius Antoninus; I cannot assent to him. For, in the beginning of that Apology Justin says, That the Woman (which was a Christian) being accused by her Husband, presented a Petition to the Emperor [and she presented a Libel to thee, O Emperor:] (See these Words in this Chapter.) Now if that Apology had been presented to the Successors of Antoninus Pius, as Eusebius thinks it was, doubtless Justin would have used the plural number, and said [To you, O Emperors:] For Marcus and Verus were both Emperors together. Again, Justin says, that one Lucius, seeing Ptolemæus a Christian led away to be put to death, used these Words to the Judge, [These judiciary Proceedings are misbecoming both Pius the Emperor, and the Son of Cæsar the Philosopher, &c.] (in Chap. 82. of this 4th Book, the reading is better, thus, [and the Philosopher] which is confirmed by our MSS.) Who therefore sees not, that Antoninus Pius is meant in these Words? For his surname [Pius] evidently shews so much; and [the Philosopher the Son of the Emperor] manifestly confirms this our Opinion. Lastly, Urbicus the Præfect (See Note d. in this Chap.) whom Justin there mentions, lived in the times of Antoninus Pius. For he was that Lollius Urbicus, who, being the Emperor's Deputy, appeased the Rebellion of the Britains, as Capitolinus relates in the Life of Antoninus. Apuleius (in the beginning of his Apology) affirms that this Lollius Urbicus was Præfect of the City in the Reign of Pius. These are the reasons by which I am induced to affirm, that the latter Apology of Justin was not presented to M. Aurelius, but to Antoninus Pius: Under which Emperor he suffer'd Martyrdom, and not under Marcus Aurelius, as Eusebius here places his Martyrdom: But, in his Chronicon (whom Georg. Syncellus also follows) he seems to place it in the Reign of Antoninus Pius; and so does Mich. Glycas, in Annal. Vales. Mr. Tho. Lydiat, in his Emend. Temp. says Justin suffered under this Emperor Antoninus Pius.

(b) That is, a Petition wherein the Woman requested of the Emperor, that the proceedings against her might be deferred, which delay was usually granted as well to the accused, as to the Accuser. See Cod. Theod. Tit. 36. ut intra annum, &c. Vales.

(c) To wit, which was prefix'd by the Emperor; who had granted the Woman's Petition, in regard it was reasonable and just. Vales.

(d) This Urbicus was Præfect of the City; whose sentence, pronounced against the two Christians Ptolemæus and Lucius, was the occasion of Justin's writing this Apology. He was called Q. Lollius Urbicus, as an old Inscription at Rome attests. See Apuleius, in defens. sua: Yet, 'tis strange that in all our Copies he is written Urbicius. In Justin he is now and then rightly called Urbicus, to wit, in the beginning of his Apology, and a little after that. Vales.

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

'tence that was pronounced, ſpake thus to Urbicius; what reaſon is there that thou ſhouldſt have condemn'd this Man, who is neither Adulterer, nor Fornicator, nor Murderer, nor Thief, nor Robber, and who is not in any wiſe convicted of any other wicked fact, but only owns and acknowledges the appellation of a Chriſtian? Such Judiciary Proceedings as theſe, O Urbicius! are misbecoming both Pius the Emperor, and the Son of Cæſar the Philoſopher, and alſo the Sacred Senate. But Urbicius made Lucius no other anſwer, only ſaid thus to him: You alſo ſeem to me to be ſuch an one, and when Lucius had ſaid that he was, Urbicius again gave command that he alſo ſhould be led away to be put to death. Lucius acknowledg'd himſelf much obliged to him; for I ſhall be deliver'd, ſaid he, from ſuch wicked Maſters, and go to a gracious God, who is my Father and King. And a third, ſtepping forth, was alſo condemn'd to undergo the ſame Puniſhment." After this, Juſtin does pertinently and agreeably introduce thoſe words (which we quoted before) ſaying, 'And I alſo my ſelf do expect to be treacherouſly betray'd by ſome one of thoſe called [Philoſophers,] and ſo forth.

CHAP. XVIII.

What Books of Juſtin's are come to our hands.

THIS perſon has left us many Monuments of his learn'd and moſt accompliſh'd (a) underſtanding, and alſo of his ſedulous diligence about Divine matters, full of variety of profit; to which we will remit ſuch as are lovers of learning, after we have uſefully remark'd ſuch of them as are come to our knowledge. The firſt therefore of his Books is his Supplication to Antoninus ſirnamed Pius, and his Sons, and to the Roman Senate, in behalf of our Religion; the ſecond contains another Apology for our Faith, which he preſented to Verus (who was Succeſſor to, and bore the ſame name with, the foreſaid Emperor Antoninus) whoſe times we are now giving an account of. There is alſo another Book of his againſt the Gentiles; wherein he treats at large, both of many Queſtions that are uſually diſputed both amongſt us and the Gentile-Philoſophers; and alſo declares his Opinion concerning the Nature of Spirits; which 'tis of no importance for us here to inſert. And further there is another Work of his againſt the Gentiles come to our hands, which he entitled, A Confutation: and beſides theſe another, concerning the Monarchy of God; which he confirms not only by the Authority of the Sacred Scriptures, but alſo from the Teſtimonies of the Writers amongſt the Gentiles. Moreover, he wrote another Book, the Title whereof is Pſaltes: and another, containing (b) ſome ſhort Notes concerning the Soul; wherein he propoſes divers Queſtions pertinent to the Explication of that Subject, and produces the Opinions of the Philoſophers among the Gentiles, which he promiſeth to confute, and to ſet forth his own Opinion thereof in another Work of his. He alſo compoſed a Dialogue againſt the Jews, being a Conference which he had at the City of Epheſus with one Trypho the moſt famous perſon amongſt the Jews at that time. In which Book he manifeſts, after what manner Divine Grace incited him to embrace the Doctrine of the true Faith; and with what ſedulous earneſtneſs he before that ſet himſelf about the ſtudy of Philoſophy, alſo with how great an ardency of mind he was laborious in finding out the truth. Moreover, in the ſame Book he relates concerning the Jews, how that they formed treacherous Plots and Contrivances againſt the Doctrine of Chriſt; and uſeth theſe expreſs words to Trypho: 'So far were you from a Repentance 'of your impious Doings, that you choſe out 'ſome Men fit for ſuch a deſign, and at that time 'ſent them forth from Jeruſalem over the whole 'World, to publiſh this, that there was an impi'ous Sect called Chriſtians ſprung up; and to di'vulge the ſame reproaches, which all thoſe that 'are ignorant of our Religion do now faſten up'on us; ſo that, you are not only the Authors of 'your own Wickedneſs and Error, but alſo give 'the ſole occaſion thereof to all other Men." He ſays alſo, in the ſame Work, that the Gifts of Prophecy even in his time ſhone forth upon the Church. Moreover he has mentioned the Revelation of John, and ſays expreſly it was written by that Apoſtle. Alſo he recites ſeveral Teſtimonies of the Prophets, which in his Diſpute with Trypho he evinces were cut out of the Bible by the Jews. Several other Works alſo of his are extant among many of our Chriſtian Brethren. Further, the Books of this perſon were ſo highly eſteemed by the Ancients, that Irenæus quotes ſome Expreſſions of his; partly in his fourth Book againſt Hereſies, where he produces theſe words of his: And Juſtin ſays well, in his Book againſt Marcion, I would not have credited the Lord himſelf, if he had preached any other God than him, who was the Maker of the World; and partly, in his fifth Book of the ſame Work, where he quotes theſe words of his: It was well ſpoken of Juſtin, to wit, that before the coming of our Lord, Satan never durſt blaſpheme God, becauſe till then he did not certainly (c) know his own Condemnation. And let thus much be here neceſſarily ſaid by us, to incite ſuch as are lovers of Learning, to have an high eſteem for, and accurately to read over, his Books. Thus far concerning Juſtin.

The ancient Græcians called [Scholia] ſome ſhort Notes; and diſtinguiſh'd them from Exegeticks: For Exegeticks were long and large Expoſitions, and explained the whole Work of a Writer: But Scholia were put to explain particular Words, or to expound one Sentence. Sometimes Scholia are called ſhort Expoſitions of more obſcure Words and Sentences. Such were Cyrill's Scholia concerning the Incarnation of the only-begotten Son of God, which are now extant, and are nothing elſe but ſome ſhort Explications of the more obſcure Queſtions concerning the Incarnation. And of this ſort was Juſtin's Book of the Soul; to wit, ſome Queſtions and Opinions, concerning the nature and origine of Souls; to which were added Juſtin's Expoſition and Demonſtration thereof. Jerom calls them Excerpta, which Origen termed χόλια. Valeſ.

(c) Epiphanius ſeems to have been of the ſame opinion. In his Panarium (lib. 1. Hereſ. 39. pag. 289. Edit. Petav.) he propoſeth to us, as a certain Truth, that the Devil, before the coming of Chriſt, ——ἐνόμιζε τετυχέναι τινὸς ἐλέους, was in hopes of grace and pardon; and that out of this perſwaſion of his, he never all that while ſhew'd himſelf refractory towards God; but that having underſtood by the manifeſtation of our Saviour, that there was left him no hopes of Salvation, he from thenceforth had grown exceedingly enraged, doing as much miſchief as poſſibly he could againſt Chriſt, and his Church. But this opinion (as the learned Petavius has obſerved in his Note on that paſſage) Vulgò non probatur, i. e. is not generally approved of, as true.

Who, in the Reign of Verus, preſided over the Churches of Rome and Alexandria.

NOW the foreſaid Emperor being in the eighth year of his Reign, Anicetus, having compleated the eleventh year of his Epiſcopal Dignity over the Roman Church, was ſucceeded by Soter. And moreover, Celadion, having preſided fourteen years over the Church at Alexandria, Agrippinus was his Succeſſor in that See.

Who then govern'd the Church of Antioch.

AT that time also Theophilus, the sixth from the Apostles, flourish'd in his Presidency over the Church at Antioch: For Cornelius, Successor to Heros, was the fourth that presided there; after whom Eros, in the fifth remove from the Apostles, succeeded in that Episcopal See.

CHAP. XXI.

Concerning the Ecclesiastical Writers who flourish'd in that Age.

IN those times Hegesippus flourish'd in the Church, of whom we have made frequent mention in the foregoing Book; and Dionysius Bishop of the Corinthians; also one Pinytus Bishop of the Cretians. Moreover, Philippus, Apollinaris, and Melito; Musanus also, and Modestus, and lastly Irenæus. All which Persons wrote Books that are come to our hands, containing the sound Doctrine and true Faith, delivered by the Apostles.

CHAP. XXII.

Concerning Hegesippus, and those he makes mention of.

MOreover, Hegesippus, in his five Books of Historical Memorials, which are come to our hands, has left a most full and compleat account of his own Faith and Opinion. Wherein he declareth, that travelling as far as Rome, he discoursed with many Bishops, and from them all heard one and the same Doctrine. You may please to hear him (a) after some words of his concerning the Epistle of Clemens to the Corinthians) continuing his discourse thus: 'And the Corinthian 'Church continued in the true Faith until Primus came to be Bishop there; with whom I 'had some discourse in my Voyage to Rome, and 'was conversant with the Corinthians a sufficient 'time; wherein we received mutual refreshment 'from the true Faith. But arriving at Rome, I '(b) stay'd there till Anicetus's time, whose Deacon Eleutherius then was: After Anicetus succeeded Soter, and next to him Eleutherius. Now in 'every Succession [of Bishops] and throughout 'each City the Doctrine is conformable to what 'the Law, the Prophets, and our Lord preach'd." And the same Author subjoyns an account of the Heresies which were broach'd in his Age, in these words: 'And after James the Just had suffer'd 'Martyrdom (as the Lord had also) for the Preaching of his Doctrine, Simeon the Son of Cleophas (which [Cleophas] was Uncle by the Mother's side to our Saviour) was constituted Bishop in his room; whom all preferr'd to be 'second Bishop there, because he was the Lord's '(c) Cousin-German by the Mother's side. Upon 'which account that Church was stiled a Virgin; for it was not hitherto corrupted with vain Opinions. (d) Thebuthis (because he was not made a Bishop) was the first that began to vitiate it. This Man was (e) one of those that took his Rise from the Seven Sects, which were amongst the [Jewish] People: of which Simon was another, from whom the Symonians; and Cleobius, from whom the Cleobians; (f) and Dositheus, from whom the Dositheans; and Gortheus, from whom the (g) Gortheans; and Masbotheus, from whom the Masbotheans, had their Denomination: From these also came the Menandrians, and the Marcionists, and the Carpocratians, and the Valentinians, and the Basilidians, and the Saturnilians; each of which Men in particular was an Introducer of his own Opinion. From these came the False Christs, the False Prophets, and the False Apostles; who rent asunder the Unity of the Church by their corrupt Opinions brought in against God, and his Christ." Moreover, the same Writer gives an account of the Heresies which were heretofore amongst the Jews, in these words: 'There 'were divers Sects and Opinions in the Circumcision among the Children of Israel, which were 'opposite both to the (h) Tribe of Judah, and also to Christ; to wit, the (i) Essæans, the (k) Galileans, the Hemerobaptists, the (l) Masbotheans, 'the Samarites, the Sadducees, and the Pharisees." And he writes many other things, of which we have partly made mention before, and inserted his Relations in their proper and opportune places and times. Also, he produces several Passages out of the Gospel according to the Hebrews, out of the Syriac [Gospel,] and particularly out of the Hebrew Tongue; whereby he plainly intimates himself to have been converted from being a Jew to the Faith of Christ. He makes mention also of other things as contain'd in the unwritten

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

(a) Instead of [μεγάλα τινά·] as it is in the King's MS. and in Rob. Stephens Edit. it should be [ὑπ' τινὰ, i. e. after some words; as we translate it. Vales.

(b) Sir H. Savil, at the Margin of his MS. made it [διατεῖσην ἐποιπαίμην] that is, I staied there. In Rob. Stephens Edit. 'tis [διαδεχήν.] Whether the Learned Knight corrected this passage from his own conjecture, or by the authority of some MS. Copy, is to me uncertain: However this Emendation is very necessary. Further, Eusebius quotes this passage of Hegesippus's in chap. 11. of this Book; between which place and this here there seems to be some disagreement. For Eusebius writes there, that Hegesippus came to Rome in the times of Anicetus, and staid there till Eleutherius was promoted to that See. But Hegesippus himself does not not say so here, only, that he staied at Rome until Anicetus was Bishop there. Therefore Hegesippus came thither about the latter end of Pius's Reign. Vales.

(c) See Note (a) on Chap. 11. Book 3.

(d) In the King's, the Maz. and Fuk. MSS. his name is ϑεβουθις, i. e. Thebuthis. In Rob. Stephens Edit. he is called ϑεβουλις, i. e. Thebulis. Rufinus, in his Version, calls him Theobutes, and Thobutes. Vales.

(e) That is, he was one that gathered up his Errors from the false Opinions of those seven Sects amongst the Jews; as did also Simon, Cleobius, Dositheus, &c. Vales.

(f) Some think that this Dositheus was much ancienter than these times he is here mentioned to have lived in: Drusius (in Respons. ad Minerval Seraii, cap. 10.) asserts he lived in the times of Sennacherib King of Assyria; and Jerom is of that opinion, as appears by what he says in Dialog. Advers. Luciferian. But Scaliger, (in Elencho trihæres.) and Origen (Book 1. against Celsus) affirm he lived since our Saviour's incarnation, and was co-temporary with Simon Magus. See Photii Bibliotheca, cap. 230. Vales.

(g) Or, Goratheans: For so these Hereticks are named in the King's, Maz. Med. Fuk. and Sir Hen. Savil's MSS. Vales.

(h) By this passage Hegesippus seems to have thought the Tribe of Judah clear of all Sects and Heresies; so that none of that tribe were followers of the Essens, Sadduces, and Pharisees, &c. But this is very improbable. Hegesippus said it only in favour of that Tribe, from whence Christ sprang. Vales.

(i) These were the seven Sects amongst the Jews; of which Hegesippus makes frequent mention, as may be seen from some quotations out of him, which occur in the foregoing Books. Justin (in disputat. advers. Triphon.) mentions them, but calls them by other names, to wit, Sadduces, Genists, Merists, Galilæans, Hellenians, Pharisees, and Baptists. Epiphanius terms them, Scribes, Pharisees, Sadduces, Essens, Nazareans, Hemerobaptists, and Herodians. Vales.

(k) Judas Galilæus was the original Author of this Sect, (says Josephus, Antiq. B. 18. chap. 2.) who having joyned Saddock, a Pharisee, to him, sollicited the People to defection, telling them, that God was to be their only Prince and Master, and no Mortal to be acknowledged as such; that the requiring a Tax from them, if it were by them paid, was a manifest profession of servitude, and that 'twas their duty to vindicate their Liberty; by which means he raised a great Sedition among the Jews, and was the cause (under pretence of defending the publick liberty) of innumerable mischiefs to the Nations. See Joseph. Antiq. B. 18. chap. 2.

(l) They are called also Marboneans and Morboncans; they must be distinguished from those whom Hegesippus mentions a little before; for these here were one of the seven Sects amongst the Jews; but those were propagated from the seven Sects; as were also the Simonians, Dositheans, &c. Vales.

written Traditions of the Jews. Now, not only he, but alſo Irenæus, and all the Ancients, do call the Proverbs of Solomon, the Book of Wiſdom that (m) contains the Precepts of all Virtue: and, treating of thoſe Books which are termed The Apocrypha, he relates that ſome of them were forg'd by certain Hereticks in his times. But we muſt now proceed to another Writer.

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

(m) Indeed Jerom gives this Epithet to that B. called The Wiſdom of Jeſus the Son of Sirach, (in his Preface to the Books of Solomon) his Words are theſe: Fertur & panæretos Jeſu filii Sirach liber, & alius pſeudepigraphus, qui ſapientia Solomonis inſcribitur. Quorum priorem Hebraicum reperi; non Eccleſiaſticum, ut apud Latinos, ſed parabolas prænotatum, &c.

CHAP. XXIII.

Concerning Dionyſius, Biſhop of the Corinthians, and the Epiſtles he wrote.

AND firſt we are to ſpeak of Dionyſius, who had the Epiſcopal Chair of the Corinthian Church; and liberally and copiouſly communicated his Divine Labours, not only to thoſe committed to his charge, but alſo to ſuch as inhabited Countreys remote and at a great diſtance; rendring himſelf moſt ſerviceable and uſeful to all perſons, by thoſe general Epiſtles he wrote to divers Churches. Of which number one is that to the Lacedæmonians, containing the firſt Rudiments of, and Inſtitutions in, the true Faith; and moreover an Exhortation to Peace and Unity. Another of them is that to the Athenians, which is excitatory to Faith, and to lead a life anſwerable to the Precepts of the Goſpel: In which Point he reproves the negligence of [the Athenians] who had in a manner apoſtatized from the Faith, ſince the time that Publius their Biſhop ſuffer'd Martyrdom, during the Perſecutions which then hapned: He makes mention alſo of (a) Quadratus, who was conſtituted their Biſhop after the Martyrdom of Publius; and atteſts, that by his labour and induſtry, the Congregations [of the Chriſtians] were re-aſſembled, and the ardour of their Faith revived, and re-kindled. He relates moreover, that Dionyſius the Areopagite (who was converted to the Faith by the Apoſtle Paul, according to the account given in the Acts of the Apoſtles) was made the firſt Biſhop of the Athenian Church. There is alſo extant another Epiſtle of his to the Nicomedians, wherein he impugneth the Hereſie of Marcion, and ſtrenuouſly aſſerts and defends the exact Rule of Truth: He wrote likewiſe to the Church at Gortyna, and to the reſt of the Churches in Creet; and commends Philip their Biſhop, becauſe the Church under his charge was renown'd for many ſignal Acts of Fortitude; and admoniſhes them to uſe caution againſt the Deceit and Perverſeneſs of Hereticks: And in the Epiſtle he wrote to the Church of Amaſtris, together with the other Churches throughout Pontus, he mentions Bacchylides and Elpiſtus, as being the Perſons that incited him to write: He annexes likewiſe ſeveral Expoſitions of Holy Scripture, and by name mentions Palma their Biſhop. He recommends to them many things concerning Marriage and Chaſtity, and commands thoſe that recover from any Lapſe whatſoever, (whether Viciouſneſs, or Heretical Error) to be affectionately receiv'd. In the ſame Volume is contain'd another Epiſtle to the Gnoſſians, wherein he admoniſhes Pinytus the Biſhop of that Church, not to impoſe the heavy Yoke of Continency upon the Brethren, as if 'twere neceſſary; but to have a regard to the Infirmity of moſt Men. To which Pinytus returning an anſwer, does greatly admire and extol Dionyſius; but withal exhorts him, that in future he would impart ſtronger Food, and nouriſh up the People under his charge by ſending again to them ſome Letters that contain more perfect and ſolid Doctrine; leſt being continually accuſtom'd to ſuch milky expreſſions, they ſhould grow old in a childiſh Diſcipline. In which Epiſtle, both the Orthodox Faith of Pinytus, and his ſolicitude for the Proficiency of thoſe under his care; his Eloquence alſo, and Underſtanding in Divine matters, is moſt accurately and to the life repreſented. Moreover, there is extant an Epiſtle of Dionyſius's to the Romans, ſuperſcrib'd to Soter, at that time the Biſhop there; out of which 'tis not amiſs here to inſert ſome words, wherein he much commends the uſage and cuſtom of the Romans, obſerv'd by them even until the times of the Perſecution rais'd in our own (b) Age. He writes thus; 'For this hath been 'your cuſtom even from the beginning [of your 'Converſion to Chriſtianity] to be divers ways be- 'neficial to all the Brethren, and to ſend relief to 'moſt Churches throughout every City; ſome- 'times ſupplying the Wants of ſuch as are in ne- 'ceſſity; at others, furniſhing thoſe Brethren 'with Neceſſaries that are condemn'd to work in 'the Mines. By ſuch charitable Gifts, which from 'the beginning you have been accuſtom'd to tranſ- 'mit to others, being Romans, you retain the cu- 'ſtom receiv'd from your Roman Fore-fathers. 'Which uſage your bleſſed Biſhop Soter has not 'only diligently obſerv'd, but greatly improv'd; 'being both inſtrumental, and ready in the con- 'veyance of your Bounty deſign'd for the Saints; 'and alſo comforting with bleſſed words (as a ten- 'der and affectionate Father does his Children) 'thoſe Brethren that come 'as (c) Strangers to you." In the ſame Epiſtle alſo he makes mention of the Epiſtle of Clemens to the Corinthians, and manifeſts that 'twas very anciently cuſtomary to recite it publickly in the preſence of the Church: for he ſays, '(d) This day therefore, being the Holy-day of 'the Lord, we have now paſs'd over, wherein we 'read over your Epiſtle; which (as alſo the for- 'mer Epiſtle of Clemens's written to us) we conti- 'nuing to read henceforward, ſhall abound with 'moſt excellent Precepts and Inſtructions." Fur- ther, the ſame Writer ſpeaking of his own Epiſtles which by ſome Forgers were corrupted, ſays thus: 'For I wrote ſome Epiſtles, being thereto 'requeſted by the Brethren; but the Emiſſaries of 'the Devil have fill'd them with Darnel; expun- 'ging ſome Paſſages out of them, and adding o- 'ther ſome; for whom a Woe is reſerv'd. 'Tis no 'wonder therefore, that ſome attempt to adulte- 'rate the Holy Writings of the Lord, ſince they 'have baſely falſified ſuch as are of an inferior Au- 'thority." Beſides theſe, there is extant another Epiſtle of Dionyſius's, written to Chryſophora a moſt faithful Siſter, to whom he writes what is agreeable, and imparts to her ſuch Spiritual Food as is convenient for her. Thus much concerning the Writings of Dionyſius.

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

(a) This Quadratus, I judge, is not the ſame Perſon with that Quadratus, the Diſciple of the Apoſtles, mentioned by Euſebius (Book 3. chap. 37.) For the Quadratus laſt-named was not a Biſhop, as it plainly appears from the foreſaid place of Euſebius. But, that Quadratus (ſpoken of by our Author at the beginning of this fourth Book) who preſented an Apology to Adrian for our Religion, was the Diſciple of the Apoſtles, as Euſebius in his Chronicon expreſly affirms. Now this Quadratus here ſpoken of (who was Biſhop of the Athenians) muſt, as I ſaid, be diſtinguiſhed from Quadratus the Diſciple of the Apoſtles: For this latter lived not beyond the times of Adrian; but he that was Biſhop of the Athenians, governed that Church in the times of M. Antoninus, as 'tis evident from Dionyſius's Epiſtle to the Athenians; for he ſpeaks of him, as being his co-temporary: Now Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth flouriſh'd in the Reign of M. Antoninus. Valeſ.

(b) He means the perſecution in Diocletian's Reign. Valeſ.

(c) Dionyſius means thoſe Brethren, who uſually came from remote Countrys to Rome, to procure ſome relief for ſuch as in their own Country were in diſtreſs, and neceſſity. Valeſ.

(d) To this fragment of Dionyſius's Epiſtle to the Roman Clergy, is to be joined that other paſſage of the ſame Epiſt. quoted by our Euſebius (chap. 25. B. 2.) Valeſ.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning Theophilus, Bishop of the Antiochians.

THere are extant of this Theophilus's (whom we declared to have been Bishop of the Antiochian Church) three Books written to Autolycus, containing the first Rudiments of the Faith. He has another Tract also extant, entitled, Against the Heresie of (a) Hermogenes, wherein he quotes Authorities out of the Revelation of St. John: There are besides some other Books of his, wherein are deliver'd the first Principles of our Faith. Moreover, whenas in that Age the Hereticks (like Darnel) did nevertheless corrupt the pure Seed of the Apostolick Doctrine, the Pastors of Churches were every-where very earnest and industrious to chase them away (being as it were Savage and Wild Beasts) from the Sheep of Christ; partly by admonishing and exhorting the Brethren; and partly by encountring valiantly with the Hereticks themselves; whom they either confuted by dint of Arguments and unwritten Questions propounded face to face, or else disproved their Opinions by written Treatises most accurately compiled. That Theophilus therefore did, together with others, engage these Hereticks, 'tis manifestly apparent from that elaborate piece, (not unworthy of himself) which he wrote against Marcion; which Book, together with those others we have recounted, is at this present time extant. Further, Maximinus, the seventh from the Apostles, succeeded this person in the Bishoprick of the Antiochian Church.

(a) Concerning this Hermogenes, and his Heresie, see Baronius, ad annum Christi 170. But, I cannot give my assent to him, as to what he affirms, viz. that Hermogenes taught in Asia. Vales. The Heresie of this Hermogenes is related by Theodoret. (Heret. fab. L. 1. cap. 19.)

οὗτος (ὁ Ἑρμογένης) τὸ κυρίου τὸ σῶμα ἐν τῷ ἡλίῳ ἐτέθειν ἀποκεῖσθαι, ᾧ ὃ διάβολον καὶ τὰς δαίμονας εἰς τὴν ὕλην ἀναχεῖσθαι· i. e. This Hermogenes asserted, that the Body of the Lord was deposited in the Sun: And that the Devil and the Evil Spirits should be turned into Mater. The Seleuciani and Hermiani taught the same; to wit, That the Body of Christ ascended no farther than the Sun; the occasion of which assertion they took from those Words of the Psalmist, Psal. 19. 5. which in St. Jerom's Translation is thus rendred, In sole posuit tabernaculum suum: But in the Psalms used in our Liturgy 'tis thus worded, In them hath he set a Tabernacle for the Sun. See Dr. Hammond on that Text. The same opinion Gregory Nazianzen attributeth to the Manicheans, Epist. 1. ad Cledonium, and S. August. Tract 34. in Joh. This opinion is more largely and clearly set down, but without a name, in the Catena patrum on Psal. 18. where 'tis said, that these [Hereticks] assert, that after his Resurrection, our Saviour deposited his Body in the Sphere of the Sun, to be preserved there till his second coming.

CHAP. XXV.

Concerning Philippus and Modestus.

MOreover, Philippus (who, as we are inform'd by the words of Dionysius [even now quoted] was Bishop of the Church at Gortyna) compiled also a most elaborate piece against Marcion: So likewise did Irenæus, and Modestus. But this person last-named did most excellently (even better than the other Writers) detect the Errors and Frauds of the Man, and exposed them to the view of the World. Several others also wrote, whose Labours are to this day with exquisite care preserv'd by many of the Brethren.

CHAP. XXVI.

Concerning Melito, and what he has made mention of.

ALso, at that time Melito, Bishop of the Church at Sardis, and Apollinaris Prelate of the Church at Hierapolis, flourish'd and were eminently famous. Each of which Persons did severally dedicate an Apology written in defence of our Faith to the foresaid Roman Emperor, who reign'd at that time. The Books of each of them, which are come to our knowledge, are these that follow. Two Books of Melito's concerning Easter; one of his, (a) concerning the true way of Converse, and of the Prophets: another concerning the Church; and a third, concerning the Lord's-Day: Moreover, one, concerning the Nature of Man, and another, about the Frame and Composure of Man; and one, concerning the (b) Obedience of the Senses and their Subjection to Faith; and moreover, one Book, concerning the Soul, the Body and the Mind: a Book, concerning Baptism; one, of Truth; one, concerning the (c) Origination and Generation of Christ: his Book of Prophecy; another, concerning Hospitality; and that entitled, The Key: besides one, concerning the Devil, and, of the Revelation of John; and another, about the Incarnation of God; and lastly, his Apology to Antoninus. Now, in his Books concerning Easter, to wit, in the beginning of that Work, he declares the time when he wrote, in these words, 'Servilius Paulus being Proconsul of Asia, at that time 'when Sagaris suffer'd Martyrdom, there arose a great 'Controversie at Laodicea 'concerning Easter, which 'hapned to fall on those 'days in its due season; 'at which time I wrote 'these Books." Clemens Alexandrinus makes mention of this Book, in his Piece concerning Easter; which Book of Melito's was, as he says, the occasion of his composing that Work. Now, in that Book dedicated to the Emperor, he relates what was acted against us Christians in his Reign. 'For now, says he, that sort 'of Men who are pious and 'holy are persecuted, (a 'thing which was never be-'fore done) and molested 'with new Decrees through-'out all Asia. For most impudent Informers, 'who are desirous to possess themselves of other 'Men's Goods, taking an occasion from the Im-'perial Edicts, do openly commit Robberies, and 'day and night take away the Goods of innocent 'Persons." And, after some words, he continues thus; 'Now, if all this be done by your command, 'let it pass for an orderly and due way of pro-'ceeding. For a just Emperor can never decree 'or authorize any thing that is unjust: and 'we willingly undergo the Reward of such 'a death. This request only we humbly make 'to you, that you yourself would first take 'cognizance

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

(a) In all our MSS. Copies this title [concerning the true way of converse and of the Prophets] evidently appears to be the title but of one Book. Jerom (in his Book de Eccles. Scriptor. which is almost wholly taken out of Eusebius) entitles this piece of Melito's thus [De vitâ Prophetarum, i. e. concerning the life of the Prophets. Vales.

(b) Melito wrote a Book upon this Subject, because there were some Hereticks who asserted, that such Men as were carnal, believed by the help of their senses; but those were spiritual believed by reason. So Heraclio expounded that Text in St. John's Gospel, (chap. 4. 48.) Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe. Which words Heraclio said, were properly directed to those, who by works and their senses had the nature of obeying, but not of believing thro' reason. Origen (Tome 13. Enarrat. on St. John's Gospel) mentions, and confutes this Opinion: Where he declares, that neither spiritual nor carnal Men can believe, unless it be by sense. Vales.

(c) In the Mazar. Med. and Fuld. MSS. and in Nicephorus, this Book of Melito's is intitled [περὶ κτίσεως, &c.] i. e. concerning the Origination, &c. which reading, we doubt not but is true. Rufinus, as appears by his Version, and Robert Stephens, as may be seen in his Edit. read [περὶ πίστεως,] i. e. concerning Faith, &c. The ancient Fathers, who lived before the Nicene Council, meant (by the word [κτίσεως]) not only such a creation as is made out of nothing, but also all sort of production whatsoever, and therefore the divine Origination of the Word. Those Words of the Apostle (Colos. 1. 15.) The first-born of every Creature, they asserted, were to be understood of the eternal Generation of the Son. Vales. But as Dr. Hammond observes in his Notes on that Text; πρωτότοκος, i. e. first-born, is used sometimes for a Lord, or Person in power, who hath the priviledge of the first-born, dominion over all his brethren: And according to this notion (continues he) 'tis used commonly in Scripture for a Prince, or principal Person. See Psal. 68. 27. Job 18. 13. Or it may peculiarly refer to his Resurrection, in which he was the first-born from the dead. See Hammond on Colos. 1. 15.

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

'take cognizance of (d) them that are Sufferers 'of this vexatious Moleſtation; and then deter- 'mine impartially, whether they are worthy of 'Puniſhment and Death; or deſerve to live in 'peace and quietneſs. But if this Decree, and 'this new Edict (which ought not to have been 'eſtabliſh'd againſt the moſt 'barbarous Enemies) does 'not proceed from you, then 'we more earneſtly beſeech 'you, not to be unmindful 'of us, nor permit us to be 'any longer infeſted with 'theſe publick Rapines." Then, after the interpoſition of ſome words, he adds thus much; 'For this Sect of Phi- 'loſophy, which we profeſs, 'at firſt flouriſh'd amongſt 'the (e) Barbarians. But when, 'in the Reign of the Great 'Auguſtus Your Progenitor, 'it began to be eminent and conſpicuous in Your 'Provinces; it brought with it moſt fortunate 'and proſperous ſucceſs to Your Empire. For 'from that time the power of the Roman Empire 'began to be eminently great, and was much 'augmented. Of which Empire You by ſucceſ- 'ſion are the moſt acceptable Inheritor that 'could be wiſh'd for, and ſhall ſo continue, to- 'gether with your (f) Son, 'if you will be the Defender 'of that Religion which was 'nurs'd up together with 'Your Empire, which took 'its beginning under the 'Reign of the Great Au- 'guſtus; and which Your 'Anceſtors did, together 'with other Religions, both 'eſteem and reverence: and 'this is a moſt certain evi- 'dence that our Religion '(which flouriſh'd together 'with Your happily-begun 'Empire) brought with it 'publick ſucceſs and proſpe- 'rity; to wit, that from the 'time of Auguſtus's Reign 'no unſucceſsful accident hath intervened; but 'on the contrary ſuch ſplendour and magnifi- 'cence hath always attended Your Empire, as is 'agreeable to the Deſires and Prayers of all men. 'Of all the Emperors, only (g) Nero and Domitian '(induced thereto by the perſwaſion and advice 'of ſome malevolent perſons) endeavour'd to fix 'a calumny and reproach upon our Religion. 'From whom that falſe and malicious detraction 'hapned to be convey'd down to ſucceeding 'times, agreeable to the uſage of the rude Mul- 'titude, which irrationally gives credit to ſuch 'groundleſs rumours. But Your pious Ance- 'ſtors corrected their ignorance; and by fre- 'quent Reſcripts reproved ſuch as audaciouſly 'attempted to be inſolent and vexatious towards 'thoſe of our Religion. Amongſt whom Your 'Grandfather Adrian wrote both to Fundanus Pro- 'conſul of Aſia, and alſo to many other [Gover- 'nours of Provinces;] and (h) your Father, even 'at that time when You were his Colleague in 'the Empire, wrote to the Cities that they ſhould 'not raiſe Tumults, nor commit any Inſolencies 'againſt us; namely to the Lariſſeans, to the Theſ- 'ſalonians, the Athenians and to all the Grecians. 'But we moſt confidently perſwade our ſelves 'that You (who retain the ſame Opinion con- 'cerning us that your Anceſtors had; yea, who 'are inclined to be much more gracious and mild 'towards us, and to entertain wiſer and diſcree- 'ter thoughts concerning us,) will do whatſo- 'ever we requeſt of you." This Paſſage is ex- tant in the fore-mentioned Apology of Melito. The ſame Author (in that Book of Extracts and Collections written by him) does, at the beginning of that Work, make a Catalogue of thoſe Books of the Old Teſtament that by general conſent are acknowledg'd as Canonical: Which Catalogue I judg'd neceſſary to be here inſerted: It is word for word thus: 'Melito to Oneſimus the Brother ſend- 'eth greeting. Whereas, becauſe of your love to, 'and diligence beſtow'd about, the Word of God, 'you have often requeſted me to make you ſome 'ſhort Collections and Excerptions, both out of the 'Law and the Prophets, about thoſe things that 'belong to our Saviour, and all the Articles of 'our Faith; and moreover, you being very de- 'ſirous to have an accurate account of the Books 'of the Old Teſtament, how many they are in 'number, and in what order they were written; 'I have made it my buſineſs to do all this, and to 'ſatisfie your deſire herein. For I well know 'with what an ardour of Faith you are inflamed, 'and how earneſt your deſires are after Know- 'ledge; and that, by reaſon of your love of God, 'you greatly prefer theſe before all other things, 'ſtriving earneſtly to obtain eternal ſalvation. 'When therefore I travelled into the Eaſt, and 'came into that Country where theſe things were 'heretofore preach'd and done, I made an accurate 'enquiry about the Books of the Old Teſtament, 'a Catalogue whereof I have herewith ſent you. 'Their names are theſe; The five Books of Moſes, 'to wit, Geneſis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deu- 'teronomy: Joſhua, Judges, Ruth: the four Books 'of the Kings; the two Books of the Chronicles: the 'Pſalms of David, the Proverbs of Solomon, which 'is alſo called the Book of Wiſdom; Eccleſiaſtes, the 'Song of Solomon, Job, the Prophecies of Eſaiah, and 'Jeremiah: one Book of the Twelve [minor] Pro- 'phets, Daniel, Ezekiel, Eſdras. Out of theſe I 'have made ſome ſhort Collections, which I have 'divided into ſix Books." But thus much con- cerning the Writings of Melito.

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

(d) Theſe words are to be underſtood of the Chriſtians; which appears from what follows. For Melito deſires of the Emperor, that he would firſt look into and examine the cauſe of the Chriſtians; and then determine, whether they deſerved to be puniſhed, or rather preſerved in ſafety. Valeſ.

(e) So he terms the Jews, amongſt whom the Chriſtian Religion firſt ſprang up. Upon this account Porphyrius (whoſe Words Euſebius quotes Book 6. chap. 19. of this work) termed the Chriſtian Religion [Θάῤῥαλεον τὸ νεωτερισμα] i. e. an audacious Sect that had its beginning amongſt Barbarians. Valeſ.

(f) From this place it is evident, that Melito the Biſhop preſented his Apology to M. Antoninus after the death of Aurelius Verus. For, if Verus had been then living, when Melito wrote this Apology, he would doubtleſs have mentioned him here; and in ſtead of theſe words [together with your Son] would certainly have ſaid [together with your brother.] For L. Verus was the adopted Brother of M. Aurelius. Seeing therefore, Melito does here mention only the Son of M. Antoninus (to wit, Commodus) 'tis manifeſt, as I ſaid, that this Apology was preſented to Marcus after the death of L. Verus. And therefore Euſebius (in his Chronicon) places it on the 10th year of M. Aurelius, to wit, the year after Verus's death. Valeſ.

(g) The ſame is aſſerted by Tertullian (Apologet. cap. 5.) whoſe words our Euſebius quotes, partly at chap. 25. B. 2. and partly at chap. 20. B. 3.

(h) The Reſcript of Antoninus Pius (who is here meant) in favour of the Chriſtians, is not now extant. 'Tis mentioned in the Reſcript of M. Aurelius Antoninus to the Cities of Aſia, which Euſebius has ſet down in chap. 13. of this Book. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXVII.

Concerning Apollinaris, Biſhop of the Hierapolitan Church.

(a) ALtho' ſeveral Books written by Apollinaris are extant among many Men, yet theſe only of his are come to our knowledge; to wit, His Apology to the foreſaid Emperor; his five Books againſt the Gentiles; his two Books concerning

(a) In our MSS. Maz. Med. and Fuk. there is in this place no beginning of a new chapter, but this 27 chapt. which treats concerning Apollinaris, and the following chapt. concerning Muſanus, are both annex'd to chap. 26. the title whereof in our ſaid MSS. is this [Concerning Melito, and what he has made mention of, Apollinaris, and Muſanus;] which diviſion Robert Stephens followed in the body of this fourth Book. For in the Contents prefix'd before this 4th Book, he follows the King's MS. and makes three chap. here, to wit, one of Melito, another concerning Apollinaris, and a third concerning Muſanus: But in the body of that Book he follows the Med. MS. (as he always does in this particular) and has put no diſtinction of a new chap. here; but hath made all the three chapters into one. We following the authority of the King's MS. have divided them into three chap. and the ſame was done before, in the Geneva-Impreſſion of Euſebius's Hiſtory. Valeſ.

Truth

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

Truth; and his (b) two Books against the Jews. Also, those Books he wrote afterwards against the Heresie of the (c) Cataphrygians, which not long after occasion'd great Disturbances; but at that time it began to make its first appearance, Montanus with his False Prophets then laying the foundation of his Error. And this is what he had to say concerning Appollinaris.

(b) These Words [His two Books against the Jews] are not in the Maz. Med. nor Fuk. MSS. nor in that Copy Rufinus made use of, as appears from his Version; nor yet in Jerom's B. de Eccles. Scriptor. where he reckons up all Apollinaris's Books. But Nicephorus mentions them in his History. Vales. (c) Mr. Tho. Lydiat (in his Emend. Tempor.) says, this Heresie began in the times of M. Aurelius and L. Verus; the Author whereof was Montanus.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Concerning Musanus, and his Writings.

THere is extant of Musanus's (whom we mention'd a little before) a most sharp piece written by him to some Brethren, who turn'd to the Heresie of the Encratitæ; which then first sprang up, and introduced a new and most pernicious false Opinion into the World. Tatianus, as report says, was the Author of this Heresie.

CHAP. XXIX.

Concerning Tatianus and his Heresie.

(a) The Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil MSS. and also Nicephorus, call him Saturninus. Epiphanius and Theodoret name him Saturnilus; and Hegesippus terms those Hereticks, which had their name from him, Saturnilians. See chap. 22. of this B. 4. Vales.

WE mean that Tatianus, whose words we quoted a little before, treating concerning the admirable Justin; who, we told you, was a Disciple of that Martyr's. Irenæus evidences this in his first Book against Heresies, where he writes thus concerning this Tatianus and his Heresie. 'From (a) Saturninus and Marcion sprang those Hereticks called Encratitæ, who taught that Marriage was unlawful; rejecting that primitive Institution of God, and tacitly accused him, because he created Male and Female for the Propagation of Mankind. They were assertors also of an Abstinence from the eating those things, that (as they termed them) had life; shewing hereby their Ingratitude towards God who created all things. They deny likewise that the first Man was saved. And this is a Tenet lately invented amongst them, of which impious assertion one Tatianus was the first broacher. Who having been an Auditor of Justin, as long as he convers'd with him, discloses no such false Opinions: But after his Martyrdom, he revolted from the Church, and being arrogant and puft up with the conceit of his being an (b) Ecclesiastical Doctor (as if he were better than any body else) he was the Composer of a new Form of Doctrine of his own making, inventing Stories about invisible Ages, in the same manner as Valentinus did; and asserting with Marcion and Saturninus, that Matrimony was nothing less than Corruption and Whoredom; and framing some new Arguments to disprove the Salvation of Adam. Thus far Irenæus [concerning the Heresie of the Encratitæ which then was broacht.] But not long after, one whose name was (c) Severus did consolidate and strengthen the foresaid Heresie, and so was the occasion that the Followers of that Sect were called, by reason of his name, Severiani. They approve indeed of the Law, the Prophets, and the Gospels, expounding the sentences of Holy Scripture according to a peculiar sense and meaning of their own; but they speak reproachfully of the Apostle Paul, and reject his Epistles; neither do they admit of the Acts of the Apostles. But Tatianus, their first Founder, put together a confused heap of Collections extracted out of the four Gospels, which he entitled a (d) Diatessaron, i. e. a Gospel made up of the four Gospels: Which Book is at this time extant in the hands of some Men. They say also, that he was so audacious as to alter some sayings of the Apostle Paul's, and to express them in more elegant terms, undertaking to correct the Composition and Order of his Phrase. He left a very great number of Books, among which, his (e) Book against the Grecians is look'd upon to be an excellent piece, and is commended by most Men: In which Work, giving an account of the Series of Times in the former Ages of the World, he has made it evident that Moses and the Prophets amongst the Hebrews, were much more ancient, than all the famous Men amongst the Grecians. Indeed that Book of his seems to be the best and most useful piece of all his Writings. But thus far concerning these things.

(b) Jerom (in his Book de Script. Eccles.) takes the word [διδάσκαλον] in such a sense as to signifie a master of Eloquence. Such an one Tatianus was before his conversion to the Christian Religion, as may be seen from chap. 16. of this 4th Book. But I rather think, that by [διδάσκαλον] (which is the term in the original) should be meant [an Ecclesiastical Doctor] which sense of that term the following Words of Irenæus do confirm; for he says, He was the composer of a new form of Doctrine of his own making. Vales.

(c) Epiphanius makes this Severus to be ancienter than Tatianus; which is a mistake, as 'tis evident from these Words of Eusebius. Irenæus makes no mention of this Severus. Theodoret (in his first Book Hæret. fabul.) has rightly placed Severus after Tatianus. Vales.

(d) Epiphanius (in Hæres. 46.) says, this work of Tatianus's is by some called, The Gospel according to the Hebrews. But that Gospel is more ancient than Tatianus. For Hegesippus, who flourish'd some years before Tatianus, makes mention of the Gospel according to the Hebrews, as Eusebius tells us, chap. 12. of this Book: Papias also quotes a passage out of that Gospel, as our Author asserts about the close of the 3d Book. Vales.

CHAP. XXX.

Concerning Bardesanes the Syrian, and those Books of his that are extant.

FUrther, in the Reign of the same Emperor, when Heresies were numerous in (a) Mesopotamia, one Bardasanes a most eloquent Man in the Syrian tongue, and an excellent Disputant, wrote some Dialogues against Marcion and several others, who were Authors and Assertors of different Opinions, which he publish'd in his own Country-language; as also many other Works which his Scholars (for he had very many Auditors, and was a powerful Maintainer of our Faith) translated out of the Syriack into the Grecian language. Amongst which is his Dialogue concerning Fate, written to (b) Antoninus, an incomparable piece. 'Tis said he wrote several other Tracts, upon occasion of the Persecution at that time raised against us. This Man was at first a Follower of Valentinus's; but having mislik'd that Heresie, and confuted many of the fabulous Tenets of the Founder thereof, he was satisfied in himself that he had turn'd to a truer Opinion; but notwithstanding he did not wholly clear himself of the filth of his ancient Heresie. Moreover, at the same time Soter Bishop of the Roman Church departed this Life.

(a) Tatianus, who was the Founder of the Heresie of the Encratitæ, lived in Mesopotamia, and there publish'd his Heresie, as Epiphanius attests. And the same may be concluded from what Theodoret writes, to wit, that he found above 200 Copies of the Gospel made by Tatianus in the Churches of Osdroëno. Vales.

(b) It's doubtful whether Antoninus the Emperor, or one of that name, who was a follower of Tatianus's, be here meant. It is not likely that Bardesanes should dedicate his Books to the Roman Emperor, which he wrote in the Syriack language. Besides, Eusebius (in his 6 B. de præparat.) does declare that Bardesanes dedicated his Dialogues to his Followers and Friends. Vales.

Of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory

The PREFACE.

M. Aurelius and L. Verus. MOreover, Soter Biſhop of the Roman Church having preſided there eight years, ended his Life. In whoſe place ſucceeded Eleutherus, the twelfth from the Apoſtles. It was then the (a) ſeventeenth year of the Emperor Antoninus Verus; at which time a more ſharp Perſecution being in ſome Parts of the World raiſed againſt us by a Popular Incurſion throughout every City; how vaſt the Number was of ſuch Perſons as were dignified with Martyrdom over the whole World, may be conjectured from what happen'd in one Province. Which things were by accident put in writing and tranſmitted to Poſterity, as being truly worthy of an indelible remembrance. Now the Acts, which contain a moſt perfect and compleat Account of theſe things, are ſet down entire in that Collection we made of the Martyrs; which comprehends not only an Hiſtorical Relation of what was done, but alſo Rules and Precepts of Piety and Holineſs: But notwithſtanding, we will from thence at preſent make a Selection of ſuch Paſſages as are agreeable to the Subject we now have in hand, and here inſert them. Other Hiſtorians indeed have wholly made it their buſineſs to record in their Works warlike Victories, and Trophies erected againſt their conquer'd Enemies; the Valour of Generals, and brave Exploits of Souldiers, beſmear'd with Blood, and polluted with innumerable Slaughters, in defence of their Children, Country, and Eſtates: But we, who ſet forth the Hiſtory of a Divine Society of Men, will record upon immortal Monuments, inſcribed with indelible Characters, the moſt pacate Wars, waged for the obtaining of Spiritual Peace; and the valiant Acts of thoſe Perſons who in ſuch Encounters contended more for the Truth than their Country, and for Religion rather than their deareſt Relations: publiſhing for the perpetual remembrance of Poſterity, the continued earneſtneſs of thoſe Champions who fought for Piety, their Fortitude in undergoing manifold Torments, the Trophies erected againſt the Devils, the victorious Conqueſts obtain'd over inviſible Adverſaries, and laſt of all, their Crowns. M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

(a) The Perſecution of the Chriſtians in the Reign of Marcus raged not everywhere at the ſame time; nor was it ended in one years ſpace. In Aſia it began firſt in the ſeventh year of M. Antoninus; and that not by the Edict of the Emperor, but by a tumultuous Inſurrection of the Populace againſt them: Where it laſted to the end of that Emperor's Reign, as 'tis evident from theſe Words in Melito's Apology [For from that time the power of the Roman Empire began to be eminently great, and was much augmented: Of which Empire you by ſucceſſion are the moſt acceptable Inheritor that could be wiſh'd for, and ſhall ſo continue together with your Son, &c. See chap. 26. B. 4. note (f).] Now, Commodus was by his Father received as his Partner in the Empire, when Melito preſented this Apology to the Emperor. His being made Colleague in the Empire, 'tis evident, happened about the latter end of M. Antoninus's Reign: Wherefore the Perſecution of the Chriſtians in Aſia muſt neceſſarily have laſted till that time. But this Perſecution was more ſharp and violent in Aſia, in the Gallias, and in other Provinces, in the ſeventeenth year of the ſaid Antoninus, as Euſebius does here ſay expreſly. See Baronius, ad annum Chriſti 179. Valeſ.

CHAP. I.

How many, in the Reign of Verus, underwent moſt ſore Perſecutions in France for Religion; and after what manner they ſuffered.

NOW France was the Country, wherein the place for performance of the foremention'd Combats was appointed. The chief Mother-Cities whereof, (and which be more eminently famous than the other Cities there) are Lyons and Vienna; through both which the River Rhone paſſes, encompaſſing with a great and rapid Stream that whole Region. The Churches therefore that were moſt eminent in thoſe Parts ſent an account in writing concerning their Martyrs to the Churches throughout Aſia and Phrygia; relating, after this manner, what was done amongſt them: for I will inſert their very words: (a) The

(a) There ariſes here a double queſtion; (1.) Why this Epiſtle was written jointly by the two Churches, that of Vienna, and that of Lyons? (2.) Why the French wrote in Greek to the Churches of Aſia and Phrygia? As to the firſt, I ſuppoſe it was for this reaſon done, becauſe the Churches of Vienna and Lyons were joyned together, not only by vicinity of place, but alſo by the bonds of mutual Love. And ſeeing they had together been engaged in the ſame Perſecution, they jointly wrote an Epiſtle concerning their own Martyrs. Beſides, both Provinces ſeem at that time to have been under the juriſdiction of one Preſident; which may be conjectured from hence, becauſe as well they of Vienna, as thoſe of Lyons, are in this Epiſtle ſaid to have been by the Preſident apprehended, and condemned for the Faith of Chriſt. Theſe therefore are the reaſons why they wrote jointly. For that which ſome have ſuppoſed, (to wit, that then there was but one Biſhop of Vienna and Lyons) is eaſily confuted out of this Epiſtle, which ſays that Pothinus was Biſhop of Lyons, but not of Vienna. Moreover, thoſe of Lyons do, out of reſpect, ſet the name of thoſe of Vienna firſt, whenas notwithſtanding they of Lyons wrote the Epiſtle concerning the things which were done at their own City. Which reſpect alſo may ſeem to be attributed to the antiquity, and nobility, of the Colony at Vienna. As to the ſecond query, we may underſtand from this Epiſtle, that there were many Grecians in the Church of Lyons, as was Attalus, and Alexander the Phrygian, and Alcibiades, who was by original extract a Phrygian alſo, as I think: Alſo Irenæus was born in Aſia, and, when he was very young, had, together with Florinus, been an Auditor of Polycarp's at Smyrna; as he himſelf evidences. The very name alſo of Pothinus the Biſhop ſhews him to be originally a Grecian. 'Tis no wonder therefore, that thoſe who came out of Aſia into the Gallia's, ſhould write to their Brethren that were in Aſia concerning their Affairs; from whom, as 'tis probable, they had before received that Epiſtle concerning the Martyrdom of Polycarp, and others. I ſuppoſe Irenæus to have been the Author of this Epiſtle, who at that time was a Presbyter of the Church at Lyons. Valeſ.

‘ Servants

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

'Servants of Chriſt which inhabit Vienna and 'Lyons in France, to the Brethren throughout Aſia and Phrygia, which have the ſame Faith and 'Hope of Redemption with us; Peace, Grace, 'and Glory from God the Father, and from Chriſt 'Jeſus our Lord." Then, having after this by 'way of Preface premiſed ſome words, they begin their Relation with theſe: 'Now the ſore 'Affliction amongſt us, the great Rage of the 'Heathens againſt the Saints, and what the Bleſſed Martyrs endured, we are neither able accurately to expreſs, nor indeed can it be compriz'd in writing: For the Adverſary invaded 'us with his utmoſt vigour, ſhewing forth even 'then his arrival amongſt us, and ſome beginnings of his future cruelty. For he left nothing 'unattempted, whilſt by way of practice he prepared, and before-hand exerciſed his Miniſters 'againſt the Servants of God. So that we are 'not only prohibited to 'come into (b) Private 'Houſes, the Baths, and the '(c) Forum, but it was alſo 'by them interdicted that 'no one of us ſhould at all 'appear in any place whatſoever: But the Grace of 'God fought for us againſt 'the Devil; which both defended ſuch as were weak, 'and alſo ſet in array againſt 'him ſuch Men as, like Pillars, were firm and immovable, who by reaſon of 'their patience in enduring 'Sufferings, might have 'been able to have pull'd on 'themſelves the whole force 'of the Devil. Theſe Perſons engag'd him hand to 'hand, undergoing all manner of reproach and puniſhment; and accounting 'the greateſt Sufferings to 'be ſmall and trivial, they haſtned unto Chriſt; truly demonſtrating, that the ſufferings of this preſent time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which ſhall be reveal'd in us.* 'Firſt therefore, they couragiouſly underwent 'whatſoever [abuſes] were cumulated on them 'by the whole Multitude, to wit, the Shouts a'gainſt them, the Stripes, the Draggings up and 'down, the taking away of their Goods, the ca'ſting of Stones at them, their being (d) ſhut up 'within their own Houſes; and all things which 'an exaſperated Multitude do uſually undertake 'againſt their Enemies and Adverſaries: Then, 'being brought into the Forum by the Tribune of 'the Soldiers, and the (e) Magiſtrates of the City, they were examin'd in the preſence of the 'whole Multitude; and, having made their Con'feſſion were ſhut up in priſon until the arrival 'of the (f) Preſident. Afterwards, when they 'were brought before the Governour, (who ex- M. Aurelius and L. Verus.
'erciſed all manner of cruelty againſt us) (g) Vet'tius Epagathus, one of the Brethren, who had 'arriv'd to an immenſe degree of love to God and 'his Neighbour; whoſe courſe of life had been ſo 'exact and accurate, that although he was a 'young Man, yet he deſerved the Elogy of Za'chariah Seniour; for he had walked in all the Com'mandments and Ordinances of the Lord, blameleſs; 'and was moſt ready to perform all good Offices towards his Neighbour, being full of the 'Zeal of God, and fervent in Spirit: This Perſon, 'I ſay, being ſuch an one, was not able to bear 'thoſe ſo unjuſt proceedings againſt us, but was 'greatly mov'd with indignation, and requeſted 'that he alſo might be heard to make a Defence 'in behalf of the Brethren, [and to manifeſt] that 'there was nothing of Impiety or Irreligion a'mongſt us. But when thoſe about the Tribu'nal cried out againſt him, (for he was an emi'nent Perſonage,) and when the Governour re'fuſed the requeſt ſo juſtly propoſed by him, and 'only ask'd him whether he alſo were a Chriſti'an; he confeſs'd it with a moſt loud voice, and 'was receiv'd into the number of the Martyrs, 'being term'd by the Governour the Advocate of 'the Chriſtians: But he had within himſelf an 'Advocate, to wit, the Holy Spirit, in a greater 'degree than (h) Zacharias had; which he evi'dently manifeſted by his abundant love, in that 'he was well-contented to depoſite his own Life 'for the defence of the Brethren. For he was, and 'is, a genuine Diſciple of 'Chriſt, following the Lamb 'whitherſoever he goeth. Then 'others (i) were diligently 'prov'd and examin'd; and 'they were illuſtrious and 'ready Proto-Martyrs, who 'with all alacrity of mind 'accompliſh'd the ſolemn 'Confeſſion of Martyrdom. 'Moreover, thoſe who were 'unprepared, unexerciſed, 'as yet weak, and unable 'to undergo the ſeverity of 'ſo great a Combat, were 'then apparent; of whom 'about ten in number fell 'away, which was the occaſion of great Grief and immeaſurable Sorrow 'to us, and diſturb'd that alacrity of Mind in o'thers who were not yet apprehended; who although they ſuffer'd all ſorts of miſery, yet were 'preſent with the Martyrs, and departed not from 'them. At that time we were all in a great Conſternation of Mind, becauſe we were dubious 'about the [perſeverance of ſuch as were to] 'confeſs [themſelves to be Chriſtians;] not that 'we fear'd the Torments that were to be inflicted; 'but, revolving in our Minds the iſſue of Affairs, 'we were fearful leſt any one ſhould fall off from

(b) The term in the original is [ὀικιῶν] which ſignifies only private Houſes, from which the Chriſtians were then driven, that is, from the Houſes of their Friends, Relations, &c. For I agree not with Ruſinus, who thought that the Chriſtians were prohibited to inhabit their own Houſes. Valeſ.

(c) Ἀγορὰς is the term in the original; which ſignifies any promiſcuous or popular aſſembly; theſe (ſetting aſide the ſacred aſſemblies, which are otherwiſe expreſſed) are principally of two ſorts, either (1.) to buy and ſell, or (2.) to reſort for juſtice; and the word here us'd commonly ſignifies both, or either of theſe, (1.) a fair or market, (2.) a place of judicature, an hall, or court of judgment. The Romans termed this place Forum; which word they uſed in the ſame Latitude that the Grecians did Ἀγορά. At this place, and hereafter, we have made uſe of the Latin term in our Tranſlation; and we therefore put this Note in here, that the Engliſh Reader might underſtand the meaning of it.

* Rom. 8. 18.

(d) Here in the firſt place is recounted the injurious uſage, which the Chriſtians ſuffered from the whole multitude; wherein Impriſonment can have no place. For the Judges, and not the People, had power to impriſon thoſe that were guilty. Ruſinus therefore tranſlates [συγκλείσεις] concludi, i. e. to be ſhut up. For the Heathens ſhut up the Chriſtians within their own Houſes, and would not ſuffer them to come abroad. Valeſ.

(e) He means the municipal Magiſtrates, who were alſo called the duumviri. Although the term ἐξουσιῶν (here uſed) is uſually meant of thoſe Judges which have the power of the Sword; (See Ulpian. in tit. de Juriſdict.) yet it denotes the municipal Magiſtrates alſo, who, as the Civilians phraſe it, have modicam coercitionem. Valeſ.

(f) Ἡγεμὼν (the term that occurs here) has a general ſignification. For all Governors of Provinces are ſo called, be they Procurators, Proconſuls, or Deputies of Cæſar. It may therefore be deſervedly queſtioned of which of theſe three ſorts the Governour of the Province of Lyons was. Indeed, I think he was the Deputy of Cæſar. Which I am induced to ſuppoſe, (1.) becauſe there is mention here made of the Tribune of the Soldiers. For that agrees very well with the Deputy of Cæſar, who look'd after the Military Affairs. (2.) In the old Inſcription, which Gruter ſpeaks of, pag. 427. he is termed Deputy of the Lugdunenſian Province. See Gruter, Inſcript. pag. 427. Laſtly, Spartianus (in Severo) atteſts, that the Province of Lyons was in the Reign of M. Antoninus governed by Deputies of Cæſar. And perhaps in this Epiſtle of thoſe of Lyons, Severus is meant: For he was Deputy of the Lugdunenſian Province under Marcus. Junius Bleſus alſo (whom Tacitus in the B. 1. of his Hiſtory calls Governour of Gallia Lugdunenſis) was Deputy of this Province; and ſo was Vitraſius Pollio in the times of Adrian. (i) Διεκείνετο is the term here uſed. It ſeems to be a Metaphor taken from Champions, who before they engaged in the Combat, were wont to be examined and proved, whether they were Free-Men, and of the age that Champions ſhould be. And thoſe that were admitted to the Combat, were ſaid εἰσκείνεσθαι, ſuch as were repudiated ἐκκείνεσθαι: the examination itſelf was call'd Διάκρισις, as I collect from this place. Indeed this Epiſtle is very full of Athletical terms, as 'tis manifeſt from this place, and as we will ſhew more plainly hereafter. Valeſ.

from the Faith. Now there were daily taken ſuch as were worthy to fill up their number; ſo that thoſe who were moſt eminent in (k) both the Churches, and by whom eſpecially Matters here had been ſettled, were all pick'd out and apprehended. Some Heathens alſo, our Servants, were ſeiz'd upon; (for the Preſident did in publick give command that we ſhould all be diligently ſearch'd out;) which Perſons, by reaſon of the treachery of Satan, being afraid of the Torments which they ſaw the Saints undergo, the Soldiers inciting them thereto, raiſed lyes againſt us, and reported that we uſed the Suppers of (l) Thyeſtes, and the inceſtuous carnal Colation of (m) Oedipus, and ſuch other things as 'tis neither lawful for us to utter, nor to think of, nor to believe, that any ſuch fact was ever committed among men. Theſe Stories being ſpread abroad, all perſons were enrag'd againſt us; inſomuch, that if there were any who before had been moderate towards us by reaſon of Affinity or Friendſhip; even theſe were then greatly diſpleaſed with, and mightily incenſed againſt us. Thus was fulfilled that which our Lord had ſaid, that the time ſhould come wherein * whoſoever killeth you, will think that he doeth God good ſervice. From thenceforth therefore the Holy Martyrs underwent ſuch Torments as are inexpreſſible and above all declaration: Satan endeavouring with much earneſtneſs that ſome ſlanderous and reproachful words might be utter'd by (n) them alſo. But the whole rage both of the Multitude, of the Preſident, and of the Soldiers did in a more violent manner fall upon (o) Sanctus of Vienna, a Deacon, and upon Maturus, a perſon indeed who had been lately baptiz'd, but yet prov'd a couragious Champion of Chriſt; upon Attalus alſo, by Country a Pergamenian, who always was a Pillar and Prop of the Churches here, and laſtly upon Blandina; by whom Chriſt demonſtrated, that thoſe things which among Men ſeem vile, obſcure, and deſpicable, are by God accounted worthy of great honour, by reaſon of the love ſhown to him, which is actually and powerfully manifeſted, and not in pretence and ſhew boaſted of. For when we were all afraid, and ſhe that was her Miſtreſs after the Fleſh (who alſo was one of the Champions of the Martyrs) fear'd, leſt, by reaſon of the Imbecillity of her Body, ſhe ſhould not be able with boldneſs and freeneſs to make her Confeſſion: Blandina was ſupplied with ſo great ſtrength, that thoſe who by turns tortured her all the time from Morning till Evening, became feeble and weak; and confeſs'd themſelves overcome, having nothing further to do to her: They admired alſo that ſhe yet continued to breath, her whole Body having been mangled and pierced through; and they atteſted, that one ſort of torture was ſufficient to have bereaved her of life, much more ſo many and ſo great torments. But this bleſſed Woman, like a couragious Champion, recover'd freſh ſupplies of ſtrength during her Confeſſion: And it was a refreſhment, and an eaſe to her, and abated the pain of thoſe Torments that were inflicted on her, to pronounce theſe words, to wit, I am a Chriſtian, and there is nothing of wickedneſs acted amongſt us. But Sanctus, having in an extraordinary, and more than humane, manner, couragiouſly endured all the torments Men could invent, (the impious Wretches hoping by reaſon of the continuedneſs and exquiſiteneſs of his torments to have heard ſome undecent expreſſions from him,) withſtood them with ſo great a degree of courage, that he declared neither his own name, nor that of his own Country, nor of the City where he was born, nor yet whether he were a Servant or a Freeman; but to all the Interrogatories, he made anſwer in the Roman tongue, I am a Chriſtian: This he declared time after time ſucceſſively, inſtead of [acknowledging] his Name, his City, his Kindred, or any thing elſe: neither could the Heathens get any other words out of him. Upon which account the rage both of the Preſident and of the Tormentors againſt him was exceeding great, and their endeavours to maſter him were obſtinate and earneſt. Inſomuch that when they had nothing further to torture him with, at laſt they clapt plates of Braſs that were red hot upon the moſt tender Members of his Body; which Parts of his Body were burnt indeed; but he ſtood upright without bending of himſelf at all, was invincible, and continued ſtedfaſt and conſtant in his Confeſſions; being bedew'd and ſtrengthen'd with that Celeſtial Fountain of living Water which flow'd out of the * Belly of Chriſt. His Body was a ſufficient evidence of what had hapned, being all over full of Wounds, and Prints of Stripes, (p) bowed and drawn together, and having loſt the external form and ſhape of a Man; in which Chriſt ſuffering accompliſh'd therein great glory, vanquiſhing the Adverſary, and demonſtrating for the information of others, that there is nothing formidable where the Love of the Father is, nor any pain where the Glory of Chriſt is preſent. For when thoſe impious Wretches ſome few days after began again to torture the Martyr, and ſuppos'd that if they ſhould make uſe of the ſame torments whilſt his Body was ſwell'd, and the (q) Wounds thereof inflamed, either they might maſter him, when he could not endure to be touch'd by hands, or that he would die under his torments, and ſo ſtrike a terror into others; not only no ſuch thing hapned concerning him, but alſo, contrary to the opinion of all Men, his Body became erect and was repair'd in theſe latter tortures; and he recover'd his former ſhape, and the uſe of his limbs. So that his being tormented the ſecond time was not a puniſhment to him, but by the Grace of Chriſt prov'd to be his remedy. Moreover, the Devil caus'd one Biblias to be brought forth to puniſhment, (being one of thoſe who had renounced Chriſt) whom he ſuppoſed to be by him already devoured, but was further deſirous

But theſe Words are in an eſpecial manner to be taken notice of, becauſe from them it appears manifeſtly, that the Church of Vienna, as well as that of Lyons, had at that time its Biſhop. For by ancient Writers it is not called a Church unleſs it be a Mother-Church, which we call a Cathedral. Ado Viennenſis (in his Chronicon) ſays Juſtus was Biſhop of Vienna at that time; who having been macerated with a long Exile, was at laſt Crowned with Martyrdom. Valeſ.

Therefore the Judges tortured them all manner of ways, that they ſhould confeſs, that they eat Children, and committed Inceſt. Upon this account Blandina (as hereafter it follows) cried out amidſt her Tortures — I am a Chriſtian, and there is nothing of wickedneſs acted amongſt us. Valeſ.

'be by him already devour'd, but was further 'desirous to have her condemn'd of Blasphemy, 'constraining her, being now weak and not couragious, to utter some impious expressions concerning us. But she came to herself again at 'the time of her being tortured, and (as we may 'so speak,) was awaked out of her profound 'sleep, being by the present punishment reminded 'of the eternal torments in Hell; and she return'd a contradictory answer to (r) those that slander'd us, saying, how shou'd such persons eat little children, for whom 'tis unlawful to eat the blood even of irrational creatures. From that instant she confess'd herself to be a Christian, and was added to the number of the Martyrs.

(r) Τοῖς βλασφήμοις: that's the reading of the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil MSS. And 'tis better than τοῖς βασανισταῖς, i.e. the Tormentors, as 'tis in Robert Stephens Edit. They are meant here, who calumniated the Christian Religion; or at least those, who by reason of the sharpness of the tortures, renounced it, and confess'd that the Christians kill'd Infants, and committed Incest. Vales.

'But when the punishment of those tyrannous 'persons were render'd ineffectual by Christ, 'through the patient sufferance of the Blessed 'Martyrs, the Devil invented other subtil devices, 'to wit, the Imprisonments of them in darkness, 'and in the most noisome parts of the Prison, the 'stretching of their feet in the (s) Stocks, which 'were strain'd to the fifth hole, and such other sorts 'of punishment as enraged Ministers, (and therefore full of the Devil) do usually provide for 'those that are shut up in prison. So that many 'were suffocated in prison, whom the Lord, manifesting his own Glory, 'was pleased should after 'that manner depart out of 'this life. For some who had 'been so cruelly tortured, 'that in all likelihood they 'they could not possibly live 'any longer, (altho' they 'should have had all methods of cure administred 'to them) continued in prison; destitute indeed of 'human assistance, but corroborated by the Lord, and 'strengthned in body and 'mind, who also encourag'd 'and comforted the rest:

(s) Ἐν τῷ ξύλῳ; i. e. in the stocks. See chap. 16. B. 4. and the note there, concerning this term. The fashion of this Engine for punishment, and the manner how Persons were punished in it, seems to have been this. It was a piece of Timber, wherein five pair of holes were made at a certain distance one from the other: Into these holes (as it were into boots) they put the Feet of Offenders, and fastned them therein with Cords and Fetters. The meaning of [their Feet being strained to the fifth hole] is, they forced them to straddle so wide, as to put their Feet into the last pair of holes; which posture, (those holes being at the greatest distance one from the other) was the sharpest degree of torture in this Engine. Vales.

'But others who were young, and newly appre'hended, whose Bodies had not before been ac'custom'd to endure tortures, were not able to 'bear the burthen of confinement, but died in pri'son. Now the blessed Pothinus, who was entrust'ed with the administration of the Episcopal Of'fice in Lyons, being above the age of ninety years, 'and very infirm of body, scarce able indeed to 'draw his breath by reason of his present bodily 'imbecillity, but corroborated with alacrity of 'mind through an earnest desire of an approach'ing Martyrdom; He, I say, was also haled to 'the Tribunal: His body indeed was both by age 'and also by his distemper decay'd and spent, 'but his life was preserv'd in him, that Christ 'might triumph thereby. He, being carried to the 'Tribunal by the Soldiers, the Magistrates of the 'City accompanying him, and the whole mul'titude raising shouts of all sorts against him, (as 'if he had been Christ,) exhibited a good testi'mony; but being ask'd by the President who 'was the God of the Christians, he replied, if 'you be worthy, you shall know. After this 'answer, he was dragg'd up and down after a 'most inhuman manner, and suffered various 'sorts of blows and stripes: Both those who 'were near, exercised all manner of injurious 'usage towards him with Hands and Feet, shew'ing no reverential respect to his age; and such 'as were at a distance cast at him whatever each 'person had ready at hand; yea, they all ac'counted it to be a great Offence and an Impie'ty, should any one have been deficient in his 'insolent usage of him: For by this means they 'thought they should revenge their Gods. And 'when there was scarce any breath left in him, 'he was cast into Prison, where after two days 'he expired. But here there came to pass a sin'gular Dispensation of God's Providence, and 'the immense Mercy of Jesus was demonstrated; '[an instance whereof] has indeed rarely hap'pened among the Brotherhood, but which was 'not at all disagreeable to the Skill and Dexte'rity of Christ. For those who, upon their 'being first apprehended, renounced the Faith, 'were themselves also confined to prison, and 'partook of the same Miseries which the Mar'tyrs underwent: For their denial of the Faith 'was not in any wise beneficial to them at that 'juncture of time. But those who confess'd them'selves to be what they really were, were impri'son'd as Christians, no other Crimination be'ing laid to their charge; but these were kept in 'custody, as being, besides that, Murderers 'and wicked Persons, and underwent double the 'punishment that others did. For the joy of 'Martyrdom, the hope of the Promises, the love 'to Christ, and the Spirit of the Father com'forted those: But their Conscience did heavily 'torture these; in so much that * in their passage 'from the Prison to the Tribunal, their Counte'nances might be manifestly known and distin'guish'd from all the rest. For those came forth 'chearfully, their Countenances being inter'mix'd with very much of Majesty and Pleasant'ness; insomuch that their Fetters encompass'd 'them with a beautiful comeliness, like a Bridle 'bedeck'd with Fringes of God †, wrought about 'with divers colours: And moreover they yielded 'a scent of the sweet savour of Christ; so that 'some thought they were anointed with ter'restrial Oyntment. But these had a dejected 'Countenance, look'd unpleasantly and ill-fa'vour'd, and were fill'd with all manner of de'formity: Moreover they were reviled by the 'very Heathens, as being cowardous and un'manly; having indeed procured themselves the 'Crimination of Murderers, but lost that most 'honourable, glorious and vivifick appellation [of 'Christians.] Which things when the rest beheld, 'they were made stedfast; and such as were ap'prehended did without any thing of dubiousness 'confess themselves to be Christians, entertaining 'not the least thought of diabolical consideration." To these having interposed some words, they again add, saying,— 'Afterwards there'fore their Martyrdoms were divided into all 'sorts of death: for, having platted one Crown 'of different colours, and of all sorts of Flowers, 'they offer'd it to the Father. It was indeed fit that 'those couragious Champions, who had under'gone a various combat, and been egregious Con'querors, should receive the invaluable Crown of 'Incorruption. Maturus therefore, and Sanctus, 'and Blandina, and Attalus were brought before 'the Wild Beasts into the (t) Amphitheatre, and into 'the publick place, where the inhumanity of the 'Heathens was exhibited; (u) a day for fighting 'with the Wild Beaſts being granted purpoſely 'upon the account of thoſe of our Religion. And 'Maturus, and Sanctus, did 'again undergo all ſorts of 'torments in the Amphitheatre, as if they had before 'ſuffer'd nothing at all: But 'the rather, becauſe having 'already ſubdued the Adverſary in many * Encounters, 'and being now to engage 'in a Combat for the Crown 'itſelf, they again under-went ſuch Stripes in their 'Paſſage thither as are cuſtomarily inflicted; the 'being torn and drag'd up 'and down by the Wild 'Beaſts; and whatever elſe 'the enraged People, ſome 'from one place, ſome from 'another, called aloud for, 'and commanded; and in 'fine, the Iron-Chair, upon 'which their Bodies being 'broiled, fill'd their Noſes 'with the offenſive ſmell of 'burnt fleſh. Neither did 'they make an end of their 'Cruelty thus, but were yet 'more fiercely enraged, being deſirous to overcome 'the patient Sufferance of 'the Martyrs: But they 'heard no other expreſſion 'from Sanctus, ſave that 'which he had uſually utter'd all along from the 'beginning of his Confeſſion. Theſe two Perſons 'therefore, after they had 'continued alive a long 'while under the Sufferings 'of a mighty Combat, at 'laſt were ſlain; having 'been made a Spectacle to 'the World throughout that 'day, in ſtead of all that variety which is exhibited in 'the Combats of the Gladiators. But Blandina, being hung upon a piece of 'Wood fix'd in the Ground, 'was propoſed as Food for 'the Wild Beaſts to prey 'upon; who alſo, (in that 'ſhe ſeemed to hang in the 'form of a Croſs,) by her 'ſtrong and earneſt Prayer 'implanted much alacrity 'upon the minds of thoſe 'that were Combatants; 'when they ſaw (whilſt they 'were undergoing their Sufferings) even with their outward eyes, under the perſon of their Siſter, Him who 'was therefore crucified for 'them, that he might perſwade thoſe which believe in him, that whoſoever ſuffers for the 'Glory of Chriſt hath eternal Communion with 'the living God. Now when none of the Wild 'Beaſts would then touch her, ſhe was taken 'from the Stake, and caſt again into priſon, being reſerv'd for another Combat; that ſo, having been (y) Conqueror in many Encounters, 'ſhe might render the Condemnation of the 'crooked Serpent inexcuſable; alſo ſhe encou-'raged the Brethren: And 'tho' ſhe was a perſon of 'ſmall eſtimation, infirm, 'and deſpicable, yet having cloath'd herſelf with 'the ſtrength of Chriſt that 'great and invincible Champion, ſhe vanquiſh'd the Adverſary in many 'Encounters; and after a glorious Combat, was 'encircled with a Crown of Incorruption. Attalus alſo was by the Multitude moſt earneſtly required to be deliver'd up to Puniſhment, for he 'was an eminent Perſon, and by reaſon of the 'clearneſs of his Conſcience proceeded forth like 'a Champion prepared for the Combat, in that 'he had been perfectly and throughly exerciſed 'in the Chriſtian Diſcipline, and always a Witneſs of the Truth amongſt us: And after he had 'been (a) led round the Amphitheatre, (Tables being 'carried before him, whereon was written in the Roman Tongue, This is Attalus the Chriſtian,) and the 'People had vehemently 'ſwell'd with rage and anger againſt him; the Preſident having underſtood 'that he was a Roman, commanded he ſhould again 'be committed to cuſtody amongſt the reſt that 'were in priſon. Concerning whom he wrote 'to Cæſar, and expected an Edict from him. Now 'this interval of time was ſpent neither idly nor 'unfruitfully by them, but by their patient Sufferance, the immeaſurable Mercy of Chriſt was 'made apparent: for thoſe Members of the Church 'that were dead, were by the Living revived; 'and the Martyrs conferr'd * Kindneſſes upon 'thoſe who were no Martyrs; and there was a 'great Joy begotten in the Virgin Mother [the Church;] ſhe having again received thoſe alive 'whom by Abortion ſhe had caſt forth as dead. 'For through the means of the Holy Martyrs many 'of thoſe who had renounc'd the Faith, were 'newly formed in the Womb, born again, had 'their vital Heat rekindled in them, and learn'd 'to confeſs themſelves to be Chriſtians. And having now recover'd life and ſtrength, they came 'before the Tribunal, (God, who deſireth not 'the death of a Sinner, but is indulgent and kindly invites him to repentance, (a) infuſing a 'ſweetneſs into them) that they might again be 'interrogated by the Preſident. For Cæſar had 'ſignified by his Reſcript, that thoſe [who confeſs'd themſelves to be Chriſtians,] ſhould be (b) tortured; 'but if any renounced the Faith, they ſhould

(u) The meaning of this place is, that the Preſidents, or Deputy, of the Province of Lyons, granted the People an extraordinary ſhew of fighting with the wild Beaſts; a Day being appointed for that purpoſe, becauſe of the Chriſtians, who were condemned to the Beaſts. For the Romans had ſet days for theſe Spectacles, which fell on the month of December, as may be ſeen in the Calendar of Heruvartius. Except on theſe Days, it was unlawful for the Duumviri (on whom the charge of theſe Shews was impoſed) to exhibit theſe Spectacles of fighting with Wild-Beaſts to the People. But thoſe Judges, who had the power of the Sword, and of condemning Perſons to the Beaſts, exhibited theſe Shews as often as they pleaſed, that they might delight the People by deſtroying of Offenders. Valeſ.

(x) We noted before, that many Athletical terms were made uſe of in this Epiſtle. Amongſt which is to be accounted the term [κλῆροι,] which occurs here. For the Champions, who were to contend in the Games, were wont to be drawn forth by lot, which, after what manner it was done, Lucian (in Hermotimo) tells us. There was a little Silver Box, dedicated to the God that preſided over the Games, into which the Lots were caſt. Upon two the Letter A was written; upon other two the Letter B. and ſo on. Then the Champions drew theſe Lots out of the Box. Thoſe two, who drew forth the Letter A, engaged one with the other, and fought in the firſt place: And this was the [πρῶτος κλῆρος.] In like manner, they that drew the Letter B, engaged one another in the ſecond place. So the Lot and the Urn aſſigned every one his Antagoniſt. He that vanquiſhed his Adverſary, was not immediately Crowned, but engaged in another encounter with thoſe others who had conquered their Adverſaries, until there remained only one Victor over all. Upon which account they drew Lots ſeveral times. Hence 'tis, that in the Farneſian Inſcription (which Gruter ſpeaks of, pag. 314.) one Aſclepiades is ſaid to have gotten the victory in many Encounters, τὸ δεύτερον καὶ τρίτον μὴ πρῶτον ἢ δεύτερον κλῆρον σῶσας τὰς ἀνταγωνίσας· i. e. after the firſt or ſecond caſting of Lots, having vanquiſhed the Antagoniſts the ſecond, or third time. For this was uſual for that reaſon I mentioned, as often as there were many couples of Champions. For the Conquerors engaged one another, and there was a ſecond and third drawing of Lots amongſt them, until the Victory remained to one. And this is that which, in this Epiſtle, is called διὰ πλειόνων κλήρων. Valeſ.

(a) The term in the original is [ἐγκαινοῦσθαι,] which is uſed as well in an active as paſſive ſenſe. 'Tis a Metaphor taken from the wild Olive-tree, which being grafted, grows ſweet; of which St. Paul ſpeaks. Valeſ.

(b) Ἀποτυμπανισθῆναι. Lexicographers differ very much in their giving the ſignification of this term (which here occurs.) Stephens (in his Theſaurus,) renders it, fuſtibus concidi, i. e. to be beaten with Clubs: Varinus, τὴν κεφαλὴν ἀποκοπῆναι, i. e. to be beheaded: The Etymologicon (publiſh'd by Sylbergius) ſays it ſignifies, οὐκ ἁπλῶς τὸ ἀποκτεῖναι, ἀλλὰ τυμπάνῳ ὁ ὅτι ξύλον ὅπερ σκυτάλην καλοῦσι, not barely to be put to death, but to be kill'd with the Tympanum, which is a piece of Wood call'd a Cudgel: The Reader will find a large and learned account of this term, and of this Engine of Torture, in Dr. Hammond's Note on Hebr. 11. 35. Where he makes it appear, that this ſort of puniſhment was very painful, contumelious, and capital.

(z) The Gladiators and the Beſtiarii, before they began the Encounter, were wont to be led about in the preſence of the Spectators. See Lucian, in Toxari. This was uſually done, not only with thoſe who let themſelves out to play Prizes, but alſo with thoſe Offenders, which were condemned to the Sword, and to the Wild Beaſts. 'be dismiss'd from their Imprisonment. Now, 'the Publick (c) Assembly here (which is frequented by a numerous concourse of People of 'all Nations that meet together at it) being newly begun, [the President] order'd the blessed 'Martyrs to be brought before the Tribunal, making them a Gazing-stock, 'and by way of Ostentation, producing them as a 'pompous Shew to the Multitude. When therefore 'he had again interrogated 'them, as many as were 'found to have the Privi'ledge of being Free of the 'City of Rome, he order'd 'should be Beheaded; the 'rest were cast to the Wild-Beasts. But Christ was greatly glorified thro' 'those who formerly had renounced the Faith, 'but then (contrary to the expectation of the 'Heathens) became to be Confessors: For these 'Persons were interrogated apart, as being, in 'all probability, forthwith to be set at liberty; 'but, having confess'd themselves to be Christi'ans, they were added to the (d) number of the 'Martyrs. Now, they continued without, who 'never had the least impression of Faith, nor a 'sense of the Wedding-garment, nor a thought 'about the fear of God; but by their Conversation defam'd the way of Truth, that is, were the Sons of Perdition: But all the rest were added to the Church; during whose Examination, one Alexander, by Country a Phrygian, by Profession a Physician, a person who had dwelt many years in the Gallia's, and was known almost to all Men by reason of his love to God, and his boldness and fearlessness in preaching his Word, (for he wanted not Apostolick Grace*;) standing near to the Tribunal, and by Nods encouraging them to a Confession of the Faith, appear'd to those who stood round the Tribunal, as if he endur'd the * pangs of Child-birth: Now the Multitude being in a great fume, because those, who had before renounc'd the Faith, did now again make Confession of it, cry'd out against Alexander, as if he were the occasion thereof: And the President (having commanded him 'to be (e) set before him, 'and ask'd him who he was, 'and he having said that he 'was a Christian) being in 'a rage, condemn'd him to 'be cast to the Wild-Beasts. 'And the day following he 'entred the Amphitheatre together with Attalus; (for 'the President, to gratify the Multitude, did again 'deliver Attalus to the Wild-Beasts:) which two 'persons, having undergone all the Instruments of 'torment in the Amphitheatre that were invented 'to torture them with, and endured a great 'combat, were at last (f) run through with a 'Sword. Alexander indeed did neither sigh, nor utter any expression at all; but in his heart spoke to God, and continued praising of, and praying to him: But Attalus, when he was set in the Iron-Chair, and scorch'd all over, (when the savour of his burnt flesh ascended from his Body) said to the Multitude in the Roman tongue, behold, this 'that you do, is to devour Men; but we neither devour 'men, nor practise any other thing that is evil. Being ask'd also what name God had, he answer'd, God has not a name, as Man has. In fine, after all 'these persons, on the (g) last day of the Gladia'tors Combats, Blandina was again brought forth, 'together with Ponticus, a Youth about fifteen 'years old; (who also were 'every day led in, to see 'the Tortures of the rest) 'and they constrain'd them 'to swear by their Idols: 'But because they continu'ed firm and constant, and 'contemned their Gods, the 'Multitude was so enrag'd 'against them, that they 'neither had compassion on 'the age of the young Man, 'nor shew'd any reverential 'respect towards the Sex of the Woman, but exposed them to all manner of cruel Tortures, and 'made them pass thro' the whole Circuit of Torments, now and then compelling them to swear, 'but were unable to effect that. For Ponticus, being encouraged by his Sister, (insomuch that the 'Heathens perceived it was she that encouraged 'and strengthned him) having couragiously undergone all sorts of tortures, gave up the ghost. 'But the blessed Blandina, the last of all, having 'like a noble and valiant Mother encouraged her 'Children, and sent them before as Conquerors to 'the King; after she had measured over the same 'course of Combats that her Sons had passed 'through, hastned to them, being glad, and 'rejoycing at her Exit, as if she had been in'vited to a Nuptial Supper, and were not to be 'cast to the Wild-Beasts. And after she had 'been scourged, exposed to the Fury of the Wild-Beasts, and set in the '(h) Iron-Chair, at last she 'was inclosed in a Net, and 'thrown before a (i) Bull: 'By which Beast, after she 'had been very much toss'd '(having been all along 'wholly insensible of the 'Tortures she underwent, 'because of her hope and 'her retaining a firm assent 'to those things she believed, and also by reason 'of her familiar converse 'in prayer with Christ,) 'she also was run through 'with a sword; and the very Heathens themselves 'confessed, that there never was any Woman a'mong 'em, which suffer'd so many and so great 'tortures. But their rage and cruelty towards the 'Saints was not thus satiated: For the savage and 'barbarous Nations, having been stir'd up by that '(k) fierce Wild-Beast, could not without great 'difficulty be appeased; but their cruelty was 'begun afresh, in a new and peculiar manner, a'gainst the Bodies of the Saints. For they were so 'far from being ashamed that they had been van'quish'd by the Martyrs (because they were destitute of human reason and consideration,) that 'their rage was more enkindled; both the Pre'sident and also the People (like a fierce Beast) 'most unjustly demonstrating the same degree of 'hatred against us: That the Scripture might be 'fulfilled, (l) He that is unjust, let him be unjust still, 'and

(c) The publick meeting, from all parts of Gallia, upon account of the Sports and Games, was at Lyons, at the Altar consecrated to Augustus. This Altar was consecrated when Julius Antonius and Fabius Africanus were Consuls, on the Calends of August, as Suetonius says, in the Life of Claudius. Dio writes, that these Games were continued in his time. Hence 'tis collected, that the Martyrs of Lyons suffered in the Month of August; but not all in one day, as 'tis evident from this Epistle. Vales.

(d) In the King's MS. and in Robert Stephens Edit. the reading here is [τῶν μαρτύρων χορῶ.] But in the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil it is [κλήρω] i. e. number. See note (x) in this chap. Vales.

*Ὡς περ ὠδίνων is the phrase in the original; 'tis St. Paul's expression Gal. 4. 19.

(e) Rufinus translates this passage thus, Qui à Præside in medium statui Jussus, i. e. who being commanded by the Presidents to be set before him. Which Translation pleases me best. For [ἐπιστῆσαι,] which is the word here used, does properly signifie, to set before the Judge; in which sense also παραστῆσαι is used. Vales.

(f) Ἐπέσησαν; Rufinus translates it, Jugulati sunt, that is, their throats were cut; I would rather have it thus rendred, they were run through with a Sword. For it was the custom that the Confector should slay the bestiarii; as we noted before, in the Martyrdom of Polycarp, B. 4. Chap. 15. Vales.

(g) Hence it's manifest that the Sports of the Gladiators were wont to be exhibited for the space of some days, at Lyons, at that famous Assembly of all Gallia, before the Altar of Augustus. Besides these Sports of the Gladiators, there was a day granted by the President for fighting with Wild-beasts, on account of the Christians, as 'tis expresly said in this Epistle. For I suppose, that these two Terms, μονομαχία, and θηριομαχία, are not to be confounded, tho' the Latines comprehend them both in one Word, to wit, Munus. Vales.

(h) Τήγανον is the Greek term; which Rufinus translates craticulam, i. e. a Grid-iron: It is the same, which before is called the Iron-Chair, on which the Martyrs being set, were broyled, as it were on a Gridiron. Thus the Christians were used before they were cast to the Wild-beasts. Vales.

(i) Amongst the Sports of an Amphitheatrical shew this was one; a Bull was brought in, to whom (being first enraged) they cast Offenders inclosed in a Net; whom, like Balls, he tossed on high. Martial's Verse on this Subject is well known, Taurus ut impositas jactat ad astra pilas. Vales.

(k) That is the Devil; the Greek Word [θηρ] signifies, a wild-beast; but [ὁ θηρ] is often taken for the Devil. Vales.

(l) Rev. 22. 11. where instead of [ὁ ἀνομησάτω, ἀνομησάτω,] as the reading in the original is here; we now read [ὁ ἀδικῶν, ἀδικησάτω ἔτι], i. e. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; See the original of the Text.

'and he that is righteous let him be righteous ſtill. For thoſe who had been ſuffocated in Priſon, they caſt to the Dogs; watching continually night and day, leſt any of us ſhould interr them; then having expoſed the pieces of the Bodies, as well what were left undevour'd by the Wild Beaſts, as what remain'd unconſumed by the Fire, partly torn, and partly burnt, alſo the Heads of the reſt together with their Trunks, they kept 'em likewiſe unburied with a guard of Soldiers for the ſpace of many days. And ſome were full of Indignation, and gnaſh'd their Teeth at the Dead, being deſirous to take ſome further revenge of them. Others inſulted over and derided them, extolling their Idols, and attributing the Puniſhment of the Martyrs to them. But thoſe that were more mild, and who ſeem'd in ſome meaſure to ſympathize with us, upbraided us very much, ſaying, Where is their God? and what Emolument hath this Religion brought them, which they preferr'd before their own Lives? And ſuch variety was there in the Heathen's behaviour towards us: But we were affected with a great Grief, becauſe we could not hide the Bodies in the earth; for neither was the night aſſiſtant to us therein, (m) neither would Money perſwade them, nor could our Prayers induce them to grant our requeſt; but they watch'd the Bodies with all imaginable care and diligence, as if they were to gain ſome great matter, if they ſhould not be buried." After theſe words, having interpoſed ſome other expreſſions, they proceed, ſaying; 'The Bodies therefore of Martyrs, having undergone all manner of ignominious uſage, and being expoſed in the open air for ſix days ſpace, were afterwards burnt; and being reduced to Aſhes, were by thoſe impious Wretches (n) ſwept into the River Rhone, which runs hard by; that ſo no Remains of them might be any longer viſible upon earth. And this they did, as if they were able to have vanquiſh'd God, and deprive them of a Reſurrection; that ſo (as they ſaid) they might have no hope of riſing again; of which being fully perſwaded, they introduce a ſtrange and new Religion amongſt us, and, contemning the moſt exquiſite Torments, do readily, and with alacrity of mind, willingly undergo death. Let us now ſee whether they ſhall riſe again, and whether their God is able to aſſiſt them, and deliver them out of our hands.

(m) Theſe Words [εἰς ἀργύρια ἔπεισεν, i.e. neither would money perſwade them] are not in our three MSS. Maz.Med. and Fuk. the King's MS. and Rob. Stephens Edit. do retain them. Valeſ.

(n) The Maz.Med. Fuk. and Savil MSS. read it thus, [κατεραφώθη εἰς τὸν ῥοδανόν, i.e. were ſwept into the River Rhone:] But the Reading of the King's MS. of Stephens's Edit. is [κατερράνθη, &c. i.e. were ſtrewed, &c. Valeſ.

CHAP. II.

How the Martyrs beloved of God, kindly receiving ſuch as fell away in the Perſecution, wrought a Cure upon them.

SUch were the Calamities which befel the Churches of Chriſt, in the times of the foreſaid Emperor; from which may be conjectured what alſo was done in the other Provinces. It is worth our adjoyning hereto ſome other words out of the ſame Epiſtle, whereby the Meekneſs and Humanity of the forementioned Martyrs is deſcrib'd in theſe very words; 'Who alſo were ſo far fol- * Phil. 2. 6. 'lowers and imitators of Chriſt, (* Who being in the 'form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with 'God,) that altho' they were in ſuch an height of 'Glory, and had ſuffer'd as Martyrs not once, 'nor twice, but often, and had been taken from (a) Sir H. Savil, at the Margin of his MS. Copy, has mended this place thus, καὶ τοῖς θηρίοις παραβληθέντες, καὶ ἐξ αὐτῶν αὖθις ἀναληφθέντες, i.e. *and had 'the Wild Beaſts and (a) committed again to been caſt to the Wild-Beaſts, and taken from them again*: Which Emendation is put in the Margin of the Geneva-Edit. Indeed Chriſtophorſon read this place thus, as appears from his Tranſlation; but 'tis uncertain whether he did it by conjecture, or from the authority of ſome old Copies. Our MSS. alter not the reading here. Moreover, ἀναλαμβάνειν (which is the term in the Original) ſignifies in this place, to be caſt into Priſon; in which ſenſe 'tis twice uſed in the foregoing Chapter. Valeſ.

'Priſon'; altho' they had the Marks of Fire, the 'Scars of Stripes, and Wounds all over their Bodies; yet they neither declared themſelves to be 'Martyrs, nor would they ſuffer us to call them 'by that name: But if at any time any one of us, 'either by Letter or in Diſcourſe, term'd them 'Martyrs, they reprov'd us ſharply: For they 'readily allow'd the appellation of Martyr to 'Chriſt, (who is the faithful and true Witneſs, 'and the Firſt-begotten of the Dead, and the 'Prince of the Life of God;) they commemorated alſo thoſe Martyrs who were already departed this life, and ſaid, thoſe are now Martyrs, whom Chriſt vouchſafed to aſſume whilſt they 'were making their Confeſſion, he having ſeal'd 'their Martyrdom by their Death: But we are 'mean and humble Confeſſors: And with Tears 'they beſeeched the Brethren, entreating them, 'that earneſt Prayers might be made that they 'might be perfected: They alſo in reality demonſtrated the Power and Efficacy of Martyrdom, uſing much freedom of ſpeech in their Anſwers before all the Heathens, and manifeſted their excellency by their patient Sufferance, Fearleſsneſs, and undaunted Courage: But they refuſed the appellation of Martyrs given them by the Brethren, having been filled with the Fear of God." Again, after ſome few words they ſay; 'They humbled themſelves under the mighty 'Hand, by which they are now highly exalted: 'Then alſo (b) they excuſed themſelves to all Men, but accuſed none; they looſed all Men, and bound none; yea they pray'd for thoſe who tortured them, as did Stephen that perfect Martyr, [ſaying, * [Lord, lay not 'this ſin to their charge. Now if he pray'd for thoſe who ſtoned him, how much more [is it credible that he pray'd] for the Brethren?" Again alſo, after ſome other worsd, they ſay; 'For this 'was the greateſt encounter they had with the 'Devil, to wit, upon account of their genuine and 'ſincere Charity; becauſe the Serpent, being 'ſtrangled, vomited up thoſe alive, whom he ſuppoſed he had digeſted. They did not proudly 'triumph over thoſe that fell; but beſtow'd, on 'ſuch as were indigent, thoſe good things with 'which they abounded, having Motherly Bowels 'of Compaſſion, pouring forth many Tears for 'them before [God] the Father. They asked life, 'and he gave it them; which alſo they imparted 'to their Friends; being Victors (c) over all, they 'went to God: Having always loved Peace, and 'continually exhorted [us] to it, they departed 'in peace to God; leaving no Grief to their Mother, no Faction nor Diſſention amongſt the 'Brethren, but Joy, Peace, Concord, and Love." Let thus much be here profitably placed, concerning the Brethren that fell; upon account of the inhuman and mercileſs Diſpoſition of (d) thoſe, who afterwards behaved themſelves moſt cruelly towards the Members of Chriſt.

(b) Πᾶσι μὲν ἀπελογήσατο. Muſculus tranſlates it trueſt, thus, Omnibus rationem fidei ſuæ reddebant, i.e. they gave all Men an account of their Faith: It may be rendred thus, They excuſed themſelves to all: For that's the proper ſignification of Ἀπολογεῖσθαι. Valeſ.

* Acts 7. 60.

(c) The Maz.Med. and Fuk. MSS. read [πάντων,] i.e. over all. Valeſ.

CHAP. III.

What a Vision appear'd to the Martyr Attalus in his sleep.

MOreover, the same Epistle of the forementionʼd Martyrs, contains also another relation worthy to be remembred; which, for the information of the Readers, we will very willingly insert: Thus it is: ‘For when Alcibiades, one ‘of the Martyrs, (who led an austere course of life, ‘and in the foregoing part of his life hitherto had ‘fed on nothing at all, but only made use of Bread ‘and Water) attempted to lead the same course ‘of life during his Imprisonment; it was reveaㄹled to Attalus (after the first Combat which he ‘finishʼd in the Amphitheatre) that Alcibiades did ‘not well, in his not making use of God's Creatures, and leaving an Example of Scandal to o‘thers. But Alcibiades submitted, fed on all Meats ‘afterwards promiscuously, and gave God thanks: ‘For they were not destitute of the Grace of ‘God, but the Holy Spirit was their Director.” These things were after this manner. Now, when Montanus, (a) Alcibiades, and Theodotus began, then first of all, to be lookʼd upon in the opinion of most Men as Prophets; (for very many Miracles of Divine Grace, at that time wrought in many Churches, made most Men believe that they also were Prophets;) and when there arose a Dissention concerning these foresaid persons, the Brethren that were in Gallia did again subjoyn their private Opinion also concerning these Men, (which was Religious and most Orthodox,) and annexʼd several Epistles of those Martyrs that had ended their lives amongst them; which, being yet in Bonds, they wrote to the Brethren in Asia and Phrygia, and also to (b) Eleutherus then the Bishop of Rome, being (c) Embassadors for the Peace of the Church.

(a) This Alcibiades must be distinguished from Alcibiades mentioned a little before in this Chapter. He, that is first named in this place, was a Companion of the B. Martyrs of Lyons. This Person here was (together with Montanus and Theodotus,) a ringleader of the Sect of the Cataphrygians. Concerning whom see Chap. 16, and 17 of this Book. Vales.

(b) Eleutherus Bishop of Rome, was first deceived by the Montanists, who craftily hid their Error under the pretence of a feigned Piety. Moreover, being moved thereto by the Letters and Exhortations of the Martyrs of Lyons, he wrote an Epistle to the Churches of Asia and Phrygia, concerning the receiving of the Montanists into the Church. But being soon after admonished by one Praxeas of Asia, he revoked his pacifick Letters which he had sent; and following the authority of his Predecessor Anicetus, refused to admit of a new Prophecy. So Tertullian, in his Book, against Praxeas. Vales.

(c) That is, the Brethren of Asia and Phrygia, as well as Eleutherus, were Embassadors for the Peace of the Church. See Book 3. Chap. 24. Note (a.)

CHAP. IV.

How the Martyrs, by their Epistle, recommended Irenæus.

(a) Blondell (in his Apology, Chap. 8. p. 26.) denies that the Martyrs of Lyons wrote to Eleutherus. For he affirms, that the Martyrdom of Pothinus, and the Lugdunensians, happened on the seventh year of Marcus the Emperor, on the year of Christ 167; at which time Soter was Bishop of Rome. The Martyrs of Lyons therefore could not write to Eleutherus who then had not succeeded Soter. But our Eusebius does refute Blondell, saying plainly, That the same Martyrs recommended, &c. Vales.

(b) Valesius, in his Note here, will not allow that Irenæus did actually go this journey to Rome; the Martyrs indeed, says he, had desired him, and he had promised to undertake it; but the heat of the Persecution coming on, and he being fixʼd in the Presidency over the Church, could not be spared personally to undergo it. But since Eusebius clearly intimates, and St. Jerom (in Catalogo) and Baronius (at the year of Christ 179) do expressly affirm, that the Martyrs sent him upon this Errand, ’tis safest to grant his journey thither, tho’ it must be while he was yet Presbyter, for so they particularly say he was in their Epistle to the Bishop of Rome, part of which our Eusebius has here inserted. See the Learned Dr. Cave's Apostolici; in the Life of St. Irenæus; p. 165. Edit. Lond. 1677.

BUT the same (a) Martyrs recommended (b) Irenæus (who at that time was a Presbyter of of the Church at Lyons) to the forementionʼd Bishop of Rome, giving the Man a very good Testimony, as their own words do manifest, which are these: ‘We pray that you may in all things ‘and always rejoyce in God, Father (c) Eleutherus; ‘we have entreated Irenæus our Brother and Com‘panion to bring you these Letters, and we be‘seech you that you would have him recommen‘ded, being a Follower of the Testament or Co‘venant of Christ. For if we knew that place ‘would procure any Man righteousness, we wouʼd ‘chiefly have recommended him as being Presby‘ter of the Church, which degree he is of.” What need we recount the Catalogue of the Martyrs in the foresaid Epistle; some whereof were perfected by being beheaded, others were cast for food to the Wild Beasts, and others again died in Prison? Or what need we reckon up the number of the Confessors which till that time survived? For he that is desirous, may easily and fully know all these things, by taking into his hands that Epistle, which, as I said, is inserted entire into our Collection of the Martyrs. And such were the things that happenʼd in Antoninus's Time.

CHAP. V.

How God, having from Heaven heard the Prayers of some of our Religion, sent Rain to Marcus Aurelius Cæsar.

REport says, that when (a) M. Aurelius Cæsar, Brother to this Emperor, had drawn up his Men in Battalia, in order to a Fight against the Germans and Sarmatians, his Army was brought into so great a strait by reason of Thirst, that he knew not what course to take; and that the Soldiers of the Legion of (b) Melitina (so it was callʼd, which Legion upon account of their Faith, has continuʼd from that time hitherto,) kneeling down upon the Ground, (whilst the Army was setting in array against the Enemy) according to our usual custom in Prayer, betook themselves to the making Supplications to God. Which sight seeming very strange to their Adversaries, report says, that there soon after follow'd another thing much more wonderful; to wit, both a terrible Lightning, which put the Enemy to flight and destroy'd them; and also a great Shower of Rain, which fell upon that Army who had pray'd to God, and refresh'd it, when all the Men in it were just ready to perish with thirst. Which Story is related both by those Writers, (who are wholly estranged from our Religion,) whose care it was to commit to writing matters done in those times; and 'tis also set forth by our own Writers. But the (c) Heathen Historians, because they are

(a) Eusebius is here much mistaken, who says, that M. Aurelius was Brother to Antoninus the Emperor, whenas M. Aurelius Antoninus was one and the same Person. His Adoptive Brother was not named Marcus, but Lucius Ælius Verus, as all Men know. But he, who fought against the Germans and Sarmatians (to whom God granted a sudden shower to allay his Soldiers thirst,) was not L. Ælius Verus, but M. Aurelius Antoninus, as all Historians do attest; which our Eusebius does confirm also in his Chronicon, where he says this was done in the 14th year of Antoninus, that is, four or five years after the death of L. Ælius Verus. Vales.

(b) Melitina is a Country of Cappadocia, situate between Commagenes and Catalonia, says Strabo in his 12 Book; who also relates, that that Country had no Cities. But afterwards Melitina became a famous City, which, upon a new division made of the Provinces, was attributed to Armenia the less; so says Amm. Marcellinus, who always calls it Melitina. Vales.

* That is, the name of that Legion; he means not the very Persons, which then were in it.

(c) Some of the Heathen Writers, who have mentioned this thing, say the Rain was procured by the Inchantments of Magicians: Others assert it to have been done by the Prayers of Marcus the Emperor. So Capitolinus in the Life of Marcus, and Claudian in the sixth Consulate of Honorius. Moreover, they have set down the very Words of the Prayer, that Marcus used; which are these, Hanc dextram ad te, Jupiter, tendo, quæ nullius unquam sanguinem fudit; i.e. I stretch forth this right hand to thee, O Jupiter, which never shed the Blood of any Man. Vales.

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

alienated from the Faith, have mention'd the wonder indeed, but confeſs not that it was done by the Prayers of thoſe of our Religion. But our Men, in that they are lovers of truth, have delivered what was done in a plain and ingenuous manner. Amongſt which number is Apollinaris; who ſays, from that time that Legion, which by prayer had wrought that Miracle, had a name given it by the Emperor, accommodate to what was done, being call'd in the Roman tongue (d) Fulminea. Tertullian alſo is a Witneſs of this matter worthy to be credited, who dedicated to the Roman Senate an Apology for our Faith (which we have before made mention of;) wherein he confirms this Story by a greater and more manifeſt Demonſtration. Thus therefore he writes, ſaying, (e) that the Letters of the moſt Intelligent Emperor Marcus were extant in his time; wherein he atteſts, that his Army in Germany, being ready to periſh for want of Water, was preſerv'd by the Chriſtians Prayers. He ſays moreover, that this Emperor threatned thoſe with death, who attempted to accuſe them of our Religion. To which the forementioned Writer adds theſe words alſo: '(f) What manner 'of Laws therefore are theſe, which the impious, 'unjuſt, and cruel perſons bring againſt us? Such 'Laws as Veſpaſian did not obſerve, altho' he had 'conquer'd the Jews; which Trajan in part diſ-'annull'd, forbidding that the Chriſtians ſhould 'be ſought for; which neither Adrian, (altho' 'an inquiſitive ſearcher into all things that were 'curious,) nor he who was ſirnamed Pius, did 'make authentick." But let every one determine 'concerning theſe things according to his own pleaſure; we will proceed upon the Series of the ſubſequent Parts of our Hiſtory. Pothinus therefore having finiſh'd his life, (together with thoſe that ſuffer'd Martyrdom in Gallia,) when he was ninety years old compleat, (g) Irenæus ſucceeded in the Biſhoprick of Lyons, which See Pothinus preſided over. This Irenæus was, we underſtand, an Auditor of Polycarp's in his younger years. This perſon ſetting down (in his third Book againſt Hereſies) the Succeſſion of the Biſhops of Rome, cloſes his Catalogue with Eleutherus, (whoſe Times and Actions we now make our Reſearches into) becauſe in his time he compiled that elaborate Work: He writes thus.

(d) That is, the Lightning Legion. Scaliger has long ſince remark'd (in his Animad. Euſeb.) that the Legion was not named Fulminea upon account of this Miracle, for it was ſo call'd long before Antoninus's time. Dio Caſſius makes this evident, in his 55 B. where he reckons up all the Legions. Alſo the old Inſcription, produced by Scaliger, confirms this. Wherefore, as to the Miracle of the Rain, obtained by the Prayers of the Chriſtian Soldiers, we do readily give credit to the atteſtation of Apollinaris and Tertullian; but Apollinaris has not yet perſwaded me to believe, that the Legion Melitina was named the Lightning-Legion upon that account. Some may object, that there was indeed a Legion called the Lightning-Legion, before Antoninus's time, but that he gave the Legion Melitina that name alſo, becauſe of the benefit he received by their means. But, if it were ſo, it ought to be called the ſecond Lightning-Legion: And yet Dio makes no mention of any ſuch Legion, altho' he reckons up exactly all the Legions enrolled by the former Emperors. Moreover, Dio ſays, that the Lightning-Legion had its ſtation in Cappadocia, which agrees very well with the Legion Melitina. In the Book called Notitia Imperii Romani, the prefecture of the 12 Legion, termed Fulminea, at Melitina, is reckoned under the diſpoſition of the Duke of Armenia. Whence 'tis collected that Melitina was not the name of the Legion, but of the Town, wherein the 12 Legion, called Fulminea, abode. But 'twas not uſual to give the Legions their denomination from the places where they were in Garriſon, but from the Countreys wherein they were inrolled. Therefore, what Euſebius ſays concerning the Legion Melitina, ſeems to me ſcarce probable. Beſides, Rufinus purpoſely omitted this name of the Legion, as I ſuppoſe, becauſe he knew that Melitina was the name of a Town in Armenia the Leſs, wherein the 12 Legion, called Fulminea, kept guard in his time. But (that I may freely ſay what I think) it ſeems not very probable to me, that a whole Legion of Roman Soldiers ſhould at that time be Chriſtians; which yet Euſebius ſeems to affirm: Who errs in this alſo, becauſe he has not produced the place of Apollinaris, nor ſhown the Book wherein he wrote theſe things. But the Words, with which Euſebius cloſes this whole Story, do ſufficiently ſhew, that he himſelf doubted of the truth of this matter: For thus he ſays, in this Chap. Let every one determine concerning theſe things according to his own pleaſure. Valeſ.

(e) Tertullian's Words are theſe: At nos è contrario edimus protectorem; ſi literæ Marci Aurelii graviſſimi Imperatoris requirantur, quibus illam Germanicam ſitim, Chriſtianorum forte militum precationibus impetrato imbridiſcuſſam conteſtatur. Tertul. Apol. pag. 6. Edit. Regal. Paris 1634.

Quas* Trajanus ex parte fruſtratus eſt, vetando inquiri Chriſtianos: Quas nullus Hadrianus, quanquam curioſitatum omnium explorator; nullus Veſpaſianus, quanquam Judæorum debellator; nullus Pius; nullus Verus impreſſit. Tertul. Apol. pag. 6 and 7. Edit. as before. We have added theſe Words of Tertullian here, that the learned Reader may ſee how different the Tranſlation, Euſebius here quotes, is from the original Copies of Tertullian, which we now have.

(g) Baronius has placed the Election of Irenæus to the See of Lyons on the year of Chriſt 180. For after the death of Pothinus, which happened in the year 179, he ſays that See was vacant till the heat of the Perſecution was over. Valeſ. Dr. Cave, in his Chronological Table, ſays, Pothinus died in the year of Chriſt 177. to whom ſucceeded Irenæus the Year following.

CHAP. VI.

A Catalogue of thoſe who were Biſhops of Rome.

'THE bleſſed Apoſtles therefore, having found-
'ded and built the Church, delivered the 'Epiſcopal Office to Linus; of whom Paul has 'made mention in his Epiſtles to Timotheus. A-'nencletus ſucceeded him; after whom, in the third
'place from the Apoſtles, Clemens had the Biſhop-
'rick allotted to him; who had ſeen the bleſſed
'Apoſtles, and was converſant with them; and
'as yet he had the Preaching of the Apoſtles
'ſounding in his ears, and their Tradition before
'his eyes: And not he alone; for at that time there 'were many yet remaining alive, who had been 'taught by the Apoſtles." In the times of this Clemens, when no ſmall Diſſention roſe among the Brethren at Corinth, the Church of Rome ſent a moſt compleat and agreeable Epiſtle to the Corinthians, joyning them together in peace, and renewing their Faith, and the Tradition they had lately received from the Apoſtles. And after ſome few words he ſays, 'Evareſtus ſucceeded
'this Clemens, and Alexander Evareſtus; then Xyſtus
'was conſtituted the ſixth from the Apoſtles: Af'ter him Teleſphorus, who ſuffer'd a glorious Mar-
'tyrdom, after him Hyginus; then Pius; after
'Pius Anicetus: Soter having ſucceeded Anicetus,
'Eleutherus is now in poſſeſſion of the Epiſcopal
'Office, in the twelfth place from the Apoſtles.
'In this ſame Order and (a) Succeſſion, both the
'the Tradition of the Apoſtles in the Church,
'and alſo the Promulgation of the Truth, is de-
'ſcended unto us.

CHAP. VII.

That, even to thoſe Times, Miracles were wrought by the Faithful.

ALL this, being agreeable to what we have deliver'd in the foregoing Books of our Hiſtory, Irenæus has given his aſſent to, in thoſe five Books of his, which he entitled, The Confutation and Overthrow of Knowledge falſly ſo called; in the ſecond Book of which Subject he does in theſe words manifeſt, that even in his days there remain'd in ſome Churches examples of the Divine and Wonderful Power of God in working Miracles, ſaying; 'So far are they from raiſing the 'Dead, as the Lord and the Apoſtles did by
'Prayer. And frequently amongſt the Brother'hood, (the whole Church of one place having 'with much faſting and (a) prayer requeſted) the

'Soul

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

'Soul of the Defunct has return'd into his Body, 'and the Man has had the benefit of life confer'd 'upon him by the Prayers of the Saints." And again, after the interposition of some words, he says; 'But if they say, that the Lord wrought 'such Miracles as these in appearance only, not 'really, we will bring them to the Oracles of the 'Prophets, and from thence demonstrate that all 'things were thus predicted concerning him, and 'most undoubtedly done by him, and that he only 'is the Son of God. Therefore they which are 'his true Disciples, receiving grace from him, do 'in his name perform all things for the benefit of 'the rest of Mankind, according as every one of 'em hath receiv'd the Gift from him. For some of 'them do certainly and truly cast out Devils; in 'so much that those very persons, who were cleansed from Evil Spirits, frequently become Believers, and continue in the Church. Others have 'the fore-knowledge of things future, and Visions, and utter prophetick Predictions. Others by 'by the imposition of their Hands heal the Sick, 'and restore them to their former soundness: and 'moreover, as we said, the Dead also have been 'rais'd, who continued with us many years after. 'What shall we say more? We cannot declare the 'number of the Gifts, which the Church throughout the whole world having receiv'd from God, 'in the name of Jesus Christ, who was crucified 'under Pontius Pilate, does daily perform for the 'benefit of the Nations: She uses no deceit towards any person, neither does she sell her Gifts; 'for as she has freely receiv'd them from God, so 'she freely ministers them to others." And in another place the same Author writes thus: 'In like 'manner as we have heard many Brethren in the 'Church who had Prophetick Gifts, and by the 'Spirit spoke all sorts of languages; who also revealed the Secrets of Men, in such cases as 'twas 'profitable and necessary, and explain'd the Mysteries of God. And thus much [concerning 'this matter, to wit] that Diversities of Gifts continued with such as were worthy, until those 'times before-manifested.

CHAP. VIII.

After what manner Irenæus makes mention of the Divine Scriptures.

BUT because in the beginning of this Work of ours, we promised, that we would produce in due place the words of the ancient Ecclesiastick Presbyters and Writers, wherein they have deliver'd in writing the Traditions concerning the Books of the Old and New Testament which came to their hands, ((a) of which number Irenæus was one;) Come on, we will here adjoyn his words; and first what he has said of the Sacred Gospels, after this manner: 'Matthew published 'his Gospel among the Hebrews, written in their 'own Language, whilst Peter and Paul were 'preaching the Gospel at Rome, and founding the 'Church. (b) After their death, Mark the Disciple 'and Interpreter of Peter, deliver'd to us in writing what Peter had preach'd. Luke also, the 'Follower of Paul, compiled in a Book the Gospel preach'd by him. Afterwards John the 'Disciple of the Lord, he that lean'd on his Breast, 'publish'd a Gospel, when he lived at Ephesus '[a City] of Asia." Thus much the forementioned Author has said in the third Book of the foresaid Work: And in his fifth Book he discourses thus concerning the Revelation of John, and the number of Antichrist's name: 'These things be'ing thus, and this number being extant in all 'accurate and ancient Copies; and those very 'persons who saw John face to face, attesting 'the truth of these things, even reason doth teach 'us, that the number of the Beast's name, accor'ding to the computation of the Grecians, is made 'apparent by the Letters contain'd in it." And after some other Passages, he speaks thus concerning the same John; 'We therefore will not run 'the hazard of affirming any thing too positively 'concerning the name of Antichrist: For if his 'name were to have been openly declared in this 'Age, it would have been express'd by him who 'saw the Revelation. For it was not seen long 'since, but almost in our Age, about the end of 'Domitian's Reign." Thus much is related by the foresaid Author concerning the Revelation. He mentions also the first Epistle of John, and produces many Authorities out of it; as also out of the second Epistle of Peter. He not only knew, but also approved of the Book call'd Pastor, saying, 'Truly therefore hath that Book said which con'tains this, Before all things believe that there is 'one God, who created and set in order all things, 'and so forth." He quotes some words out of the (c) Wisdom of Solomon, saying in a manner thus; 'The 'Vision of God procures 'Incorruption, and Incorru'ption makes us near unto God." He makes mention also of the (d) sayings of an Apostolick Presbyter (whose name he has concealed) and annexes his Expositions of the Divine Scriptures. Moreover, he makes mention of Justin Martyr and Ignatius, quoting also Authorities out of their Writings. The same person has promised to confute Marcion, in a separate Volume, by Arguments pick'd out of his own Writings. And concerning the Translation of the divinely-inspired Scriptures, hear what he writes word for word: 'God therefore was made Man, and the 'Lord himself saved us, having given the Sign of 'the Virgin: But not, as some say, who are so audacious as to traduce the Scripture thus; Behold, 'a young Woman shall conceive, and bring forth 'a Son; as (e) Theodotion the Ephesian has translated 'it, and Aquila of Pontus, both Jewish Proselytes: 'Whom the Ebionites having follow'd, say, that 'Christ was begotten by Joseph." Hereunto, after a few words, he adds, saying; 'For before the Ro'mans had firmly compleated their Empire, (the

(a) These words [τούτων δὲ ἑνὶ ὑπάρχοντος τοῦ εἰρηναίου] i. e. of which number Irenæus was one] seem to be superfluous, and written in the Margin only, by some Scholiast. But they are in the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil MSS. Vales.

(b) Irenæus, in that he affirms here, that The Gospel according to Mark was written after the death of Paul and Peter, does contradict what Eusebius related before at the 15th Chap. of the second Book: Where he says Mark's Gospel was publish'd at Rome, whilest Peter was alive, and approved of by that Apostle. But 'tis no wonder that the ancient Fathers disagree amongst themselves in this matter; seeing we have almost nothing of certainty about the writing of the Sacred Gospels, save that they are four, and written by four several Authors. But when, or for what reason they were written, and whether the Gospel of St. Matthew were first penned in Hebrew, 'tis not very evident. Vales.

(c) All the Ancient Ecclesiastick Writers (as before was noted) call that Book the Wisdom of Solomon, which we now call the Proverbs. But that Book entitled now the Wisdom of Solomon, is Apocryphal. Vales.

(d) Ἀπομνημονεύματα (the term here in the original) does properly signifie, the sayings of Wise Men, which are repeated by heart. Vales.

(d) Irenæus is the ancientest Writer that makes mention of Theodotion. Wherefore we will see, if from hence we can make out the time when Theodotion lived. Epiphanius (in his Book De ponderib.) says, Theodotion flourish'd under Commodus, and then put forth his Translation. The Chronicon of Alexandria follows Epiphanius's Opinion, and says he publish'd that Work in the sixth year of the Emperor Commodus. I judge Theodotion to be somewhat ancienter. For, seeing Irenæus has mention'd him in his Books against Heresies, (which Books, 'tis manifest, he wrote when Eleutherius was Bishop of Rome; for he says so in the third Book of that Work,) we must necessarily grant that Theodotion flourish'd before Eleutherius was made Bishop of Rome. Vales.

M. Aurelius and L. Verus.

(f) Some of the Ancients do declare that the Greek tranſlation of the Holy Scriptures was performed under Ptolomæus the Son of Lagus; others mention it to have been done under Ptolomæus Philadelphus. Which latter opinion in that 'tis confirm'd by the authority of the greater number of Writers, has at laſt prevailed. Anatolius ſays, the Tranſlation of the 72 was made both in the Reign of Ptolomy the Son of Lagus, and alſo in that of his Succeſſor Philadelphus: Which to me ſeems very probable. For, ſeeing Ariſtobulus, Joſephus, and Tertullian do ſay in expreſs Words, that Demetrius Phalereus put Ptolomy upon this buſineſs; and it being manifeſt that the ſaid Demetrius was in great favour with, and authority under, Ptolomy the Son of Lagus, and died ſoon after him, we muſt neceſſarily ſay that this Tranſlation (if it were done by the procurement of Demetrius) was begun in the Reign of Ptolomy the Son of Lagus. And, ſeeing that Philadelphus reigned about two Years together with his Father, being made his Colleague in the Kingdom, therefore perhaps 'tis related that this Tranſlation was made under both the Princes. Valeſ. The Learned Petavius is of the ſame opinion with Valeſius, in this matter; as may be ſeen from his Annotations on Epiphanius's Book De ponderib. pag. 379. Edit. Paris. 1622.

Macedonians as yet poſſeſſing the Government of Aſia,) (f) Ptolomæus the Son of Lagus, endeavouring with much care and induſtry to adorn the Library he had prepared at Alexandria, with the Writings of all Men, which were accurately compiled, requeſted thoſe of Jeruſalem, that he might have (g) their Scriptures tranſlated into the Greek Language. They (for till that time they were ſubject to the Macedonians) ſent to Ptolomæus the Seventy Seniours, which were the moſt skilful perſons among them in the Scriptures, and moſt expert in both the Languages; (h) ſatisfying the King's deſire herein. [Ptolomy] deſirous to make trial of every one of them, and being fearful leſt by compact they ſhould agree to conceal the Truth of the Scriptures by their Tranſlation, (i) ſeparated them one from another, and commanded every one of them to write a Tranſlation: And this he did throughout all the Books. When they were come all together into the ſame place in the preſence of Ptolemy, and had compared together the Verſion of every particular perſon amongſt them, God was both glorified, and the Scriptures acknowledg'd to be truly Divine: For they all from the beginning to the end, ſet down the ſame things in the ſame words, and in the ſame expreſſions; inſomuch, that the Gentiles who were preſent, acknowledg'd (the Scriptures were tranſlated by the Inſpiration of God. Neither need it ſeem marvellous that God ſhould do this, ſeeing that in the Captivity of the People under Nebuchadonoſor, the Scriptures being then corrupted,) when after ſeventy years the Jews return'd to their own Country; afterwards, in the times of Artaxerxes King of the Perſians, he inſpir'd Eſdras the Prieſt of the Tribe of Levi to recompoſe all the Books of the former Prophets, and reſtore to the People the Law deliver'd by Moſes. Thus far Irenæus.

(g) Clemens Alexandrinus ſays, the 72 Seniours tranſlated all the Books (as well thoſe of the Law, as thoſe of the Prophets) of the Scripture into Greek. To whom agrees Theodoret, in his Preface to his Comment on the Pſalms, Olympiodorus, and almoſt all other Writers. But Ariſtobulus and Joſephus, both Jewiſh Writers, do intimate that the Law only was by them turned into Greek. Ariſtobulus's Words may be ſeen B. 13. of Euſebius de præparat. and Joſephus's in his Preface to his Antiquities. But to this it may be anſwered, That the Jews, under the name of the Law, do ſometimes comprehend the Prophets alſo. See Maſius's Preface to the Greek Edition of Joſhua. Valeſ.

(h) Valeſius reads this paſſage thus [ποιήσαντας τοῦθ' ὅπερ ἐβούλετο, i. e. ſatisfying the King's deſire herein.] He ſays Chriſtophorſon read this place ſo, and Sir Henry Savil in his MS. But the King's, the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. (as he ſays) and Robert Stephens, in his Edit. read it thus [ποιήσαντ]Θ τοῦ θεοῦ ὅπερ ἐβούλετο, i. e. God having done according to his own Will. We follow Valeſius; but leave the Reader to his liberty.

(i) Juſtin the Martyr (in his παραίνεσις to the Gentiles) ſays the 72 Seniours were by Ptolomy put into ſo many Cells; the ruins of which he ſaw at Alexandria: Epiphanius (in his Book de ponderib.) ſays the King placed them two and two in a Cell. Theſe Words of Irenæus agree beſt with Juſtin's account of this matter. Others there are, who deride this whole Story about the Cells; becauſe neither Joſephus, nor Ariſteas, nor Philo make any mention of them. See Petavius's Annotat. on Epiphanius, pag. 378. Edit. Paris; and Mr. Gregory's Diſcourſe (of Oxford) concerning the 70 Interpreters.

CHAP. IX.

Who were Biſhops in the Reign of Commodus.

Commodus.

MOreover, Antoninus having held the Empire nineteen years, Commodus aſſumed the Government: In whoſe firſt year Julianus undertook the Prefecture of the Churches at Alexandria, Agrippinus having compleated the twelfth year of his Preſidency.

CHAP. X.

Concerning Pantænus the Philoſopher.

AT that time there was a Man, Governour of the School of the Faithful * there, who upon account of his Learning was moſt eminent; his name was Pantænus: For from a very ancient cuſtom there had been an Eccleſiaſtical School among them, which alſo continued to our days; and we have been informed that 'tis furniſh'd with Men who are very able Scholars, and induſtrious about Divine Matters. But Fame ſays, that the foremention'd Pantænus was at that time the moſt eminent perſon among them, becauſe he was bred up in the Precepts and Inſtitutions of that Philoſophical Sect call'd Stoicks. Moreover, 'tis ſaid, he ſhew'd ſo great a willingneſs of mind and ardency of affection towards the [Publication of the] Divine Word, that he was declared the Preacher of Chriſt's Goſpel to the Nations of the Eaſt, and journeyed as far as India. For there were many Evangelical Preachers of the Word even at that time, who inflamed with a Divine Zeal, in imitation of the Apoſtles, contributed their aſſiſtance to the enlargement of the Divine Word, and the building Men up in the Faith. Of which number Pantænus was one, and is reported to have gone to the Indians. Where, as 'tis famed, he found the Goſpel according to Matthew, amongſt ſome that had the knowledge of Chriſt there, before his arrival. To whom Bartholomew one of the Apoſtles had preach'd, and (a) left them the Goſpel of St. Matthew written in Hebrew; which was preſerved to the foreſaid times. Moreover, this Pantænus, after many excellent Performances, was at laſt made Governour of the School at Alexandria; where by his Diſcourſes and Writings he ſet forth to publick view the Treaſures of the Divine Points.

* At Alexandria.

(a) Rufinus and Jerome (in Catalogo) do ſay, that Pantænus, returning from India to Alexandria, brought with him that Goſpel of St. Matthew in Hebrew. But Euſebius does not ſay ſo. For by that which he adds, [ἦν γὰρ σώζεσθαι εἰς τὸν ἀναλήμψιον χρόνον] he means only thus much, viz. That that Copy of Bartholomew's was preſerved until Pantænus came into India. So Nicephorus expounds Euſebius's Words, B. 4. Chap. 32. but I aſſent not to Nicephorus, in that which he ſays further, to wit, That that Goſpel of St. Matthew, which Pantænus found in India, was dictated there by Bartholomew. I rather believe that Copy was brought thither by Bartholomew out of Judea. Further, Jerom (in Catalog.) ſays, the Goſpel of St. Matthew, written in Hebrew, was preſerved in the Library of Cæſaria (collected by Pamphilus the Martyr) even in his time. But I doubt 'twas the Goſpel according to the Hebrews, which the Nazareans uſed. For ſome thought, that this Goſpel of the Hebrews was the original Copy of St. Matthew's Goſpel; but that's a miſtake. Valeſ.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning Clemens Alexandrinus.

AT the ſame time flouriſh'd Clemens at Alexandria, (being laborious together with Pantænus in the Studies of the Divine Scriptures,) who had the ſame name with that ancient Prelate of the Roman Church, that was a Diſciple of the Apoſtles

Commodus. Apostles. He (in his Book (a) of Institutions) makes express mention of Pantænus, as having been his Master. To me he seems to mean the same person also, in the first Book of his Stromaton, where recording, * the most eminent Successors of the Apostolick Doctrine by whom he had been instructed, he says thus: 'Now this Work 'of mine I have not composed for Ostentation, 'but these Memoirs I have treasur'd up, as a Remedy against the Forgetfulness of mine old age, 'that they may be a true representation and adumbration of those lively and powerful Discourses, 'which I have had the happiness to hear from blessed and truly worthy and memorable persons. Of which one was Ionicus, [whom I heard] in Greece; another in † Magna Græcia; the first of them was a Cælo-Syrian, the other an Egyptian. Others of them lived in the East: of which one was an (b) Assyrian, the other in Palestine, by original extract an (c) Hebrew." The last [Master] I met with, (who yet was the first and chiefest in power and virtue, whom I inquisitively sought out and found lying hid in Egypt) I did fully acquiesce in, and searched no further. These therefore preserving the sincere Tradition of the Blessed Doctrine, which they had immediately received from the Holy Apostles Peter, James, John, and Paul, (like Children from the hands of their Parents, although few Children be like their Parents) are by God's Blessing come down to our time, sowing those Primitive and Apostolick Seeds [of Truth.]

† It was that part of Italy, which since is called Calabria.

(b) Valesius thinks this Person was Tatianus, Justin the Martyr's Scholar; Baronius says 'twas Bardesanes, of whom see B. 4. chap. the last; but he was no Assyrian; for he was of Edessa, the chief City of Osdroëna.

(c) Baronius says, this was Theophilus Bishop of Cæsarea; but I rather think him to have been Theodotus; which I conjecture from hence, because the Epitome of Clemens's Institutions is entitled, [ἐκ τῶν Θεοδότου ἀνατολικῆς διδασκαλίας, i. e. the Epitome of Theodotus his Oriental Doctrine.] For Clemens calls that the Oriental Doctrine, which he learned from his Masters in the East. I have two Arguments to perswade me, that Clemens does not here mean Theophilus of Cæsarea; (1) Theophilus was contemporary with Clemens, for he flourish'd in the times of Victor Bishop of Rome, as we are inform'd by our Eusebius. (2.) None of the Ancients ever said that Theophilus was a Hebrew, or, which is all one, a Jew. Vales.

CHAP. XII.

Concerning the Bishops of Jerusalem.

AT that time Narcissus, Bishop of the Church at Jerusalem, flourish'd, a Man very famous amongst many even at this time: He was the fifteenth in succession from the Siege of the Jews under Adrian. From which time we have before manifested, that the Church of the Gentiles was first constituted there, after those of the Circumcision; and also that Mark was the first Bishop of the Gentiles that presided over them. After whom the (a) Successions of the [Bishops] there do shew that Cassianus had the Episcopal Chair; after him Publius; then Maximus; and after these Julianus; then Caius; to whom succeeded Symmachus; then another Caius, and again Julianus the Second: Moreover Capito, (b) Valens, and Dolichianus; last of all this Narcissus, who in a continued Series of Succession was the thirtieth from the Apostles.

(a) The most famous Churches, especially those which were founded by the Apostles, did with great care keep the Successions of their Bishops laid up amongst their Archives, recording their names, and the day of their deaths, in a pair of Writing-tables. These our Eusebius had diligently examin'd, as appears from this place; and he has digested the Bishops of the principal Sees from the authority of these Tables only. Wherefore, the Successions of Bishops, which are recounted in the History and Chronicles of Eusebius, are highly to be prized, as being the ancientest and most certain. Vales.

Commodus. (b) Before this Valens, the names of two Bishops are wanting, to wit, Maximus, and Antoninus, which were omitted by the negligence of the Transcribers. For, seeing Eusebius affirm'd Narcissus to have been the fifteenth Bishop of Jerusalem from Mark, and the thirtieth from the Apostles; that can't be unless you add two Bishops here. Eusebius indeed, in his Chronicon, after Capito the twenty-sixth from the Apostles, reckons Maximus, and Antoninus; after these Valens, and Dolichianus; and then Narcissus. Georg. Syncellus and Nicephorus do agree with Eusebius; only between Julianus and Capito they insert one Helias, whom Eusebius does not admit of. Vales.

CHAP. XIII.

Concerning Rhodon, and the Dissension of the Marcionites, which he has made mention of.

ABout the same time also Rhodon, born in Asia, (who, as himself relates, had been instructed at Rome by Tatianus, whom we mention'd before,) wrote many Books, and together with others engaged against the Heresie of Marcion. Which, he relates, was in his time divided into several Opinions. He has recorded the Authors of this Dissension, and with exquisite diligence confuted the Lyes invented by every one of 'em. Hear therefore what he has written in these words. 'Wherefore also they disagree amongst themselves, because they are assertors of an Opinion 'which is ill put together. For Apelles, one of 'their Gang, ((a) who boasts of his age, and 'pretends to lead a more abstemious and strict 'course of life,) confesses there is but one Principle; but says, the Oracles of the Prophets proceed from an opposite Spirit, being induced to 'believe this by the responses of a Virgin, possessed with a Devil, by name Philumena. But others of them, (in like manner as does Marcion 'himself, the (b) Mariner) assert, there are two 'Principles; of which number are (c) Potitus, and 'Basilicus; and these Followers of that * Wolf of 'Pontus, being unable to find out the distinction 'of things, (which neither could he do,) have given themselves over to rashness, and have simply and without any thing of demonstration affirm'd there are two Principles. Others again '[differing] from these, and running themselves into worse [Assertions,] suppose there are not 'only two, but also three Natures. Of which 'sort Syneros was the Ringleader and first Founder, as the Defenders of his Doctrine do say." The same Author writes that he discours'd with Apelles; he says thus; 'For the old Man Apelles, having had a conference with us, was convinc'd that boast of his Continency; who was rejected by Marcion, because he was a Fornicator, and afterwards retreated to Alexandria, as Tertullian affirms in his Book de præscription. Wherefore let us see whether the word [πολιτεία] does not signifie something else here; it sometimes denotes the Office of a Decurio, or Captain over ten horsemen; for these Commanders are by the Græcians called πολίδλαι, or πολίδόμωοι, as I have observed in my Notes on Amm. Marcellinus. Also, a Man may conjecture, that this place should be written thus, τῇ πολιᾷ σεμνῇ καὶ τῷ γήρᾳ, i. e. his venerable hoary hairs and old age. For Apelles was commonly called old Man; and so Rhodon terms him in this Chapter. Eusebius favours our conjecture, B. 6. Chap. 39. where speaking of Alexander the Bishop, he uses this very phrase. Vales.

(a) Rufinus does well translate this passage thus, Qui abstinentiæ & senectutis prærogativâ usus, &c. who making an advantage of his abstinence and old age, &c. For [πολιτεία] does usually signifie abstinence and a more strict course of Life. But I understand not how Apelles could

(b) The King's MS. and Stephens Edition do here insert these two Words [ὁ ναύτης, the Mariner] but they are wanting in the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. Indeed Tertullian, in his Book de præscription does testifie that Marcion was at first a Mariner. Ubi tunc, says he, Marcion Ponticus nauclerus, Stoicæ studiosus? Vales.

(c) The King's MS. and Robert Stephens's Edition call this Man's name Potimus; the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil MSS. term him Potitus; so does Rufinus, in his Version; and Theodoret B. 1. Hæret. Fab. Vales.

* He means Marcion; see B. 4. Chap. 11.

Commodus. ‘he maintain'd many things that were falſe; upon ‘which account he ſaid Faith ſhould in no wiſe ‘be too ſeverely inquired into, but, that every ‘one ſhould perſiſt in what he had believ'd. For ‘he aſſerted, that thoſe who hoped in [Chriſt] cru‘cified ſhould be ſaved, provided they be found ‘doing of good works. He concluded the [Que‘ſtion] concerning God, to be to him (as we ‘ſaid before) the moſt obſcure thing of all. For ‘he affirm'd there was but one Principle, as our ‘Religion [aſſerts."] Then, having ſet forth his whole Opinion, he ſubjoyns theſe words; ‘But ‘when I ſaid to him, whence have you this De‘monſtration, or for what Reaſon can you af‘firm there is but one Principle, tell us? He an‘ſwer'd, That the Propheſies confuted themſelves, ‘becauſe they utter'd nothing that was true: for ‘they diſagree, and are falſe, and oppoſite to ‘themſelves; but, how there was but one Prin‘ciple, he profeſs'd he knew not, but was induc'd ‘only to think ſo. After this, when I conjured ‘him to ſpeak the truth, he ſwore he ſpoke what ‘was true, to wit, that he knew not how there ‘could be one unbegotten God, but he believed ‘it. I laugh'd, and reprehended him, becauſe he ‘ſtiled himſelf a Doctor, and knew not how to ‘make good what he taught." But, in the ſame Book which he dedicated to Calliſtion, the ſaid Rhodon doth confeſs that he himſelf was inſtructed at Rome by Tatianus. Moreover he ſays, Tatianus compiled a Book of Queſtions; wherein Tatianus having promiſed to explain the dark and obſcure Paſſages of the Sacred Scriptures, this Rhodon profeſſes he would ſet forth the Solutions to his Queſtions. There is alſo extant of this Perſon's a Comment upon the ſix Days Work of the Creation. Indeed, this Apelles utter'd many impious expreſſions againſt the Law of Moſes, in many Books ſpeaking irreligiouſly of the Divine Scriptures, and uſing his utmoſt diligence to confute, and (as he thought) to overthrow them. But thus much concerning theſe things.

CHAP. XIV.

Concerning the Falſe Prophets of the Cataphrygians.

MOreover, that Adverſary of God's Church, (who hates Goodneſs, and makes Miſchief his chiefeſt delight,) omitting in no wiſe any ways or methods of Treachery towards Men, cauſed new Hereſies to grow up againſt the Church: The Followers whereof crawled, like venemous Serpents, all over Aſia and Phrygia; and boaſted that Montanus was the * Paraclete, and that the two Women, Priſcilla and Maximilla, his Companions, were his Propheteſſes.

* That is, the Holy Ghoſt; whom St. John, in his Goſpel, does ſeveral times call παράκλητον, Comforter. See Jo. 14. 6.

CHAP. XV.

Concerning the Schiſm of Blaſtus raiſed at Rome.

OThers alſo ſprang up at Rome, whom Florinus, degraded from being a Presbyter of the Church, headed. Blaſtus was in like manner intangled in the ſame (a) Error. Which two Perſons drew away many from the Church, and inticed them to embrace their Opinion; each of them ſeverally endeavouring to introduce Innovations againſt the Truth.

(a) Ruſinus and Chriſtophorſon ſuppoſed the term [πάθημα] to ſignifie Error: Nicephorus takes it in ſuch a ſenſe as to ſignifie, a diſcharging; and thought that Blaſtus, as well as Florinus, was degraded from being a Presbyter. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVI.

What has been committed to memory concerning Montanus, and his Falſe Prophets.

MOreover, that Power, which is the Defender of the Truth, raiſed up Apollinaris (Biſhop of Hierapolis, whom we made mention of before,) and together with him many others, who at that time were eloquent and learned Men, as it were a ſtrong and inexpugnable Defence againſt the ſaid Hereſie of the Cataphrygians. By which perſons we have a copious Subject left us for this our Hiſtory. (a) One of the ſaid perſons therefore, in the Preface to his Work againſt the Cataphrygians, does in the firſt place ſhew that he aſſaulted them with unwritten Arguments: For he begins after this manner; ‘Having a ſufficient while ſince been enjoyn'd by thee, ‘beloved (b) Aviricius Marcellus, to write a Book ‘againſt the Hereſie (c) of Miltiades, till now I ‘have in a manner continued doubtful and unreſolv'd; not that I wanted ability both to confute Falſhood, and alſo to give evidence to the ‘Truth; but I was fearful and cautious, leſt to ſome I ſhould ſeem by writing to add to, or make a further determination about the Doctrine of the New Covenant of the Goſpel: To which nothing muſt be added, nor any thing taken away from it, by him that reſolves to lead a life agreeable to the Goſpel itſelf. But, being lately at Ancyra [a City] of Galatia, and finding the Church (d) then (e) filled with the noiſe of this New (not, as they call it, Prophecy, but as it ſhall be demonſtrated,) Falſe Prophecy; as well as I was able, (God aſſiſting me,) I diſcourſed (f) frequently in the Church many days, both concerning theſe very things, and alſo about other [Points] propoſed by them: inſomuch that the Church did greatly rejoyce, and was confirm'd in the Truth; but the Adverſaries were at that time confuted, and (g) the Enemies of God made ſorrowful. When (a) The opinions of Writers are various and different, concerning this Perſon, whoſe authority Euſebius quotes in this chapter. Ruffinus, Nicephorus B. 4. chap. 23. and Baronius thought it was Apollinaris of Hierapolis, whom Euſebius mention'd a little before. Jerom (in his Book de Script. Eccleſ.) ſuppoſed him to be Apollonius, and afterwards thinks 'twas Rhodon. Apollinaris of Hierapolis was not the Author of this Book, 'tis from hence manifeſt, becauſe he wrote againſt the Cataphrygian Hereſie when it newly aroſe, as Euſebius atteſts at the end of Book 4. But this unknown Author compiled his Books after the death of Montanus, Maximilla, and Theodotus, as appears by the fragments of them quoted in this Chapter. See Halloixius in his Notes on the Life of Apollinaris, chap. 3. Valeſ.

(b) In the Greek Menology at the 22d of October, mention is made of of the Holy Avercius, (ſo Nicephorus calls him Book 4.) Biſhop of Hierapolis, a worker of Miracles. Halloixius put forth this Perſon's Life in Greek, Tome 2. concerning the famous Writers of the Eaſtern Church. Valeſ.

(c) Why this Author without a name, calls the Hereſie of the Cataphrygians, the Sect of Miltiades, rather than of Montanus, 'tis hard to be determined. For he means not here that Miltiades, of whom Euſebius ſpeaks in the following Chapter. For he wrote for the Catholick Truth againſt the Cataphrygians. The Learned Langus, who tranſlated Nicephorus, at this place put in Alcibiades in ſtead of Miltiades. Indeed Alcibiades is by Euſebius (B. 5. Chap. 3.) named amongſt the principal Abettors of the Cataphrygian Hereſie. Therefore we muſt either read Alcibiades here, or Miltiades there. Valeſ.

(d) The King's MS. and Nicephorus (Book 4. Chap. 23.) in ſtead of [κατὰ πόντον, i. e. throughout Pontus] reads it [τὴν κατὰ τόπον ἐκκλησίαν, i. e. the Church of the place,] to wit, Ancyra. Valeſ.

(e) Διατεθρηλημένην· That is, filled with the noiſe of, &c. For the whole Church of that place ſounded with the rumour of this New Prophecy, inaſmuch as, by reaſon of the ſtrangeneſs of this great matter, all Men talk'd of it. Hence it appears, that the gift of Prophecy was in thoſe times rare and unuſual in the Church; ſeeing that the Prophecy of Montanus which then aroſe, ſtirr'd up at that time ſuch Commotions in the Church. Which certainly had not happened, had the gift of Prophecy been then common in the Church. Valeſ.

(f) Sir Hen. Savil (in the Margin of his Copy) made it ἐκάστοτε, i. e. continually, daily: So Chriſtophorſon read it. Valeſ.

(g) The reading of the Fuk. and Savil MSS. is [ἀντιθέους, i. e. the Enemies of God.] So he calls the Montaniſts, becauſe they were the introducers of a new Paraclete, or Holy Ghoſt. Valeſ.

Commodus. ‘ sorrowful. When therefore the Presbyters of ‘ that place requested me to leave some written ‘ Record of what had been spoken against those ‘ Adversaries to the Word of Truth; (b) (Zoticus Otrenus our Fellow-Presbyter, being then present ‘ also;) I did not indeed do that; but promised, ‘ that (by the assistance of ‘ the Lord,) I would write ‘ here, and send it quickly ‘ and carefully unto them.” Having said these words and some others after these in the Preface of his Book, he proceeds, and sets forth the Author of the foresaid Heresie after this manner. ‘ This their stubborn Contention therefore against the Church, ‘ and this new Heretical Separation [from it] ‘ had this original. There is said to be a certain ‘ Village in that (i) Mysia [which borders upon] ‘ Phrygia, called by the name of Ardaba. There, ‘ they say, one of those who had newly embrac'd ‘ the Faith, by name Montanus, (when Gratus was ‘ Proconsul of Asia,) by reason of his immoderate desire after, and love for, the ‘ chief place, gave the Adversary an entrance into ‘ himself, and was fill'd with ‘ the Devil; and being on a ‘ sudden possess'd with a furious and frantick temper ‘ of Mind, became perfectly mad, and began to utter strange and barbarous ‘ expressions, foretelling ‘ what was to come; [a ‘ thing which is] contrary ‘ to the Order and Institution of the Church received from ancient Tradition, and [propagated] by a continued Succession. Now, of those who at that time were ‘ at the hearing of his counterfeited Expressions, ‘ some with indignation rebuked him, as being ‘ moved by, and possess'd with, a Devil and a Spirit of Error, and as being a disturber of the Multitude: They prohibited him also to speak; [for] ‘ they were mindful of the Lord's * Premonition and his Menaces, [whereby we are commanded] ‘ with vigilancy to beware of the coming of false ‘ Prophets. But others, as if they had been inspir'd by the Holy Ghost and with the gift of ‘ Prophecy, conceiv'd also very high thoughts of ‘ themselves, and being unmindful of the † Lord's ‘ Premonition, provok'd that infatuating, flattering ‘ and seducing Spirit [to speak;] and being enticed and deceived by it, forbad it should any ‘ more be silenc'd. By this Art, or rather by this ‘ Method of Subtilty and Mischief, the Devil plotted Destruction against those that were disobedient to [the Lord's Premonition;] and, being ‘ undeservedly honour'd by them, he excited and ‘ enkindled their Minds, ‘ which had (k) forsaken the ‘ true Faith: For he stirr'd ‘ up two other Women, and ‘ fill'd them with a counterfeit Spirit: So that they ‘ (like the fore-mention'd ‘ Person) utter'd extravagant, ‘ foolish and strange expressions; and those who ‘ delighted in and boasted of that Matter, that ‘ Spirit pronounced blessed, and puft them up ‘ with the greatness of the Promises. Sometimes ‘ also, making use of conjectural and credible Arguments, he condemn'd them publickly, that so ‘ he might also seem a (l) reproving [Spirit.] Those ‘ few, who were deceiv'd, were Phrygians. But ‘ this insolent Spirit taught them to revile the ‘ whole Church under Heaven, because this Spirit ‘ of false Prophecy receiv'd neither honour from, ‘ nor found any way of entrance into it. For when ‘ the Faithful throughout Asia had met often and ‘ in many places of Asia upon this account, and ‘ had enquired into this new Doctrine, and determined it to be prophane, and rejected this Heresie, they were expell'd out of the Church, and ‘ interdicted Communion [with the Faithful.”] Having related thus much in the beginning [of his Work] and subjoyn'd, throughout that whole Book, a confutation of their Error: In his second Book he says these words, concerning the Death of the forementioned Persons: ‘ Whereas therefore they have termed us the Murderers of the ‘ Prophets, because we have not admitted of their ‘ prattling and lying Prophets, (for these, they ‘ say, are those whom the Lord promised to send ‘ his People,) let them answer us for God's sake, ‘ Is there any one of those, (most excellent!) who ‘ even from Montanus and his Women began to ‘ speak, that hath been persecuted by the Jews, ‘ or slain by the Impious? not one: Is there any ‘ one of them who has been apprehended and ‘ crucified for the Name [of Christ?] None at all. ‘ Neither hath any of their Women been scourg'd ‘ in the Synagogues of the Jews, or stoned: ‘ [Not one of them] any-where or in any wise: ‘ yea, Montanus and Maximilla are said to have ‘ died another manner of death. For, 'tis famed, ‘ both these Persons, incited thereto by that furious Spirit, hang'd themselves; not together, ‘ but each of them at the time of their death, as ‘ 'tis strongly reported. And so they died and ‘ put an end to their Lives after the same manner ‘ that the Traytor Judas did. In like manner, ‘ also common Fame says, that that admirable ‘ [Fellow] Theodotus, who was, as it were, the ‘ first (m) Procurator of ‘ that they stiled their Prophecy, was possess'd with ‘ a (n) false Ecstasie of ‘ Mind, as if at some time ‘ or other he should be lifted ‘ up, and assumed into Heaven; and that having given himself wholly up into [the power of] that ‘ Spirit of Error, he was ‘ thrown into the Air [by ‘ him,] and died miserably. 'Tis said indeed, that ‘ this thing was thus done; ‘ but in as much as we saw ‘ it not, we do not suppose ‘ (O Macarius!) that we ‘ certainly know any thing ‘ hereof. For peradventure ‘ Montanus, Theodotus, and ‘ the foresaid Woman died ‘ after this manner, perhaps ‘ they did not so die.” Again, in the same Book he says, the Holy Bishops of that time did attempt to confute the Spirit which was in Maximilla; but were prohibited by others, to wit, those that were favourers of that Spirit: He writes thus; ‘ And let not the Spirit in Maximilla say ‘ to]

(b) This Zoticus Otrenus must be distinguished from Zoticus of Comanes the Bishop, whom this Author mentions hereafter in this Chapter. For he of Comanes was the ancienter of the two. Vales.

(l) There were heretofore two Mysia's, (as also two Phrygia's,) says Strabo, B. 22. The one called the Greater, which Strabo calls Olympene; the other the Less, which Ptolomy calls Hellespontia. Both of them bordered on Phrygia. Whence arose the Greek Proverb [χωεὶς τὸ μυσῶν] concerning which see Erasm. Adag. p. 171. Edit. Weckelian. There was also another Mysia in Europe, which the Latines call Masia, but the Greeks always Mysia. To difference this Mysia therefore from the other, 'tis stiled here [ἡ πρὸς φρυγίαν μυσία i.e. That Mysia which borders on Phrygia; or Mysia in Asia. In the Maz. MS. this Town is called Ardabab. Vales.

* Or, distinction, for the term in the original is διαστολὴ.

(k) Ἀποχοιμηθήν. 'Tis a Metaphor taken from Women, who leaving their Husbands Bed, go by stealth to that of the Adulterer. For [κοιμᾶσθαι] to sleep, is often used for these adulteries, as it occurs frequently in Sacred Writ. Vales.

Commodus. (l) Montanus, or rather the devil who spoke thro' the Mouth of Montanus, knew, that 'twas predicted, by the Lord, that the Spirit of God, at his coming should reprove the world of Sin. Therefore, the Devil, that he might make his Auditors believe he was the true Spirit of God, did sometimes reprove, and rebuke them. Vales.

(m) Amongst the Montanists there was a certain Chest, into which those of their Party put Money, which was for the maintenance of the Prophets. Theodotus was the first that look'd after the Chest; whom this Author does therefore call the Procurator of their Prophecy. Montanus with his Propheteses was otherways a great Cozener, who under a pretence of Offerings, scraped much Money together. He usually gave Salaries to the Preachers of his Doctrine. 'Twas necessary therefore he should have his Treasury, and one to oversee and look after it, who also might deliver out the stipends to such as Montanus ordered should be paid. Vales.

(n) Παρεκστῆναι, signifies, to be seized with a false extasie or trance. For there are true extasies; such was Peter's, Act. 10; and Paul's, when he was caught up to the third Heaven. There are also false extasies amongst Hereticks, which this Author does elegantly call παρεκστάσεις. These false extasies differ little from madness, because the Devil is the procurer of them: But those which proceed from the Divine Spirit do not at all disturb the state of the Mind, but are calm and pleasant, as Epiphanius says (in Hæres. Cataphryg.) Vales.

Commodus.

(o) These Words within this Parentheſis ſeem to me to be a Scholion, which ſome old Scholiaſt, or Euſebius himſelf put in the margin of this Book at this place. Beſides, from hence it may be collected, that Aſterius Urbanus was the Author of theſe 3 Books againſt the Cataphrygians, and not Apollinaris, as Ruſinus and Chriſtophorſon ſuppoſed. Valeſ.

(p) This was a great Man amongſt the Montaniſts, who boaſted himſelf to be a Confeſſor, and a Martyr; and was ſo audacious, as, like an Apoſtle, to write a general Epiſtle to the Churches, in recommendation of this new Prophecy. Apollonius ſpeaks much concerning this Man in the following Chapter. Valeſ.

'[to me,] ((o) as 'tis related in the ſame Book of Aſterius Urbanus,) I am driven as a Wolf from the Sheep. I am not a Wolf. I am the Word, the Spirit and the Power: But let him evidently manifeſt and prove that Power in the Spirit; and let him by that Spirit compel thoſe that were then preſent, to confeſs that they try'd and conferr'd with that babling Spirit; [I mean] thoſe approved Men and Biſhops, Zoticus of the Town Comanes, and Julianus of Apamea: Whoſe Mouths (p) Themiſon and thoſe of his Party having ſtopt, wou'd not ſuffer that lying Spirit to be reprov'd by 'em." Again, in the ſame Book, (having interpoſed ſome words to confute the falſe Prophecies of Maximilla) he evidences both the Time when he wrote theſe things, and alſo mentions her Predictions, wherein ſhe had foretold there would be Wars and Commotions; the falſhood of which [Predictions] he reprehends in theſe words: 'And has not this Lye been already made apparently manifeſt? For to this day 'tis more than thirteen years ſince this Woman died; and and yet there has not been either a particular, or an univerſal War in the World. Yea rather, by the Mercy of God, the Chriſtians have had a firm and laſting Peace." And thus much out of his ſecond Book. Out of the Third I will alſo add ſome few words, where he ſays thus to thoſe who boaſted, that many, even of their [Party] had ſuffer'd as Martyrs. 'When therefore they can return no anſwer, having been confuted in all Paſſages we have mention'd, they endeavour to flee to the Martyrs; ſaying they have many Martyrs, and that is a certain and undoubted evidence of that Power, by them called the Prophetick Spirit. But this, in my judgment, is much more untrue. For ſome Followers of other Hereſies [do boaſt] they have many Martyrs, and yet we ſhall not, I think, upon this account embrace their Opinion, nor confeſs they have the Truth amongſt them. Thoſe alſo who firſt follow'd the Hereſie of Marcion, called Marcioniſts, ſay, they have very many Martyrs of Chriſt, and yet they do not in truth acknowledge Chriſt himſelf." And after ſome few words, he ſubjoyns hereunto, ſaying, 'Wherefore alſo, as often as thoſe of the Church, being called to [undergo] Martyrdom for the true Faith, have by accident hapned into company with ſome of thoſe of the Phrygian Hereſie, who are call'd Martyrs, they diſſent from them, and, having avoided all Communion with them, are perfected by a glorious Martyrdom; for they are unwilling to give their aſſent to the Spirit of Montanus and his Women: And that this is true, 'tis manifeſt from what has been done in our Times in [the City] of Apamea, ſituate on [the River] Meander, by Caius and Alexander of Eumenia, who ſuffer'd Martyrdom.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning Miltiades, and the Books he compiled.

IN the ſame Book he makes mention of one Miltiades, a Writer, who alſo wrote a Book againſt the foreſaid Hereſie: Having therefore cited ſome words of thoſe [Hereticks,] he proceeds, ſaying; 'Having found all this in a certain Book which they wrote in anſwer to a Book of our Brother (a) Alcibiades's, wherein he proves 'that a Prophet ought not to ſpeak in an ecſtaſie of mind, 'I epitomiz'd them." A little after this, in the ſame Book, he enumerates the Prophets of the New Teſtament; amongſt whom he recounts one Ammias, and Quadratus, and he ſays thus; '(b) But a falſe Prophet in falſe Ecſtaſie, (whoſe Concomitants are Licentiouſneſs and Audaciouſneſs,) takes his beginning indeed from a voluntary Ignorance, but ends, as I have ſaid, in an involuntary Madneſs of Mind: They ſhall not be able to ſhow any of the Prophets, either under the Old, or New Teſtament, who was inſpir'd after this manner [by ſuch a Spirit.] They ſhall not boaſt of Agabus, nor of Judas, nor of Silas, nor of the Daughters of Philip, nor of Ammias in Philadelphia, nor of Quadratus, nor of many others which do not at all belong to them." Again, after ſome few words, he ſays thus; 'For if, as they ſay, Montanus's Women ſucceeded in the gift of Prophecy after Quadratus and Ammias in Philadelphia, let them ſhow us, who among them have been the Succeſſors of Montanus and his Women. For the Apoſtle is of opinion that the gift of Prophecy ought to continue in every Church until the laſt Advent [of our Lord.] But they are unable to ſhew [any Prophet,] although this is now the fourteenth year ſince the death of Maximilla." Thus far he. Now that Miltiades, whom he mentions, has left us other Monuments of his Diligence about the Divine Scriptures, both in the Books he compoſed againſt the Gentiles, and alſo in thoſe againſt the Jews; having proſecuted each Subject particularly in two Volumes. Moreover alſo, he made an Apology for the [Chriſtian] Philoſophy, which he profeſs'd, [and dedicated it] to the (c) Preſidents of the Provinces in that Age.

Commodus.

(a) In the foregoing Chapter we obſerved that the name [Miltiades] was put for [Alcibiades.] On the contrary, here [Alcibiades] is crept into the Text of Euſebius, in ſtead of [Miltiades.] In Nicephorus 'tis [Miltiades;] but neither he, nor Chriſtophorſon, underſtood this place. Valeſ.

(b) Ruſinus, and Baronius, were miſtaken, in that they ſuppoſed theſe following Words were taken out of Miltiades's Book. For this nameleſs Author quotes nothing out of Miltiades's Book, but only out of the Cataphrygian's anſwer to Miltiades's Book: Which thing Tranſlators underſtood not. Now the meaning of this place is this; There is a great difference between the true Prophets, and the falſe. For the true Prophets, who were filled with the Spirit of God, did foretel things future in a quiet and ſerene temper of Mind. But the falſe Prophets, as was Montanus, uttered what they ſaid in a raging and mad temper of mind. Indeed this was the chief objection of the Eccleſiaſticks againſt the Montaniſts, who boaſted they were inſpired with a Prophetick Spirit, becauſe they Prophecied in an extaſie. But we read that no Prophet, either under the Old or New Teſtament, did ever Prophecy in an extaſie. Therefore Miltiades wrote a Book againſt them, which was thus entitled [περὶ τοῦ μὴ δεῖν προφήτην ἐν ἐκστάσει λαλεῖν, i. e. a Prophet ought not to ſpeak in an extaſie of mind. See Epiphanius, adverſ. Hæreſ. Montaniſt. Chap. 2, & 4; and Chryſoſtom. Homil. 29. on the 1 Epiſt. Corinth. Valeſ.

(c) Jerom, Ruſinus, and other Tranſlators thought Miltiades dedicated his Apology to the Roman Emperors, called here [κοσμικὰς ἀρχοντας.] But becauſe at that time there was only one Roman Emperor, (to wit, Commodus,) I judge the Governours of Provinces are here rather meant. For the term [ἄρχοντες] does commonly ſignifie the Preſidents of Provinces. To theſe therefore Miltiades dedicated his Apology, as did Tertullian afterwards; who calls this Miltiades, the Rhetorician of the Churches. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVIII.

How Apollonius alſo confuted the Cataphrygians, and whom he has made mention of.

APollonius alſo, an Eccleſiaſtick Writer, employing himſelf about a Confutation of that called the Cataphrygian Hereſie, which in his time was Commodus. was prevalent in Phrygia, composed a peculiar Volume against them, wherein he does both word by word disprove the false Prophecies vented by them, and also lays open the Life and Manners of the Founders of that Heresie; [shewing] how they behaved themselves. Hear what he says, in these very words, concerning Montanus: 'But 'who is this new Doctor? His Works and Do-'ctrine do demonstrate: This is he who has taught 'a Dissolution of Marriages: Who has imposed '(a) Laws of Fasting; who 'has named Pepuza and Ty-'mium (little Cities of Phry-'gia) Jerusalem; being de-'sirous to gather together 'their Men from all Parts; 'who has constituted Ex-'actors of Money; who, 'under the name of Obla-'tions, has subtilly mask'd 'his taking of Gifts; who 'gives Stipends to those 'that preach up his Do-'ctrine, that so by stuffing 'of the Paunch the Doctrine 'he professes may thrive and 'prevail." Thus much [he says] concerning Montanus. Concerning his Propheteſſes, a little after these words he writes thus; 'We have de-'monstrated therefore, that these principal Pro-'pheteſſes, for the time they were filled with the Spi-'rit, forsook their Husbands: How falsly then do 'they speak, who term (b) Prisca a Virgin? Then he goes on, saying; 'Does not the whole Scripture 'seem to you to prohibit a Prophet to receive Gifts 'and Money? When there-'fore I see a Propheteſs receive 'Gold and Silver, and rich 'garments, how can I choose 'but abhor her?" Again, af-ter some words, he says this concerning one of those whom they call Confessors: 'Moreover, 'Themison, who has cover'd 'himself with a (c) specious 'pretext of avarice, (he who 'would not bear the (d) sign 'of confession, but rid him-'self of his Bonds by a great 'sum of money, whenas up-'on that account he should 'in future have behav'd him-'self submissively,) does '[notwithstanding] boast 'himself to be a Martyr, 'and has been so audacious, as, in imitation of 'the Apostle, to write a General Epistle, for the 'instruction of those who have behaved themselves 'more like true Believers than he, but does '[therein] defend the Tenets of his own vain Do-'ctrine, and speaks impiously of the Lord, his 'Apostles, and holy Church." Again, he writes thus concerning others, who amongst 'em have been honour'd as Martyrs: 'But that we may 'speak of no more, let the Propheteſs answer us 'concerning Alexander, who terms himself a Mar-'tyr, with whom she feasts, whom many of them 'pay a reverence to: Whose Robberiess and his 'other audacious Facts (for which he has been 'punish'd) we need not speak of, since they may 'be seen in that place where the Publick (e) Re-'gisters are kept. Which therefore of these two Commodus. 'forgives the other's Sins? Does the Prophet [par-'don] the Martyr's Robberies, or does the Mar-'tyr [forgive] the Prophet's Avarice? For when-'as the Lord has said, * Provide neither gold, nor * Matt. 'silver, neither two coats, these persons, wholly on 10. 9, 10. 'the contrary, have committed heinous Sins, in 'possessing themselves of things that are forbid-'den: For we will evidence, that those which 'they call Prophets, and Martyrs, have extorted 'Money not only from the Rich, but also from 'the Indigent, from Orphans and Widows: And 'if they are confident [of their Innocency] here-'in, let them stay, and decide the matter with 'us concerning these things; that so, if they shall 'be convinced, for the future they may leave their 'Viciousness: For the Fruits [that is, the Deeds] 'of a Prophet, must be approved: For a Tree 'is known by its Fruits. That therefore those who 'are desirous may know the truth concerning 'Alexander, Judgment was pass'd upon him at E-'phesus by Æmilius Frontinus the Proconsul [of 'Asia] not for the name [of Christ,] but the Rob-'beries he had audaciously committed, being at 'that time an (f) Apostate from Christ. Then, 'after he had counterfeited [a Profession of] the 'Name of the Lord, and deceived the faithful '[Brethren] there, he was dismiss'd; but his own 'Church, where he was born, admitted him not, 'because he was a Thief. Those who are desi-'rous to know all matters concerning him, may 'have recourse to the Publick Register of Asia, '[where they will find them.] And yet the * Pro-'phet does pretend himself ignorant of this Man, 'whom he has convers'd with for many years 'Having evidently shown what this Man is, we 'have also by him declared the Imposture of the 'Prophet. We are able to demonstrate the like 'in many other things. But if they have any 'confidence in themselves, let them undergo the 'Test." Again, in another place of the same Work, he adds these words concerning those Prophets they boast of: 'If they deny that their 'Prophets have received Gifts, let them confess 'this, [to wit,] if they be convinced that they 'have taken Gifts, they are not Prophets: And 'then we will produce infinite Demonstrations 'hereof. 'Tis necessary that all the Fruits of a 'Prophet should be approved of: Tell me, 'does a Prophet (g) colour '[his Hair?] Does a Pro-'phet paint his Eye-brows 'with * Stybium? Does a 'Prophet make it his busi-'ness to deck and adorn him-'self? Does a Prophet play 'at Tables, and at Dice? 'Does a Prophet put money 'to usury? Let them confess 'ingenuously whether these things are lawful or 'no? But I will demonstrate they are done a-'mongst them." The same Apollonius does relate in the same Work, that at the time of his writing that Book, it was (h) forty years since Montanus undertook [to vent] his forg'd Prophecy. And

(b) In the Maz. Med. Fuk. MSS. and in Nicephorus, this Woman is call'd Prisca: Which is confirm'd by Rufinus, Tertullian, and Firmilianus. R. Stephens calls her Priscilla. Vales.

(c) The Montanists covered their Avarice under the pretext of Religion, and specious term of Oblations, as Apollonius says a little before in this Chapter. Vales.

(d) Christophorson thought the Cross was meant here: But doubtless Apollonius means bonds, which Themison could not endure for Christ's sake. For that which he calls [the sign of Confession] here, in the next Words he terms [τὰ δεσμά] Bonds. Vales.

(e) Ὁπισθόδομος is the term in the original. At Athens there was an House so called, behind the Temple of Minerva Polias, wherein the publick Treasury was laid. So says Harpocration, on that Word. In all the Temples there was such a place, as Varo asserts, B. 4. But here this term must mean the publick Registry, where the publick Records are kept. Vales.

(f) Ἀποστάτης is the term, which Rufinus translates [an Apostate.] Vales.

* He means Montanus.

(g) The Greeks call that Βάπτειν τὴν ὀφρύα, which the Latines term, Crines tingere seu rutilare, to die, or make the hair red. To do which they made use of Ashes which had been put into Lye, as Varro says. See Hesychius in the word ξανθίζειν. Vales.

* That is, a kind of colouring stuff, which is used to make the Eye-brows black.

(h) I perceive now why Eusebius places Apollonius after the Author without a name, of whom he spake in the foregoing Chapter: For because that anonymous Author says he wrote his Books fourteen Years after the death of Montanus and Maximilla; and in regard Apollonius does here say Montanus broach'd his new Prophecy forty Years before he wrote; therefore Eusebius supposed Apollonius to be a later Writer than that anonymous Author: In which, as I judge, he is much out. For Apollonius wrote his Book whilest whileſt Montanus, and his mad Propheteſſes Priſcilla and Maximilla, were yet alive, which appears from theſe paſſages [Let the Propheteſs anſwer us concerning Alexander, who terms himſelf a Martyr, with whom ſhe feaſts, &c.] And again, [And yet the Prophet does pretend himſelf ignorant of this Man whom he has converſt with for many Years;] Euſebius quotes in this Chapter. Apollonius therefore does not ſay, forty Years were paſt from the death of Montanus, when he wrote this Book; but only, that Montanus had ſet a-broach his falſe Prophecy forty years before he went about to write this Book againſt him. Let us ſuppoſe therefore Montanus to be thirty years old when he ſet up to be a Prophet; he could not be above 70 Years old when Apollonius wrote his Book againſt him. Neither had he Maximilla and Priſcilla for his Companions, as ſoon as ever he began his Hereſie; but, as I judge, they were enſnared by him a long while after. Valeſ.

Commodus. again, he ſays, that Zoticus (whom the former Writer made mention of) reſolv'd to oppoſe Maximilla, who then feign'd herſelf to Propheſie at Pepuza, and attempted to reprove the Spirit ſhe was moved by; but that he was forbidden by thoſe that were her Favourers. He makes mention alſo of one Thraſeas, who at that time was a Martyr. Moreover he ſays, as from Tradition, that our Saviour commanded his Apoſtles, they ſhould not for the ſpace of twelve years depart from Jeruſalem: He quotes Authorities alſo out of the Revelation of John; and relates that John, by the Divine Power raiſed a Dead Man to Life at Epheſus. And he ſays many other things, whereby he ſufficiently and fully ſets forth the Deceit of the foreſaid pernicious Hereſie. Thus much Apollonius.

CHAP. XIX.

Serapion's [Opinion] concerning the Hereſie of the Cataphrygians.

BUT Serapion, (who, as report ſays, was about this time Biſhop of the Church of Antioch after Maximinus,) makes mention of the Writings of Apollinaris againſt the foreſaid Hereſie. He mentions him in that Epiſtle he wrote to (a) Caricus and Ponticus; wherein, refuting the ſame Hereſie, he ſubjoyns theſe words: 'And 'that you may ſee, that the Operation of that 'diſſembling Party call'd the (b) New-prophecy is 'abominated (c) by all the Brotherhood in the 'World, I have ſent you alſo the Letters of Clau'dius Apollinaris* of moſt bleſſed memory, who was 'Biſhop of Hierapolis in Aſia." In that ſame Epiſtle of Serapion's, are contained the Subſcriptions of ſeveral Biſhops: One of whom has ſubſcribed thus; I Aurelius Cyrenius Martyr wiſh You health: Another, after this manner, Ælius Publius Julius Biſhop of (d) Develtum, a Colony of Thracia: As God liveth who is in Heaven, Sotas of bleſſed memory, who (e) was at Anchialus, would have caſt out Priſcilla's Devil, but the Hypocrites would not ſuffer him. In the ſaid Letters are extant the Subſcriptions of many other Biſhops, written with their own Hands, who were of the ſame Opinion with theſe. And of this ſort were the Matters appertaining to the ſaid [Hereticks.]

(a) Euſebius (in his 6th Book, Cha. 12.) calls theſe Men [Pontius and Caricus.] Jerom (in Catalogo) calls them Carinus, and Pontius. Valeſ.

(b) So the Ancients termed the Prophecy of Montanus and his Aſſociates; as may be ſeen from Tertullian, de Jejuniis; Jerom, in Catalogo; Firmilian, in his Epiſtle to Cyprian; and the old Author quoted by our Euſebius, Chap. 16. of this Book. Valeſ.

(c) The reading of the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil MSS. agrees with our Tranſlation, to wit, [by all the Brotherhood in the World.] The King's MS. and Robert Stephens read it thus [by all the Brotherhood in Chriſt, over the whole World.] Valeſ.

(d) Debeltum, or Develtum, a Colony in Thracia, is mentioned by Geographers, and in the old Coins, which John Triſtan put forth. Anchialus alſo, hereafter named, is a City of Thracia, ſufficiently known. But why ſhould the Subſcriptions of the Biſhops of Thracia be put to the Epiſtle of Serapion Biſhop of Antioch? If I may make a conjecture, I ſuppoſe the Biſhops of Thracia had written an Epiſtle to the Churches of Aſia and Phrygia againſt Montanus's Prophecy; wherein they gave their Opinion thereof, after the ſame manner that thoſe of Vienna and Lyons did, as our Euſebius related before. That theſe ſubſcriptions were put to the bottom of ſome Epiſtle, 'tis apparent from Cyrenus's Subſcription here mentioned. But 'tis no way likely that thoſe Biſhops did ſubſcribe Serapion's Epiſtle; (1) Becauſe Euſebius does not ſay ſo, but only that the Subſcriptions of many Biſhops were contained in Serapion's Letter, as was alſo Apollinaris's Epiſtle to the ſaid Serapion. For Serapion did this with good adviſement, that he might confute the Hereſie of Montanus by the authority of many Biſhops. (2) How could the Biſhops of Thracia ſubſcribe the Letter of a Biſhop of Antioch? 'Tis moſt probable therefore, as I ſaid, that the Biſhops of Thracia had with a joint conſent written to the Churches of Aſia and Phrygia. Valeſ.

Commodus.

(e) That is, Biſhop of Anchialus, a City of Thracia, as we ſaid before. This Sotas the Biſhop, hearing of this new Prophecy, ſailed out of Thracia into Phrygia, where having ſeen Priſcilla, not filled with the Holy Spirit, but actuated by the Devil, he undertook to caſt him out of her by Exorciſm. Not only Sotas, but alſo many other Biſhops went at that time into Phrygia, to examine that new Prophecy, ſays the anonymous Author, chap. 16. of this Book. Moreover, we may obſerve, that Sotas was dead, when Ælius Julius wrote this; which is ſhown by the word [μακάριος] a term which the Greeks uſe when they ſpeak of a dead Perſon: Had Sotas been alive, he would doubtleſs have confirmed this thing by his Subſcription. The ſame term Serapion uſes, when he ſpeaks of Apollinaris, who alſo was then dead. Valeſ.

CHAP. XX.

What Irenæus wrote againſt the Schiſmaticks at Rome.

(a) IRenæus compoſed ſeveral Epiſtles againſt thoſe at Rome who adulterated the ſound Law of the Church. He wrote one to Blaſtus concerning Schiſm; another to Florinus concerning (b) Monarchy, or, that God is not the maker of Evil. For Florinus ſeem'd to be a maintainer of that Opinion: Upon whoſe account, (being afterwards led into the Error of Valentinus,) Irenæus compiled that Work of his, [entitled,] (c) Concerning the Number Eight. In which Piece he intimates himſelf to have liv'd in the firſt Succeſſion after the Apoſtles. There alſo at the cloſe of that Work, we found a moſt profitable (d) Note of his, which we judged uſeful to be inſerted into this our Hiſtory: It is thus; 'I adjure thee (who 'ſhall tranſcribe this Book) 'by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and 'by his glorious coming to 'judge the Quick and 'Dead, that you compare 'what you ſhall tranſcribe 'and correct it diligently 'according to that Copy 'whence you ſhall tran'ſcribe it; and that in like 'manner you tranſcribe this 'Adjuration, and annex it to '[thy] Copy." And let thus much have been profitably ſaid by him, and related by us, that we may always have [before our eyes] thoſe ancient and truly holy Men, as the beſt pattern of a moſt accurate Care and Diligence. Moreover, in that Epiſtle (we ſpake of) which Irenæus wrote to Florinus, he makes mention of his being converſant with Polycarp, ſaying, 'Theſe Opinions, (O 'Florinus!) that I may ſpeak ſparingly, do not 'appertain to ſound Doctrine:" Theſe Opinions are diſſonant from the Church, and drive thoſe who

(a) Here we begin the 20 Chapter, following therein Ruffinus, Muſculus, and Chriſtophorſon. The King's, the Maz. and Fuk. MSS. begin the Chapter from theſe words [And of this ſort were the Matters, &c.] which are the cloſe of the foregoing Chapter. Valeſ.

(b) The ancient Chriſtians did frequently uſe this term; as often, as they diſputed againſt the Gentiles, under which title they put forth many Books, to ſhew that there was one God, the Maker and King of all things, which term [to wit, Monarchy] they aſcribed to God the Father; but [οἰκονομία, i. e. the Diſpenſation, and Adminiſtration] they aſſigned to the Son and Holy Ghoſt; ſo Tertullian, (in his Book againſt Praxeas,) and Tatianus, (adverſus Græcos.) There is a Book of Juſtin the Martyr's, now extant, which has this title. Moreover, from this title of Irenæus's Book we may conclude, that Florinus aſſerted two Principles, and embraced the Opinions of Cerdo and Marcion, affirming one to be the Author of Good, the other of Evil. Valeſ.

(d) Σημείωσιν is the term in the original. Thoſe Notes which were ſet at the Margin of MSS. that the Reader might underſtand ſomething remarkable occured there, were properly ſo called. Therefore we tranſlate it [adnotationem, i. e. a note.] This note is now to be found in many Greek MSS. expreſs'd only by the two firſt Letters, thus [ση] which do ſignifie [σημείωσα, i. e. note] This Adjuration of Irenæus's did ſo well pleaſe Euſebius, that he put it at the beginning of his Chronicon. Valeſ.

Commodus.

'who give their assent to them into the greatest 'Impiety; these Sentiments even the Hereticks, 'who are without the Church, have not dared to 'publish at any time; these Opinions the Presby-'ters, who liv'd before our Times, who also were 'the Disciples of the Apostles, did in no wise de-'liver unto thee. For I saw thee (when being 'yet a Child I was in the Lower Asia with Poly-'carp, behaving thy self very well in the Palace, 'and endeavouring to get thy self well-esteem'd 'of by him. For I remember the things then 'done, better than what has happen'd of late. 'For what we learn'd being Children, increases 'together with the Mind itself, and is closely 'united to it. Insomuch, that I am able to tell 'even the place where the Blessed Polycarp sat 'and discours'd; also his (e) Goings-out and 'Comings-in; his Manner of Life; the Shape of 'his Body; the Discourses he made to the Populace; 'the familiar Converse which, he said, he had 'with John, and with the rest who had seen the 'Lord, and how he rehearsed their Sayings, and 'what they were which he had heard from them 'concerning the Lord; concerning his Miracles, 'and his Doctrine: According as Polycarp re-'ceiv'd them from those, who with their own 'Eyes beheld the Word of Life, so he related 'them, agreeing in all things with the Scriptures. 'These things, by the Mercy of God bestow'd 'upon me, I then heard diligently, and copied 'them out, not in Paper, but in my Heart; and 'by the Grace of God I do continually and sin-'cerely ruminate upon them. And I am able to 'to protest in the presence of God, that if that 'Blessed and Apostolick Presbyter should have 'heard any such thing, he would presently have 'cried out, and (f) stopp'd his Ears, and accor-'ding to his usual custom would have said; Good 'God! For what times hast thou reserved me, that I 'should suffer such things! And he would have run 'out of the place, where he was either sitting or 'standing, should he have heard such words as 'these. And this may be manifested from those 'Epistles of his, which he wrote either to the 'neighbouring Churches to confirm them, or to 'some Brethren to admonish and exhort them. 'Thus far Irenæus.

(e) All our MSS. and Nicephorus do read [ἐξοδους, i. e. his goings-out] and so we tran-slate it. Vales.

(f) It was the custom of the Primitive Christians, (when they heard any impious Expressi-on in a familiar Discourse, which was disagreeable to the rule of the Catholick Faith,) forthwith to stop their Ears, and run away. See Irenæus (B. 3. Against Heresies, Chap. 4.) and Jerom, B. 1. against Rufinus. Vales.

CHAP. XXI.

How Apollonius suffer'd Martyrdom at Rome.

AT the same time of Commodus's Empire, our Affairs were converted into a quiet and sedate posture; Peace, by the Divine Grace, encompassing the Churches throughout the whole World. In which interim the saving Word [of God] allured * very many of all sorts of Men to the religious Worship of the universal God. So that now many of those at Rome, who were very eminent both for Riches and Descent, did, together with their whole Households and Families, betake themselves to [the attaining of) Salvation. But this could not be born with by the envious Devil, that hater of Good, being by nature malicious. Therefore he (a) arms himself again, inventing various Stratagems against us. At the City of Rome therefore, he brings before the Judgment-seat (b) Apollonius, a Man who was at that time one of the Faithful, and very eminent for his Learning and Philosophy; having stirr'd up (c) one of * his Ministers, who was fit for such [a wicked Enterprize] to accuse this Person. Now this Wretch, having undertaken this Accusation in an unseasonable time, (for according to the (d) Imperial Edict, the Informers against those that were [Christians] were to be put to death;) had his Legs forthwith broken, and was put to death, Perennis the Judge having pronounc'd this Sentence against him: But the Martyr, most beloved by God, (after the Judge had (e) earnestly beseech'd him by many entreaties, and requested him to render an account [of his Faith] (f) before the Senate,) having made a most (g) elegant defence before them all for the Faith he profess'd, (h) was, as it were by a Decree of the Senate, condemn'd to undergo a capital Punishment. For by an ancient (i) Law 'twas establish'd amongst them, that those [Christians] who were once accused before the Judgment-seat, should in no wise be dismiss'd, unless they receded from their Opinion. Moreover, he that is desirous to know Apollonius's Speeches before the Judge, and the Answers he made to the Interrogatories of Perennis, the Oration also which he spoke before the Senate in defence of our Faith, may see them in our Collection of the Sufferings of the ancient Martyrs.

Commodus.

(b) This Apollonius was not the same Person with him, mention'd Chap. 16. of this Book. Jerom (in Catalogo) calls him a Roman Senator. Eusebius does not say he was one of the Senate, in this place. But more of this hereafter. Vales.

(c) Jerom (in his Book de Scriptor. Ecclesiast.) supposes the Person here spoken of to be Apollonius's Servant; and calls his name Severus. Vales.

* Or, every Soul of all sorts of Men. For that's the import of the Greek, if it be exactly rendred. Valesius translates it [Ex omni genere hominum quàm-plurimos, i. e. very many of all sorts of Men.

(a) Ἀπεδύσατο, i. e. he unclothed himself; 'tis a Metaphor taken from Champions, who, being to engage, strip'd themselves, and studied by various Arts and Subtilties to vanquish their Adversaries. Vales.

* That is, the Devil having stirred up one of his own Instruments, or Ministers, &c.

(d) He means the Rescript of Marcus, mentioned Chap. 13. B. 4. See that place, and the Notes upon it. Rufinus thought the Edict of Trajan, (which Eusebius mentions B. 3. Chap. 33.) or the Rescript of Adrian, see Chap. 9. B. 4.) to Minucius Fundanus, was here meant. Vales.

(e) The Judges, who interrogated the Christians that were brought before them, were wont to perswade and entreat them to have a regard for their own Safety, by embracing the Worship of the Heathen Gods. There are infinite Examples hereof in Tertullian, Eusebius, &c. Vales.

(f) From this passage I am induced to think that Apollonius was of the Senatorian Order, as Jerom has said. Who upon the information of some desperate Fellow (whose name is unknown) was brought before Perennis, the Prefect of the Prætorium, (i. e. the Officer to whom the oversight of the Soldiers was committed) as being a Christian; being ask'd by the Judge what Order he was of, and making answer that he was of the Senatorian Order, Perennis commanded him to give an account of his Faith before the Senate. Which when Apollonius had with much Eloquence done, by the sentence of the Senate he was put to death. Why may we not therefore believe Jerom, (who in his Book De Ecclesiast. Scriptor. and in his Epistle to Magnus) has said in expres terms, that Apollonius was a Senator? And although Eusebius does not expresly say so here; yet from this Relation of his thus much may be collected. Besides, Jerom might have read the Acts of Apollonius's suffering, to which Eusebius does here refer us. In which Acts, 'tis probable, Apollonius was called a Roman Senator, and was said to have been betrayed by his Servant. These Acts were written at Rome in Greek, by Men that were Grecians, after the same manner as the Acts of the Lugdunensian Martyrs were written in Greek. Vales.

(g) Jerom (in his Book De Scriptor. Eccles.) misunderstanding this place of Eusebius, has accounted Apollonius, amongst the Ecclesiastick Writers. But Eusebius only says, that Apollonius made a most elegant Oration before the Judges in defence of the Faith he profes'd, not that he wrote an Apology. Scaliger takes notice of this mistake of Jerom's in his Animadvers. Eusebian. p. 208. But he has there alter'd the reading of part of this place in Eusebius, thus [But the Martyr, most beloved of God, after he had beseech'd the Judge by many intreaties, that he might have leave to give an account of his Faith before the Senate.] Which Emendation is contradicted by all our MS. Copies, and by reason itself. Vales.

(h) All Translators have rendred this place without taking any notice of the particle [ὡς] in their Versions; supposing it to be useless. Which, as I judge, is not true: (1) Because the Senators were not Judges, neither had they Jurisdiction. (2) Perennis, who was the Judge in this Cause, had remitted Apollonius to the Senate, not that the Senate should give Judgment upon him, but that Apollonius should give them an account of his Religion: He honoured the Senate so far, that he would not condemn a Senator, before the Senate had had cognizance of his Crime. When therefore the Senate had heard Apollonius, their anſwer was, That the Man ſhould be judged according to the Law. After this Apollonius was puniſhed with death, by the ſentence indeed of Perennis himſelf, but by the decree of the Senate, becauſe the Senate had heard him, and given their conſent that he ſhould be condemned. Valeſ.

(i) He means the Reſcript of Trajan, which Euſebius mentions Book 3. Chap. 33. at the latter end. See the place and the note upon it. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXII.

What Biſhops flouriſh'd at that time.

Commodus. MOreover, in the Tenth Year of Commodus's Reign, Eleutherus, having executed the Epiſcopal Office (a) thirteen years, was ſucceeded by Victor. In the ſame year alſo, Julianus having compleated his Tenth Year, Demetrius undertook the Government of the Churches at Alexandria. At the ſame time likewiſe Serapion, (whom we ſpake of a little before,) flouriſh'd, being the eighth Biſhop from the Apoſtles of the Antiochian Church. At Cæſarea in Paleſtine preſided Theophilus; and in like manner Narciſſus (whom we made mention of before) at that time had the publick Charge over the Church at Jeruſalem. At Corinth in Achaia, (b) Bacchyllus was then the Biſhop, and at the Church of Epheſus, Polycrates. Many others, 'tis likely, beſides theſe were eminent at that time; but we, as it was meet, have only recounted their names, by whoſe Writings the Doctrine of the true Faith has been derived down to us.

(a) In his Chronicon Euſebius aſſigns fifteen years to Eleutherus, and continues his Preſidency to the laſt year of Commodus. Between which two accounts of his there is a great diſagreement. Valeſ.

(b) Nicephorus calls him Bacchylus. But ſometimes diminutive terms, ſuch as this is, are written with a double L. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXIII.

Concerning the Queſtion then moved about Eaſter.

AT the ſame time no ſmall Controverſie being raiſed, becauſe the Churches of all (a) Aſia ſuppoſed, as from a more ancient Tradition, that the * fourteenth day of the Moon ought to be obſerv'd as the ſalutary Feaſt of Eaſter, [to wit] the ſame Day whereon the Jews were commanded to kill the Lamb, and that they ought always (b) on that Day, (whatever Day of the Week it ſhould happen to be,) to put an end to their Faſtings: When as [notwithſtanding] 'twas not the uſage of the (c) Churches over the reſt of the World to do after this manner: Which uſage, being received from Apoſtolick Tradition, and ſtill prevalent, they obſerv'd, [to wit,] that they ought not to (d) put an end to their Faſtings on any other day, ſave that of the Reſurrection of our Saviour: Upon this account Synods and Aſſemblies of Biſhops were convened. And all of them with one conſent did by their Letters inform the [Brethren] every-where of the Eccleſiaſtick Decree, [to wit,] that the Myſtery of our Lord's Reſurrection ſhould never be celebrated on any other day but Sunday, and that on that day only we ſhould obſerve to conclude the Faſts before Eaſter. There is at this time extant the Epiſtle of thoſe who then were aſſembled in Paleſtine, over whom (e) Theophilus Biſhop of the Church in Cæſarea, and Narciſſus [Biſhop] of Jeruſalem, preſided. In like manner, another [Epiſtle] of thoſe [aſſembled] at Rome concerning the ſame Queſtion, having Victor the Biſhop's name prefix'd to it: Alſo [another] of thoſe Biſhops in Pontus, over whom (f) Palmas, as being the moſt ancient, preſided. Alſo [an Epiſtle] of the Churches in Gallia, which Irenæus had the overſight of. Moreover of thoſe in Oſdroëna and the Cities there; and (g) a private Letter of Bacchyllus's, Biſhop of the Corinthian Church; of many others alſo; all which having utter'd one and the ſame Opinion and Sentiment propos'd the ſame Judgment; and this we have mention'd, was their only definitive Determination.

(a) The reading of the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil MSS. is [the Churches of all Aſia,] as we have tranſlated it. Aſia may be taken in a threefold ſenſe; ſometimes 'tis taken for the third part of the World; ſometimes for a Province, divided into nine Juriſdictions, which was governed by a Roman Proconſul; at other times 'tis more ſtrictly taken for that Region which lies by the River Meander. In theſe words of Euſebius, 'tis, in my judgment, to be taken in the ſecond ſenſe, to wit, for a Province which a Proconſul governed. Valeſ.

* That is, the fourteenth day after the appearance of the New Moon: For the religious part of the Jewiſh Calendar was concerned in theſe appearances of the New Moon, the reports whereof were made by the Country-People. See the whole manner hereof deſcribed particularly, by the Learned Doctor Cudworth, in his excellent Diſcourſe concerning the true Notion of the Lord's Supper, pag. 67. See alſo Mr. Jo. Gregory of Oxford, in his Diſcourſe concerning Upper-rooms, pag. 14, &c.

(b) The Learned Arch-Biſhop Uſher, in his Diſſertation prefixt before Ignatius's Epiſtles, Chap. 9. ſays, that the Aſiatics, who celebrated Eaſter with the Jews, on the firſt Day of unleavened Bread, paſſed over that Day with Mourning and Faſting; after which Day was ended, they concluded their Lent-faſt. Which opinion Euſebius does here contradict, in that he affirms expreſly, that the Aſiatics, did put an end to their Faſtings on the 14th day of the firſt Month, although it were not Sunday. Valeſ.

(c) Here Euſebius does plainly declare that the Aſiatics only did at that time celebrate Eaſter with the Jews; but that all the other Churches obſerved that Feſtival on another Day. Wherefore I diſſent from Halloixius, Arch-Biſhop Uſher, and others, who ſuppoſe that the Syrians, Meſopotamians, and Cilicians, did then keep Eaſter at the ſame time with the Aſiatics. 'Tis evident that the Syrians and Meſopotamians, were then right in their Sentiments about this matter, which appears from their Councils here mentioned by Euſebius; For Oſdroëna is a part of Meſopotamia: But afterwards they fell to the Jewiſh Obſervation of this Feſtival, and that before the Nicene Council, as Athanaſius aſſerts: On the contrary, the Aſiatics forſaking their former Error, embraced the ſounder Opinion in their obſervation of Eaſter; which they did before the Nicene-Council, as appears from Conſtantine's Epiſtle, which Euſebius relates, B. 3. Chap. 18 and 19. of Conſtantine's Life. Valeſ.

Commodus.

(d) It was queſtion'd amongſt the Ancients, at what hour the Faſt before Eaſter was to be concluded; ſome were of opinion, that it was to be continued to the dawning of Eaſter-day, after the Cock-crowing, as may be ſeen in Epiphanius, and Clemens: Others thought it was to be finiſhed on the Saturday-evening before Eaſter-day; So Cyrill, in Hom. Paſc. Valeſ.

(e) The Biſhop of Cæſarea, (before the Nicene-Council, and a long time after,) had the Dignity and Honour of a Metropolitan, and preſided in all the Councils of Paleſtine, as being Biſhop of the chief See. Nevertheleſs, the Biſhops of Jeruſalem had a reſpect ſhown them; theirs being the Apoſtolick Church, which firſt had a Biſhop. Therefore the Biſhops of that See were not under the Biſhops of Cæſarea, but were αὐτοκέφαλοι, i. e. were, as to their priviledges, independent of the See of Cæſarea. See the ſeventh Canon of the Nicene Council. Valeſ.

(f) He was Biſhop of Amaſtris in Pontus, of whom Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth makes mention, in his Epiſtle to the Church of Amaſtris, which Epiſtle our Euſebius ſpeaks of B. 4. Chap. 23. There was one, which bore the ſame name, (to wit, Palmas) of the Conſular Order, whom Adrian commanded to be killed; ſo ſays Spartianus. Moreover, Euſebius ſays, this Palmas preſided, as being the moſt ancient Biſhop, not that he was a Metropolitan. For Heraclea, not Amaſtris, was Metropolis of the Cities of Pontus. But in the Eccleſiaſtick Councils the Precedency was different, according to the diverſity of times and places. The plaineſt and moſt reaſonable cauſe of Precedency was, that the ancienteſt Biſhop ſhould take place of the reſt. Afterwards the Biſhops of the Metropolitan Churches had that honour given them. Valeſ.

(g) Jerom (in his Book De Scriptor. Eccleſiaſt.) expounds this place ſo, as if Bacchylus had convened a Council in Achaia, apart by himſelf: For in this ſenſe he takes the term [ἰδίως] here uſed by Euſebius: But there may another ſenſe be given hereof, to wit, that Bacchylus wrote a private Epiſtle in his own Name concerning Eaſter, not a Synodical Letter, as the reſt did. Euſebius (Book 6. Chap. 11.) calls a private Letter, ἰδίαν ἐπιστολήν. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning the Diſagreement [of the Churches] throughout Aſia.

OVer thoſe Biſhops in Aſia, who ſtifly maintain'd they ought to obſerve the ancient uſage heretofore deliver'd to them, preſided Polycrates: Who, in the Epiſtle he wrote to Victor, and the Roman Church, declares the Tradition derived down to his own Times in theſe words:

'We

Commodus. ‘We therefore observe the true and genuine ‘* Day; having neither added any thing to, ‘nor taken any thing from, [the uninterrupted ‘usage deliver'd to us.] † For in Asia the Great ‘Lights are dead, who shall be raised again in ‘the Day of the Lord's Advent, wherein he shall ‘come with glory from Heaven, and raise up all his ‘Saints, [I mean] Philip, one ‘of the Twelve Apostles, ‘who died at Hierapolis, and ‘his two Daughters, who ‘continued Virgins to the ‘end of their lives; also his ‘other Daughter, having whilst she lived been ‘inspired by the Holy Ghost, died at Ephesus. ‘And moreover, John, who leaned on the Lord's ‘Breast, and was a Priest, wearing a (a) Plate ‘of Gold, and was a Martyr, and a Doctor: This ‘[John, I say] died at Ephesus. Moreover also, ‘Polycarp Bishop at Smyrna and Martyr, and ‘(b) Thraseas of Eumema, Bishop and Martyr, who ‘died at Smyrna. What need we mention (c) Sagaris Bishop and Martyr, who died at Laodicea? ‘And moreover (d) Papirius of blessed memory, ‘and (e) Melito the Eunuch, who in all things was ‘directed by the Suggestion of the Holy Spirit, ‘who lies at Sardis, expecting the [Lord's coming ‘to] visit him from Heaven, when he shall be ‘raised from the Dead? All these kept the Day ‘of Easter on the fourteenth day of the Moon, according to the Gospel: In no wise violating, ‘but exactly following the Rule of Faith. And ‘moreover, I Polycrates, the meanest of you all, ‘according to the Tradition of my Kinsmen, some ‘of whom also I have follow'd: For (f) seven of ‘my Relations were Bishops, and I am the eighth; ‘all which Kinsmen of mine did always celebrate ‘the Day [of Easter] when the People [of the ‘Jews] (g) removed the Leaven. I therefore, ‘Brethren, who am sixty five years old in the ‘Lord, and have been conversant with the Brethren dispersed over the World, and have read ‘the whole Scripture through, am not at all terrified at what I am threatned with. For those ‘who were greater than I, have said, * We ought to obey God rather than Men.” To these words, speaking of all the Bishops who were present with him when he wrote, and were of the same Opinion with him, he adjoyns thus much, saying; ‘I could make mention of the Bishops who ‘are present with me, ‘whom you (h) requested ‘me to convene, and I have ‘called them together: ‘whose names should I annex [to this Epistle,] they ‘would be very numerous; ‘all which Persons having ‘visited me, (who am a ‘mean Man) did by their consent approve this ‘Epistle; well knowing that I have not born ‘these hoary Hairs in vain, but have always led ‘my life agreeable to the Precepts of the Lord ‘Jesus.” After this, Victor the Bishop of Rome, did immediately attempt to cut off from the common Unity the Churches of all Asia, together with the adjoyning Churches, as having given their assent to heterodox Opinions; and (i) by his Letters he publickly declares, and pronounces all the Brethren there to be wholly excommunicate: But this pleased not all the Bishops: Therefore they perswade him to the contrary, [advising him] to entertain thoughts of Peace, of Unity, and Love of Christians among one another. Moreover their Epistles are now extant, wherein they have sharply reproved Victor. Among whom Irenæus, having written a Letter in (k) the name of those Brethren in Gallia, whom he presided over, does indeed maintain, that the Mystery of our Lord's Resurrection ought to be celebrated only on a Sunday; but does in many other words seasonably advise him not to cut off whole Churches of God for observing an ancient Custom derived down to them by Tradition: To which words he adjoyns thus much; ‘For ‘the Controversie is not only concerning the Commodus. * Acts 5. 29.

(h) Hence 'tis apparent that Victor Bishop of Rome had written to Polycrates to convene the Bishops of Asia; and threatned to excommunicate him, unless he obeyed his determination about Easter. As to his Menaces, Polycrates answers, I am not at all terrified at what I am threatned with. Vales.

(i) Valesius (in his Note at this place) is of opinion, that Victor did not excommunicate the Churches of Asia; but only endeavoured, and threatned to do it. The reasons he brings for this are these: (1) Eusebius says expresly, [ἀποξενειν πειρᾶται, i. e, he endeavoured to cut off from the Communion, &c.] (2) The Epistles written to Victor by Irenæus and other Bishops, do shew, that the Sentence of Excommunication was not then pronounced by Victor; for thus Eusebius writes concerning Irenæus's Letters, [But does in many other Words seasonably advise Victor not to cut off whole Churches, &c.] (3) Photius (in Biblioth. Chap. 120.) writes that Irenæus wrote many Letters to Victor, perswading him not to excommunicate any one for their dissent about the observation of Easter; therefore, before Irenæus wrote, Victor had excommunicated no Body: Now, it cannot be supposed that Victor did it after the receipt of Irenæus's Letters; for then Eusebius would have made mention of it; but he intimates the contrary to all this, calling Irenæus [εἰρηνοποιὸν,] i. e. Peace-maker, because his Letters restored Peace to the Church. These are Valesius's reasons. On the contrary Socrates, (B. 5. Chap. 22.) Halloixius in his life of Irenæus, pag. 668; and Dr. Cave in the Life of Irenæus, pag. 168. are of opinion, that this Sentence of Excommunication was actually pronounced by Victor. Their main Argument for this, is grounded on these Words of Eusebius, which here follow [κὴ ςηλιτεύει γε διὰ γεγραμμάτων, ἀκοινωνήτους ἁρδην πάντας τὰς ἐκεῖσε ἀναχηρύττων ἀδελφὰς] which we have thus rendred [And by his Letters he, i. e. Victor, publickly declares, and pronounces all the Brethren there to be wholly excommunicated.] Which, whether it does not outweigh all that Valesius has said to the contrary, is left to the determination of the Learned Reader.

Commodus. * He means Easter-day. † Eusebius quotes part of this Epistle at the 31 Chap. of his 3d. B. The Learned Reader, upon comparing of the original Greek, here, and at the said 31 Chapter, will find some small difference: Upon which account our Version of the two places differs; for we translated them as we found them.

(a) See B. 3. Chap. 31. Note (d.) But the Jewish use of this plate of Gold can't be meant here; for John was neither High-Priest amongst the Jews, nor yet of the sacerdotal race. Polycrates mentions 3 things of John; 1. That he was a Priest; 2. a Martyr; 3. a Doctor, or Evangelist. Now as he was a Doctor of Christ, and a Martyr for him; so also must he be understood to be a Priest of Christ. 'Tis probable those first Christian Priests, in imitation of the Jewish High-Priests, did wear a plate of Gold, as a Badge of Honour. Epiphanius (in Hæres. Nazaræor.) says, James the Brother of our Lord, who was ordained the first Bishop of Jerusalem, wore such a plate of Gold on his Forehead. The same is said of Mark the Evangelist, in a MS. concerning his Suffering. Vales.

(b) This is Thraseas the Martyr, whom Apollonius mentions in his Book against the Cataphrygians; whose Words our Eusebius quotes Chap. 18. of this Book; Rufinus says he suffered Martyrdom at Smyrna. Vales.

(c) Melito Bishop of Sardis makes mention of this Martyr, in his Book concerning Easter; in those Words which our Eusebius quotes B. 4. Chap. 26. This Sagaris was Bishop of Laodicea in Asia; in whose times the Question concerning Easter was raised at Laodicea. Vales.

(d) In the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. this Man's name is thus written, [παπίριον, Papirius.] 'Tis a Roman name. Polycrates does not say where this Papirius was Bishop. But I find in Simeon Metaphrastes, (in the Life of Polycarp) that this Papirius was Successor to Polycarp Bishop of Smyrna. Vales.

(e) Polycrates does here stile Melito, an Eunuch, that is, in our Saviour's explication, one of those, who make themselves Eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven's-sake; who are content to deny themselves, and to renounce the lawful Pleasures and Comforts of the World, for the service of Religion. Jerom (De Scriptor. Eccleſiaſt.) attests that this Melito was by many accounted a Prophet. Vales.

(f) Rufinus thought that seven of Polycrates's Ancestors, or Relations, were Bishops of Ephesus. But Polycrates does not say they were all Bishops of Ephesus; we may suppose they were Bishops in several Cities of Asia. Vales.

(g) In the King's, and Maz. MSS. this place is plainly written thus, [ὅταν ὁ λαὸς ἤρνυε τὴν ζύμην,] i. e. when the People removed the Leaven. So Rufinus read this place, as appears by his Version; viz. Qui omnes ita observarunt hunc diem ut conveniret cum illo quo fermentum Judæorum populus aufert; i. e. All which so observed this Day, that it might agree with that wherein the People of the Jews removed their Leaven. I wonder why Robert Stephens read it [ὅτ' ἦν ὁ λαὸς ἤρνυε, when the People prepared, &c?] For on the 14th Day of the first Month, the People did not prepare, but cast away their Leaven. See Exod. 12. 18. Vales.

(k) This Epistle therefore of Irenæus's was a Synodical Epistle; because 'twas written in the name of the Churches of France, the chief City whereof then was Lyons. This Epistle is mentioned by Eusebius, in the foregoing Chapter: For I judge it to be one and and the same Epistle, because 'tis unlikely there should be two Synods convened in so short a time, to determine of one and the same matter. Vales.

Commodus. ‘ Day; but alſo concerning the very (l) Form ‘ of the (m) Faſt: For ſome ſuppoſe they ought ‘ to (n) Faſt (o) one day, others (p) two, others ‘ more; (q) others computing forty [continued] ‘ Hours of the Day and Night make [that Space]

(l) Irenæus ſays, that at that time there was a two-fold diſſention in the Church; the firſt, concerning Eaſter-day; the ſecond, about the form of the Faſt; i.e. how many Days were to be kept as a Faſt; for ſo he explains himſelf in the following Words. For all, as well thoſe who celebrated Eaſter on the Sunday, as thoſe who, with the Jews, kept that Feſtival on the fourteenth day of the Moons appearance, did agree in this, to wit, that they faſted before Eaſter. Which Faſt, as well as the Feaſt of Eaſter, they had received from Apoſtolick Tradition: See Euſebius, Book 2. Chap. 17. And the Notes there. Valeſ.

(m) Amongſt the ancient Chriſtians there were three kinds of Faſts: the firſt was the Faſt on Wedneſdays and Fridays, which ended at the 9th hour of the Day, (i.e. at three a-Clock in the afternoon,) after the end of the Station, or Holy Communion. The ſecond ſort was the Lent-Faſt, which ended about the evening. The third ſort was the ſtricteſt of all, and laſted to the Cock-crowing; which was therefore by the Greeks called [ὑπέρθεσις,] in Latin Superpoſitio. Epiphanius (in his Expoſitio fidei Catholicæ, at the end of his Books, againſt Hereſies) does plainly diſtinguiſh theſe three ſorts of Faſts. So does Dionyſius Alexandrinus, in his Epiſtle to Baſilides. But now, it may be demanded, which of theſe three ſorts of Faſts Irenæus does here ſpeak of? 'Tis manifeſt, he means not the firſt ſort; for he evidently ſpeaks of a whole days Faſt: Some ſuppoſe, ſays he, they ought to faſt one day, &c. Dionyſius Alexandrinus and Epiphanius, (in the places before-mentioned) ſeem to be of opinion, that Irenæus means the third ſort of Faſts. Valeſ.

(n) Theſe Words of Irenæus are variouſly underſtood. Bellarmine thinks he ſpeaks of Lent. Cardinal Perron ſuppoſes he ſpeaks of the Week that precedes Eaſter: Which opinion is confirm'd by Dionyſius Alexandrinus and Epiphanius, in the places before-cited. Valeſ.

(o) Without doubt Irenæus means, the Friday of the Great Week; (i.e. the Week before Eaſter;) on which day was kept a publick Faſt, ſays Tertullian, in his Book De Orat. and in that De Jejunio. Valeſ.

(p) To wit, on the Preparation-Day, (which we call Good-Friday,) and on the Great-Sabbath (i.e. the Saturday before Eaſter.) For on theſe two days all Perſons, except the ſick, were wont to Faſt, ſays Tertullian, in his Book De Jejunio. Valeſ.

(q) The King's, Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. do read and point this place thus, [οἱ δὲ τεσσαράκοντα ὥρας ἡμερινὰς τε καὶ νυκτερινὰς συμπληροῦσι τὴν ἡμέραν αὐτῶν.] And Muſculus has faithfully tranſlated it thus, [Alii quadraginta horas diurnas & nocturnas computantes, diem ſuum ſtatuunt,] whom we follow in our Verſion of this place; having rendred it thus, [others computing forty continued] hours of the day and night make that [ſpace] their day [of Faſting.] This reading is doubtleſs the trueſt: For Irenæus having ſaid that ſome Faſt one day, others two, others more; what need is there of his adding this [others Faſt forty Days] when-as in thoſe Words of his [others Faſt more Days] forty Days are comprehended? Beſides, if the ſtop be put at [τεσσαράκοντα, forty,] (as 'tis in the Savil MS. and in Ruſinus and Chriſtophorſon's Tranſlations) to what ſhall the following Words [ὥρας ἡμερινὰς τε, &c.] be referred? If they be referred to thoſe that Faſt forty Days, (as 'tis certain they muſt) then 'twill neceſſarily follow, that thoſe who Faſt forty Days during that time do eat nothing at all, ſeeing that they account their Faſt muſt be continued all the Hours of the Night, as well as the Day. Having made out the true Reading of this place, we come to explain the meaning of it. Irenæus therefore ſays, that ſome Faſted forty continued Hours of the Day and Night. Some think this Faſt of forty Hours was kept by them in memory of that ſpace of time which was between the Death of Chriſt and his Reſurrection: Which ſpace of time contained about forty Hours; to wit, from the ſixth Hour of the Preparation-Day (that is, between 12 and 3 a Clock on Good-Friday) to the dawning of Eaſter-Day: But I ſuppoſe 'twas kept in honour and memory of Chriſt's forty Days Faſt in the Wilderneſs. Three things may be collected from theſe Words of Irenæus. (1.) That the Faſt before Eaſter was uſually obſerved in the Church from the very times of the Apoſtles. (2.) This Faſt was celebrated in honour and memory of Chriſt's Faſt: (3.) That the ſpace of time, allotted for this Faſt, was various and different. But we ought always to remember that Irenæus does here ſpeak of the Faſt of Superpoſition; (See Note (m) in this Chap.) which the Chriſtians uſually obſerved throughout the Great-week; (i.e. the Paſſion-week:) The Faſt in which Week being once admitted, the Faſt of Lent muſt alſo be admitted: For the Week before Eaſter is part of Lent. Sometimes indeed we ſee the Faſt of this Week is diſtinguiſh'd from the Lent-Faſt; (as in Epiphanius's Expoſitio fidei, &c.) but 'tis not ſo diſtinguiſh'd, as if it did not really belong to Lent; but 'tis diſtinguiſh'd from it, as the part is from the whole. The reaſon of this diſtinction is twofold; (1) it was kept with a more ſtrict Faſt, to wit, the Faſt of Superpoſition, as we ſhewed before, (Note (m.) (2) This Week does properly belong to Eaſter. For the Feriæ (or Days) of it have their denomination from the following Sunday, as ſhall hereafter be manifeſted. Hence 'tis called the Great-week; the reaſons of which term Chryſoſtom does give in his 30 Homily on Geneſis. This Week began from the ſecond Feriæ, (i.e. Monday,) ſays Cyril in Homil. Paſchal. and Epiphanius in Acrianis. Valeſ.

‘ their (r) Day [of Faſting:] and this variety in Commodus. ‘ obſerving [the Faſt] has not been begun in our ‘ Age, but a long while ſince, in the Times of ‘ our Anceſtors: (ſ) Who being (as 'tis probable) 'tis ‘ not ſo diligent in their ‘ Preſidencies, propoſed ‘ that as a Cuſtom to their ‘ Succeſſors, which was introduc'd by ſimplicity and ‘ unskilfulneſs. And yet ‘ nevertheleſs all theſe maintain'd mutual Peace towards one another, which alſo we retain. Thus the ‘ variety of the Faſt commends the conſent of the ‘ Faith.” Hereto he adjoyns a Relation, which I will ſuitably inſert in this place; it is thus: ‘ And the Preſbyters, who, before Soter, ‘ preſided over that Church which You now govern, I mean Anicetus, and Pius, Hyginus, Teleſphorus, and Xyſtus, theſe Perſons, [I ſay,] neither obſerv'd it themſelves, nor did they permit thoſe (t) with them [to obſerve it.] Nevertheleſs, although they themſelves obſerv'd it not, yet they maintain'd Peace with thoſe that came to them from thoſe Churches wherein it was obſerv'd. But the (u) Obſervation of it, amongſt thoſe who kept it not, ſeem'd to have much more of contrariety in it. Neither were any Perſons ever excommunicated upon account of this Form [of the Faſt:] But the Presbyters, your Predeceſſors, who obſerv'd it not, † ſent the Euchariſt to the [Presbyters] of thoſe Churches which obſerv'd it not: And when (x) Polycarp of bleſſed memory came to Rome in the Times of Anicetus, and there had been a ſmall Controverſie between them concerning ſome other things, they did ſtraightway mutually embrace each other; having not deſired to be contentious with one another about this (y) Head: For neither could Anicetus perſwade Polycarp not to obſerve it, becauſe he had always kept it with John the Diſciple of our Lord, and the other Apoſtles with whom he had been converſant: Nor did Polycarp induce Anicetus to obſerve it, who ſaid, he ought to retain the uſage of the Presbyters ‘ that were his Predeceſſors. Theſe things being thus, they received the Communion together.

(ſ) Irenæus would ſhew here whence ſo great a diverſity about the Faſt before Eaſter aroſe. He ſays therefore, that it proceeded not from any Law given by the Apoſtles or Chriſt; but did by degrees grow in uſe; and afterwards ſome Biſhops, being too remiſs in thoſe things belonging to Diſcipline, made that a cuſtom, which was introduced by ſimplicity and ſingularity, and left it to be obſerved by their Succeſſors. In this ſenſe Socrates took Irenæus's words here, as appears from what he ſays B. 5. Chap. 22. Valeſ.

(t) In Turnebus and Moreus's Book, at the margin 'tis mended thus [μεθ' ἑαυτῶν,] i.e. with them. So Ruſinus reads this place, as appears by his Verſion. Valeſ.

(u) The ſenſe of this place is this; Although the obſerving, and not obſerving of any cuſtom are in themſelves contrary; yet as often as he that obſerves the cuſtom is converſant among thoſe who obſerve it not, this diverſity will be much more apparent. Valeſ.

† The Biſhops were wont, in the time of the Feſtivity of Eaſter, to ſend the Euchariſt to other Biſhops, in the name of Eulogiæ. This cuſtom was at length forbidden in the Council of Laodicea, Chap. 14. Valeſ.

(x) Though the exact time of Polycarp's coming to Rome cannot preciſely be defined, yet will it in a great meaſure depend upon Anicetus's Succeſſion to that See, in whoſe time he came thither. Now 'tis evident, that almoſt all the ancient Catalogues place him before Soter, and next to Pius, whom he ſucceeded. This Succeſſion Euſebius (in his Chronicon) places on the year of Chriſt 154; (a computation doubtleſs much truer than that of Baronius, who places it on the year 167;) and agreeable to this the Chronicle of Alexandria places Polycarp's coming to Rome in the year 158; in the 21 of Antoninus the Emperor. See Dr. Cave's Life of St. Polycarp, pag. 115.

(y) Valeſius (in his Note on this place) denies that Polycarp came to Rome concerning the difference about the Paſchal Solemnity; for it was, he ſays, ſome other Controverſies, that brought him thither. But Irenæus's expreſs words are (if our Euſebius has rightly repreſented them, in B. 4. Chap. 14.) That Polycarp came to Rome and diſcourſt Anicetus [διά τι ζήτημα ἦν τῆς χώρας τὸ πάσχα ἡμέρας,] i.e. upon account of a certain Controverſie concerning the Day whereon Eaſter was to be kept. 'Tis true, Irenæus ſays (in this Chapter) there was a difference between them [περὶ ἄλλων τινῶν, i.e. concerning ſome other things;] but this does not hinder, but that the other was his main Errand to Rome.

‘ And

Commodus. And Anicetus permitted Polycarp, (to wit, out of an honourable respect to him) to (z) consecrate the Sacrament in his own Church; and they parted peaceably one from another; as well those who observ'd it, as those who observed it not, retaining the Peace and Communion of the whole Church." Indeed, Irenæus, being truly answerable to his own name, was after this manner a Peace-maker, and advised and asserted these things upon the account of the Peace of the Churches: The same person wrote not only to Victor, but sent Letters also, agreeable hereunto, to several other Governours of Churches, concerning the said Controversie which was then rais'd.

(z) That is, Anicetus had so great a respect for the venerable Polycarp, that he permitted him, in his own presence to consecrate the Sacrament in his own Church. Vales.

CHAP. XXV.

How all with one consent unanimously agreed about Easter.

MOreover, those [Bishops] of Palestine, (whom we mention'd a little before) to wit, Narcissus and Theophilus, and with them Cassius Bishop of the Church at Tyre, and Clarus [Bishop] of that at Ptolemais, together with those assembled with them, having treated at large concerning the Tradition about Easter, derived down to them by succession from the Apostles, at the end of their Epistle they adjoyn thus much, in these very words: 'Make it your business to send 'Copies of this our Epistle throughout the whole 'Church, that so we may not be blamed by 'those, who do easily seduce their own Souls: 'We also declare to you, that they celebrate [Easter] at Alexandria on the same day that we do: '(a) For Letters are convey'd from us to them, 'and from them to us; so that we observe the 'Holy Day with one consent and together.

(a) The Maz. Fuk. and Savil. MSS. read [παρ' ἡμῶν γάρ, &c. For Letters, &c.] The Letters about Easter are meant here. The Acts of this Synod of Cæsarea are extant in Bede, in his Book concerning the vernal Equinox; which some look upon to be Spurious; but I think they are in no wise to be despised. Baronius accounted them to be genuine. Vales.

CHAP. XXVI.

How many [Monuments] of Irenæus's Polite Ingenie have come to our hands.

Severus. (a) BUT, besides the fore-mentioned Works and Epistles of Irenæus's, there is extant a most concise and most necessary Book of his against the Gentiles, entitled Concerning Knowledge. And another, (which he dedicated to a Brother, by name Marcianus, [containing] a (b) Demonstration of the Apostolick Preaching: And a Book of Various (c) Tracts, wherein he makes mention of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and that called The Wisdom of Solomon, and quotes some Sentences out of them: And thus many are the [Writings] of Irenæus, which came to our knowledge. But Commodus having ended his Government after he had reign'd thirteen years, Severus obtain'd the Empire, Pertinax having not govern'd full out six Months after the Death of Commodus.

(a) The Chapters of this fifth Book, were, even in our MS. Copies, very much disordered; but we have put them into due order, from the authority of Rufinus; with whom agrees the King's, and the Maz. and Fuk. MSS. For those Copies begin the Chapter at these Words, with this Title, [How many [Monuments,] &c.] but they call it Chap. 28. whenas 'tis truly the 26; as appears from the Index of the Chapters prefix'd before the Book. The cause of the mistake was, that the Titles of the former Chapters were set down twice in the foresaid Copies, thro' the negligence of the Transcribers. Vales.

(b) The reading in the original is, εἰς ἀπόδειξιν. Valesius thinks it should be [εἰς ἀποδείξιν, a Demonstration.]

(c) Rufinus translates it [dialogos, dialogues:] Jerom renders it [Tractatus, Tracts.] It may be taken to signifie Sermons or Discourses to the People: For in that sense our Eusebius takes the word διαλέγεσθαι in his 6 B. Chap. 10. and in the 36 Chap. of that Book he calls Origen's Homilies [διαλέξεις.] Vales.

CHAP. XXVII.

How many also of [the Works of others] who then flourish'd are come to our knowledge.]

Severus. INdeed, very many Monuments of the virtuous and laudable diligence of those Ancient and Ecclesiastick Men which then [flourish'd] are to this day preserv'd amongst many: But [the Works] of those, whom we our selves could (a) discern to be such, are, Heraclitus's [Comments] upon the Apostle, and the [Book] of (b) Maximus concerning that Question so much talk'd of amongst Hereticks, whence evil proceeds: And concerning this, that Matter is made: Also Candidus's Piece, on the six Days Work; and that of Apion upon the same subject. In like manner Sextus's Book concerning the Resurrection; and another Piece of Arabianus's; and of very many more; whose Times wherein they lived, because we want assistances from the proof thereof, we can neither commit to writing, nor yet (c) declare any memorable Passages [of their's, in this our History.] There are also come to our hands the Books of many others, whose very names we are unable to recite: All which were indeed Orthodox and Ecclesiastick [Persons,] as the Interpretations of the Sacred Scripture [produced] by every one of them do demonstrate; but yet they are unknown to us, because what they have written has not their name prefix'd to it.

(a) Διαγνῶναι (which is the term here) does properly signifie, internoscere, ac distinguere, i. e. to discern, or distinguish. The import of Eusebius's Words is, That those Writers which by some certain mark he was able to distinguish from Heretical Authors, were Heraclitus, Maximus, &c. Rufinus and Jerom, instead of Heraclitus, read Heraclius. Our Historian does here relate, first the Ecclesiastick Writers of that time, whose names he knew: Afterwards he mentions those, whose Books were still extant; but their names were unknown. Vales.

(b) The Title of Maximus's Book was περὶ τῆς ὕλης, concerning Matter: It was composed by way of Dialogue. Eusebius quotes a most excellent piece of it in his last Chap. of his 7 B. Preparat. Evang. where he gives the Author this Elogue: Μαξίμῳ δὲ τῆς χειρὸς διαλειφθῆς οὐκ ἀσήμῳ ἀνδρὶ, καὶ λόγου οἰκείου συγγέγραπται ὁ περὶ τῆς ὕλης· i. e. Maximus, a Person in no wise obscure for his Christian Life and Conversation, wrote a seasonable piece, entitled, Concerning Matter. Vales.

(c) Eusebius does usually quote some passages out of those Author's Works, which he mentions: So he did, as we see, out of Irenæus, Clemens, Hegesippus, Papias, and others; whenever he knew the time of the Author's Writing. But in these Writers, whom he mentions in this Chapter, Eusebius says he could not perform this, because he could not certainly know the times they lived in, but was in want of Arguments and Proofs thereof. Vales.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Concerning those, who from the beginning were Defenders of Artemon's Heresie; what manner of persons they were as to their Morals, and how that they were so audacious as to corrupt the Sacred Scriptures.

IN an elaborate Piece of one of those Authors, composed against the Heresie of Artemon, (which Heresie Paulus Samosatensis has again attempted to revive in our Age,) there is extant a certain Relation very accommodate to the History we now have in hand. For the (a) Book now cited, evincing that the foresaid Heresie, which asserts our Saviour to be a meer Man, was an Innovation of a late date; (because the Introducers of it had boasted it was very ancient,) after many [Arguments] brought to confute their blasphemous Lye, has this Relation word for word: 'For 'they affirm that all the Ancients, and the very 'Apostles, received and taught the same things

(a) Nicephorus (B. 4. Chap. 21.) says, the name of this Book (the Author whereof is unknown) was, The Little Labyrinth: Photius (in Biblioth. Chap. 48.) relates that Caius was the Author of this Book; and makes it not the same with The Little Labyrinth: But Theodoret (B. 2. Hæret. Fabul.) confirms Nicephorus's opinion, and mentions this very Story of Theodotus the Tanner, and Natalis the Bishop, attesting he had taken it out of the Books called The Little Labyrinth. Vales.

Severus. ‘ which they now aſſert; and that the Preaching ‘ of the Truth was preſerved till the times of Victor, who from Peter was the thirteenth Biſhop ‘ of Rome; but from the times of his Succeſſor Zephyrinus the Truth has been adulterated. Peradventure this ſaying of theirs might ſeem probable, did not in the firſt place the Sacred Scriptures contradict them, and then the Writings ‘ of ſome Brethren ancienter than the times of ‘ Victor, which Books they wrote in defence of ‘ the Truth, againſt the Gentiles, and againſt the ‘ Hereſies of their own times. I mean the [Writings of] Juſtin, Miltiades, Tatianus, and Clemens, and of many others: In all which Books ‘ the Divinity of Chriſt is maintained. For who ‘ is he that is ignorant of the Books of Irenæus, ‘ Melito, and the reſt, which declare Chriſt to be ‘ God and Man? The ‘ (b) Pſalms alſo and Hymns ‘ of the Brethren, written ‘ at the beginning by the ‘ Faithful, do ſet forth the ‘ Praiſes of Chriſt the Word ‘ of God, and attribute Divinity to him. Seeing ‘ therefore this Eccleſiaſtical Opinion has been ‘ manifeſtly declared for ſo many years ſince, ‘ how can it be that the [Ancients] ſhould have ‘ preach'd that Doctrine, which theſe Men aſſert, ‘ until the times of Victor? How can they chooſe ‘ but be aſhamed of framing ſuch Lies of Victor; ‘ when as they know for certain that Victor, excommunicated Theodotus the Tanner, the Founder and Father of this Apoſtacy which denies ‘ God, who firſt aſſerted Chriſt to be a meer ‘ Man? For if Victor were (as they ſay) of the ‘ ſame Opinion with that, which their Blaſphemy ‘ does maintain, why did he proſcribe Theodotus ‘ the Inventor of this Hereſie?” And ſuch was the face of Affairs in the times of Victor: To whom, having preſided in his publick Charge ten years, Zephyrinus was made Succeſſor about the ninth year of Severus's Empire. [Further,] the Perſon that compiled the foreſaid Book concerning the Author of the new-mention'd Hereſie, relates another thing which was done in the times of Zephyrinus, in theſe very words: I will therefore : advertiſe many of the Brethren of a thing done ‘ in our Age; which had, it hapned in Sodom, would, I ſuppoſe, have put thoſe Inhabitants in mind of [Repentance.] ‘ There ‘ was one (c) Natalis, a ‘ Confeſſor, who lived not ‘ a long time ago, but even in our times; this ‘ Man had been ſeduced ‘ by Aſclepiodotus, and another Theodotus, a Banker; ‘ both which Perſons were ‘ Diſciples of Theodotus the Tanner, who before ‘ had been excommunicated, as I ſaid, by Victor then Biſhop, for this Doctrine, or rather Madneſs. Natalis was perſwaded by them to be (d) elected a Biſhop of this Hereſie, upon the conſideration of a Salary, whereby he was to receive of them monthly an hundred and fifty pence. Being therefore become one of their Aſſociates, he was by Viſions [in his ſleep] frequently admoniſh'd by the Lord: For our compaſſionate God and Lord Jeſus Chriſt was unwilling that he, [who had been] a Witneſs of his own Sufferings, ſhould periſh whilſt he was under Excommunication. But after he was regardleſs of the Viſions [in his ſleep,] being beguiled with the Bait of Primacy among thoſe [of the Sect,] and of filthy lucre, (which is the deſtruction of many Men,) at laſt he was ſcourged by the Holy Angels, and ſorely beaten all night long: Inſomuch that he aroſe very early, and having put on Sackcloth, and beſprinkled himſelf with Aſhes, in great haſte, and with Tears in his Eyes, he caſt himſelf down before Zephyrinus the Biſhop, falling down not only before the Feet of the Clergy, but of the Laity alſo; and with his Tears moved the compaſſionate Church of the Merciful Chriſt: And after he had uſed much intreaty, and ſhown the ‘ (e) Prints of the Stripes ‘ he had received, with ‘ much difficulty he was admitted into the Communion [of the Church.”] Hereunto we will alſo annex ſome other words of the ſame Writers concerning theſe [Hereticks;] They are theſe: ‘ They have impudently adulterated the Sacred Scriptures; ‘ they have rejected the Canon of the Primitive ‘ Faith; and have been ignorant of Chriſt: They ‘ are not inquiſitive after that which the Holy ‘ Scriptures ſay, but beſtow much labour and induſtry in finding out ſuch a Scheme of a Syllogiſm, as may confirm the Syſtem of their Impiety: And if any one propoſes to them a Text of the Divine Scriptures, they examine whether a (f) Connex, or Diſjunctive Form of a Syllogiſm may be made of it: Leaving the Holy Scriptures of God, they ſtudy Geometry; being of the Earth they ſpeak of things terreſtrial, and are ignorant of him who (g) comes from above: Therefore amongſt ſome of them Euclid's Geometry is with great diligence ſtudied; Ariſtotle and Theophraſtus are admired; and in like manner (h) Galen is by others of them even adored. What need I ſay that theſe Perſons, (who make uſe of the Arts of Infidels for the Confirmation of their Heretical Opinion, and by the Craft of Atheiſts adulterate the ſincere Authority of the Divine Scriptures,) are moſt remote from the Faith? Hence 'tis that they have impudently laid their hands upon the Divine Scriptures, ſaying they ought to be corrected; he that is deſirous may be informed that I ſpeak not this falſly of them. For would any one examine the Copies which they have gotten together, and compare them one with another, he would find that they diſagreed very much. For the Copies of (i) Aſclepiadotus agree not with thoſe of Theodotus. Many ſuch Copies as theſe may be procured; becauſe their Diſciples have with much labour and curioſity written the Corrections (as they call them, that is, the Corruptions) of every one of their [Maſters.] Again, the Copies of Severus.

(b) Hence it appears, that 'twas an ancient cuſtom in the Church to compoſe Pſalms and Hymns in honour of Chriſt. Pliny (in his Epiſtle to Trajan) mentions this uſage amongſt the Chriſtians; as we have already obſerved, at B. 2. Chap. 17.

(c) Perhaps this Perſon was that Cæcilius Natalis, who by a diſpute of Octavius Januarius's before Minucius Fælix at Rome was converted to the Chriſtian Faith; as Minucius Fælix relates, in his Dialogue. Indeed, the name, the time, and the profeſſion of this Perſon do all agree to make this probable. Valeſ.

(d) The Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil MSS. read [κληρωθῆναι, i.e. to be elected.] The King's MS. and Rob. Stephens read [κληθῆναι, i.e. to be called.] Valeſ.

(e) Valeſius ſays thoſe ſtripes are meant here, which Natalis had undergone for the confeſſion of Chriſt; Quas, ſays he, pro Chriſti Confeſſione pertulerat: Indeed Natalis is called ὁμολογητὴς, a Confeſſor, at the beginning of this Story; and afterwards μάρτυς, a Martyr or Witneſs: But perhaps the Author might mean here the ſtripes, which the Story ſays he receiv'd from the Holy Angels.

(f) Theſe are Logical terms: συνημμένον is properly ſuch a Propoſition, as this [if it be day, there is light.] διεζευγμένον is ſuch an one as this [either it is day, or it is night.] See Diogen. Laert. in Zenone. Valeſ.

(g) He ſpeaks of the laſt advent of our Saviour; which this ancient Fathers uſually ſpeak of not as future, but preſent. Valeſ.

(h) Galen wrote Books concerning the forms of Syllogiſms, and concerning the whole Syſtem of Philoſophy, as appears from the Catalogue of his Works. From this place 'tis evident, that Galen is a very ancient Author, which may be collected not only from the Teſtimony of this Writer, but from many others, who have made him contemporary with Ariſtotle, Theophraſtus, and Plato. See Alexander Aphrodiſ. B. 8. Topic. at the beginning. Valeſ.

(i) Some call him Aſclepiades; but Nicephorus and Ruſinus term him Aſclepiadotus.

A little after this inſtead of [Apollonius] we read [Apollonides] as did Ruſinus and Nicephorus. Valeſ.

‘ Hermo-

Severus. 'Hermophilus agree not with these now mentioned; and those of Apollonides differ one from another. For he that shall compare them, will find that those Copies first put forth (k) by him do very much disagree from his other [Copies,] which he did afterwards again wrest and deform. How much of Audaciousness there is in this wicked Fact, 'tis probable they themselves are not ignorant: For either they don't believe the Divine Scriptures to have been dictated by the Holy Spirit, and then they are Infidels: Or else they account themselves wiser than the Holy Ghost; and what are they then but Mad-men? For they cannot deny this audacious Fact to have been done by their own selves, because [the Copies] have been written out by their own Hands: (l) Neither did they receive such Copies as these from those who were their Instructors; nor yet can they shew the Copies out of which they transcribed these things. But some of them have not indeed vouchsafed to adulterate the Scriptures, but having wholly rejected both the Law, and the Prophets, (m) by a lawless and atheistical Doctrine under a Pretext of Grace, they are fallen into the deepest Pit of Destruction." And let thus much be after this manner related concerning these things. Severus.

(k) Sir H. Savil in Margin of his MS. had made it [ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, by him.] Our other MSS. read it [ὑπ' αὐτῶν, by them.] But the former reading is the best: For the Author speaks only of Apollonides here; affirming that he put forth two Editions of the Sacred Scriptures, the latter of which differ'd very much from the former. Valesius.

(l) The following Words ['Neither did they receive such Copies as these from those who were their Instructors; nor yet can they shew the Copies out of which they transcribed these things] are wanting in the King's MS. I think them not very necessary: But they are in the Mar. Med. and Fuk. MSS. and in Rufinus's Version. Valesius.

(m) Ἔνεκα, or διὰ, i. e. by or, by reason of, is here to be understood. These Hereticks, under a pretence of the Grace given by the Gospel rejected both the Law and the Prophets: Upon which account he calls their Doctrine Lawless and Atheistical. Valesius.

CHAP. I.

Concerning the Persecution under Severus.

MOreover, when Severus stirr'd up Persecution against the Churches in every place throughout all the Churches; noble Martyrdoms were performed by the Champions of Religion; but [the number of the Martyrs] at Alexandria far exceeded the rest, the (a) choicest of the Champions having been convey'd thither out of all Egypt and Thebaïs, as to the noblest Stadium of God; who in reward of their most patient suffering divers sorts of Torments, and several ways of death, were encircled with Crowns from God: Amongst whom Leonides, said to be the Father of (b) Origen, was beheaded, and left his Son very young. And here 'twill not be unseasonable briefly to relate what Zeal and Affection he bore to the (c) Gospel from this time of his Childhood, and for this reason especially, because his fame is much celebrated by all Men.

(a) Ἀκριβεστάτων, lectissimi, i. e. the choicest, 'tis the neareast signification of the word, but does not fully explain it, for the word imports something more. See Viger. Idiot. pag. 195.

(b) 'Tis a critical dispute whether the Greek word be ὠριγένης, or ὡριγένης with an Aspirate, or a Tenuis: Some say 'tis ὠριγένης, because 'tis derived from ὡρὶ *matur*è and γενηθεὶς natus, i. e. born in a fit season: And for this reason the Med. Mar. and Fuk. MSS. always write it with an Aspirate. Valesius.

(c) Θεῖος λόγος, Eusebius always uses both for the Gospel, and the Christian Religion, as in Chap. 3. and 5. of this Book, and and this Rufinus renders Divina legis studia: Christophor. Sacrarum literarum studium; and Musculus translates it Divinam Doctrinam. Valesius.

CHAP. II.

Concerning Origen's Virtuous Course of Life from a Child.

NOW should any one undertake accurately and at his leisure to commit to writing this Man's Life, he must say much, and a strict Collection of all Passages concerning him, would require even a particular Subject; but our aim at present is to abbreviate most things, and in short, and, as well as we can, we will give an account of some few Passages concerning him; relating what things have been manifested by some Epistles, or by the Discourse of those his Scholars, who were alive till our times. The Passages concerning Origen (as one would say) even from his Cradle seem to be worth remembrance. Severus therefore being in the tenth year of his Reign, and Lætus being Governour of Alexandria and the rest of Egypt; Demetrius also having lately taken upon him the Episcopal Office over the Churches there, after Julianus; when the Flame of Persecution now raged grievously, and many thousands were crown'd with Martyrdom, such a desire of Martyrdom possess'd the Soul of Origen being yet very young, that he would expose himself to Dangers, and was very ready and willing to rush forward and leap into the Combat: So that now he was not far from death, had not the Divine and Celestial Providence, for the good of many, hindred and restrained his willingness to die, by Severus. his Mother's means. Firſt therefore ſhe intreated him like a Suppliant, and beſeech'd him to take pity of her Motherly love: But when ſhe ſaw him more intent upon his purpoſe, and when he underſtood his Father was apprehended and impriſon'd, he was wholly poſſeſs'd with a deſire of Martyrdom: Wherefore ſhe hid all his Cloaths, and by this means neceſſitated him to abide at home. But he, ſeeing he had no way left, (the alacrity of his Mind ſurmounting the ripeneſs of his Years,) could not be at reſt, but compoſed a moſt perſwaſive Epiſtle concerning Martyrdom, and ſends it to his Father, in which he thus exhorts him word for word, ſaying, [Father,] take heed: Let not your care for us make you change your Reſolution. Let this be noted as the firſt Token of Origen's acuteneſs of Wit from his Childhood, and of his moſt ſincere Zeal for Religion. For he had already got no ſmall ſtock of knowledge in the Doctrine of the Faith, continuing whilſt he was yet a Child, to exerciſe himſelf in ſearching the Holy Scriptures; about which he was not a little laborious; his Father having taken great care, both in inſtructing him in the Liberal (a) Sciences, and alſo in theſe not ſlightly: Wherefore he always perſwaded him to exerciſe himſelf in the ſtudy of holy things, rather than in the Learning of the Greeks, enjoyning it him as a daily Task to learn ſomething by heart out of Scripture and repeat it: Nor was the Child unwilling, or ſlack in the performance, but moſt cheerfully laboured in theſe things; ſo that the ſimple, and common Readings of the Sacred Scriptures cou'd not ſatisfie him, but he would ſearch after ſomething more, and even from that time buſily enquired into the more profound Meanings thereof: Inſomuch that he troubled his Father by asking him, what was the true meaning of ſuch a ſentence of Scripture inſpired by God. He ſeemingly before his face reproved him, admoniſhing him not to ſearch into any thing above the capacity of his years, nor [to enquire] any further than the plain meaning [of Scripture.] But he privately with himſelf rejoyced exceedingly, and gave the greateſt thanks to God the Author of all Good, that he vouchſafed to make him the Father of ſuch a Child: And 'tis reported, he has often ſtood by the Child as he ſlept, and laying his Breaſt bare, would kiſs it with reverence, as if the ſacred Spirit of God had been enſhrin'd in it, and accounted himſelf bleſs'd for his happy Off-ſpring. Theſe and ſuch-like they record, were the Paſſages concerning Origen in his Childhood: But when his Father was now crown'd with Martyrdom, he is left deſolate (together with his Mother and younger Brothers, ſix in number,) being no more then ſeventeen years of age: Moreover, his Father's Eſtate having been confiſcate, he was brought into extream want of neceſſary Subſiſtence, together with his Relations, but God thought him worthy of his Providence. And he obtains entertainment and reſt from a Woman, who was very rich in reſpect of her Eſtate, and very eminent otherways; Moreover, (who carefully miniſtred to a very famous Man, one of that Heretical Sect then at Alexandria, but by birth an Antiochian.) Him the foreſaid Woman having adopted for her Son, kept him with her, and ſhew'd kindneſs to him in a moſt ſpecial manner. But Origen, though forc'd to converſe with the ſaid [Heretick,] yet from that time ſhew'd powerful Proofs of his ſound Opinion concerning the Faith. For when great Multitudes of People, not only Hereticks, but alſo them of our Religion, flock'd to Paul (for this was the Man's name) becauſe he ſeem'd to be a perſon of great eloquence; [Origen] could never be induced to aſſiſt him in prayer: Always from a Child obſerving the Canon of the Church, and abominating the Doctrines of Hereſies, (as he himſelf in expreſs words ſomewhere ſays:) and having been educated in the Greek Learning by his Father at firſt, after his death he devoted himſelf wholly and more earneſtly to the ſtudy of the Liberal Sciences; ſo that he was furniſh'd with an (b) indifferent skill in the Art of Grammar; and having profeſs'd this Art ſoon after his Father's death, he got plenty of Neceſſaries, conſidering the age he then was of.

Severus.

(a) Τῶν ἐγκυκλίων παιδεία, are the words in the Original: The Greeks call ἐγκύκλια μαθήματα, the Liberal Arts which Children learned; but Philoſophy, by the teſtimonies of ſeveral Authors, is not included in that Phraſe, as Diogenes Laertius, Clemens Alexan. and Euſebius himſelf in Chap. 18. B. 6. do aſſert; hence 'tis that Ariſton Ceus, a noble Philoſopher, ſays, They who place all their ſtudy, in ἐγκυκλίοις παιδεύμασι, are like Penelope's Woers, who when they were repuls'd by the Miſtreſs, courted the Maid. Orators alſo exclude Rhetorick out of this number; but ſome include both, who miſtake; for the Word ἐγκύκλιον ſignifies aliquid in triviis poſitum, vulgare, i. e. what is trivial and vulgar; now Philoſophy and Rhetorick are more noble Sciences: Hence Demoſthenes uſes ἐγκύκλιοι λειτουργίαι for mean and baſe Offices. Valeſ.

(b) The Med. Maz. Fuk. and Savil MSS. read [ἐ μελείῳ i. e. no indifferent skill.] Valeſ.

CHAP. III.

How Origen being very young Preach'd the Word of Chriſt.

(a) WHilſt he yet applied himſelf to his School, (as he in his Writings recordeth,) no one reſiding at Alexandria (b) to teach the Principles of Chriſtianity, but all being driven away by the threatning Perſecution: Some of the Heathens reſorted to him, to hear the Word of God. Of which number he notes Plutarchus to have been the firſt; who when he (c) had lived a virtuous ſecular life, was crown'd with Divine Martyrdom. The ſecond was Heraclas, Plutarchus's Brother, who having under him ſhew'd many inſtances of a Philoſophical and ſevere courſe of life, was honoured with the Biſhoprick of Alexandria after Demetrius. He was now in the eighteenth year of his age, when he was Maſter of the Catechetical School; in which he made great proficiency, in the Perſecutions during the time of Aquila's Prefecture over Alexandria. At which time he purchaſed to himſelf a famous name amongſt all them who were well-affected towards the Faith, for the ſingular friendſhip and alacrity which he ſhow'd to all the Holy Martyrs known and unknown. For he converſed not only with ſuch as were in

(a) Some diſpute there is concerning the beginning of this Chapter: Valeſius (whom we follow) follows the diviſion of Ruffinus, but Chriſtophorſon begins it at theſe Words [when Origen was 17 years old,] the King's MS. ſomething lower; than Valeſius, [when he was 18 years old.] Fuk. MS. at theſe Words, [His Father's Eſtate being confiſcate.]

(b) This word καλπχέω ſignifies originally, inſono, to ſound: This prepoſition [κὰτ] makes it, being a verb Neuter, to have an Active ſignification, and he is properly ſaid καλπχεῖν, who tells us any thing which he would teach us by way of inſtruction: Hence it ſignifies to teach the Rudiments, or firſt Grounds of an Art, but peculiarly to teach the Principles of Chriſtian Religion, which we call Catechiſing in Engliſh, fitly made out of the Greek. Some ſay, Heathen Authors knew not this uſe of this word, but they miſtake, for Lucian uſes it in this ſenſe, to teach the Rudiments of any Art. Stephan. Lexicon.

(c) Μετὰ τὸ βιῶναι, i. e. after he had led a pious ſecular Life: This word βίος is by Chriſtians uſed to ſignifie ſecularem vitam agere. For βίος is ſeculum, as Chryſoſtom uſes it in his 23d Homily on the Epiſtle to the Romans, where he calls βιωτικὰς them whom we call Laïcks, to diſtinguiſh them from the Clergy, in theſe words; δείκνυς ὅτι ταῦτα διατάττεται καὶ ἱερεῦσι καὶ μοναχοῖς, ἀλλὰ τοῖς βιωτικοῖς μόνον. In this ſenſe muſt the word here be underſtood; one of Origen's Diſciples lived a pious ſecular Life, being a Laick, the other was a Clergyman. Valeſ.

Bonds,

Severus.

Bonds, nor with them who had been examined until their last Sentence, but with those Blessed Martyrs also, who, after that was pronounc'd, were led to Execution; making use of great boldness he went to meet Dangers: So that the furious Multitude of the Heathens standing round, were frequently not far from stoning of him, when he boldly came forth, and with great freeness of Speech communed with the Martyrs, and kiss'd them, had he not once miraculously escap'd, having the Right Hand of God for his assistance. The same Divine and Heavenly Grace at other times again and again (so that 'tis impossible to say how often,) preserv'd him from them who then laid wait for him, because of his exceeding Cheerfulness and Confidence in Preaching the Doctrine of Christ: Indeed, so great was the Hostility of the Infidels against him, (because such Multitudes were instructed by him in the things which appertain to the Holy Faith,) that having made a (d) Concourse, they set Soldiers to watch about the House in which he abode. And the Persecution against him waxed so hot daily, that all the whole City of Alexandria could no longer secure him; he removes indeed from House to House, but is driven from all places, because of the Multitude which through him were made Proselytes to the Divine Doctrine. For his common Actions contain'd the most admirable Rules of the truest Philosophy: Indeed, (as the common saying is) such as his Doctrine was, such was his manner of Life; and such as his manner of Life was, such he demonstrated his Doctrine to be: By this means especially, together with the Divine Power assisting him, he induc'd many to a zealous imitation of him. But when he saw many Scholars now flocking to him, (the exercise of Catechising being committed solely to him by Demetrius, who was Bishop of the Church,) supposing the teaching of Grammar disagreeable to his Studies in Divine Learning, he forthwith breaks off his Grammar-School, as unprofitable and contrary to the Sacred Learning. Then entring into a prudent Consideration with himself, how he might not stand in need of assistance from others, he sold all the Volumes he had of (e) Ancient Heathen Writers, which were most elaborately compiled, and was content with four * Oboli a-day, that were brought him by the Buyer. For many Years he persevered in this Philosophical Course of Life, depriving himself of all (f) Matter [which might nourish] youthful Lusts; both undergoing no small labour of severe Exercise in the Day-time, and also assigning to himself the greater part of the Night for his Study in the Holy Scriptures, patiently persevering in the most Philosophical Life imaginable. Sometimes he inured himself to the Exercises of Fasting; at other times to Hours measur'd out for his repose; which he would by no means enjoy upon a Bed, but made it his business to take it on the bare Ground, for he thought those Evangelical Words of our Saviour ought most especially to be observ'd, which exhort us not to (g) have two coats, nor to wear shoes, nor to be sollicitous about the cares of the time to come. Moreover, with a Courage far greater than his Age, he patiently endured both Cold and Nakedness, and came to that height and extremity of Want, that he made those of his Acquaintance admire exceedingly. And he caused Grief in many, who entreated him that they might communicate of their Estates to him, because they saw him bring such Labours on himself for the Gospel's sake, but he remitted nothing of his Patience. 'Tis reported he walk'd upon the Ground barefoot many years, in no wise wearing any Shoes. And also for many years he abstain'd from the use of Wine, and from all other things, except necessary Sustenance; so that now he fell into a great danger of spoiling and turning his (h) Stomach. He deservedly excited most of his Scholars to imitate him; shewing them, who look'd upon him, such Examples of a Philosophical Life; insomuch that now, not only the (i) Vulgar unbelieving Heathens, but also they who were Learned Philosophers, were (k) through him brought to submit themselves to his Doctrine. And it came to pass that they who received by him in the bottom of their Hearts sincerely the Faith of the Gospel, were famous in the time of the then Persecution: So that some of them after apprehension, finish'd their lives by Martyrdom.

(d) Συσσοφὰς ποιησαμένους, i. e. having made a concourse: συσσοφὴ signifies an Assembly or Tumultuous Crowd met together to Plot Mischief, or raise Sedition. Rufinus and Christophorson will have these Words to be referred to στρατιώτας, the Soldiers, which is improper and improbable; we must without doubt understand ἀπίστους, the Infidels, as best agreeing with the propriety of the Greek, and sence of the place: But Nicephorus, worst of all, explains the place thus, as if Origen's Disciples, fearing the outrages of the tumultuous populace, should get a guard of Soldiers for their own safety. Vales.

(e) Λόγων ἀρχαίων συγγεγράμματα, Rufinus translates, his Library of Heathen Writers, better than Christophorson, who takes this phrase of Eusebius's to signifie only the Books of old Orators: As if the word λόγοι were never us'd for Grammar and Philosophy, but for Orations only; as if Origen parted with his old Orators only, and not with his Grammarians, and Philosophick Books also. Musculus says they were Notes upon Authors gather'd by Origen, and compos'd into Volumes; but Rufinus's Version is most natural. Vales.

* Or, five pence.

(f) This word ὕλη primarily signifies any matter of which a thing is made; but amongst Divines it peculiarly signifies the filth and dregs of this World, out of which proceed unlawful Lusts, Desires, and Contempt of God.

(g) The Word ἔχειν, to have, is left out in the Greek; but must necessarily be added.

(h) Στόμαχος here signifies the stomach; and στόμαχου ἀναστροφὴ, in Galen and Dioscorides, is used as here, for the spoyling, or turning of the stomach, to wit, when it loaths any thing; in Latin 'tis termed subversio stomachi. Vales.

(k) The Med. MS. leaves out [δι' αὐτοῦ,] i. e. by his means; and reads only τῇ αὐτοῦ διδασκαλίᾳ, by his doctrine; which is the better reading: For the place seems to be corrupted, this [δι' αὐτοῦ] creeping out of the Margin into the Text; or out of the line following into this place. The King's, and the Maz. MSS. alter nothing here, but the Fuk. MS. reads τῇ ἑαυτοῦ διδασκαλίᾳ. Vales.

CHAP. IV.

How many of those who had been instructed by him became Martyrs.

THE first of them was the aforementioned Plutarchus, whom (when he was led to Execution) * he of whom the Discourse is, accompanied to the last hour of his life, and again wanted little of being kill'd by the Men of his own City, as seeming the Cause of Plutarchus's Death. But then also the Providence of God preserv'd him. Next to Plutarch, the second of Origen's Disciples, that was a Martyr, was Serenus: Who by Fire gave a tryal of the Faith which he had received. Heraclides was made the third Martyr of the same School. The fourth after him was (a) Heron: Both which Persons were beheaded, the former of them while he was yet learning the Principles of Christianity, the latter when he was newly (b) baptiz'd. Besides these, another Serenus, different from the former, is declar'd the fifth Champion of Piety [who came out] of this School: Who, 'tis reported, was punish'd with the loss of his Head, after a most patient sufferance of many Torments. And of

* That is, Origen.

(b) Νεοφώτιστος, i. e. newly Baptized: φωτίζω in Gregory and Chrysostom, and many other Divines, is peculiarly us'd in this sense, to Baptize, and rendred by the Translators Baptizare.

Severus. of women, (e) Heraïs, who as yet was learning the Principles of Chriſtianity, did as he himſelf ſomewhere ſays, depart this life, having received Baptiſm by Fire.

(e) I long ſince conjectured it ſhould be [Ἡραΐς] in one word, not [ἡ ῥαΐς,] two words; which conjecture I found confirmed by the King's, and Fuk. MSS. Ruſinus agrees hereto, who tranſlates this place thus, Sed & mulieres plurimæ, in quibus Hera quædam Catechumena. 'Tis a proper name derived from Juno, who is called in Greek Ἥρα: Whence comes Ἡραΐσκος, Heraiſcus, the name of an Egyptian Philoſopher, concerning whom ſee Suidas. The Greeks celebrate the memory of this Herais on the fourth, or rather the fifth day of March, as 'tis in the Menology ſet forth by Caniſius. I am not certain whether this Perſon be the ſame with Irais the Alexandrian Virgin, who in the Roman Martyrology is ſaid to have ſuffer'd Martyrdom (together with ſome others) at the City Antinoe on September 22. In Cardinal Sirletus's Menology, at the fifth of September, theſe Words occur; Natalis B. Martyris Rhaïdis, quæ igne conſumpta eſt; i. e. the birth-day of the B. Martyr Rhaïdis, who was burnt. This is the ſame whom Euſebius mentions here. Therefore there were three Heraïs's; the firſt is ſhe mentioned in the Menæum, at the fifth day of March: The ſecond Heraïs is the Catechumen, of whom mention is made in the Menology, on the fifth of September: The third Heraïs the Egyptian Virgin, born at a place called Tamma; whoſe Father's name was Peter, a Presbyter: She ſuffered Martyrdom when ſhe was twelve years old, as 'tis in the Menæum, at the 23d of September; where ſhe is called Hieraïs: In the Roman Martyrology ſhe is termed, Iraïs. CHAP. V.

Concerning Potamiæna.

LET Baſilides be reckon'd the ſeventh among theſe, who lead the moſt renown'd Potamiæna to Execution, concerning which Woman, even yet there is a famous report amongſt the Inhabitants of thoſe Countries, for that ſhe combated many times with her Lovers, in defence of the Chaſtity and Virginity of her Body; for which ſhe was famous: (For beſides the Vigour of her Mind, there flouriſh'd in her a Comelineſs of Body:) Who, having ſuffer'd many things for her Faith in Chriſt, at laſt, after grievous Torments and horrible to be related, was together with her Mother Marcella conſumed by Fire. Moreover, they ſay that the Judge, (whoſe name was (a) Aquila,) after he had inflicted grievous ſtripes upon every part of her Body, threatned at laſt he would deliver her to the (b) Gladiators, to abuſe her Body. But ſhe (having conſider'd of the matter ſome ſhort time,) being ask'd what her Determination was, return'd [they ſay] ſuch an anſwer, as thereby ſhe ſeem'd to ſpeak ſomething which was accounted impious amongſt them. Forthwith therefore ſhe receiv'd the definitive Sentence [of the Judge,] and Baſilides, one of the Military Apparitors, took and led her to Execution: But when the Multitude endeavour'd to moleſt and reproach her with obſcene words, he prohibited them, (c) thruſting away them who reproach'd her, ſhewing much commiſeration and humanity towards her. She taking in good part the Man's commiſeration ſhown towards her, exhorts him to be of good courage, for when ſhe was gone hence ſhe would entreat her Lord for him, and within a little while ſhe would make him a requital for what he had done for her. When ſhe had ſpoken theſe things, they ſay ſhe valiantly underwent death, hot ſcalding Pitch being leiſurely, and by little and little, pour'd upon all the ſeveral Members of her Body, from the Sole of the Foot, to the Crown of the Head; ſuch was the Combat fought by this famous Virgin. But not long after, Baſilides upon ſome occaſion being deſired by his Fellow-Soldiers to ſwear, avouch'd 'twas not lawful for him to ſwear at all; for he was a Chriſtian, and he openly confeſs'd it. At firſt they thought he only ſpake in jeſt, but when he conſtantly maintain'd it, he is brought before the Judge, and after he had made profeſſion of his Stedfaſtneſs before him, he was put into Bonds: And when ſome of the Brethren in the Lord came to him, asking him what was the cauſe of this ſudden and unexpected change, he is reported to have ſaid, that Potamiæna, three days after her Martyrdom, ſtood by him in the Night, put a Crown about his Head, and ſaid, ſhe had intreated the Lord for him, and had obtain'd her requeſt: And within a little while the Lord would take him up to himſelf. After theſe things the Brethren imparted to him the (d) Seal of the Lord; and the Day after, being famous for his Teſtimony of the Lord, he was beheaded: They relate, that many more throughout Alexandria came thick at that time to the Doctrine of Chriſt; to wit, ſuch as Potamiæna had appear'd to in their ſleep, and (e) invited them to be converted to the Goſpel: But for theſe things let thus much ſuffice.

Severus.

(a) This Aquila was Governour of Ægypt, as Euſebius before relates in the 3d Chapter: At which time Origen was in the eighteenth year of his age. Valeſ.

(b) The Gladiators were commonly noted to be laſcivious wicked Men; therefore Aquila threatned to deliver her to them, thinking ſhe, who had ſuch ſpecial care of her Chaſtity, would rather revolt from her Faith, then hazard the Purity of her Body, by being put into their Power.

(c) Ἀποσοβέω, properly ſignifies to fright Birds away, but here, as alſo in Demoſthenes, it ſignifies to thruſt aſide out of the way, ἀποσοβῶν τὴν ἀγορᾶν. Demoſt.

(e) Ruſinus tranſlates this place ſo as to make Potamiæna Origen's Scholar; neither dare we contradict him in that. For although Euſebius does not mention it particularly, yet we may gather ſo much from this his Narration; for, reckoning up the Martyrs which were of Origen's School, he adds to them Baſilides and Potamiæna; whence 'tis collected theſe two alſo were his Diſciples; and though we cannot for certain ſay Baſilides was, yet 'tis probable Potamiæna might be one of them. Valeſ.

CHAP. VI.

Concerning Clemens Alexandrinus.

(a) CLemens, who ſucceeded Pantænus, was Maſter of the Catechetick-School at Alexandria till this time. So that Origen when he was a Boy was one of his Scholars: Moreover, this Clemens, committing to writing the Subject of that Work of his, entitled Stromateis, in his firſt Volume explains the Series of Times, and determines his Computation at the Death of Commodus. So that 'tis plain thoſe Books were elaborated by him in the Reign of Severus, the Hiſtory of whoſe Times this Book of ours contains.

(a) There is little connexion betwixt this and what he ſaid before. Clemens was not then the Catechiſt at Alexandria; but Origen, Clemens's Scholar. Moreover concerning Clemens, and his Books, Euſebius writes in the foregoing Book. And Caius in his little Labyrinth, reckons him among the Eccleſiaſtick Writers which writ in the time of Victor; the Words of Caius are at the end of the 5th Book: Therefore Ruſinus rightly places this and the following Chapter in the 3d Chapter of this Book, where he ſpeaks of Demetrius the Biſhop's committing the Office of Catechizing to Origen. Valeſ.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning Judas the Writer.

AT this time alſo lived Judas another Writer, who commented upon the Seventy Weeks in Daniel, and puts an end to his Computation of the Times at the Tenth year of Severus's Reign. His Opinion was, that even at that time the coming of Antichriſt, which was ſo much talk'd of, drew nigh. So great a Diſturbance did the raiſing of the Perſecution then againſt us cauſe in many Men's Minds.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning the bold Act of Origen.

AT this time while Origen perform'd the Office of Catechizing at Alexandria, an Act of an unripe and youthful Mind was committed by him, but which withal contain'd a most manifest token of Continence and true Faith: For he taking these words [Some * Eunuchs there are which have made themselves Eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven's sake] in the more simple meaning, unadvisedly like one of his juvenile years, thinking it both his duty to fulfil our Saviour's words, and also [considering] that during his youthful years he was to converse not only with Men, but Women, about the things which appertain to God; that he might exclude the Infidels from all suspicion of obscene slanders, his Mind was full bent to perform really our Saviour's words, taking great care that it might escape the knowledge of many of his Familiars: But it was impossible for him, altho' he was desirous, to conceal such a Fact. But when Demetrius understood it, as being then Governour of the Church there, he both greatly admires him for his boldness, and also, (having commended his alacrity of Mind, and sincerity of Faith,) forthwith encourages and excites him to a more diligent Employment about the Duty of Catechizing: For such at this time was [Demetrius's] opinion of this Act: But no long time after, when he saw Origen do well, and that he was famous, and well-reported of by all Men; being affected with the Frailties of Mankind, he endeavour'd by Letters, sent to all the Bishops in the World, to describe what was done as a most absurd action. (a) For the Bishops of Cæsarea and Jerusalem, the most approved and most famous of all the Prelates in Palestine, judging Origen worthy of Dignity and the highest pitch of Honours, had by Imposition of Hands ordain'd him Presbyter. Therefore when he had ascended to great Honour, and had purchas'd a name amongst Men in all places, and no small fame for his Virtue, and Wisdom; Demetrius, being furnish'd with no other Accusation, made a great and malicious complaint against that Act which he had done in his youth. Daring also to involve the Bishops in his Accusations who had promoted him to the Office of a Presbyter. These things were done a little after. But then Origen (b) freely and without any Impediment perform'd his Office of teaching the Divine Doctrine to all that came to him by Day or by Night; laboriously spending all his time either in Divine Learning, or upon them who came to him. (c) After Severus had held the Empire eighteen years, his Son Antoninus succeeds him. At this time there [lived] one (d) Alexander, one of their number who had behav'd themselves manfully in the Persecution, and also by the Providence of God had been preserv'd after their Combats during their Confessions; him we before manifested to have been Bishop of the Church in Jerusalem. Now because he was famous for his Confession of Christ in the time of the Persecution, he is promoted to the afore-mention'd Bishoprick, whilst Narcissus, his Predecessor, was yet alive.

* Matth. Chap. 19. v. 12.

(a) Eusebius here lays open the reason why Demetrius, who was formerly so much Origen's friend, should now so persecute him by his Letters; which was, because the Bishops of Cæsarea and Jerusalem had ordained him Priest. In which thing no small injury was done to Demetrius, both by the Bishops, and Origen; by Origen because he had yielded to be ordained by foreign Bishops; and by the Bishops, because by doing this they had translated the Catechist of Alexandria into their Church. Moreover, there arises a difficulty not to be pass'd by, viz. Why two Bishops together should ordain Origen? By this means he had power to sit in two Churches, and to communicate with other Priests. See the 23. and 27. Chapters following; where this conjecture is confirm'd. 'Twas the Order, when either Deacons or Priests were ordained, some Bishops should be present, that the Ordination might be more solemn, (says Innocentius in his Epistle to Marcianus the Bishop.) Photius, in Biblioth. Chap. 118. says that Theoctistus solemnized the Ordination, but Alexander gave his approbation. Christophorson also says these were the names of the Bishops; Theoctistus was Bishop of Cæsarea, and Alexander of Jerusalem. Vales.

(b) Ἀσυλάκτως (the word here) has several significations; Rufinus explains it thus, When a Man has free power to do a thing, all impediments being removed; which explanation seems best; for, before Origen made himself an Eunuch, for fear of a scandalous Report he had reason to be cautious of conversing with Women, and teaching them; but when he had unman'd himself, as he did, he might do it freely without suspicion. Vales.

Antoninus Caracalla.

(c) Rufinus his old Book which was in the Church at Paris begins a new Chapter here, and so does Christophorson. Vales.

(d) Concerning this Alexander, Eusebius, in his Chronicle, in the 12 year of Severus's Reign, which was the second year of this Persecution, writes thus; Alexander was accounted famous for his confession of the Name of the Lord. Vales.

CHAP. IX.

Concerning the Miracles of Narcissus.

THE Inhabitants of this Diocess report many Miracles of this Narcissus, by tradition deriv'd from a continued succession of the Brethren: Amongst which they relate such a like Miracle as this done by him. 'Tis reported that on the great Vigils of Easter the Minister's Oil fail'd them, for which great pensiveness of Mind having seiz'd the whole Multitude, Narcissus gave command to them who took care of the Lights, that they should draw Water out of the Well which was nearest at hand, and bring it to him; which being forthwith done, he pray'd over the Water, and commanded them to pour the Water into the Lamps with a sincere Faith in the Lord. When they had done this also, contrary to all reason and expectation, by a miraculous and Divine Power, the Nature of Water was chang'd into the (a) Fatness of Oil. Some small Specimen of this Miracle then done, has been preserv'd amongst many of the Brethren for a long time, even from that to our Age. They also relate several other things worth remembrance concerning this Man's Life. Amongst which there is such a [Story] as this: Some vile Fellows who could not endure this Person's Vigour, and his Perseverance in leading of a pious Life, fearing lest when they were caught they should suffer Punishment, because they were conscious to themselves of many evil Actions, they [resolve to] prevent him by patching up a Plot against him, and utter a grievous Calumny against him. Then, that they might perswade the Hearers to credit them, they confirm'd their Accusations with Oaths: One of them swore it was true which he said, or he wish'd he might be consumed by Fire; another, if 'twas not true, that his Body might be wasted by some terrible unhappy (b) Disease;

(a) Εἰς ἐλαίου ποιότητα, into the nature or quality of Oil; we should rather read it πότητα, the fatness of oil. Rufinus translates it thus, aquæ naturâ in olei pinguedinem versâ, and in Moræus's Book 'tis so corrected in the Margin; the Fuk. MS. also reads πότητα. Vales.

(b) Σκληρᾷ νόσῳ Rufinus renders thus, Regio morbo: But Langus calls it morbus sonticus, the falling-sickness. Christophorson, morbus scevus & fœdus, an unfortunate, or cruel and filthy disease; which comes nearest to Rufinus's Version: For by this morbus Regius he means the Leprosie, as appears by what follows. For in the 10 Book and 25 Chapter he speaks thus of Eunomius; vir corpore & anima Leprosus, & interius, exteriúsque morbo Regio corruptus. Gregorius Nyssenus also in his first Book against Eunomius certainly affirms he was a Leper, pag. 307. Ὁ εἰσδυνων εἰς τὰς ὀικίας αὐτόκλητος, καὶ τὴν ἀκηλιδωτον ἐν τῷ πάθους τῆ καθ' ἑαυτὸν διαγωγῆ φεισέλλων, καὶ τὴν φυσικὴν πρὸς ὑγιαινόντων πρὸς τοὺς τοιούτους ἀποστροφὴν λογιζόμενος. He who goes into another Man's house not invited, and keeps not the filthiness under his own Roof, considers not what natural abhorrence they who are sound have towards those who are infected. Hieronymus in the Life of Hilario speaks thus of his Scholar Adrianus, Post aliquantum temporis computruit morbo Regio. Vales.

Antoninus. and the third, that he might be depriv'd of his Sight: But none of the Faithful gave heed to 'em, altho' they ſwore thus, becauſe Narciſſus's Continency was always reſplendent amongſt all Men, and his Courſe of Life moſt eminently virtuous and pious: But he being in no-wiſe able to endure the Wickedneſs of what had been ſaid againſt him; and, beſides this, for a long time being deſirous to embrace a Philoſophical Life, retir'd from the whole Congregation of his Church, and liv'd many years, lying hid in Solitudes and in obſcure Fields. But the great Eye of Juſtice could not quietly wink at what was done; but was quickly revenged upon theſe wicked Men by thoſe Curſes with which they had bound themſelves, being (c) forſworn againſt themſelves. The firſt therefore was burnt together with his whole Family, the Houſe in which he liv'd being burnt in the night by (d) the fall of a little ſpark of Fire upon it, which upon no occaſion given came out of it. The ſecond Perſon's Body was totally infected from the bottom of his Feet to his Head with the Diſeaſe he had puniſh'd himſelf with. But the third, ſeeing the End of the two former, and fearing the unavoidable Vengeance of the All-ſeeing God, (e) publickly confeſs'd to all what they had plotted together in common amongſt themſelves; and he pin'd away with ſo great complaints, repenting of what he had done, and never ceas'd weeping ſo long, till he loſt both his Eyes. And theſe ſuffer'd ſuch Puniſhments for their lying Accuſation.

(c) Καθ' ἑαυτῶν ἐπιορκοῦντες. The interpreters ſeem not to have rightly underſtood this place. Euſebius's meaning is this, thoſe perjur'd Men did not forſwear themſelves againſt Narciſſus, but againſt themſelves, alluding without doubt to that of the Pſalmiſt, he ly'd miſchief to himſelf; For craft often falls upon the Author's own head, tho he intends it for another. Valeſ.

(d) Διαπεσόντος; Nicephorus thinks 'twas the ſnuff or ſpark which fell from a Candle. Chriſtophorſon and Muſculus render the place, as if Fire had fell from Heaven upon this perjur'd Man's Houſe, but Euſebius confutes that, ſaying, it came ἐφ' ἧς κατέμενεν οἰκίας. Valeſ.

CHAP. X.

Concerning the Biſhops of Jeruſalem.

WHen Narciſſus was retired, it being altogether unknown where he was, 'twas the Opinion of the Biſhops of the bordering Churches that they ſhould proceed to the Ordination of another Biſhop. This Man's name was Dius. To him having preſided no long time Germanio was Succeſſor. Gordius ſucceeds him, in his time from ſome place or other Narciſſus again appear'd, as riſen from death to life, and is immediately invited by the Brethren to his Biſhoprick; all Men admiring him much more both for his Retreat, and alſo for his Philoſophick [Courſe of life:] But above all for the Revenge which was vouchſafed him from God [upon his Accuſers.]

CHAP. XI.

Concerning Alexander.

NArciſſus being no longer able to officiate by reaſon of his very great Age, the Providence of God by Revelation made known to him in a Viſion by Night, and call'd the fore-mention'd Alexander Biſhop of another Church to be Co-adjutor in the Diſcharge of his Office. By this Revelation therefore, as if he had been warn'd by ſome Oracle from God, Alexander made a Journey to Jeruſalem from Cappadocia (where he had before been honour'd with a Biſhoprick,) upon account both of praying there, and alſo of ſeeing the places: The Brethren there received him moſt kindly; and would not permit him to return home, becauſe of another Revelation, made known alſo to them by night, and a (a) voice moſt plainly utter'd to ſome who were the moſt eminent for Piety amongſt them: For it told them if they went out of their Gates, they ſhould meet him who was predetermined by God to be their Biſhop. When they had done this with the common (b) conſent of the Biſhops who govern'd the Churches round about, they forc'd him of neceſſity to continue there. Indeed, Alexander himſelf, in his own Epiſtles to the Antinoites which are preſerv'd amongſt us till this time, makes mention of Narciſſus's Preſidency together with him; writing thus word for word, at the end of that Epiſtle: 'Narciſſus ſalutes 'you who before me go-'vern'd this Epiſcopal See, 'and he now is my (c) Aſ-'ſociate in Prayer, being 'an hundred and ſixteen 'years old, and exhorts you 'to be of the ſame mind 'with me." Theſe things were thus done. Now when Serapion was dead, Aſclepiades ſucceeded in the Biſhoprick of the Church of Antiochia. And he alſo was famous for his Confeſſions in the time of Perſecution. Alexander alſo makes mention of his Conſecration, writing thus to the Antiochians; 'Alexan-'der the Servant and Priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt, 'ſendeth greeting in the Lord to the Bleſſed 'Church of the Antiochians. The Lord made my 'Bonds eaſie and light in the time of my (d) impri-'ſonment, when I heard that by Divine Providence 'Aſclepiades (a Man moſt fit by reaſon of the wor-'thineſs of his Faith) was intruſted with the care 'over the whole Church of the Antiochians." He ſignifies that he ſent this Epiſtle by Clemens, writing on this manner, at the End. 'I have ſent 'theſe Letters to you, (my Lords and Brethren) 'by (e) Clemens a bleſſed Presbyter, a virtuous 'and approved Perſon, whom ye have known, 'and ſhall know better; who, while he was 'here, by the Providence and Care of God con-firm'd and increaſed the Church of the Lord.

(a) Μιᾶν τε φωνήν. Chriſtophorſon, and Muſculus alter the reading thus μιᾷτε φωνῇ σαφεστάτῃ· which alſo Nicephorus follows; but the reading ought not to be alter'd. Ruſinus very well corrects this Story of Euſebius's (which he makes ſomething obſcure) thus. He ſays that that Revelation concerning Alexander was ſent by God to Narciſſus and other holy Men; but the voice was heard by all Men: Here Ruſinus, like a good interpreter, lightly corrects what the Author ſays amiſs. Valeſ.

(b) Nicephorus and Hieronymus write that Narciſſus alſo conſented; which without doubt he did. Here are two things contrary to the Canon of the Church committed in the Election of Alexander, firſt his Tranſlation from one Biſhoprick to another; ſecondly, that he was joyn'd as an aſſiſtant to another Biſhop while he was yet alive, which was afterwards forbid in the Council of Sardis. Valeſ.

(c) Συνεξεταζόμενος μοι διὰ τῶν εὐχῶν. Ruſinus and Chriſtophorſon do not tranſlate this place well; but Hieronymus renders it truly according to the ſenſe, though not word for word, he tranſlates it thus: Narciſſus ſalutes you who before me governed the Biſhoprick, and now governs the ſame in Prayers with me. Alexander's meaning was undoubtedly this; That, Narciſſus only aſſiſted him in Prayers, but in no other part of the Office of Biſhop. Which makes him add, that he was an hundred and ſixteen years old, ſignifying thereby that he performed the Office, and Narciſſus being very old had only the Title, and Name of Biſhop. Valeſ.

(d) Alexander wrote this Epiſtle in the heat of Perſecution while he was in priſon, before he was elected to the Biſhoprick of Jeruſalem, as appears by theſe words, calling himſelf the Priſoner of Chriſt. Hence Euſebius does not well by reckoning, in his Chronicon, Aſclepiades's Conſecration in the firſt year of Antoninus Caracalla: For Aſclepiades was Conſecrated when Alexander was in Priſon; which Euſebius in his Chronicle ſays, happen'd in Severus's Reign. Valeſ.

(e) Hieronymus (in Catalogo) conjectures this to be Clemens Alexandrinus. Clemens Alexandrinus certainly liv'd till the times of Severus, and travelled into theſe Countreys, as he witneſſes in the firſt Book of his Stromateων, he was alſo a familiar Friend of Alexander the Biſhop, for to him he dedicates his work concerning the Canon of the Church, as Euſebius writes in the 13 Chapter of this Book. Valeſ.

CHAP. XII.

Concerning Serapion, and his Books that are extant.

'TIS likely that other Monuments of (a) Serapion's Studiousness and Learning are preserv'd amongst other Men; but those [Writings] only came to our hands which he wrote to one Domninus, a Man who in time of Persecution fell from the Faith in Christ to the Jewish Superstition: And what he wrote to Pontius and Caricus, Ecclesiastical Men; and other Epistles to other Persons. Another Book also was composed by him, concerning that Book intitled The Gospel according to Peter; which Book he wrote to confute the Errors in that, for some Men's sakes in the Church of (b) Rhosse, who, taking an occasion from the foresaid Gospel, inclined to Heterodox Doctrines. Out of which Book 'twill not be unfit to set down some few words, in which he sets forth the Opinion he had concerning that Book, writing thus: 'For we, my 'Brethren, do admit of Peter and the other Apostles, as of Christ himself; but, like wise Men, we reject those Writings which are forged 'in their (c) names, knowing that we have received 'no such [Books.] For I, 'when I came to you, 'thought all of you had adhered to the right Faith. 'And when I read not the 'Gospel which was offer'd me, that bears Peter's name, 'I said, if this be the only thing which seems 'to breed this dejected Spirit in you, let it be 'read. But now understanding, from what has 'been told me, that their Minds were cover'd 'with some Heresie, I will make haste to come 'to you again; wherefore, Brethren, expect me 'suddenly: But we, Brethren, have found out 'what Heresie Marcianus was of, for he contradicted himself, not understanding what he said, 'which you shall understand by some things 'which have been written to you. For we have 'been able to (d) borrow this very Gospel of 'some who have been continually exercised in it, (that is of some of their Successors who preceded Marcianus, whom we call Docetæ, for many of [Marcianus's] Tenets are derived from their Doctrines,) and read it; and we find indeed many things agreeable to the true Doctrine of 'Christ: But some things that are particularly to be excepted against and avoided, which also 'we have here subjoyn'd upon your account." And thus much concerning Serapion's Books.

(a) The Greeks write this name Serapion with an α, thus, Σαραπίων; but the Latines with an e. So the Greeks write Σάραπιν, but the Latines Serapin. This name is always writ thus in the Med. Maz. and Fuket. MSS. Vales.

(b) This Rhosse is a City of Cilicia; it lies upon the right hand to them who sail into the Gulf of Issus. Some write this City's name with a single s: So Stephanus in his Tract De Urbibus, and Theodoret in his Religious History, Chap. 10, and 11. The name of this place in Plutarch is corrupted: for he calls it Ὄρρωτις, Orossus. Vales.

(c) The Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil's MSS. read πὸ ὀνόματι, i. e. in his name. So Rufinus seems to have read it. Serapion also a little lower says, περφερόμενον ὀνόματι αὐτῦ εὐαγγέλιον. Origen in his Commentaries upon the 13th Chapter of Matthew makes mention of this Gospel of Peter. Vales.

(d) Here Serapion says, he borrow'd this Gospel from the Successors of some of those *Heretick*s who were call'd Δοκηταὶ, Docetæ, of which Hereticks Marcianus was one. The Translator takes no notice in this place of that Heretical Sect called the Docetæ. They held that Christ was not really Incarnate, nor did truly suffer, but in opinion only. Clemens Alexandrinus in his 7th Book Stromat. and also Theodoret in his Book Divinorum Decretorum mentions them. The Ring-leader of this Sect was one Julius Cassianus, as Clemens tells us in his Third Book. Vales.

CHAP. XIII.

Concerning the Writings of Clemens.

CLemens's (a) Stromata's, which are in all eight Books, are extant amongst us, which Books he thus intituled, The Variegated Contexture of (b) Discourses of Titus Flavius Clemens, concerning all things which appertain to the knowledge of the true Philosophy: Of the same number with these are his Books intituled Institutions: In which he by name mentions Pantænus, as being his Master, and he writes down his (c) Opinions he had receiv'd concerning the scope of Scripture, and explains his Traditions. He has also an Hortatory discourse to the Gentiles: And three Books intitled the Tutor. And another Book of his [with this Title, What Rich Man can be saved? And a Book concerning Easter. Disputations also concerning Fasting: And concerning Detraction: And an Exhortation to Patience to those who were newly baptized. And a Book intitled the Ecclesiastick Canon, or against those who Judaized, which Book he dedicated to Alexander the forementioned Bishop. Moreover, in his Stromata he does not only compose miscellaneous Discourses out of the Holy Writings, but he also mentions some things out of the Gentile Writers, if any thing seems profitable which was spoken by them: He also explains various Opinions [which occur] in several Books both of the Greeks and Barbarians. He moreover confutes the false Opinions of the Arch-Hereticks. He lays open much of History, affording us large subject-matter of several sorts of Learning. Amongst all these he intermixes the Philosophers Opinions. Hence he fitly made the Title Stromata, answerable to the Subject of the Book. In the same Book he produces Authorities out of those Scriptures which are not allow'd of [as Canonical;] out of that which is call'd The Wisdom of Solomon, and out of the Book of Jesus the Son of Sirac: And out of the Epistle to the Hebrews. And out of the [Epistles] of Barnabas, Clemens, and Jude. He also makes mention of Tatianus's Book against the Grecians, and of Cassianus, (d) who also made a Chronography. Moreover, he mentions Philo, (e) Aristobulus, Josephus, Demetrius, and Eupolemus, Jewish Writers; who all have proved by their Writings, that πεποιημένε, made Rufinus believe, that the preceding person Tatianus wrote a Chronography as well as Cassianus: But we must in no-wise think that true. Vales.

(a) Rufinus very well translates this Title στρωματεῖς thus, Opus varie contextum. Plutarch calls some Books of his, which are part History, and part Poetry, στρωματεῖς. Eusebius takes the Books to be so call'd from the divers sorts of matter which they treat of, and so says Baronius in his Annals, and Suidas in his History: στρώματα, in Greek signifies Carpets or Hangings which were woven of divers colours: Hence these Books are metaphorically entitled στρωματεῖς, from the mixture of things they treat of: For he intermixes Grecian, Barbarian, and Latine Opinions, confutes Hereticks, and composes a kind of a various History. Photius Biblioth.

(b) Ὑπομνήματα (which is the term here,) are such Writings as contain only the Heads, and some Particulars of some special things; or, as Cicero in Verrem says, Sunt scripta quæ domi continentur, nec in vulgus offeruntur: But now the word has got a larger signification.

(c) Langus renders this word ἐκδοχὰς Dictates, Musculus verbally, Excerptions, Rufinus, Expositions, and Christophorson, Commentaries upon the Scriptures; but none of them sufficiently explain the Propriety of the Word: ἐκδοχαὶ, are the Sense and Meaning of Scripture. So Origen uses it in his 4th Book De Principiis, Chap. 2. speaking of the double Sense of Scripture, that is, the literal, and the spiritual Sense; and so also does Methodius, Epiphanius and Dionysius Alexandrinus use the term. Vales.

(d) These words ὡς καὶ αὐτῦ χρονογραφίαν

(e) Some Copies read, Δειγοβόλε, but in all our MSS. and in Nicephorus 'tis Δειγοβόλε. This Aristobulus here is that same Aristobulus the Peripatetick who wrote Books of the Explications of the Mosaical Law to Ptolomy Philometor, as Eusebius records in his Chronicle, and he produces a Fragment of these Books, in his 8th Book Præparationis. Origen also mentions something of these Books in his 4th Book against Celsus, pag. 204. Vales.

Antoninus MOSES, and the Originals of the Jewiſh Nation are ancienter than any thing of Antiquity amongſt the Grecians. And this Man's Books aforemention'd are ſtuffed with very much excellent Learning of ſeveral kinds. In the firſt of theſe Books he ſays concerning himſelf, that he was born next to the firſt Succeſſors of the Apoſtles. He promiſes alſo in them that he would write Commentaries upon Geneſis. And in his Book concerning Eaſter, he confeſſes he was conſtrained by his Friends to commit to writing [for the benefit of] Poſterity thoſe Traditions which he had heard from his Anceſtors. In the ſame Book alſo is mention'd Melito, Irenæus, and ſome others, whoſe Explications he ſets down.

CHAP. XIV.

What Writings Clemens has mentioned.

THat I may ſpeak briefly, in his (a) Inſtitutions he makes (b) ſhort Explications of all the (c) written word of God, not omitting thoſe Scriptures whoſe authority is (d) queſtion'd by ſome; I mean the Epiſtle of Jude, and the other (e) Catholick Epiſtles, and that of Barnabas, and that which is ſaid to be the Revelation of Peter: And The Epiſtle to the Hebrews, which he affirms to be Paul's, but was written to the Hebrews in the Hebrew Tongue; which when Luke had with much care and pains tranſlated, he publiſh'd it for the [uſe of the] Grecians. Wherefore we may find the Stile of the Tranſlation of this Epiſtle, and Of the Acts of the Apoſtles to be the ſame. '(f) But 'twas for a very good (g) reaſon, that this Title [Paul the Apoſtle] was not ſet before it; for he (ſays he) writing to the Hebrews, who were poſſeſs'd with a prejudice againſt, and a ſuſpicion of him, very wiſely did not prefix his name at the beginning, leſt he ſhould cauſe an averſion in them to his Epiſtle. But a little after, he continues, ſaying, Now, as a bleſſed Presbyter ſaid, becauſe the Lord, being the Apoſtle of the Almighty, was ſent to the Hebrews, Paul through modeſty, in that he was ſent to the Gentiles, does not entitle himſelf the Apoſtle of the Hebrews, both in reverence to the Lord, and alſo becauſe 'twas over and above his duty that he writ to the Hebrews, being the Preacher and Apoſtle of the Gentiles. Again, Clemens in the ſame Books writes a Tradition, concerning the Order of the Goſpels which he receiv'd from the Elders before him, and it is this: 'Thoſe Goſpels, he ſaid, which contain the Genealogies were written firſt. And this was the occaſion of writing Mark's Goſpel: When Peter preach'd the Word publickly in Rome, and declared the Goſpel by the Spirit, many who were there preſent entreated Mark (who had been his Follower (h) a long time, and remembred what he had ſaid) that he would write down the things which had been ſpoken. When he had compoſed the Goſpel, he imparted it to thoſe who had intreated it of him. Peter having underſtood this, (i) uſed no Perſwaſives either to hinder him, or to incite him to it. But John, being the laſt of all, when he ſaw how thoſe things which appertain'd to Chriſt's Humanity were already manifeſted in the Goſpels, was mov'd [to the Enterprize] by his (k) Acquaintance; and being inſpired by the Spirit, he wrote a Goſpel concerning Chriſt's Divinity. Thus much Clemens." But again, the ſaid Alexander in an Epiſtle of his to Origen, mentions Clemens, and Pantænus alſo, as Men who were his Familiars: he writes thus. 'For this, as you know, was the will of God, that the Friendſhip which was begun betwixt us from our Anceſtors, ſhould not only remain inviolable, but alſo become more fervent and firm. For we know thoſe bleſſed Fathers who went before us, with whom we, after a ſhort time, ſhall be joyn'd; I mean the truly bleſſed Pantænus my Maſter, and the holy Clemens my Maſter, who alſo profited me much; and if there be any others like them, by whom I came to the knowledge of you, my moſt excellent Lord and Brother. And after this manner were theſe things. Moreover, Adamantius (for that alſo was Origen's name,) in theſe Times, when Zephyrinus preſided over the Church of Rome, (l) travell'd to Rome, (as he himſelf ſomewhere ſays) having a deſire to ſee the moſt ancient Church of the Romans: Where he made no long ſtay, but return'd to Alexandria; and with all diligence there performed his cuſtomary Duty of Catechiſt, Demetrius the then Biſhop of thoſe Churches exciting him to it, and little leſs than beſeeching him to labour earneſtly for the Utility of the Brethren.

Antoninus

(a) For the explication of the Title of this Book; ſee the Note (a) upon the 11th Chap. of the 5th Book, where 'tis prov'd by ſeveral Quotations that the true rendring of this Title is Inſtitutions, or, Informations.

(b) This phraſe ἐπιτεθειμένας διηγήσεις, Langus tranſlates compendioſam enumerationem, Muſculus contractas explicationes. And ſo Chriſtophorſon alſo: But Ruſinus calls them compendioſas diſſertationes. Διηγήσεις, therefore is the ſame as ἐξηγήσεις, or διεξηγήσεις· which Words Photius uſes in that ſenſe, that is, explications, interpretations; though διήγησις ſignifies a Narration only. Valeſ.

(c) Λόγῳ ἐνδιαθήκῳ, according to Heſychius's interpretation, is rendered the written word; aliquid Scripto conſtans. Heſych.

(d) Γραφὰς ἀντιλεγομένας are Scriptures, whoſe authority is queſtioned, diſputed of, and by ſome contradicted; we muſt not therefore call them Apocrypha, as Ruſinus does, for Apocrypha are thoſe which are certainly falſe and compos'd by Hereticks; but ἀντιλεγόμενα are thoſe which ſome approve of, others not: Of which here Euſebius gives us a Catalogue, ſome of which in St. Hierome's Catalogue are accounted Apocryphal, as the Revelation of Peter, which is concluded to be undoubtedly falſe. Valeſ.

(e) Catholick Epiſtles are thoſe which were not written to certain Perſons, particular Cities, or Provinces, but to whole Nations, and the Univerſal Church. Thus Themiſon, one of Montanus's Diſciples, impudently wrote a Catholick Epiſtle, like an Apoſtle to the Univerſal Church, as Apollonius teſtifies Book 5. Chap. 16. Euſebius alſo mentions Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth's Epiſtles to four Cities; which he calls Catholick. The Revelation of Peter which Euſebius mentions here, is quoted in Theodotus's Excerptions which are printed at the end of Clemens's Stromata: Hence 'tis plain that theſe Collections of Theodotus are nothing elſe, but fragments of Clemens's Hypotypoſeon. Valeſ.

(f) This quotation Clemens has out of Macarius.

(g) This reaſon alſo St. Hierome confirms upon the firſt Chapter of the Epiſtle of Paul to the Galatians, where he ſays that St. Paul does not after his accuſtomed way prefix his name before this Epiſtle, becauſe he was about to ſpeak of Chriſt, and thought it not fit to call himſelf an Apoſtle where Chriſt alſo muſt be ſtyl'd an Apoſtle. Valeſ.

(h) Tho' this word [πόρρω-θεν] ſignifies a-far off; yet here it muſt be rendred as ἐκ πολλοῦ for a long time; which word Nicephorus Cal. uſes in this place in ſtead of [πόρρωθεν. Valeſ.

(i) All Copies read περιτρεπτικῶς μὴτε κωλύσαι· and ſo alſo does Niceph. but Chriſtophorſon boldly alter'd the reading, ſaying, that this paſſage impugn'd the authority of the Goſpel. Euſebius relates this Story in the 2d Book, at the 14th Chap. otherwiſe; ſaying, that Peter was mightily pleaſed with the Goſpel which was written by Mark and confirm'd it, appointing it ſhould be read in the Churches. But if we weigh the words of Euſebius and Clemens carefully, theſe places will not appear in the leaſt contradictory, as Chriſtophorſon ſays they are: For altho' St. Peter, as Clemens ſays, did neither openly prohibit nor further him; yet he may be ſaid to have tacitly approv'd of what he had done. Ruſinus has very well tranſlated the place, whom we ought to imitate; becauſe by his Tranſlation he explains it very well, rendring it thus; Licet fieri ipſum non juſſerit, tamen factum non prohibuit: By which 'tis very plain that he did not diſallow of it. Valeſ.

(k) This Hieronymus atteſts, ſpeaking of John, in his Preface to his Commentaries upon St. Matthew. Valeſ.

(l) Baronius places Origen's coming to Rome, on the Year of Chriſt 220; which was the firſt Year of the Reign of Elagabalus the Emperor: But we muſt in no-wiſe yield to this; ſeeing that Euſebius ſays, he came to Rome in Antoninus Caracalla's Reign. Baronius alſo affirms that he came again to Rome in the Reign of Philip the Emperor, that is, in the Year of Chriſt 248. But we muſt not believe Baronius in this; for Euſebius, who carefully and truly wrote the Hiſtory of Origen, makes no mention of Origen's ſecond coming to Rome; but rather ſeems to confute this of Baronius, ſaying thus, that Origen ſent Letters concerning the Profeſſion of his Faith to Fabianus, who was Biſhop of Rome, therefore Origen went not to Rome, as Baronius ſays, only ſent Letters to Fabianus the Biſhop of Rome. But hence ariſes Baronius's miſtake; he follows Porphyrius, who in his Life of Plotinus, mentions one Origen, who was Plotinus's and Herennius's School-fellow; but this is not that Origen Adamantius which we mean here; but another Origen, therefore we muſt carefully make a diſtinction betwixt theſe two Origens; which we will ſhew hereafter. Valeſ.

CHAP. XV.

Concerning Heraclas.

BUT when he perceiv'd himself not supplied with sufficient Strength both for the more profound study of Divinity, for his Researches into, and Interpretation of the Holy Scriptures, and moreover for the Catechizing of them who came to him; (having scarce time to breath, so many flocking together to him; one Company after another coming from Morning to Evening to his School;) he divided the Multitudes, and electing Heraclas, one of his Familiars, made him his Assistant in Catechizing; a Man who was very studious in Divinity, most eminently skilful in other Learning; and one who was not unexperienced in Philosophy. He commits the Instruction of the New-beginners to him, but reserves to himself the hearing of those who had made some proficiency.

CHAP. XVI.

What Pains and Study Origen bestow'd about the Holy Scriptures.

Origen now intended to make such accurate Researches into the Holy Scriptures, that he learn'd the Hebrew Tongue; and bought the (a) Authentick Scriptures written in Hebrew Letters, which were extant among the Jews. And he searched after other Editions of Translators of the Sacred Scriptures besides the Seventy. And he sought out some other Versions besides those (b) common ones of Aquila, Symmachus and Theodotion, different from them; which he, having search'd out, first brought to light, from I know not whence, nor out of what Corners, having been forgotten for a long time: Concerning which, because he was uncertain who were the Authors of them, by reason of their Obscurity, he only noted this, that one of them was by him found at (c) Nicopolis near Actium; and another at some other place. Moreover, in his Hexapla of the Psalms, after those four excellent Editions, he adds (d) not only a fifth, and sixth, but also a seventh Version; and upon one of them again he has noted, that it was found at Jericho in an Hogs-head, in the times of Antoninus the Son of Severus. When he had thus collected all these Versions into one body, and divided them into (e) Verses, (f) having placed them directly one against the other, together with (g) the Hebrew Text, he left us those Copies which are called (h) Hexapla. He (i) afterwards prepared apart by themselves, Aquila's, Symmachus's, and Theodotion's Edition, together with the Septuagint, [and put them out] in his Tetrapla.

Antoninus

(a) Πρωτοτύπους, Budæus calls exemplaria, Copies, by which we do any thing, or make any thing. Valesius translates this Phrase [πρωτοτύπους γραφὰς] the Authentick Scriptures; because, says he, Eusebius's meaning is plainly the same, for he implies thus much, that these were not the very first Copies which were writ by Esdras; but Authentick in respect of the Septuagint, and other Translators; and he says this word πρωτοτύπους is commonly rendred in Latin Authenticas: But Christophorson translates it the old Copies.

(b) Κατὰμαξεύω signifies properly curru tero, hence ὁδὸς καταμαξευτὴ via curru trita, the high way καθ' ἣν αἱ ἅμαξαι διέρχονται, hence Metaphorically (as the Latin word tritum does to which it exactly answers) it signifies aliquid vulgare, that which is trite, or common; 'tis sometimes written καθαμαξεύω, as here in Eusebius.

(c) In the Med. Maz. Fuk. MSS. we find πρὸς ἀκτίοις, but 'tis not so well as πρὸς ἀκτίῳ; for ἄκτια signifies Ludi Actiaci, but Nicopolis had not its name from those Games; but from the Promontory near which it was situate, 'twas called Nicopolis near Actium. Vales.

(d) In stead of [ἕκτην καὶ ἑβδόμην, a sixth and seventh] I read [ὃ μόνον πέμπτῳ καὶ ἕκτῳ, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἑβδόμῳ, not only a fifth and sixth, but also a seventh;] and judge this Emendation to be altogether necessary. For Eusebius, having before spoken of a fifth and sixth Edition found by Origen, here adds this further, that Origen put a seventh into the Copies of his Hexapla of the Psalms. Therefore his Edition of the Psalms was seven-fold. But because this seventh Edition had only the Psalms, Origen altered not the Title of his Edition, to wit, Hexapla. This Amendment and Exposition of ours is evidently confirmed by Johannes Zonaras, in his History of the Emperor Severus. See the Author's words. But that which Zonaras there adds, to wit, that the seventh Edition was found at Jericho, is not expresly said by Eusebius here. Epiphanius (in his Book De ponderib.) and Athanasius (in Synopsi,) affirm that the fifth Edition was found at Jericho in an Hogshead: But Nicephorus thought that both the sixth and seventh were found there. Although the particular Authors of this fifth and sixth Edition are unknown; yet 'tis manifest they were Jews: Which is asserted by Hierom, in his B. 2. Advers. Rusinum. Vales.

(e) Κῶλα (the term here) signifies verses, or such parts of the Text as contain an entire sense. Hierom was the first amongst the Latins, who divided his Translation into Verses: See his Preface to Isaiah. This he did in imitation of Origen, who had done the same in his Hexapla. Origen herein had a regard to the profit of the Readers. For what is thus distinguish'd by Verses, is both more easily understood, and also more readily gotten by heart. Besides, this distinction was altogether necessary in order to a comparing of the Greek Editions. Origen's Example was afterwards followed by many; who did the same in the New Testament, which Origen had done in the Old. Vales.

(f) This was another of Origen's inventions, to wit, the placing of the Translations one against the other; that so, if one differed from another, it might be presently discerned by one view. See Hierom, in his Preface to Chromatius, upon the Chronicles. Vales. See a Scheme of Origen's Contrivance herein in Dr. Cave's Life of Origen, pag. 228.

(g) Σημείωσις (the term which occurs here) signifies properly Annotation; See Book 5. Chap. 20. note (d.) But Eusebius does here call the Hebrew Text, σημείωσιν, because 'twas prefix'd before the six Greek Translations; in like manner as in Comments the words of the Author are prefix'd before the Exposition: This term [σημείωσις] signifies not only the Exposition, but the Text, at which the Exposition is set. Vales.

(h) From this place 'tis evident, that this work of Origen's was called Hexapla, because there were six Greek Translations contained in it, besides the Hebrew Text, which was written in two Columns two manner of ways, in the one in Hebrew, in the other in Greek Letters. See Epiphan. Hæres. Origenist. cap. 3. And the reason why this Work was thus termed, is plain; for, as the Tetrapla were so called, because they contained four Greek Translations collected into one Body; so the Hexapla were thus termed, because they comprehended six Greek Versions, to wit, that of Aquila, Symmachus, the Seventy-two, Theodotion, and lastly the fifth and sixth Translation. But the Hebrew Text must not be reckoned amongst the Versions; that being the Original. Zonaras (in his History of the Emperor Severus) is of the same Opinion with us, and explains this place of Eusebius (though he mentions not his Name) as we do. Vales.

(i) The Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. have it written [ἐπικαλασκευάσας·] which is all one as if Eusebius should have said [ἐπὶ τῇ τοῦ ἑξαπλῶν ἐκδόσει καλασκευάσας, i. e. after the Edition of his Hexapla, having prepared, &c.] For when Origen perceived that his Hexapla required too much cost and labour, he composed his Tetrapla, (which were more ready and useful,) having taken away the two Editions of the Hebrew Text, and the fifth, sixth, and seventh Translation. Hitherto it has been the Opinion of the Learned, that Origen made his Tetrapla before his Hexapla: Usher (in Syntag. de Sept. Interpret. cap. 5.) and Salmasius (in his Book De Linguâ Hellenist.) are of this Opinion. But this passage in Eusebius, (as it is corrected by the Authority of our MSS. Copies) does wholly confute it. Vales.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning Symmachus the Translator.

MOreover, we must understand that this Symmachus, one of the Translators, was an Ebionite. For there is an Heresie called the Heresie of the Ebionites, who say that Christ was born of Joseph and Mary, and suppose him to have been meer Man, who also stifly affirm that the Law ought to be strictly observ'd according as the Jews kept it, as we have before made known somewhere in our History. Symmachus's Commentaries are even yet extant; in which he seems to confirm the foresaid Heresie,

Antoninus

Antoninus (a) diſputing ſtrongly againſt Matthew's Goſpel: Origen tells us that he received theſe, together with other Interpretations of Symmachus's of the Scriptures, from one Juliana, upon whom, he ſays, theſe Books of Symmachus's devolved by right of Succeſſion.

(a) The Ebionites admitted only St. Matthew's Goſpel to be genuine: But that Goſpel of the Ebionites was not the ſame Goſpel of St. Matthew which we now have, but a forged one, and which wanted the Genealogy of Chriſt, as Epiphanius declares (in Hæreſ. Ebion.) For the Goſpel according to the Hebrews, which they made uſe of, (as Euſebius ſays Book 3. Chap. 25. where ſee Note (c),) they called the Authentick Goſpel of St. Matthew. Theſe Words therefore [πρὸς τὸ κατὰ ματθαῖον ἀκριβὲς εὐαγγέλιον] we have rendred thus [diſputing ſtrongly againſt Matthew's Goſpel,] to wit, ours, and the true Goſpel of St. Matthew. From this Symmachus the Ebionites were afterwards termed Symmachians, becauſe he ſtrongly aſſerted their opinions. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVIII.

Concerning Ambroſius.

AT this time Ambroſius ((a) who favour'd the Valentinian Hereſie) being convinc'd by the Truth preach'd by Origen, and having his Mind cleared as it were with light, aſſents to the Doctrine of the Orthodox Faith of the Church. And (Origen's fame being noiſed abroad every-where) ſeveral Men of great learning flocked to him, intending to make tryal of this Man's ſufficiency in the Scriptures. Alſo infinite multitudes of Hereticks, and not a few Philoſophers, and them moſt famous, gave (b) diligent attention to him, almoſt like Scholars learning from him, beſides Divinity, thoſe things which appertain to * External Philoſophy: For he initiated (c) thoſe, whom he perceived to have acute Parts into Philoſophical Learning; teaching them Geometry, and Arithmetick, and the other previous Sciences: Alſo guiding them into the knowledge of the various Sects among Philoſophers; explaining the Writings that are amongſt them, and commenting on, and ſearching into all things. So that even amongſt the Gentiles this Man was openly declar'd to be a great Philoſopher. He alſo incited many of meaner Capacities to the ſtudy of the Liberal Sciences; telling them that from hence would accrue to them no ſmall fitneſs and preparation for the contemplation of the Divine Scriptures: For which reaſon he eſteemed the ſtudy of Secular and Philoſophical Literature moſt neceſſary for himſelf.

(a) Τὰ τινὸς φερνεῖν is elegantly us'd for alicujus partibus favere, to be a favourer of ſuch a Man's party: So Euripides in Hecuba, when Polyxena ſpeaks to her Mother, ſaying, Ἀγαμέμνων τὰ ἡμῶν φρονεῖ, Agamemnon is on our ſide: Thus much for the Phraſe. Now that Ambroſius was of Valentinus's Sect, or at leaſt favour'd that Opinion, Origen teſtifies in the Proœmium of his fifth Tome of Explications on St. John's Goſpel, where he commends Ambroſius for relinquiſhing thoſe dangerous Principles. But ſome will have Ambroſius not to have been a Valentinian, but a Marcioniſt, and Epipbanius is of that opinion. Valeſ.

(b) Περοσέχειν here ſignifies to give attention to any one, ſo as to learn ſomething from him, or to come often to any one, to learn as Scholars; and therefore he adds μονονυχὶ παιδευόμενοι, almoſt like Scholars. Valeſ.

* That is, Grecian Philoſophy. (c) That is, who were his Scholars. Valeſ.

CHAP. XIX.

What things have been recorded concerning Origen [by the Gentiles.]

THE Heathen Philoſophers who flouriſhed in his Age are Witneſſes of his great proficiency in theſe Studies: In whoſe Writings we have found frequent mention of this Man; [ſome of them] both dedicating their Books to him, and alſo delivering up their private Labours to his Cenſure, as to a Maſter. But I need not ſpeak of theſe things, whenas (a) Porphyrius, (who lived in Sicily [almoſt] till our Age, having written ſome Books againſt us, and in them endeavoured to cavil at the Holy Scriptures, when he had mentioned thoſe Men who made explications upon them) was unable in any wiſe to caſt any baſe Aſperſion upon their Opinions, and through want of Arguments betakes himſelf to railing, and reviles the Commentators. Of whom he attempts chiefly to reproach Origen, ſaying, that when he was young, he knew him; but he unawares commends the Man; partly by ſpeaking the truth in ſome things where he could not do otherways; and partly by lying, wherein he thought he ſhould eſcape being detected. Sometimes he accuſes him as being a Chriſtian; by and by, he admires, and deſcribes the acceſſion he made to Philoſophick Literature. Hear therefore what he ſays word for word: 'Some Men, deſirous to find out not, a defection from the pravity of the Jewiſh Scriptures, but an explication [of the Obſcurities in them] have betaken themſelves to Expoſitions, which have no agreement nor coherence with thoſe Scriptures, and which contain the Author's approbation and praiſe, rather than a defence of thoſe ſtrange Sectaries. For, having boaſted that what things were plainly ſpoken by Moſes were obſcure Riddles, allowing them the Authority of, and quoting them as, Divine Oracles full of hidden Myſteries; and having (b) bewitched the Judgments and Minds of Men, with their Pride, they afterwards put forth their Expoſitions." Then after ſome few words he ſays; 'Let an Example of this Abſurdity be taken from a Man whom I ſaw when I was (c) very young, being a perſon then of great repute, and yet eminently renowned upon account of his Writings which he left behind him, I mean Origen, whoſe Renown is very much ſpread abroad amongſt the Teachers of thoſe Doctrines. For this Man having been an (d) Hearer and Chriſtophorſon underſtand theſe Words: But Valeſius otherwiſe. He ſays Porphyrius's meaning was this, that the Authors of theſe Expoſitions through the loftineſs of their Words, bewitch'd or inchanted the Minds and Judgments of their Hearers, and then impos'd upon them with their Expoſitions. Valeſ.

Antoninus.

(a) Eunapius, in his vitâ Philoſophorum, ſays this Porphyrius was a Tyrian by birth, and was firſt called Malchus, which in Syriack ſignifies a King: But afterwards, by his Maſter Longinus a Platonick, whom he was an Auditor of at Athens, he was called Porphyrius, which ſignifies one cloath'd in Purple, a King; becauſe Kings only wore the true πορφύρα. St. Hierom ſays he was a Jew, born in the City of Batanæa; thence he calls him Bataneotes or Batanætes: Socrates atteſts that this Man was once a Chriſtian, but could not endure the reproofs of thoſe Chriſtians who reprov'd him, and therefore turn'd an Apoſtate. Lactantius, who lived in his time, ſays, he wrote his Books againſt the Chriſtians in the ſame year the Emperor pull'd down the Churches; but St. Hierom affirms he left his Maſter Plotinus, and Rome, and went to Sicily for his healths-ſake, and dwelt at Lilybæum; where he wrote thoſe Books: But we ought rather to believe Lactantius, who lived in his time. St. Auguſtine ſays there were two Porphyrius's; one who liv'd in Sicily a famous Man; and another who wrote againſt the Chriſtians: But all agree that 'twas one and the ſame Porphyrius the Platonick who lived in Sicily, and wrote againſt the Chriſtians. Baronius's Annals.

(b) Κρῖσιν τῆς ψυχῆς; their own judgment, and underſtanding being bewitch'd or miſleaden by their Pride. So Langus, Ruſinus and Chriſtophorſon

(c) 'Tis probable Origen was ſeen by Porphyrius in his younger days, in the City of Tyre, where Origen, having left Alexandria, ſtaid ſome time. For Porphyrius was a Tyrian; and he was a young Man at the ſame time when Origen made his abode at Tyre. But Porphyrius could by no means ſee Origen at Alexandria when he was an old Man; becauſe when Origen left Alexandria he was not compleat fifty years old. Valeſ.

(d) We muſt believe Porphyrius, whenas he ſo expreſly affirms here, that Origen Adamantius (ſo he was called) was an Auditor of Ammonius Alexandrinus. But amongſt the Auditors of Ammonius there was at that time another Origen, School-fellow to Herennius and Plotinus; mentioned by Porphyrius (in vitâ Plotini,) by Longinus (in his Book de fine,) by Eunapius, and Hierocles (in his Book De Providentia.) Baronius (in his Annals,) and Lucas Holſtenius (in 2 and 6 cap. De vitâ Scriptiſque Porphyrii,) ſuppoſed this Origen to have been the ſame Perſon with Origen Adamantius. But I diſſent from them, for theſe two reaſons eſpecially. (1.) Longinus the Philoſopher (in his Book De De fine) reckons Ammonius and Origen, (Platonick Philosophers) among those, who would not commit to writing their Opinions for the benefit of Posterity, but thought it sufficient to deliver them by word of Mouth to their Auditors. If any thing be written by any of them, (these are the words of Longinus,) as indeed Origen did write one Book De Dæmonibus, it is very little: For they seemed not to have made it their business to write Books. These Words cannot be supposed to have been spoken of Origen Adamantius, who 'tis manifest, was a Voluminous Writer, as the Catalogue of his Works recorded by Eusebius does manifest: Moreover, Porphyrius (in these Words of his here quoted by Eusebius) says, Origen was eminently renowned upon account of his Writings which he left behind him. (2.) Porphyrius (in his Life of Plotinus, not far from the beginning) has these Words: But when Herennius, Origen, and Plotinus had agreed amongst themselves, that they would not publish the Opinions of Ammonius, which having heard from him they approved of as most especially pure and refined; Plotinus was as good as his Word: But Herennius first broke the Compact; and afterwards Origen followed him: But Origen wrote nothing besides a Book concerning Dæmons, and a piece in Gallienus's time, wherein he proved that the King was the only Poet. This last Book Origen wrote in praise of Gallienus the Emperor, to commend his Poetical faculty. For Gallienus was given to Poetry; and there are some nuptial Verses of his extant amongst the fragments of Petronius Arbiter. Now, if it be true, that this Origen, School-fellow to Plotinus, wrote this Book under Gallienus the Emperor, doubtless he must necessarily be distinguished from Origen Adamantius. For Origen Adamantius survived not the times of Gallienus, but died when Gallus and Volusianus were Emperors, in the year of Christ 252, having compleated the sixty ninth year of his age. Vales.

Antoninus ‘of that Ammonius, who in our Age made a ‘great Proficiency in Philosophy; as for his ‘Knowledge in Philosophick Literature he pro‘fited much by this Master. But as concerning ‘a right course of life, he undertook a way quite ‘contrary to him: For Ammonius, having been ‘educated a Christian by Christian Parents, ‘when he arrived to Understanding, and, [the ‘knowledge of] Philosophy, quickly betook ‘himself to a course of life which was agree‘able to the Laws. But Origen being a Gentile ‘and brought up in the Learning of the Greci‘ans, diverted to the (e) Impudence of the Bar‘barians. Being devoted to this [Religion] he ‘(f) corrupted both himself, and also that pro‘ficiency he had made in Philosophick Learning: As to his manner of life he lived like a ‘Christian, and contrary to the Laws: but in ‘respect of his Opinions concerning things, and ‘concerning God, he imitated the Grecians, ‘(g) substituting the Sayings of the Heathens ‘in the room of those strange Fables. For he ‘was continually conversant in Plato's [Works,] ‘and in those of (h) Numenius and Cronius, and ‘revolved the Works of (i) Apollophanes and (k) Lon‘ginus, and (l) Moderatus, and Nicomachus, and ‘the Works of all the famous Men amongst the ‘Pythagoreans; he also made use of the Works of ‘(m) Chæremon the Stoick, and of (n) Cornutus's ‘Books; when he had learn'd ‘from them the Allegorical ‘mode of explaining the Gre‘cian Mysteries, he apply'd ‘it to the Jewish Scriptures.’ These are Porphyrius's words in his third Book of that Piece he wrote against the Christians; who has said the truth concerning the Man's hard Study and great Learning; but herein he has plainly lied, (for what would not he say who wrote against the Christians?) in that he says, that [Origen] was converted from a Heathen to a Christian, and that Ammonius fell from a pious course of life to the Heathenish way of living. For, (as our History has before manifested) Origen kept the Christian Doctrine received from his Ancestors: And the Precepts of the Divine Philosophy remained uncorrupted, and unshaken in Ammonius even till his death; as his Works even to this present do testifie; he being famous amongst most Men for his Books which he left behind him: As for example, that Book which is thus entitled, concerning the Concord of Moses and Jesus, and those other Books of his, whatsoever sort they be of, which are found amongst lovers of Learning. Let what we have said therefore be an evidence both of the Detraction of this lying Accuser, and also of Origen's great knowledge in the Grecian Learning. Concerning which, Origen (in an Epistle of his, wherein he makes an Apology for himself, to some who blamed him for his too great studiousness about this sort of Learning) writes these words: ‘When I employed my self wholly in the Scri‘pture, the fame of my progress in Learning ‘spreading it self every-where, there resorting ‘to me sometimes Hereticks, at other times those ‘who studied the Grecian Learning, and especially ‘such as were skill'd in Philosophy, I thought it ‘convenient to make researches into Heretick's ‘Opinions, and into whatsoever things are re‘ported to be said by Philosophers concerning ‘the Truth: This we did, both in imitation of Pan‘tænus, who profited many before us, (who was ‘furnish'd with no small stock of Provisions of ‘this sort:) And also of Heraclas, who at this ‘time sits among the Presbyters of Alexandria; ‘(o) whom I found with a Philosophy-Master, ‘under whom he studied diligently five years be‘fore I began to be an Auditor of his Doctrine. ‘And for this reason, he wearing a com‘mon Habit before, put it off, and put on ‘a (p) Philosophical Habit, which he (q) retains

(f) Καπηλεύει; Cauponari, to sell Wine, or to keep a Victualling-house. Now because these Cauponæ us'd to cheat the buyers, by mixing and and dashing their Wines, and so enrich themselves; this Word is us'd to adulterate or corrupt; as here, and likewise in holy Writ, in the second Epistle to the Corinthians, Chap. 2. 17. we find, ὃ καπηλεύοντες τὸν λόγον, not corrupting the Word of God. Vales.

(h) Origen quotes this Numenius in his Books against Celsus: He was a famous Pythagorean, born at Apamea in Syria. Longinus, in his Book De Fine, mentions these Philosophers, Numenius, Cronius and Moderatus; who, he says, connected Pythagoras's and Plato's Opinions together. Cronius's Book περὶ παλιγγενεσίας is quoted by Nemesius in his Book De Naturâ Hominis, Cap. 2. Vales.

(i) Apollophanes is called by Stobæus, in his ἐκλογαὶ, the Son of Ægimius. Vales.

(k) This was Cassius Longinus who has only one Book extant at this day, entitled De sublimi Genere dicendi; most Men think he was a Grammarian; but he profess'd Philosophy, as Suidas and others testifie: He was Porphyrius's Master in Platonick Philosophy at Athens. He liv'd in Origen's time, and was younger than him, and died a long time after him, 'tis a wonder therefore that Porphyrius should reckon him amongst the ancient Philosophers. Vales.

(l) This Moderatus was born at Gades, now call'd Cales, an Island on the South-side of Spain without the Straits of Gibraltar: He wrote eleven Books, ἀλλῶν πυθαγορείων. Concerning Nicomachus; See Photius and Suidas. Vales.

(m) Chæremon was a Stoick Philosopher: Origen, in his Books against Celsus quotes Chæremon's Book De Cometis: He taught Philosophy at Alexandria, and Dionysius Alexandrinus succeeded him in his School. See Suidas in Dionysio. Vales. Of this Chæremon, see Martial's Epig. Book 11. Epig. 57.

(n) This Cornutus Afer Leptitanus taught Philosophy at Rome in the Reign of Claudius Nero: He wrote many things concerning Philosophy, and Eloquence: Persius dedicates his fifth Satyr to him, as to his Master: He wrote a Book De Græcorum Theologia, which is cited by the Etymologist in the word ζεύς. But the name is corrupted by Aldus Manutius, and called Phornutus. Vales.

(o) We may from these words gather that Heraclas and Origen had the same Philosophy-Master, which Porphyrius affirms was Ammonius the most famous Philosopher of that Age. Vales.

(p) The Philosophick Habit was the Pallium, or Cloak; which was the usual Badge of the Greek Philosophers, different from that which was worn by the ordinary Greeks; which those Christians still kept to, who before their Conversion had been professed Philosophers: This our Eusebius affirms of Justin the Martyr (B. 4. Chap. 11.) ἐν φιλοσόφῳ σχήματι πρεσβεύων τὸν θεῖον λόγον, one that in a Philosophick habit was an assertor of the Divine Word.

(q) Hence we may conjecture that the Clergy had at that time no peculiar habit; seeing that Heraclas, a Presbyter of Alexandria, and afterwards Bishop, always retain'd his Philosophick habit. Vales.

Antoninus 'to this day, neither does he deſiſt from a ſtudi- 'ous reading of the Books of the learned Grecians". This he ſaid in defence of the ſtudious diligence he uſed about the Grecian [Learning.] At this time while he made his abode at Alexandria there came a Soldier who deliver'd Letters to Demetrius, the Biſhop of that Church, and to the then Prefect of Egypt, from the Governour of Arabia, that they ſhould ſend Origen to him with all ſpeed that he might impart to him his Doctrine. He was therefore ſent by them, and came to Arabia. But in a little time, having finiſh'd thoſe things which were the cauſe of his coming, he again return'd to Alexandria. Within ſome interval of time, there being kindled in Alexandria no ſmall War, he withdrew out of Alexandria, and judging there was no ſafe dwelling for him in Egypt, he went to Paleſtine, and made his abode in Cæſarea; where the Biſhops of thoſe Parts intreated him, altho' he was not yet ordain'd Prieſt, to diſcourſe and to expound the Holy Scriptures (r) publickly in the Church. This will be evidenc'd by what Alexander, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and Theoctiſtus Biſhop of Cæſarea wrote concerning him to Demetrius, who thus excuſe him. '[Your (ſ) Holineſs] has 'added in your Letters that 'this thing was never heard 'of, nor done till this time, '[to wit,] that Laicks 'ſhould Preach in the pre- 'ſence of Biſhops. I (t) know 'not how you came ſo ap- 'parently to miſrepreſent 'the truth: For they are in- 'vited to Preach to the Peo- 'ple, (when they are found 'fit to profit the Brethren) 'by the Holy Biſhops. For 'example, Euelpis [was in- 'vited to Preach] by Neon 'at Laranda: and ſo was Paulinus by Celſus at I- 'conium. And Theodorus by Atticus at (u) Syn- 'nada, who were our bleſſed Brethren. And 'tis not incredible that the like was done in o- 'ther places, tho' we never knew it." On this manner was the above-named Origen honour'd, though he was yet (x) young, not only by his Familiars, but alſo by foreign Biſhops. But Demetrius again recalling him by Letters, and urging his return to Alexandria by perſons that were Deacons of that Church, he return'd thither, and there executed his accuſtom'd Office.

(r) Hence 'tis conjectured, that Origen Catechiz'd at Alexandria in a private Auditory, and not publickly in the Church; for had he before taught in the Church, Demetrius could not have brought this as an Objection, againſt Alexander and Theoctiſtus. Wherefore Ruſinus miſtakes, who ſays Demetrius permitted him to Catechize publickly in the Church. Valeſ.

(ſ) He writes to Demetrius the Biſhop in the third Perſon; underſtanding Ἡ σὴ ἁγιότης Your Holineſs. And without doubt had we the whole Epiſtle we ſhould find theſe Words to precede. Valeſ.

(t) Alexander Biſhop of Jeruſalem was a very eloquent Man, and without doubt wrote this Epiſtle himſelf, which makes him uſe the firſt Perſon here: But the Letter was writ both in his name, and in the Biſhop of Cæſarea's. Valeſ.

(u) This Synnada is a very noted City of Phrygia, and as Stephanus, in his B. De Urbibus writes, it ought to be written with a double (n) though ſome write it with a ſingle one, it is derived from συνναίω, cohabito, to dwell together, becauſe many flock'd from Macedonia to dwell together there, from whence it was firſt called Συνναία, but was corrupted by the interpoſition of (δ.). There is alſo ſome old pieces of Caracalla's Coin, with this Inſcription, CYNNAΔEΩN, ΔΩPIEΩN IΩNΩN. Hence it appears theſe Synnadenſes were Doricks mix'd with Ionians, for they were originally Macedonians, and therefore Doricks, tho' they liv'd in the midſt of Ionia. Valeſ.

(x) Origen was about 30 years old when he came into Paleſtine: For according to our Euſebius's account in this place, he went thither about the end of Antoninus Caracalla's Reign. Valeſ.

CHAP. XX.

What Books are now extant of ſuch as wrote in theſe Times.

AT this time flouriſh'd many learned Eccleſiaſtick Perſons, whoſe Epiſtles, which they wrote to one another 'tis an eaſie thing to meet with, being preſerv'd to this preſent. For they have been kept even in our Age in the Library of the City Ælia, which was built by Alexander, who preſided over the Church which is there: Out of this Library we our ſelves have gather'd together matter for this Subject now in hand. Beryllus, Biſhop of Boſtra in Arabia, being one of them, left, together with his Epiſtles and Commentaries, (a) Several other Monuments of his Polite Ingenie. In like manner did (b) Hippolitus, who preſided over another Church ſomewhere; there came alſo to our hands a Diſputation attempted by one (c) Caius, a moſt eloquent Man, at Rome in the times of Zephyrinus, againſt Proclus who was a Defender of the Cataphrygian Hereſie. In which Diſpute, he ſilencing the Adverſaries Raſhneſs and Boldneſs in compoſing new Scriptures, mentions only thirteen Epiſtles of the Divine Apoſtle [Paul,] not accounting that to the Hebrews amongſt the reſt: Indeed, even till this preſent 'tis thought by ſome of the Romans, that that Epiſtle was not written by this Apoſtle.

Antoninus

'Tis true, the Ancients called φιλοκαλίας, things ſelected, or excerptions out of any Author, ſuch are Origen's Philocaliæ: Such alſo are Apuleius's libri floridorum. But this ſignification does not well agree with this place; becauſe Euſebius does not mention that Beryllus ſelected them out of any Books. And likewiſe he adds Διαφόρες Several. And 'tis not likely that Beryllus ſhould compoſe ſeveral Books upon ſo ſlight an Argument: Therefore 'tis better to tranſlate it (as we have done) Elegantis ingenii monumenta, i. e. Monuments of his Polite Ingenie. He ſeems to mean Hymns and Poems. And in this ſenſe, Phrynicus uſes this word in his Epiſtle to Menodorus. Valeſ.

(b) Georgius Syncellus, Nicephorus and others, affirm, that this Hippolytus was Biſhop of Portua: Theodoret who quotes him much, terms him a Martyr, and a Biſhop, but does not mention where: Gelaſius, in his Book, De Duabus Naturis, ſtiles him a Martyr, and calls him Biſhop of the Metropolis of Arabia. Valeſ.

(c) This Sect of the Cataphrygæ was divided into two parts; the leader of one part of them was Proclus, and over the other Parties Æſchines was their chief, as Tertullian atteſts. Thoſe which adher'd to Proclus were called οἱ κατὰ Πρόκλον, or Proclus's Men; as Tertullian again witneſſes. Hence we may ſafely conclude, that Proclus was a Grecian. Beſides, Caius wrote againſt this Proclus in Greek: Wherefore we muſt not aſſent to Baronius, who ſays that this Proclus and Proculus the African, who as Tertullian ſays wrote againſt the Valentinians, were one and the ſame Perſon. Now if theſe were one and the ſame, why ſhould Tertullian call one of them Proculus a Latin name, and the other Πρόκλος in Greek: Concerning Caius's Book againſt Proclus, ſee Photius's Biblioth. But Theodoret inſtead of Πρόκλος writes Πάτροκλος, this Book of Proclus was a Dialogue in which Proclus was brought in defending Montanus's Prophecy. See Third Book of this Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, Chap. 31. Valeſ.

(d) Euſebius before in the 3d Book, and 3d Chapter, diſputing about Paul's Epiſtles, ſays that ſome rejected the Epiſtle to the Hebrews as falſe, averring that the Church of Rome queſtion'd the Authority of that Epiſtle. Amongſt the Roman Authors, who doubted the Authority of this Epiſtle, Hippolytus the afore-named Biſhop of Portua may be reckoned; for he in his Book againſt Hereſies, has affirmed, That the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, is not Paul's the Apoſtles. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXI.

What Biſhops were eminent in thoſe Times.

BUT now Macrinus ſucceeded Antoninus after he had reign'd ſeven Years and ſix Months, who having continued [Emperor] about a Year, another Antoninus again aſſumes the Roman Empire. In the firſt Year of his Reign Zephyrinus Biſhop of Rome departed this life, having held that [Epiſcopal] Charge eighteen Years compleat. After him Calliſtus preſides in the Biſhoprick. He having ſurvived five years, leaves the [care of the] Church to Urbanus. After this Alexander the Emperor ſucceeds in the Roman Empire, Antoninus having reigned only four Years. At this time Philetus ſucceeded Aſclepiades in the Church of Antioch. Now [Alexander] the Emperor's Mother, whoſe name was Mamæa, being a moſt

Alexander

Alexander most pious Woman, and religious in her Conversation, (Origen's fame being now every-where so spread abroad, that it came even to her ears,) was mightily desirous to see the Man, and to make tryal of his Knowledge in Divine Matters, which was so admired by all Men: She therefore making her abode at Antioch, sends a military Guard for him: When he had spent some time with her, and had demonstrated to her most things which tend to the Glory of God, and the Power of the Divine Doctrine, he hastned to his wonted Charge.

CHAP. XXII.

How many of Hippolitus's Works are come to our hands.

AT this time also Hippolytus, amongst many other Works of his, compiled a Book also (a) concerning Easter. In which having explain'd the Series of Times, and set forth a Canon of sixteen Years, concerning Easter, he determines his Computation at the first Year of Alexander the Emperor. Now the rest of his Works, which came to our hands are these: Upon the six Days Work. Upon those things (b) which follow'd upon the six Days Work. Against Marcion. (c) Upon the Canticles. Upon some Chapters of Ezekiel. Concerning Easter. (d) Against all Heresies. And many more which you may find preserv'd amongst many Men.

(a) Hippolytus's Canon Paschalis is extant till this day, which Joseph Scaliger has inserted into his B. De Emendatione temporum. And Ægidius Bucherius translated it into Latin, but neither of them takes notice that this Canon is only a part of the Book which he wrote Concerning Easter. And through his inadvertency Scaliger blames this place of Eusebius, and says, that Hippolytus's Canon does not end at the first year of Alexander's Reign, but begins there; which is really true: But Eusebius does not speak concerning the Canon which Hippolytus annex'd to his Books, but concerning the Book it self, which ends at the first year of Alexander the Emperor's Reign. Vales.

(b) He means the second Chapter of Genesis, as Scaliger Notes. Where also he reproves Hieronymus as if he had been ignorant of it, but undeservedly: For when Hieronymus says he wrote upon Genesis, he means as well his Books on the Hexameron, as those on the Post-Hexameron. Vales.

(c) Theodoret in his Book call'd Eranistes quotes this Book of Hippolytus. Vales.

(d) Concerning this Book of Hippolytus's, see Photii Biblioth. Chap. 121. This Book was written against 32 Heresies; the first of which was the Dosithean, the last the Noetian Heresie. Which Heresies Irenæus having confuted in his Sermons, Hippolytus his Scholar wrote an Epitome thereof. Stephanus Gobarus has often quoted this piece of Hippolytus's, as appears from his 7, 10, and 13. Chap. B. 2. Vales.

CHAP. XXIII.

Concerning Origen's Studiousness, and how he was honour'd with the Dignity of Priesthood.

(a) Here the Maz. MS. and that most excellent Copy of Rufinus which we have often quoted, begin this Chap. 23. But Rufinus's Book instead of Chap. 23. calls it the 20. Hieronymus takes these words [ἐξ ἐκείνου] in a bad sense, as if Origen had set himself to write in Emulation of Hippolytus; and refers ἐξ ἐκείνου to Hippolytus: Which is not so, for we must understand χρόνου, which thing is common, and so the sense is plain, to wit, from this time. Vales.

(a) ABout this time was the beginning of Origen's writing Commentaries upon the Holy Scriptures; Ambrosius chiefly inciting him to it by innumerable Instigations, not with Supplications and bare Words only, but also with most plentiful Supplies of all things necessary: For there were always by him when he dictated, more in number than seven Notaries, which at set times chang'd Courses with one another. Neither was there a less number of them which wrote Books fair, together with Girls who had been instructed to write neatly and handsomely. To all these Ambrosius liberally afforded a sufficient supply of all things necessary. And indeed he convey'd into Origen an unspeakable alacrity, in his study and labour about the Divine Oracles. By which means chiefly he induc'd him to write Commentaries: Whilst these things were in this posture, Pontianus succeeds Urbanus, who had been Bishop of Rome eight years: And Zebinus [succeeds] Philetus in the Bishoprick of Antioch. At which time, (the Necessity of the (b) Church's Affairs constraining him) Origen made a journey through Palestine into Greece; and received the Order of Priesthood at Cæsarea, by the Imposition of the Hands of the Bishops there. But what Combustions were hereupon rais'd concerning him, and what (c) Decrees were made by the Prelates of the Churches upon these Commotions: And whatever else he did, continuing to be of great esteem, contributing to the Preaching of the Divine Word. [These things] requiring a distinct Volume, we have in some measure declared in the second Book of our Apology, which we wrote in defence of him.

Alexander

(b) Rufinus his version may here well serve instead of a Comment upon this place who has rendred it thus, He was intreated by the Churches of Achaia to come thither to convince Hereticks, who grew strong in those Parts. So also says Hieronymus in his Catalogue. Vales.

(c) Eusebius ought here to have recited the Decrees of the Bishops against Origen, as being matter most accommodate to an Ecclesiastick History; and might better have omitted other things concerning him, and have inserted these, as most pertinent: But we ought not to blame Eusebius for this omission here, because it had been superfluous, having before declared them in his second Book De Defensione Origenis: Which Books some Men, through their immoderate hatred to Origen, envied us the use of. There is nothing of Eusebius, and Pamphilus the Martyr's Apologia Origenis extant, except some Fragments which Photius preserv'd as it were from Shipwreck. He, in his Biblioth. chap. 118. says that there were two Synods summon'd against Origen; the first decreed that Origen should be banish'd out of the Church of Alexandria, but did not divest him of his Priesthood: The second, which was assembled by Demetrius, consisting of Egyptian Bishops, degraded Origen from the Office of a Priest, to which Decree almost all the Bishops of the World subscribed, as Hieronymus says, whose words Rufinus relates in two Apolog. Hieronymus also adds that he was not only deposed, but also excommunicated by Demetrius. But this Decree of Demetrius's was ineffectual for two reasons; first, because he issued it out against him in his absence, without any legal Citation; and secondly, because this Sentence was not confirmed by the Authority of many Bishops, particularly not by the Bishop of Rome. Wherefore Origen still retain'd his Priest's Office, and continued Preaching in the Church, as Eusebius witnesses in this Book, and Pamphilus in his first Book Apologiæ Origenis. Vales.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning the Expositions he made at Alexandria.

BUT 'twas necessary for us to have annex'd these (a) to the things aforemention'd; for in his sixth Book of his Expositions upon John's [Gospel] he declares he composed those five first Books while he yet lived at Alexandria. But only (b) twenty two Books of his Works upon that Gospel are come to our hands. In his ninth Book also upon Genesis (for there are twelve in all) he manifests that he did not only write those first eight Books at Alexandria, but also those Comments upon the twenty five first Psalms: And moreover those Comments upon the Lamentations, five Books of which came to our hands. In which Books there is some mention of his Books

(a) He means, he ought to have adjoyn'd these things to what he has said in his second Book of his Apology. Vales.

(b) There were thirty four Books of Origen's Expositions upon John, as Hieronymus says; but only nine are now remaining, which are still divided into thirty four. Vales.

Alexander upon the (c) Reſurrection: Thoſe alſo are two Volumes. Indeed he alſo wrote his Books De Principius, before his removal from Alexandria. He alſo compoſed thoſe Books entitled (d) Stromata, which are ten in number, in that City in the Reign of Alexander, as his (e) Annotations written with his own Hand, and prefix'd before thoſe Books do manifeſt.

(c) Hieronymus in his Apology makes this ſhort Catalogue of Origen's Works: Thirteen Books upon Geneſis, two Books of Myſtical Homilies: Excerptions upon Exodus: Excerptions upon Leviticus: Alſo Monobiblia: Four Books De Principiis: Two Books concerning the Reſurrection; and two other Dialogues concerning the Reſurrection. Methodius the Biſhop wrote an excellent Book of the Reſurrection, againſt Origen's Books upon the ſame ſubject, as Hieronymus in his Book De Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis, and Maximus in his Scholia upon Dionyſius's Eccleſiaſtick Hierarchy do teſtifie: There are excellent fragments of this Methodius's book of the Reſurrection, in Epiphanius againſt the Origeniſts, and in Photius's Biblioth. And I think 'tis for no other reaſon, that Euſebius never mentions this Methodius, (whereas he mentions ſeveral Eccleſiaſtick Writers far inferior to him,) but this, that he wrote againſt Origen: Euſebius, being a very great favourer of Origen, could not endure this Man's name in his Hiſtory, becauſe he was not his friend. Valeſ.

(d) Hieronymus in his Epiſtle to Magnus the Roman Orator, ſays Origen wrote theſe ten books in imitation of Clemens; for the Argument of theſe books and Clemens's afore-mentioned are alike. Hierom alſo cites a piece of theſe Books in his Apology againſt Ruſinus, not far from the beginning. Valeſ.

(e) Tranſlators did not underſtand what theſe ὁλόγραφοι ἐπισημειώσεις were: ὁλόγραφοι in this place is the ſame as ἰδιόγραφοι, written with his own hand. The Lawyers call a Will ὁλόγραφον, which is written with the Teſtator's own hand, and not only confirm'd by his ſubſcription. So Euſebius here calls thoſe Notes ὁλόγραφοι which were written with Origen's own hand, and either prefix'd or annexed to every Tome. For 'twas uſual for Authors to note ſomething with their own Hands either at the beginning, or end of their Books. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXV.

After what manner Origen has mentioned the Books of the Old and New Teſtament.

BUT in his Explication of the Firſt Pſalm, he has exhibited a Catalogue of the Holy Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, writing on this manner word for word. 'We muſt underſtand that, as the Hebrew Traditions ſay, there are (b) twenty two Books of the Old Teſtament; juſt ſo many in number as they have Letters." A little after he adds, ſaying; 'Theſe are the twenty two Books according to the Hebrews. That which we give the Title of Geneſis to, is by the Hebrews, from the beginning of the Book entitled Bereſith, that is, in the beginning. Exodus, Velleſmoth, that is, theſe are names. Leviticus, Vaicra, that is, and he hath called. Numbers the Hebrews call (c) Hammiſphecodim. Deuteronomy, Helle-haddabarim, that is, theſe are the words. Jeſus the Son of Nave, [in Hebrew] Jehoſue, Ben Nun. Judges, Ruth, are by them comprehended in one Book, and call'd Sophetim. The Firſt and Second of Kings, among them one Book, termed Samuel, that is, called of God. The Third and Fourth of Kings, amongſt the Hebrews one Book, called Vammelech David, that is, the Kingdom of David. The First and Second Book of Chronicles, in one Volume, call'd Dibre Hajamim, that is, The words of Days. Eſdras the Firſt and Second Book, by them made one Book, called Eſra, that is, A helper. The Book of Pſalms, Sepher Tehillim [in Hebrew.] Solomon's Proverbs, in Hebrew, Miſloth. Eccleſiaſtes, Coheleth. (d) The Song of Songs, Sirhaſirim. (e) Eſaias, Ieſaïa: Hierimas with his Lamentations, and his Epiſtle, all in one Book, called Jermia. Daniel, [the Hebrews alſo call] Daniel. Ezechiel, Jeezchel, Job, Job, Eſter, Eſter alſo among the Hebrews. Beſides theſe there are (but not of their number) the Maccabees, which are entitled Sarbet Surbane-el.' Theſe Origen has ſet forth in the foreſaid Work. But in the firſt Book of his Comments upon Matthew's Goſpel, obſerving the Canon of the Church, he atteſts there are only four Goſpels, in theſe words: 'As I (f) have underſtood by Tradition, there are four Goſpels, which, and only which, are to be allow'd without contradiction by the Church of God under Heaven. As for the firſt, 'twas written by one Matthew, formerly a Publican, but afterwards an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt; he publiſh'd it, being written in Hebrew for the ſake of thoſe Jews who believed. The ſecond is Mark's Goſpel; who wrote it as Peter expounded to him; whom alſo he confeſſes to be his Son, in his Catholick Epiſtle, and in theſe words, (g) The Church which is at Babylon elected together with you ſaluteth you, and ſo doth Marcus my Son. And the third is the Goſpel according to St. Luke, which is commended by Paul; he wrote it for the ſake of the Heathens. Laſtly, St. John's Goſpel. And the ſame Writer in the (h) fifth Book of his Expoſitions upon John has theſe words concerning the Apoſtle's Epiſtles. Paul being made a fit Miniſter of the New Teſtament, not in the Letter, but in the Spirit, he who (i) fully preach'd the Goſpel from Jeruſalem round about to Illyricum, wrote not to all thoſe Churches which he taught, but to thoſe to whom he wrote he ſent [Epiſtles that contained] but a few Verſes. But Peter (k) on whom the Church of Chriſt was build-

(a) This whole quotation is to be ſeen in Origen's Philocalia; chap. 3. but that place of the Philocalia muſt be corrected by this, for there εἴκοσιν in ſtead of εἴκοσι is read. And this is the common miſtake of all Editions that they writ εἴκοσιν, when the Word following begins with a Vowel. But in all good Copies εἴκοσι is written, although a Vowel follow. Valeſ.

(b) Victorinus upon the Apocalyps ſays, there are twenty four Books of the Old Teſtament; twenty two you may find in Theodotus his Excerptions. Some reckoned twenty two, ſome twenty four Books of the Old Teſtament: Hence aroſe this different account, ſaith Hieronymus, becauſe ſome reckoned the book of Ruth, and that of the Lamentations of Jeremiah in the Catalogue of Scriptures apart by themſelves. Others, as Hilarius ſays, added Tobius, and Judith to make 24 books of the Old Teſtament; Epiphanius ſays, that ſome reckoned up twenty ſeven books of the Old Teſtament. Valeſ.

(c) I know not what Copy Robert Stephens follows, who here reads it ἀμμιωαεὶμ ἢ πακτημ. For in the King's, the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. ἀμμισφεχωδείμ, is the reading. Valeſ.

(d) Some Books add this clauſe, ἃ γέ ὡς ἐπολαμβάνουσί τινες ἄσματα ἀσμάτων, not as ſome think the Song of Songs. This we have omitted in our Edition, but 'tis in the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. and alſo in the King's Copy, and in Ruſinus's Tranſlation of this place. Valeſ.

(e) In this Catalogue the Book of the twelve minor Prophets is left out. Hence it comes to paſs that although Origen promiſes to reckon up twenty two Books, we can find but one and twenty. In Ruſinus's Verſion this Book is reckoned immediately after the Canticles. So alſo Hilarius and Cyrill of Jeruſalem do reckon them. The Books of the Holy Scripture are recounted here in a different order to Epiphanius, Hieronymus, and Melito's reckoning of them: But Hilarius in his Prologue to his Commentaries upon the Pſalms, agrees all along with Origen; and no wonder, for that Prologue is almoſt all of it a Tranſlation of Origen's Comments upon the Pſalms. Valeſ.

(f) Theſe are Origen's own words, and ſo Ruſinus, Langus and Muſculus tranſlated them: Only Chriſtophorſon thought they are Euſebius's own words: To whom we cannot conſent, although in the Maz. and Med. MSS. after the Word [μαθῶν] there is a final diſtinction; but in the King's Copy the whole Clauſe is continued without any diſtinction. Moreover, beſides this place quoted by Euſebius, Origen alſo in another place (that is in the beginning of his Comments upon Luke) ſays there were four Goſpels only which were allowed by the Catholick Church. Valeſ.

(g) 1 Pet. 5. 13.

(h) This place of Origen, which Euſebius here quotes, is in the Preface to the fifth Book of his Expoſitions upon John; the greateſt part of this Preface is extant in the fifth Chapter of his Philocaliæ. Therefore this place here quoted by Euſebius muſt be joyned to that fragment. In that Preface Origen raiſes this diſpute, whether many Books are to be written concerning Sacred things? And he proves it from Eccleſiaſtes 12. 12. Alſo he brings for proof the Examples of Holy Men, Prophets and Apoſtles, who wrote very little. But theſe Examples the Collector of the Philocaliæ on ſet purpoſe omitted, as he himſelf confeſſes. Valeſ.

'ded, against which the Gates of Hell shall not 'prevail, left but one Epistle which is acknow-'ledged to be his. But let us grant that the Se-'cond is his too, for it is question'd whether it 'be his or not. But what must we say of John, '(l) he who lay in Christ's Bosom? He left be-'hind him but one Gospel, [though] he profes-'ses he could have written (m) so many Books, 'as the World could not have contain'd. He al-'so wrote the Revelation: Being commanded to 'be silent, (n) and not to write the voices of the 'Seven Thunders. He also left to Posterity a 'very short Epistle. But let us grant that the 'second and third were his: For all Men do not 'allow them to be genuine: Both of them do 'not contain above an hundred Verses." Besides, he discourses thus concerning the Epistle to the Hebrews in his Homilies upon that Epistle. 'For the 'Stile of that Writing, entitled The Epistle [to the 'Hebrews, has nothing of that plain homeliness 'of the Apostle [Paul,] who confesses himself to 'be unlearned in his Speech, that is, in his man-'ner of expression. But this Epistle, as to the 'composition of the Stile, savours much of the 'Grecian Eloquence; this every one will confess 'who knows how to judge of Stiles which are 'different. Again, the Sentences of this Epistle 'are admirable, and nothing inferior to those 'Books which are acknowledged to be Apostol-'lick: And this every one will assent to as true, 'who gives attention to the Reading of the A-'postles Writings" After the interposition of some words, Origen adds these, saying: (o) 'This 'is my Opinion, that the Sentences are the Sen-'tences of an Apostle; but the Phrase and Com-'position is some one's else, who committed to 'writing the Words of the Apostle, and as it 'were illustrated with Explications the Words of 'his Master. If any Church therefore accounts 'this to be Paul's Epistle, let it be commended 'even for so doing: For the Ancients did not in-'considerately declare it to be Paul's Epistle. But 'God alone truly knows who wrote this Epistle. 'But of those written Records which are come 'to our hands, some ascribe the writing of this 'Epistle to Clemens, who was Bishop of Rome; 'others to Luke, who wrote the Gospel, and the 'Acts. But thus far concerning this."

(o) Απομνημονευειν, signifies to remember, to repeat a thing by heart, as Scholars do, who repeat their Master's Dictates; σχολιογραφειν, signifies to illustrate, or make a thing plain by short Scholia's, or Explications; that is, to explain obscure words, by other words more common and known. The Translators, and especially Christophorson, seem by their Versions not to have understood this Passage. Origen says, that the Sentences of the Epistle to the Hebrews, are the Apostle's own; but the Words and Composition of the whole Epistle are some-body's else, who recorded the Sayings of the Apostle, and, like a Scholiast, explain'd them more elegantly. See Chap. 18. Book 4. Note (b.) Vales.

CHAP. XXVI.

How Heraclas succeeded in the Bishoprick of Alexdria.

(a) In the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil. MSS. and in Nicephorus, in stead of [δέκατον, the Tenth] it is δωδέκατον, the Twelfth.] In Eusebius's Chronicon this Remove of Origen from Alexandria to Cæsarea is, in some Copies, placed on the 12 Year of Alexander, as Pontacus attests. Eusebius does strangely disagree from himself, who in his Chronicon records this Removal of Origen a year, or two years after the death of Demetrius. But here he says Origen removed from Alexandria a little before Demetrius died. This last account I suppose to be truest. For after Demetrius's death, Origen had no reason to leave Alexandria; especially when Heraclas, one of Origen's Scholars succeeded Demetrius. Besides, Eusebius relates in this Chapter, that when Origen departed from Alexandria, he left his Catechetick Office to Heraclas. Whence it appears, that Origen departed from Alexandria a little before Demetrius pronounc'd the Sentence of Excommunication against him. For after that Sentence he could not hold his Office of Catechist in the Church of Alexandria. Baronius therefore has done well in amending Eusebius's Chronicon, in placing Origen's departure from Alexandria on the Tenth Year of Alexander's Reign, and the Death of Demetrius on the year following. But he mistakes in saying Demetrius pronounc'd the Sentence of Excommunication against Origen a year before he left Alexandria; which we have evidently refuted. For since Origen kept his Office of Catechist till such time as he resign'd it to Heraclas at his departure, 'tis plain he departed before the Sentence of Excommunication was pronounc'd against him. Moreover, when Origen understood he was Excommunicated by Demetrius in the Synod of the Bishops, he wrote a Letter to his Friends at Alexandria, in which he inveighs against Demetrius and the rest of the Bishops. Jerome (in Book 2. Advers. Rufin.) quotes part of this Letter. Further, Origen had once before retired to Cæsarea, in the times of Antoninus Caracalla; but was in a short time honourably recalled by Demetrius to Alexandria, as was before related. But afterwards, when he went into Achaia, passing through Cæsarea-Palestine, he was there Ordained Presbyter. Vales.

sarea, and left the care of his Catechetick School to (b) Heraclas: And not long after died Demetrius, the Bishop of the Church of Alexandria, having continued in that Office forty three years compleat: Heraclas succeeded him. At this time Firmilianus, Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia was very famous.

(b) Heraclas, as 'tis before related Ch. 15. was Origen's Assistant only: but after his departure, he was Catechist. Vales.

CHAP. XXVII.

How the Bishops had him in admiration.

*HE had so great an esteem for Origen, that he both invited him into the Countries of his Province for the good of the Churches; and also at another time went into Judea to visit him, and to stay some time with him, to improve himself in the knowledge of Divine matters. Besides, Alexander Bishop of Jerusalem, and Theoctistus Bishop of Cæsarea, at all times (as one may say,) were attentive to him, as if he had been their Master, and permitted only him to expound the Holy Scriptures, and to perform all other things appertaining to Ecclesiastical Doctrine.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Concerning the Persecution under Maximinus.

Maximinus.

MOreover, Maximinus Cæsar succeeded Alexander the Roman Emperor, after he had reign'd thirteen years. He, because of his hatred to Alexander's Family, which consisted of many Believers, rais'd a Persecution, and gave command that only the Prelates of the Churches should be slain, as the Authors of the Preaching of the Gospel. And at that time Origen composed his Book concerning Martyrdom, which he dedicated to Ambrosius, and Protoctetus, a Presbyter of the Church of Cæsarea; because no trivial Peril and Afflictions seiz'd on them both during the times of this Persecution. Fame records the illustrious Eminency of these Men for their Confession [of the Christian Faith,] (a) when Maximinus had not reign'd above three years. Origen remarks the time of this Persecution, both in the twenty second Book of his Expositions upon John, and in several of his Epistles.

(a) Christophorson did not all understand the meaning of this place, for he thinks that Ambrosius, and Protoctetus were afflicted for the Name of Christ about the end of Maximinus's Reign: But Eusebius does not say so; he only means thus much, that the Persecution continued all Maximinus's Reign, but that his Days were shortned, as the Scripture pture ſays of Antichriſt. Moreover, this Perſecution begun when Maximin was Emperor, (after a long continued Peace in the Church,) becauſe of frequent and moſt dreadful Earthquakes, which the Heathens, as they uſually did, imputed to the Chriſtians. Firmilianus in his Epiſtle to Cyprian atteſts this: See Baronius at the Year of Chriſt 237. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXIX.

Concerning Fabian, how unexpectedly he was elected by God Biſhop of Rome.

Gordianus GOrdianus having ſucceeded Maximinus in the Roman Empire, Anteros ſucceeds Pontianus, who had been Biſhop for the Church of Rome ſix Years. And Fabian ſucceeds him after he had perform'd the Office for a Month. They report that after the death of Anteros, Fabian, together with ſome other of his Acquaintance, came out of the Country to Rome to ſojourn there: Where he unexpectedly came to be elected Biſhop, through the Divine and Celeſtial Grace. For when all the Brethren were aſſembled together in the Church, in order to the Election of one who ſhould ſucceed in the Biſhoprick, and many of them had Intentions of [Electing] ſeveral eminent and worthy Men, Fabian being there preſent, no one ſo much as thought of him: But on a ſudden, as they report, a Dove came flying from above, and ſat upon his Head, which ſeem'd to be a repreſentation of the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon our Saviour in the ſhape of a Dove: Upon which all the People, being at the ſame time moved as it were by the Divine Spirit, cry'd out with all imaginable alacrity and one common conſent, (a) He is worthy: And without any delay they took him, and ſet him in the Biſhop's-Chair. At that time alſo Zebinus the Biſhop of Antioch dying, Babylas ſucceeded in the Preſidency. Heraclas alſo takes upon him the [Epiſcopal] charge of the Church at Alexandria, after Demetrius (b) had executed that Office for forty three years. And Dionyſius ſucceeds in the Catechetick School there, who alſo was one of Origen's Scholars.

(a) This was the common Acclamation at the Election of Biſhops, of which we have many Examples in Philoſtorgius, in his Tenth Chapter of the Ninth Book. And in the Relation of what things were done at Eradius's Election, (recorded in Auguſtine's Epiſtles) theſe Acclamations are read, which were then uſed: They cry'd out twenty times, Dignus & juſtus eſt, He is worthy and juſt; and five times Bene meritus, bene dignus eſt, He is very deſerving, he is very worthy. Valeſ.

(b) The Med. Maz. and Fuk. MSS. add theſe words, had executed that Office for forty three years: But the King's MS. and Ruſinus own them not. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXX.

Who were Origen's Scholars.

WHilſt Origen executed his accuſtom'd Duty at Cæſarea, many, not only Natives of that Country, but alſo infinite others from places moſt remote, forſaking their own Countries, reſorted to him to be his Diſciples. The moſt eminent of them, we underſtand, were Theodorus, (who was alſo called Gregorius, one of the moſt famous Biſhops in our Age,) and his Brother Athenodorus. He by perſwaſion induced them (being too much addicted to the love of the (a) Roman and Greek Learning, having infuſed into them a love of Philoſophy,) to exchange their former Studies, for the Study of Divinity: When they had convers'd with him five years compleat, they made ſo great an improvement [of their Knowledge] in the Divine Scriptures, that while they were both as yet young, they were judg'd worthy of the Government of the Churches in Pontus. Gordianus

(a) Euſebius means by the Roman Learning, the Civil Law, which Gregory learn'd at the City Berytus, at that time when Origen perſwaded him to nobler Studies, as he, in his Oration to Origen, teſtifies: The ſame thing alſo Origen atteſts in his Epiſtle to Gregory, Chap. 13. of his Philocal. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXI.

Concerning Africanus.

AT this time Africanus, (a) the Author of the Books entitled Ceſti, was very famous; there is extant an Epiſtle of his written to Origen, in which he ſuſpects the Hiſtory of Suſanna in Daniel, to be ſpurious and fictitious. Origen very fully anſwers this Epiſtle. There alſo came to our hands five Books of this ſame Africanus's Annals, written with great care and accuracy. In which Books he ſays he took a Journey to Alexandria, becauſe of the great fame of Heraclas; who, as we before ſignified, was intruſted with the care of the Church there for his eminent knowledge in Philoſophy, and other Heathen Learning. There is alſo extant another Epiſtle of this ſame Africanus's to Ariſtides, concerning the diſagreement which is thought to be betwixt Matthew and Luke, in the relation of Chriſt's Genealogy. In which he manifeſtly demonſtrates the conſent of the Evangeliſts, out of an Hiſtory which came to his hands; which [Epiſtle] we alſo took, and placed it in the firſt * Book of this Work in hand, being its proper place.

(a) I ſuppoſe that theſe words (viz.) the Author of the Books entitled Ceſti ought to be raz'd out, for the Clauſe is neither in Ruſinus's Verſion, nor in Hieronymus. Beſides, it ſeems ridiculous, when he here ſpeaks of an Eccleſiaſtick Writer, to mention thoſe Books firſt, which contain'd nothing elſe, but certain Medicines made up of Herbs, Metals, Magick Figures, Charms, and the like: For, as Suidas witneſſes, theſe Ceſti contain nothing elſe, and have their Title from Venus's Ceſtus, or Girdle, becauſe they treat of Love-affairs. Beſides, this Africanus, the Author of theſe Ceſti, ſeems to be a diſtinct Perſon from Africanus the Chronologer, whom Euſebius mentions, for, as Suidas ſays, this Author of the Ceſti was a Libyan by birth, and was called Σέξτος. But Scaliger in his Animadverſions upon Euſebius calls him Sextus Africanus. But perhaps that Σέξτος in Suidas ought to be made Κέστος. And ſo he may be called Africanus Ceſtus from the title of his Books, even as Clemens was called Stromateus. But this Africanus the Chronologer was born in Paleſtine, ſays Euſebius's Chronicle; and in a Town call'd Emmaus, and his name was Julius Africanus: This Africanus was a Chriſtian, but the other was a Heathen, as appears by his Books. There was alſo another Julius Africanus, who wrote a Book De Apparatu Bellico; which Book in the Manuſcript-Copy of the King's Library has the title of Κέστοι, and under that title it is quoted by Politianus in his Miſcellanies. The Grecians indeed were proud in prefixing Titles before their Books, they ſeem therefore to call thoſe Books Ceſti, which were filled with knowledge of divers kinds, like the Ceſtus, which amongſt the Grecians ſignifies a Girdle wrought of divers colours: For that ſame reaſon were Clemens's Books called Stromata. CHAP. XXXII.

What Expoſitions Origen wrote at Cæſarea in Paleſtine.

ABout this time Origen wrote his [Comments] upon Eſaias, and thoſe upon Ezekiel at the ſame time, of which Books there came to our hands thirty five Volumes upon the third part of Eſaias, unto the Viſion of the four-footed Beaſts in the Wilderneſs: And twenty five Volumes upon Ezekiel, which were all he wrote upon the whole Prophet: Making his abode at that time at Athens, he finiſh'd his Commentaries upon Ezekiel. He alſo begun his Comments upon the Canticles, and there proceeded in them to the fifth Book: But but he afterwards returned to Cæsarea, and there finish'd them, being ten Books in number. But what necessity is there at present to write an exact Catalogue of this Man's Works, which requires a Work itself; which we have also written in our (a) History of Pamphilus's Life, the blessed (b) Martyr of our Times. In which, endeavouring to prove how great Pamphilus's care and love towards sacred Learning was, we have publish'd the Catalogues of Origen's Works, and of several other Ecclesiastick Writers which he collected. From whence, he that is desirous, may have a full information concerning all the Monuments of Origen's Labours which came to our hands. But now we must proceed to the subsequent Series of our History.

(a) Eusebius wrote three most elegant Books concerning Pamphilus the Martyr's Life, as Hieronymus witnesseth in his first Apology against Rufinus; where he also quotes a piece of that Work out of the third Book; he also mentions those Books in his Epistle to Marcella; 'twas in Eusebius's third Book De Vitâ Pamphili, wherein he wrote a Catalogue of Origen's Works. Vales.

(b) The Med. and Fuk. MSS. read it ἱερομάρτυρ☩, all in one word, not ἱερῶ μάρτυρ☩. The Greeks call those ἱερομάρτυρες who were both Martyrs, and Priests: Therefore Pamphilus being a Presbyter, and a Martyr, may well be styl'd ἱερομάρτυς. The Greeks in their Menologies have three sorts of Martyrs, some they call μεγαλομάρτυρες, i.e. great Martyrs: Some ὁσιομάρτυρες, i.e. holy Martyrs; others ἱερομάρτυρες, that is, the Bishops, or sometimes Presbyters who suffer'd Martyrdom: All the rest they call μάρτυρες, barely Martyrs: There is also another title yet, namely, πρωτομάρτυρες; but this is only proper to Stephen, and Thecla, he being the first of Men, and she the first of Women which were crown'd with Martyrdom. Here we may see what decency the Greeks use in comparison of the Latines; they give Epithets to their Saints, with which, as with titles they are honour'd, distinguished from other Men. Vales.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Concerning the Error of Beryllus.

Beryllus, who was mention'd a little before, Bishop of Bostra in Arabia, subverting the Ecclesiastick Canon, endeavour'd to introduce some new Doctrines alienating from the Faith; daring to affirm that our Lord and Saviour, before his * coming amongst Men, (a) had no proper different Subsistence: Neither any Godhead of his own, but only the Deity of the Father residing in him. Many Disputes and Conferences having been held by the Bishops against this Man about that Point, amongst the rest Origen was called: At first he enters into a friendly Discourse with the Man, that he might discover what his Opinion was; which when he understood by his Discourse, he reprehended him being not Orthodox; and having convinced him by Arguments and Demonstrations, he took him as it were (b) by the hand, and set him into the way of the true Doctrine, and reinstated him in his former sound Opinion. There are also written Monuments extant to this day both of Beryllus, and also of the Synod which was convened upon his account, which contain Origen's Questions proposed against him, and the Disputes holden in his Church, and all that was done at that time. Infinite other Memoirs the Ancients of our Times have deliver'd to Posterity concerning Origen: Which I intend to omit, as not pertinent to this present Subject; but what things concerning him are necessary to be known, may be read at large in that (c) Apology for him which was written by me, and Pamphilus the Holy Martyr of our times: Which we, Fellow-Labourers, carefully and joyntly composed upon the account of some of his quarrelsome Accusers.

Gordianus.

(c) Hieronymus in his Catalogue, and also in his first Apology against Rufinus, says, Eusebius wrote six Books in defence of Origen. Rufinus translated the first of these Books, and put it out under the name of Pamphilus the Martyr; for which he is most severely reprov'd by Hieronymus, for that he set forth a Book of Eusebius's, (whom Jerome always calls an Heretick) under the name of Pamphilus the Martyr. But Rufinus may make answer for himself from these words of Eusebius, who says that that Apology was written by both of them. Which also Photius confirms with his Testimony; Photius's Biblioth. Chap. 120. From this Book, as well as from Eusebius's own Words, we may gather, that Origen had many Enemies and Opposers, because of the newness of his Opinions. The chiefest of them was Methodius, concerning whom, and the reason why he is not mentioned by Eusebius in his History, see Book 6. Chap. 24. Note (c.) Vales.

* That is, before his Incarnation.

(a) This Phrase ἰδίας ὑπεροχῆς, is nothing else but difference of subsistence, which may appear by the words of Gregorius Nyssenus in his Book De Differentiâ Subsistentiæ, & Essentiæ. Beryllus seems to take οὐσία to signifie a Person, after the manner of his times, which confounded these two terms, ὑπόστασις, and οὐσία. Concerning the true signification of them, see Socrates's Ecclesiastick History, Book 3. Chap. 7. where these terms are largely discuss'd. Beryllus erred in that he believed Christ had no proper personality before his Incarnation; but he was Orthodox in that he holds Christ had not a Godhead proper to himself, only the Godhead of the Father residing in him; for the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all one, the Glory equal, the Majesty coeternal; otherwise there would be three Gods, not one God: Therefore if this were Beryllus's opinion he may be excused; but he erred in that he asserted the Son by himself is not properly God, but has only a derivative Divinity from the Father. For if he asserted that the Son subsisted not personally before his Incarnation, it follows that he deprived him of his Divinity. Vales.

(b) Ἀναλαμβάνειν here may be best explained by the words of Nicephorus, who says, he regain'd him gently, and calmly. Vales.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Concerning Philip the Emperor.

Philippus.

When Gordianus had held the Roman Empire six complete years, Philip, together with his Son Philip, succeeded him. The report is, that he, being a Christian, upon the day which is the last of the Vigils of Easter, was desirous to be a Partaker, together with the Congregation, of the Prayers of the Church; but could in no wise be permitted to enter into the Church by him who was then Bishop, before he had made a general confession of his Sins, and recounted himself amongst their number, who were (a) reckon'd the Lapsed, and stood in the place of Penitents: For had he not done this, he would not have been admitted by the Bishop, because of his many offences: And 'tis reported that he willingly (b) obey'd, and demonstrated in his Deeds, the sincerity and devoutness of his Affection towards the fear of God. Vales.

(b) This Story concerning Philip the Emperor, whom Babylas would not admit into the Church, being then Bishop, is told by the Author of Chron. Alexand. and also by Chrysostome in his Oration concerning Holy Babylas; but he does not name the Emperor. Vales.

CHAP. XXXV.

How Dionysius succeeded Heraclas in his Bishoprick.

It was the third of Philip's Reign in which Heraclas died, after he had govern'd the Church sixteen years, and Dionysius succeeded him in the Bishoprick of Alexandria.

CHAP. XXXVI.

What other Books were written by Origen.

At this time therefore, the Faith (as it was meet) daily encreasing, and our Doctrine being boldly preach'd amongst all Men, Origen ('tis said) was now above sixty years old: And because he had now gotten a most excellent habit of speaking thro' long use and exercise, he permitted the Notaries to (a) write his Discourses which he deliver'd in publick, but never before this time would he suffer that to be done. About this time

(a) Pamphilus the Martyr in his first Book of his Apology attests this of he him. Vales.

Philip. he wrote eight Books againſt a Book of (b) Celſus the Epicurean, intitled The Word of Truth. He alſo wrote twenty-five Volumes upon Matthew's Goſpel: And thoſe upon the Twelve Prophets, of which Books we have found only twenty-five. There is alſo extant an Epiſtle of his to Philip the Emperor, another to his Wife Severa: And ſeveral others to divers other perſons: Which being ſcatter'd here and there, in ſeveral Mens hands, as many of them as we could find preſerved, being above an hundred in number, we have collected and digeſted into proper Books by themſelves, that they may not hereafter be again diſperſed. He wrote alſo to (c) Fabian Biſhop of Rome, and to ſeveral other Prelates of Churches concerning his own Orthodoxy: You have alſo the Declarations of theſe things in the ſixth Book of the Apology we wrote in defence of him.

(b) There were two Celſus's, both Epicurean Philoſophers, one of 'em lived in the Reign of Nero; the other about the times of Antoninus, as Origen writes in his firſt B. againſt Celſus: It was againſt this latter Celſus that Origen wrote eight moſt elegant Books, which are ſtill extant. This is the ſame Celſus, to whom Lucian dedicates his Book called Alexander, or the Falſe Prophet; being intreated by him to write the Life of that Impoſtor. In the end of that Book, Lucian ſpeaking to him, plainly demonſtrates him to be an Epicurean. In the ſame place alſo he ſeems to mention Celſus's Book, intitled, The True Diſcourſe. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Concerning the Diſſenſion of the Arabians.

AGain, about the ſame time there ſprang up in Arabia Introducers of another Opinion alienating from the Truth. Theſe affirm'd, that Men's Souls even in this preſent life expired together with their Bodies, and were turn'd to corruption together with them; but that they ſhould again revive together with the Bodies at the time of the Reſurrection. No ſmall Synod being call'd together upon this account, Origen is (a) again ſent for thither, and having diſputed publickly concerning this Queſtion, he managed the cauſe ſo well, that thoſe who before were fallen into Error, changed their Sentiments.

(a) 'Twas ſaid before, chap. 33. that Origen was ſent for into Arabia by the Biſhops, to diſpute againſt Beryllus: Wherefore this was the ſecond time that Origen was called thither to diſpute. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Concerning the Hereſie of the Helceſaïts.

AT that time alſo ſprang up another perverſe Error, called the Hereſie of the Helceſaïts, which was ſtifled in its birth. Origen mentions it in (a) his Homily to the People upon the eighty ſecond Pſam, in theſe words. 'Lately there came 'one, highly conceited of himſelf for his ability, 'to defend that Atheiſtical and moſt Wicked 'Opinion, called the Opinion of the (b) Helce-'ſaits, which lately was raiſed in oppoſition to (a) Origen wrote three ſorts of Books upon the Scripture, Commentaries, Scholia, and Homilies. His Comments he wrote for the ſake of the Learned, and his Scholia alſo: But upon thoſe Books which did not require long and tedious Comments he made Homilies, adapted to the People's Capacity. And this is that which Sedulius aims at in his Preface to his Opus Paſchale. See Hieronymus in his Preface to Iſaiah, and Matthew, and alſo in his Preface to his Comments upon The Epiſtle to the Galatians: Where he mentions this threefold Work of Origen's; only in ſtead of the word Homilia he uſes Tractatus, i. e. Diſcourſes, which is all one: For Tractatus in Latin is the ſame as Ὁμίλιαι in Greek. Concerning this threefold Work of Origen, Ruſinus ſpeaks in his Epiſtle to Urſacius, which he prefixes before his Tranſlation of Origen's Book upon Numbers. Valeſ.

(b) Theodoret in his ſecond Book Fabularum Hæreticarum, Chap. 7. calls theſe Men Ἐλκεσαίους, and ſays they were ſo called from one Elceſai. Epiphanius names him Elxæus, a falſe Prophet, who joyn'd himſelf to the Ebionites, and was Author of a ſtrange, uncertain, and unfix'd Opinion concerning Chriſt: Which he relates, and which little differs from Theodoret's ſtory in the place quoted. Hence it appears that this Elxæus, and Elceſai are one and the ſame Man. Epiphanius, in his Hæreſi Oſſenorum, calls him Elxai, and ſays he liv'd in Trajan's time. At firſt, he ſays, he put forth a Book full of Divine Wiſdom, and a Prophecying Spirit: But afterwards he affirmed 'twas no ſin for a Man to ſacrifice to Idols in the time of Perſecution, if ſo be he do it not with his whole heart. The ſame alſo Origen here relates of theſe Elceſaits: But Epiphanius more plainly demonſtrates this in his Hæreſi Sampſæorum, where he ſays, that that theſe Elceſæi (which we prov'd were the ſame as Elceſaits) had one Elxæus, or Elxai, Author of their Sect. Wherefore Scaliger in his Elenchus, Chap. 27. errs; where he ſays, that this Ἠλξαΐ is the ſame perſon with Eſſæus; and that theſe Elceſæi or Elceſaits are the ſame as Eſſæi: Than which nothing is more abſurd. Valeſ.

'the Church. I will explain to you what evil 'things that Opinion aſſerts, that ye be not 'drawn away by it. It rejects ſome things of e-'very part of the Scripture, but makes uſe of 'ſome Texts both out of the Old, and alſo out 'of the Evangelical Scripture. It rejects the A-'poſtle [Paul] wholly. It ſays, 'tis an indifferent 'thing to deny [the Faith.] It holds alſo, that 'upon neceſſity (c) a Wiſe Man would deny [Chri-'ſtianity] with his Mouth, but not with his Heart 'alſo at the ſame time. They alſo carry about 'with them a Book which, they ſay, fell down 'from Heaven; and every one that hears it, and 'believes it, ſhall obtain remiſſion of Sins: a Re-'miſſion different from that which Jeſus Chriſt 'beſtow'd." But let thus much ſuffice concerning theſe things.

(c) The Tranſlators Ruſinus, Langus, and Chriſtophorſon, knew not the uſe and propriety of this Phraſe [ὁ νοήσας,] and ſo miſ-interpreted it. The word ſignifies no more than qui ſapit, or ſapiens, a wiſe man. See that old Verſe of Heſiod, Αἶνον τοι βασιλοῦσ' ἐρέω νοέουσι καὶ αὐτοῖς, and to wiſe men. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Decius.

BUT in the mean while Decius ſucceeds Philip, after he had reigned ſeven years: Who becauſe of his hatred towards Philip, rais'd a Perſecution againſt the Churches. In which Fabian being Martyr'd at Rome, Cornelius ſucceeds in that Biſhoprick. And Alexander the Biſhop of Jeruſalem in Paleſtine, is again brought before the Governour's Tribunal for Chriſt's ſake: And was very famous for his ſecond Confeſſion at Cæſarea, where he was impriſon'd: Being now adorn'd with a venerable old Age, and reverend grey-Hairs. After this noble and famous Teſtimony before the Governour's Tribunal, he expired in Priſon, and Mazabanes was pronounc'd his Succeſſor in the Biſhoprick of Jeruſalem. Alſo Babylas Biſhop of Antiochia died (in like manner as did Alexander) in priſon after his Confeſſion, and Fabius is preferr'd to be Biſhop of that Church. Moreover, how many, and how great [Afflictions] happened to Origen in this Perſecution, and what was the end of theſe things, (the Devil with all his forces enviouſly ſetting himſelf in oppoſition to this Man, and fighting againſt him with all ſubtilty and power, aſſailing him particularly above all thoſe who were ſet upon at that time:) how many, and how great things he alſo ſuffer'd for the Doctrine of Chriſt, as Bonds, and bodily Torments, the Puniſhment of the Iron-Chain in the inmoſt Receſſes of the Priſon: how he was put upon the (a) Rack, his Feet for (a) Ξύλον ſignifies (as we before noted) the ſame as Nervus, a pair of Stocks, wherein the Feet are put: But in this place 'tis uſed for Eculeus, a Rack: For, Euſebius in this place means, that Origen, being put upon the Rack, patiently ſuſtained the threats of Fire and other Torments. Ξύλον therefore in this place ſignifies the ſame as the Latin word Eculeus, which the word added, (viz.) Κολαστήριον ſufficiently ſheweth; for as often as this term ſignifies Stocks, or Shackles, we read ξύλον only; but when it ſignifies the Rack, κολαστήριον, or βασανιστήριον, is commonly added, as here we find it to be. Valeſ.

Decius. several days being stretch'd so wide as to the distance of four holes: How valiantly he sustain'd the menaces of Fire, and all other [Tortures] inflicted by his Enemies: What also was the Exit of these things: (The Judge with his utmost power earnestly endeavouring * that he might not be slain.) Lastly, what expressions he left behind him, and how comfortable to the (b) comfortless: [All these Particulars] many of his Epistles do both truly and accurately comprehend.

* That is, the Judge was desirous to prolong his Life, that so he might undergo the more Tortures.

(b) Ἀναλήψεως δεόμενοι are the comfortless, or helpless; which some Translators did not understand; this transposition in Eusebius is common. Eusebius here says nothing of the Æthiopian, who was suborned against Origen; or concerning his denial of the Faith: Baronius with good reason thought these things were fabulous; But Nemesius, in his Book De Naturâ Hominis, Chap. 30. confirms that Narration of Epiphanius. Vales.

CHAP. XL.

Concerning what things happen'd to Dionysius.

I Will also record some things concerning Dionysius, out of his Epistle to Germanus. Where speaking concerning himself, he makes this Relation: 'I speak in the presence of God, and he 'knows that I lie not. I never made my escape '(a) of my self, nor without 'the Divine appointment. 'But before, to wit, at the 'same time when the (b) Decree for the Persecution 'came out from Decius, Sabinus sent out his (c) Deputy to make inquisition for 'me; and I stay'd at home 'four days, expecting the arrival of the Deputy: But 'he went about searching 'all places; both High-ways, 'Rivers, and Fields, where 'he thought I might be conceal'd, or where he conjectured I might have gone: 'But he was so blinded, that 'he found not my House. 'Neither could he imagine that I should stay at 'home when there was Inquisition made for 'me. And at length after the fourth day, (when 'God had commanded me to depart thence, and 'had miraculously open'd a way for me) I, and 'my (d) Servants, and many of the Brethren, went 'out together. Now that that was a special act 'of God's Providence the sequel declared, in which 'peradventure I was profitable to some." Again, after the interposition of some words, he relates what hapned to him after his Flight, in these words: 'I myself, (and my Companions) being 'much about the time of Sun-setting apprehended by some Soldiers, was brought to Taposirus. But Timotheus, according to the Providence of God, was not with us, neither was he 'taken: But when he at last came, he found the 'House empty, and Soldiers keeping guard about 'it, and us reduc'd to Slavery." After some other words he saith thus. 'What now was the order 'and manner of this miraculous Act of Providence? (I will tell nothing but truth.) A certain '(e) Country-man met Timothy as he was flying, and thus disturb'd in Mind; and he enquired of him the reason of this great haste; 'he told him the real truth. When the Man had 'heard his Relation, (he was then a-going to a 'Marriage-feast, and 'tis customary amongst 'them to tarry all night at such meetings) he went 'his way, and coming into the House, told the 'story to those that were set at the Table: All 'of them with an unanimous earnestness (as if it 'had been by a Compact amongst them) rose 'up together, set a-running, and with great 'clamours came speedily upon us. The Soldiers 'who guarded us being by them forthwith put 'to flight, they came upon us as we were, and '[found] us lying upon '(f) Couches without any 'Furniture on them; I (God 'knows) at first supposing 'them to be Thieves, who 'came thither for Prey and 'Pillage, continued lying 'on the Couch, naked as I 'was, excepting only a Linnen-Garment which I had 'on; and offered to them 'my other Cloaths, which 'lay by me: But they bid 'me arise, and come out 'immediately. Then understanding what was the 'cause of their coming thither, I cry'd out, intreating and beseeching them to depart and let 'us alone. But if their intent was to do me a 'kindness, I begg'd of them to behead me, and by 'that means to prevent those who brought me Prisoner thither. While I thus cry'd out (as my 'Companions and Fellow-sufferers in all my 'Troubles do know) they compelled me to rise 'up: I threw myself on my back upon the ground; 'but they took me by the Hands and Feet, and 'dragg'd me out: There follow'd me those who 'are my Witnesses of these things, Caius, Faustus, Peter, and Paul; (g) who took me together with that 'Couch upon their Shoulders, and convey'd me 'out of the Village; and having set me upon an 'Ass unsaddled, they carried me away." These things Dionysius relates concerning himself.

Decius.

(a) Ἐπ ἐμαυτῷ βαλλόμενος, (i. e.) Not by my own Counsel, not on my own accord. But the Fuk. MS. and Georgius Syncellus's Chronicle read ἐπ ἐμαυτοῦ· Maz. and Med MSS. ἐπ ἐμαυτόν. The Med. MS. begins this Epistle where we have begun it. Vales.

(b) Διωγμὸς is here taken for the Decree of the Persecution: And accordingly we have translated the place. Vales.

(c) Frumentarii milites were Soldiers sent to seek after Offenders, and to pick up all Rumours and News. Constantine put down this sort of Officers; they were also Deputies under Governours of Provinces; such an one was this Frumentarius, whom Dionysius here mentions. Vales.

(d) Οἰ πατέρες, Musculus and Christoph. translate Liberi, Children, which interpretation I do not approve of. Vales.

(e) Christophor. translates χωείτης indigena, one born and bred in that Country; the Translator of Georg. Syncell. calls it incola; neither of them rendring it well: For χωείται are Country-Men, Rusticks. So in the Greek Councils we find, ὁι τῆς χωρῶν πρεσβύτεροι, in stead of ὁι τῆς χωειτῆς πρεσβύτεροι, The Country-Presbyters. The Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. in stead of χωειτῆς read χωεικῶν, so also does Alexandrinus use χωεικοὶ for Rusticks. Vales.

(f) Scimpodia are low Beds, such as are used in great Houses to this Day, only to sit in; call'd Couches. So Libanius in his own Life uses the word: Where he saith, pag. 47. that at home he us'd to lye upon a Bed, but in the School he lean'd ὅπι τῷ σκίμποδι, upon a Couch. Hence 'tis plain those Couches were made for the ease of sick People: ἄστρωτος signifies unmade, without any furniture upon it. So Martial in his Apophoretis, speaking of Sheets,

Nudo stramina nè toro paterent,
Junctæ nos tibi venimus sorores.
Vales.

(g) We must refer this word συλλαβόντες, who took me up, to Caius, and the rest of the Presbyters, and not to the Riotous Country-men, as Christophorson does. Φορεῖον signifies, together with the Bed or Couch on which he lay. Dionysius says nothing here of what hapned to him after the Rusticks forc'd him to leave Taposiris, having beaten the Guard: But in his Epistle to Domitius and Didymus, which is in the 7th Book, and 11th Chapter, he saith, that he and Peter, and Caius were separated from the rest of their Company, and abode in a desert and dry place of Libya. Dionysius liv'd an Exile till the death of Decius the Emperor, and from that desert place he wrote Letters to Domitius and Didymus. Vales.

CHAP. XLI.

Concerning those who suffer'd Martyrdom at Alexandria.

THE same Man in an Epistle of his to (a) Fabius Bishop of Antioch, gives this account of the Combats of those Martyrs who suffer'd at Alexandria in the times of Decius. 'The Persecution a-'mongst us did not begin at the time when the 'Imperial Edict was issued out, but preceded it 'one whole year. For a Soothsayer, and (b) a Poet

(a) The Med. Maz. and Fuk. MSS. call this Man Fabianus, not Fabius: So also Rufinus names this Bishop of Antioch. Vales.

(b) I have translated [ποιητὴς] a Poet: First, because there is a great familiarity betwixt Poets and Prophets, for the Divines or Soothsayers us'd to deliver their Oracles in Verse. Besides, the Ægyptians were chiefly delighted with Poetry, which Eunapius takes notice of. Moreover, no People were more malicious towards the Christians than these Soothsayers, moving the People to persecute them, and encouraging them by their Oracles. Vales.

Decius.

(whoever he was who ſo endamag'd this City,) had ſtirr'd up, and encouraged the Tumults of the Heathens againſt us, exciting them to their Country-Superſtition. They being prick'd forward by him, and having obtained free Power of acting all Miſchief, thought it the moſt acceptable Service * and Worſhip of their Gods to ſlaughter us. Firſt of all therefore they lay hands upon an old Man named Metra, and bid him pronounce ſome Atheiſtical words, and becauſe he obey'd them not, they beat him with Clubs, and prick'd him in the Face and Eyes with ſharp Reeds; and when they had led him into the Suburbs, they ſtoned him to death. Afterwards they dragg'd a believing Woman called Quinta, to the Temple of their Idol, and compel'd her to fall down and worſhip: But ſhe turning away her face, and abominating it, they bound her feet, and drag'd her through the City, which is pav'd with ſharp Stones; and having daſh'd her againſt Milſtones, and ſcourg'd her, they led her to the ſame place without the City, and ſtoned her. Afterwards all with one accord violently broke into the Houſes of pious Men, and every one of them ran to their Neighbours, whom they knew, and plunder'd and robb'd them; their Goods which were of greater value they (c) purloin'd, but the Lumber and what was made of Wood they caſt forth and burn'd in the Streets: So that the City ſeem'd as if it had been taken by an Enemy. But the Brethren withdrew themſelves thence and privately fled; and (like thoſe St. Paul ſpeaks of) * took joyfully the ſpoiling of their goods. And not one of them that I know of, except one who ſomewhere fell into their hands, renounced the Lord till this time. Moreover, at that time they took a moſt admirable Virgin who was ancient, called Apollonia, and buffeting her on the Cheeks, they daſh'd out all her Teeth. And when they had built a Pile of Wood before the City, they threatned to burn her alive, except ſhe ſhould repeat together with them ſome (d) prophane words. But ſhe, having begg'd a little reſpite, being let looſe, forthwith leap'd into the fire, and was conſumed to aſhes. They alſo apprehended Serapion as he was in (e) his Houſe; and having tortured him with grievous Torments, and broken all his Joints, they caſt him down headlong out of an Upper-room. There was now no way for us, not the common High-way, not ſo much as any narrow Street through which we could ſecurely paſs either by day or night. Every body proclaiming at all times, and in all places, that whoſoever would not repeat thoſe blaſphemous words, he ſhould be dragg'd away, and burnt immediately. After this manner theſe things continued for a great while: Afterwards follow'd Sedition, and a Civil War, which [ſeized] theſe Wretches, and returned the cruelty they uſed towards us upon themſelves. And we had a little breathing time, their fury towards us being ſomething appeaſed. But preſently news came of the (f) Tranſlation of that Empire, which had been more favourable to us: And much fear of a threatning Storm appeared. And now arrived the [Imperial] Edict, almoſt like that foretold by our Lord, (g) repreſenting thoſe moſt terrible [Times] inſomuch that even the Elect, if it were poſſible, ſhould be diſcouraged. Indeed, all were put in great fear. Immediately many of of them who were more eminent, yielded up themſelves [to their Idolatry] through fear: Others, who (h) had to do in the management of the publick Affairs, were forc'd thro' the neceſſity of their Offices [they held;] and they induced others of their acquaintance, who, being ſummon'd by name, repaired to their impure and prophane Sacrifices. Some look'd pale and trembled, as if they themſelves were about to have been Sacrifices and Victims, not Sacrificers to their Idols. So that they rendred themſelves the ſubject of laughter to the Multitude that ſtood round about them; becauſe they demonſtrated themſelves to all, to be fearful both of Death and of Sacrificing: But others of them ran to the Altars more willingly, proteſting very confidently that they never were Chriſtians before. Concerning whom the Lord's Prediction is moſt true, that they ſhall hardly be ſaved. As for the reſt, ſome of them adhered to the one or the other of thoſe Parties we have mentiond; ſome fled away; others were apprehended. And of theſe [though] ſome proceeded ſo far as till [they came to] Bonds and Impriſonment, and others of them had been impriſon'd ſeveral days; yet before they were brought to the Tribunal, they renounced [the Faith.] Some of them after they had perſiſted ſome time in ſuffering Torments, yet for fear of what might follow renounc'd [their Religion.] But the ſtedfaſt and bleſſed Pillars of the Lord, being ſtrengthned by him, and having received Power and Patience equal and anſwerable to their ſtrong Faith, became admirable Witneſſes of his Kingdom. The firſt of which was Julianus a Gouty Man, who could neither go nor ſtand; he, together with two other Men who carried him, was brought before the Judge: One of thoſe Perſons ſtraightway deny'd [Chriſt.] But the other whoſe name was Cronion, but was ſirnamed Eunus, together with the old Man Julianus, having confeſſed the Lord, rode upon Camels through the whole City (which you know is very large) and were ſcourged as they ſat on high, and at laſt in the preſence of all the Multitude ſtanding round, they were conſum'd by

* These words [τὴν θρησκείαν τῶν δαιμόνων, worſhip of their Gods.] ought, as I ſuppoſe, to be expunged: For they diſturb the ſenſe, and were added by ſome Scholiaſt, to explain the preceding term [εὐσέβειαν, ſervice. Valeſ.

(c) Νοσφίζομαι, to purloin; ſee Tit. 2. 10.

* Heb. 10 34.

(d) Τῆς ἀσεβείας ῥημάτα, are the terms here, and what the words were, 'tis hard to conjecture: In his Epiſtle to Germanus he calls them [ἀθέους φωνὰς, impious words;] and in this Epiſtle δύσφημα ῥήματα, horrid words.] Valeſ.

(e) Here we read ἐφέσιον, i. e. in his own Houſe, but Nicephorus very ill reads ἑφεσίην. Concerning this Serapion, Bede, and Uſuardus ſpeak at the 14th of November. Where they ſay he ſuffered in the Reign of Decius; but they might better have ſaid in the Reign of Philip. For Dionyſius in this Epiſtle to Fabius expreſly affirms that Serapion, and ſome other Martyrs, ſuffer'd before the Death of Philip the Emperor. The ſame Error is committed in all Martyrologies concerning Apollonia the Virgin, which ſay ſhe ſuffered in the time of Decius upon the 9th day of February. Valeſ.

Decius.

(f) Here he means the Death of Philip the Emperor, who behaved himſelf gently and kindly toward the Chriſtians: Therefore what Paſſages are here next related, happened in the laſt Year of the Reign of Philip: Which thing Dionyſius intimates in the beginning of this Epiſtle; where he ſays, the Perſecution began a Year before the Emperor's Edict came out: But Chriſtoph. did not underſtand this place, he rendring [μεταβολὴν βασιλείας] the alteration of the Emperor's mind towards us. Baronius follows this Error of his, at the Year of Chriſt, 253. Chap. 102. Valeſ.

(g) In the King's MS. and Stephanus's Edition, in ſtead of ἀποφαίνων, ῥιφ.βαφαγὲ is read, but in the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil MSS. ἀποφαίγων is the term, which is a great deal better as I think. For Dionyſius here means that this Decree of Decius was ſo terrible, thar it ſeemed to repreſent thoſe moſt dreadful times of Antichriſt, foretold by our Saviour. Valeſ.

(h) Chriſtophor. miſtakes in his Tranſlation of this place. I have rendred here [δημοσιεύοντες,] as if it had been [δημόσια πεφιλοντες] the Decurions or Magiſtrates: For theſe always aſſembled themſelves at the reading of the Emperor's Edicts in the Courts; and firſt of all executed his Commands; hence they were compelled to be preſent at the reading of this Decree, and immediately after it was read, to ſacrifice to the Gods, according to the Injunction of the Decree. Valeſ.

Decius.

(i) This ἀσβέστου πῦρ may be rendred vivæ calcis incendio, a fire of unslaked Lime; so also we may translate the same phrase which is us'd a little after this, speaking of Epimachus and Alexander, where he says, πυρὶ ἀσβέστῳ διεχθησαν. Instead of which phrase Nicephorus uses τίτανος, with Lime. In Menæo, on the 30th day of October, there is mention of these Martyrs, Julianus, Cronio, and Macarius, where the words are, ἀσβέστῳ ζέοντι καὶ ἀνυδρῳ ἐπιχυθέντα; burning Lime being poured upon them. Vales.

(k) Macar is derived from the Greek term μακάριος, which signifies blessed: Dionysius seems here to allude to those Words of our Saviour, Matt. 5. 10. Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness-sake, &c. Rufinus translates this place thus, Alius quidam, vir nominis sui Macarius, gente Lybicus. Vales.

* Ξυσῆρας is the term in the original: It signifies properly any kind of Iron-instrument to make incision: Dionysius does here mean by it, an Engine wherewith they scraped the flesh from off the bones of the Christians.

(l) These words [also another Ammonarium.] I have added out of Rufinus: For Dionysius said there were four Women; but we find but three, except, according to Rufinus, we add these words. Vales.

(m) In stead of Ater in Georg. Syncellus, and Niceph. we find Aster: In Rufinus 'tis Arsinus; in the old Roman Martyrology, which is mostly taken out of Rufinus, he is called Arsenius, at the 19th of the Kalends of January. Vales.

'time and with much ear-

'said she would utter nothing he should enjoyn

'was led to execution. Now the rest were these,
'Mercuria a most Virtuous and Venerable Ma-
'tron; and Dionysia the Mother of a numerous
'issue, but did not love her Children more than
'the Lord; (l) also another
'Ammonarium. The Judge
'being now ashamed that
'he tortured them yet in 'vain, and that he was thus
'overcome by Women, slew
'them with the Sword, be'fore they underwent the
'tryal of tortures. For Am-
'monarium their Leader had
'suffer'd torments for them
'all. Heron also, and (m) A-
'ter, and Isidorus, Egyptians, and with them Dios-
'corus, a Lad of about fifteen years of age, were 'set before the Judge. Who first of all endea-
'vour'd to deceive the Youth with words, as think-
'king him flexible and easie to be perswaded;
'he endeavour'd also to force him by Torments,
'[supposing] him to be remiss and inclinable to 'yield; but Dioscorus was neither moved with 'Perswasions, nor yielded he to Torments. When
'[the Judge] had most barbarously torn the rest
'with Stripes, and they persisted, he delivered
'them also to the Fire, but he dismiss'd Dios-
'corus, because he was lovely in the eyes of the 'People, and he also himself admired him for his
'most prudent Answers to his Questions: Saying,
'he allow'd him space for repentance because of 'his tender Age. And now the most Excellent
'Dioscorus continues with us, reserved for a 'greater and more lasting Combat. Also one
'Nemesion, another Egyptian, was falsly accused
'as a Companion of Thieves: But having before
'the Centurion cleared himself of this Accusation
'brought against him, as being most absurd,
'he was impeach'd as being a Christian, and
'brought bound before the Governour: Who,
'(most unjust Man!) having inflicted upon him
'double as many Torments and Stripes, as up-
'on the Thieves, [commanded] him to be burnt
'amongst Thieves. Blessed Man! who was ho'noured after Christ's example. Moreover, a 'whole (n) File of Soldiers, to wit, Ammon, and
'Zeno, and Ptolomy, and Ingenuus, and with them
'the old Man Theophilus, stood together before
'the place of Judicature. And when a certain
'Man was accused for being a Christian, and in'clined to a Renunciation [of his Religion,]
'they standing by gnash'd upon him with their 'Teeth, made Grimaces at him with their 'Countenances, stretch'd out their Hands, and
'shew'd mimick and antick Gestures with their 'Bodies; [in-so-much that] all Mens Eyes
'were turned towards them. Before any one
'came to lay hands on them, they ran to the
'(o) place where the Accused usually sat, confes-
'sing themselves to be Christians: Upon which
'the Governour and the Assessors were surprized
'with a great fear. The Accused seem'd most
'couragious at what they were about to suffer,
'but the Judges trembled. So they went out of 'the place of Judicature in a kind of Pomp and
'State, and rejoyced at the Testimony [they 'were to give to the Faith,] God (p) making
'them to triumph gloriously.

Decius.

(n) σύνταγμα στρατιωτικὸν, Rufinus renders a Troop of Soldiers; him Christophorson also follows: But I had rather translate it a file of men. Some may perhaps think that these Soldiers were the Prefect's Apparitors, and other Officers, because they stood before the judgment-seat, but I rather think they were Legionary Soldiers of that Legion, which kept Garison at Alexandria, and were under the Command of the Emperor's Deputy-Governour of Egypt; for at that time he who was the Emperor's Prefect in Egypt, had not only power in Civil Affairs, but also in Military. In the old Roman Martyrology the Birth-day of these Martyrs is set down on the 13th of the Kalends of January. Vales.

(o) By this word βάθρον is meant Subsellium, i. e. the place on which the Criminals while they are examin'd by the Judge sate. It is in some places call'd Ambon, or Pulpitum. Vales.

(p) Θεὸν θριαμβεύοντος αὐτοὺς, Rufinus translates thus, God thus triumphing by his Saints; hence we may suppose he read δι' αὐτῶν. Musculus and Christophorson follow this Translation of Rufinus: But we must take notice and see whether Dionysius means not by θριαμβεύοντος αὐτοὺς, θριαμβεύειν ποιοῦντος αὐτοὺς, which I think he does, and therefore have so translated it. Vales.

CHAP. XLII.

Concerning some other things which Dionysius relates.

'SEveral others were torn in pieces by the 'Heathens, both in the Cities, and in the 'Countrey-Villages: One of them I will hear
'speak of for example's sake. Ischyrion was a mer-
'cenary *Officer under one
'of the Magistrates. He,
'whom he serv'd, enjoyn'd
'him to sacrifice: but when
'he obey'd him not, he was
'injurious to him; when he
'still persisted to be disobe-
'dient, he basely reproach'd him. After he had
'patiently sustain'd all this, he took a great Stake,
'and having run it through his Guts and Bowels,
'murther'd him. What need I to reckon up the 'Multitudes, which wandered in Deserts and 'Mountains, and dyed by Pestilence, Thirst, and
'Cold, and by Diseases, Thieves, and Savage-beasts?
'Such of them as surviv'd are Witnesses of their 'Choice and Victory. But I will add one Fact
'for a manifestation of the truth hereof. There 'was one Chæremon a very aged Man, Bishop of 'the City called Nile, he together with his Wife

* Ἐπίτροπος (from whence the term [ἐπιτροπεύω,] which here occurs, is derived) signifies one that looketh to another Man's Business, and that has the Charge of his Affairs committed to his care.

Decius. ‘ fled unto the Mountain (a) Arabius, but never re- ‘ turn'd; neither could they, or any thing of ‘ their Bodies ever be found, altho' the Brethren ‘ ſearch'd all places careful- ‘ ly. Alſo many about this ‘ Mountain Arabicus were ‘ taken Captives and inſlav'd ‘ by the barbarous (b) Sara- ‘ cens: Some of which were ‘ with much difficulty re- ‘ deem'd with great Sums ‘ of Money; but others of ‘ them are not yet [re- ‘ deem'd] even at this time. ‘ Now (my Brother) I have ‘ not at large related theſe ‘ things to no purpoſe, but ‘ that you may ſee how great ‘ and how grievous miſeries ‘ hapned to us, which they ‘ who have moſt experienc'd ‘ do beſt underſtand. Afterwards, after ſome few words he makes an addition to all this, ſaying; ‘ Therefore thoſe ‘ Divine Martyrs, (who are now Aſſeſſors with ‘ Chriſt, Colleagues of his Kingdom, and are ‘ (c) Partakers of his Judgment, giving ſentence ‘ together with him) during their being amongſt ‘ us, receiv'd to themſelves ſome of the Brethren ‘ who were lapſed, and lay convict as having ſa- ‘ crificed to Idols: And when they had ſeen their ‘ Converſion and Penitence, judging it might be ‘ acceptable to God, who in no wiſe willeth the ‘ death of a Sinner, but rather that he repent, ‘ they admitted them, and (d) brought them to- ‘ gether, and received them into their Congre- ‘ gation, and (e) communicated with them in ‘ Prayer, and in Eating. Now, therefore (Bre- ‘ thren) how do you counſel us concerning theſe ‘ things, what muſt be done by us? Shall we be ‘ of like Mind, and of the ſame Opinion with ‘ the [Martyrs?] Shall we obſerve their Deter- ‘ mination, and the Favour they [ſhew'd ſuch ‘ Perſons?] And ſhall we be indulgent towards ‘ them, to whom they were merciful? Or ſhall ‘ we render their Sentence unjuſt, and make our ‘ ſelves Examiners and Judges of their Opinion? ‘ Grieve their Goodneſs and Clemency? And de- ‘ ſtroy the Order [which is conſtituted?"] Dionyſius very adviſedly annexed theſe words, diſcourſing concerning them, who in the Times of Perſecution had lapſed through infirmity of Mind. Decius.

(a) Herodotus mentions a Mountain, called Arabius; which Ptolomy and others call Troïcus. Chriſtophorſon therefore does not well in calling it a Mountain in Arabja. 'Tis a little after called Arabicus, from its vicinity to Arabia. Valeſ.

(b) This place ought to be taken notice of for this one thing: For of all the Writers which came to our Hands, there is none (that I know of) who is ancienter than Dionyſius Alexandrinus, that mentions the Saracens. Indeed Ammianus Marcellinus ſays in his 14th Book, that he mentioned the Saracens amongſt the Acts of Prince Marcus. So alſo ſays Spartianus, (in Nigro) ſaying they were conquered by the Roman Soldiers. Valeſ.

(c) It was the Opinion of the Ancient Fathers, that Martyrs ſhould be Chriſt's Aſſeſſors, and ſhould judge the World together with him. So ſays Eulogius, Biſhop of Alexandria, in his 5th Book againſt the Novatians: But Photius in his Biblioth. reproves this Opinion. (Photius ſays) that thoſe words of St. Paul in the 1 Epiſtle to the Corinthians 6. 2. Know ye not that the Saints ſhall judge the World? Muſt not be underſtood as if the Saints were to be judges with Chriſt: Paul, ſays he, only meaneth thus, that other Men who had not lived ſo piouſly ſhould by the Saints means be condemned. As it is in the Goſpel, The Men of Nineve, and the Queen of the South ſhall riſe up in judgment againſt wicked Men, and condemn them, Matt. 12. 41. Photius took this Expoſition out of Chryſoſtome; but Eulogius's Opinion ſeems the truer to me. For if the Martyrs are now Colleagues of Chriſt in his Kingdom, Why may not they be partakers of his Judgment? Moreover, Chriſt expreſly promiſed the Apoſtles, That they ſhould ſit on twelve Thrones, judging the twelve Tribes of Iſrael, Matth. 19. 28. Valeſ.

(d) This place muſt be rendred according to our Tranſlation; though Langus and Chriſtophorſon tranſlate it, as if the Martyrs admitted the Penitents into the Church: Which they could not do, being in Bonds. Moreover the Biſhops only had power of reconciling Penitents, the Martyrs could only intercede for them, and write commendatory Letters in their behalf; though this word συγχωρεῖν may be rendred paſſively, as in the 3d Chap. of this 6th Book. Valeſ.

(e) Communion in the Church is twofold, of Prayer, and of the Sacraments, that of the Prayers was granted to Penitents after a certain time; but the Communion of the Body of Chriſt was not granted except to them who were reconciled after long time of Repentance. But Dionyſius here means private Communion; now that I call private Communion, which was granted to any one by ſome private Perſons, and not by the Biſhop, whoſe Power and Duty it was to grant it. The thing theſe private Perſons granted, was this; theſe Martyrs and Confeſſors permitted Penitents who deſired their pity and interceſſion, to pray to God with them. Valeſ.

CHAP. XLIII.

Concerning Novatus, what manner of Perſon he was as to his Morals; and concerning his Hereſie.

FOR Novatus, a Presbyter of the Church of Rome, being puffed up with pride againſt theſe * Men, as if there were no further hopes of Salvation left for them, altho' they perform'd all things appertaining to an unfeigned Converſion, and a ſincere Confeſſion, conſtituted himſelf the Ring-leader of a peculiar Sect, of thoſe who by reaſon of their haughty Minds ſtiled themſelves † Cathari. Upon this account a very great Synod was aſſembled at Rome, conſiſting of ſixty Biſhops, but of Presbyters and Deacons [the number] was greater. And when the Paſtors of each reſpective place in the reſt of the Provinces, had conſulted by themſelves concerning what was to be done; (a) This Decree was promulged to all: ‘ That ‘ Novatus, together with all ‘ thoſe who imitated his ‘ Pride, and who preſumtuouſly aſſented to his uncharitable and moſt inhuman Opinion, ſhould be accounted as alienated ‘ from the Church: But that the Brethren who ‘ were fallen into the Calamity [of the Lapſed,] ‘ ſhould be healed and cured by the Remedies of ‘ Repentance." There came to our hands the Epiſtles of Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, to Fabius Biſhop of Antioch; which ſet forth the Acts of that Synod at Rome, and the Opinions of all thoſe in Italy and Africa, and the Provinces there. There are alſo extant other Epiſtles written in Latin, by Cyprian and thoſe Biſhops aſſembled with him in Africa: By which it appears, that they conſented to the relieving of thoſe who were fallen into Temptation, and that the Author of this Hereſie ought with good reaſon to be expelled out of the Catholick Church, together with all thoſe who had been ſeduced by him. There is alſo annex'd to theſe (b) another Epiſtle of Cornelius's concerning the Decrees of that Synod: And alſo another concerning the miſchievous Acts of Novatus. Part of which, nothing hinders but that we may here inſert, that ſo they who read this Work, may have a perfect knowledge in all things concerning Novatus. Cornelius therefore, informing Fabius what a Man this Novatus was as to his courſe of life, writes theſe very words: ‘ But that you may the better underſtand how ‘ this admirable Fellow heretofore covered ‘ a Biſhoprick, and concealing this his hot ambition

* That is, the lapſed.

† That is, the pure.

(a) Ruſinus tranſlates this Phraſe δόγμα παρείχετο τοῖς πᾶσι, Decretus ſignificatur quid facto opus eſſet, but the other Tranſlators in my Opinion turn it better, by tranſlating it thus; Decernitur ab omnibus. Valeſ.

(b) Ruſinus confounds, and mixeth this Epiſtle with that which Euſebius afore-mentioned, for he owns but two Epiſtles of Cornelius. Hieronymus in his Book, De Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis, reckons up four, but Euſebius in this place gives us an account of three only. The firſt and the third ſeem as if Cornelius had writ them in Greek, which may be proved by ſeveral Arguments, for Euſebius quotes ſeveral things out of the third Epiſtle, but does not in the leaſt ſignifie that it was ever tranſlated out of Latin into Greek, which thing he always does as often as he quotes any Latin Authors. Moreover, in this very Chapter Euſebius ſignifies that the firſt Epiſtle was writ in Greek, for ſpeaking of it, he adds that there was another Epiſtle of Cyprian annex'd to it, which was written in Latin. Which Clauſe certainly he had not added, had not Cornelius's Epiſtle been written in a contrary Language. Valeſ.

Decius. ‘bition continued undiscover'd, for a Covert for ‘his Folly, usually from the beginning having the ‘Confessors in his company, I will make this Declaration to you: (c) Maximus ‘a Presbyter of our Church, and Urbanus, which ‘Men have the second time ‘acquir'd great renown to ‘themselves for their Confessions: Sidonius also, and ‘Celerinus, a Man who has ‘most patiently endured all ‘sorts of Tortures through ‘God's Mercy; and having ‘corroborated the weakness ‘of the Flesh through the ‘strength of his Faith, utterly vanquish'd the Adversary: These Men [I ‘say,] when they had made enquiry into the ‘Man, and (d) detected his Subtilty and Deceit, ‘his Perjury and Lyes, his Unsociableness and ‘Wolfish Friendship, return'd to the Holy Church; ‘and divulged all his subtil Devices, and his Villanies (which he had kept ‘conceal'd within himself ‘for a long time, refusing to ‘declare them) in the presence both of a sufficient ‘number of Bishops, and also of a great many Presbyters and Laicks; lamenting and repenting, because, having been ‘seduced by this subtil and wicked Beast, for some ‘small time they had abandon'd the Church." After some few words, he also adds this (‘Dear Brother) What a wonderful change and alteration ‘we saw made in a short time in him? For this ‘most excellent Fellow, (who affirm'd with terrible Protestations and Oaths, that he did not in ‘the least covet the Office of a Bishop) on a sudden ‘appears a Bishop, as if he had been (e) thrown ‘into the midst by an Engine. For this brave ‘Doctor, who [pretended himself] to be a Maintainer of the Church-Discipline, when he endeavour'd by force to acquire to himself, and surreptitiously to steal the Bishoprick which was not ‘assign'd to him by God, chose for his Confidents ‘two Men, who despair'd of Salvation, that he ‘might send them into some little corner, and the ‘most despicable part of Italy, and there delude ‘three Bishops, who were simple and unlearned ‘Men, by a certain fraudulent enterprize, affirming and protesting that with all possible speed ‘they must post to Rome, that all the disagreement ‘which had been there, might by their mediation, ‘together with the other Bishops, be composed. ‘When (f) they arrived, being (as we said before) persons unexperiencee in the ‘Plots and subtilty of these ‘wicked Men, having been ‘shut up close by some persons like himself who were ‘assign'd for that purpose, ‘at ten of the clock he compelled them, being drunk ‘and doz'd with over-much Wine, to give him the Bishoprick by (g) an imaginary and an ineffectual Imposition of Hands: this an imperfect, and ineffectual Ordination, because it was solemnized by Bishops of another Dioceses, and not by those Bishops who had the Right and Power of Ordaining the Bishops of Rome, which were the Bishops of Ostia, Tibur, and others: 'Twas also ineffectual and vain, because it was done by Men who were drunk, by force, at the Tenth Hour of the Day, none of the Clergy or People being present; and lastly, because another Bishop was before regularly Ordain'd. Cornelius both here, and in his Epistle to Cyprian, says, Novatianus was Ordain'd by three Bishops, whereas Pacianus says, in his second Epistle to Sempronianus, he was Ordain'd by the Letters Commendatory of the Confessors: but these Differences we may thus reconcile. Novatianus was named to be the Bishop, by the Epistle of the Confessors, but was afterwards Consecrated by three Bishops. Vales.

‘And he laid claim to that by craft and subtilty, Decius. ‘which did in no-wise appertain to him. One ‘of those Bishops not long after return'd to the ‘Church, bewailing and confessing his Sin, whom, ‘through the mediation of all the People then present, (h) we received into ‘the Communion of the ‘Laity. We ordain'd Successors for the two other ‘Bishops, and sent them away to possess their Sees. ‘(i) This Maintainer therefore of the Gospel, knew ‘not that 'twas meet there ‘should be but one (k) Bishop in a Catholick Church. ‘In which he was not ignorant (for how could he be?) ‘that there should be (l) 46 ‘Presbyters, 7 Deacons, ‘7 Sub-Deacons, Clerks ‘42; Exorcists, Readers, ‘together with Janitors, 52. ‘Widows and (m) Indigent ‘Persons, which could not ‘maintain themselves, above a thousand and five ‘hundred. All these the ‘Grace and Bounty of the ‘Lord maintain'd. But neither could so great Multitude, so necessary in the ‘Church, (a Congregation ‘which by God's Providence is both rich and numerous, together with a ‘great and innumerable ‘multitude of People) make ‘this Man ashamed of this ‘so desperate an attempt, or ‘deter him from proceeding ‘in it, or recal him into the ‘Church." And again, after some other words, which intervene, he adjoyns these. ‘But come on, let us in our ‘following words declare, ‘in what Works of his own, or what good Practices he was so confident, as to aspire to a Bishoprick. Was it upon this account, that from ‘the beginning he had been conversant in the ‘Church, and had fought many Combats in defence ‘of it, and had been in many and great perils upon ‘account of Religion? No, this is nothing so. For ‘the Devil who had entred into him, and for a long ‘time dwelt in him, was the occasion of his being ‘a deliever. He being relieved [thereof] by the ‘Exorcists, fell into a grievous Distemper, and it ‘being supposed that he would die immediately, ‘he receiv'd Baptism, ((n) being besprinkled with Water,) on the Bed whereon he lay: (If that

(c) Concerning this Maximus the Presbyter, Urbanus, and Sidonius, Confessors, how they deserted Novatianus, and were converted to the Church; see Cornelius the Pope's Epistle to Cyprian. There was also at the same time another Maximus, Presbyter of the Church of Rome, whom Novatianus employ'd as Embassador to Cyprian into Africk, together with Machæus and others: Afterwards the Schismaticks made this Maximus a Bishop in Africk, as Cyprian in his Epistle to Cornelius tells us. Vales.

(d) Καλαφωάω, signifies to catch a man in the very act of Robbery, whilst the φωεία, or things which he hath stolen are yet in his hands; hence it signifies to bring any Plot, Robbery, or any other Wickedness to light, to bewray, or disclose. Viger. Idiot. pag. 27.

(e) Ἐκ μαγγάνης (the phrase here in the Original) has the same import with [ἀπὸ μαγγανῆς,] which is a proverbial speech in Greek, and signifies, ex insperato, improviso; i.e. unlookt for, or on a sudden. See Erasm. Adag. pag. 46. Edit. Froben.

(f) Theodoret in his 3d Book of his Hæretic. Fabul. Chap. 5. writes that Novatus himself went into Italy to fetch these Bishops, and when he, with the Bishops upon their Journey, came into some Town or other, he forced them to Ordain him, which those Bishops complained of when they came to Rome; but this Epistle of Cornelius refutes that Story of his. Vales.

(g) Cornelius calls this an imperfect, and ineffectual Ordination, because it was solemnized by Bishops of another Dioceses, and not by those Bishops who had the Right and Power of Ordaining the Bishops of Rome, which were the Bishops of Ostia, Tibur, and others: 'Twas also ineffectual and vain, because it was done by Men who were drunk, by force, at the Tenth Hour of the Day, none of the Clergy or People being present; and lastly, because another Bishop was before regularly Ordain'd. Cornelius both here,

(h) Hence we may gather that Cornelius degraded the Bishops which assisted in the Consecration of Novatianus, and also Excommunicated them all, except one who by the mediation of the People, obtain'd the priviledge of the Communion which the Laicks have; which was to kiss the Bishop after they had taken the Eucharist of him, as Hieronymus and Paulus Diaconus affirm. Vales.

(i) This is spoken ironically of Novatianus, because he himself (as Cyprian in his first Epistle to Cornelius witnesseth) boasted he was a Defender of the Gospel of Christ. Vales.

(k) The same words [ἕνα ἐπίσκοπον δεῖν εἶναι ἐν καθολικῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ] are in the Epistle of Cornelius to Cyprian: Where the Confessors, who deserted Novatianus, use these words, as a renunciation of their former Principles; by this ἐκκλησία καθολική, is here meant the Church of Rome. Vales.

(l) Hence we may gather how many Churches there were then at Rome, for every Presbyter had his particular Church; so that if there were 46 Presbyters, there were also 46 Churches: See Baronius in the Year of Christ 57. Vales.

(m) Some Editions read κλυδώμενοι, others κλινόμενοι; but without doubt the true Reading is θλιβόμενοι, that is, as Rufinus renders it, indigent Persons; or as the Roman Clergy explain it, Persons who could not maintain themselves. Chrysostome in his 67th Homily upon Matthew, saith, that the Church of Antioch in his Days, though it had but small Revenues, yet reliev'd above 3000 Widows and Virgins daily, besides Strangers, Lepers and Prisoners: And besides Clerks, whom it supplied with Meat and Cloathing. Vales.

(n) This word ἀπεχυθεὶς Rufinus very well renders perfusus, besprinkled; for People which were sick, and baptized in their Beds, could not be dipp'd in Water by the Priest, but were sprinkled with Water by him: This Baptism was thought imperfect, and not solemn for several reasons. Also they who were thus baptiz'd were called ever afterwards Clinici, and by the 12th Canon of the Council of Neocæsarea, these Clinici were prohibited Priesthood. Chrysostome describes this sort of Baptism in his 60th Homily, Tome the 2d. (to the Catechumeni:) Cyprian, in his 76th Epistle, holds this Baptism to be lawful and perfect. Vales.

Decius.

can be termed Baptiſm:) Neither when he had eſcaped that Sickneſs, did he afterwards receive the other things which the (o) Canon of the Church enjoyneth ſhould be received: Nor was he (p) ſealed by the Biſhop's Impoſition of Hands; which if he never receiv'd, how did he receive the Holy Ghoſt?" And again, a little after, he ſaith; 'This Man in the time of Perſecution, through timerouſneſs and a deſire of life, deny'd that he was a Presbyter. For being deſired and intreated by the Deacons that he would come out of his Chamber, in which he had ſhut himſelf up, and ſuccour the Brethren as far as it was meet and poſſible for a Presbyter to ſuccour the diſtreſſed Brethren, who wanted aſſiſtance: He was ſo far from complying with the Deacons who intreated him, that with great indignation he went his way, and departed. For he ſaid he would no longer be a Presbyter; but was a favourer of another kind of Philoſophy." Having ran over ſome few Paſſages, he makes this addition hereto in theſe words: 'For this excellent Fellow has deſerted the Church of God, in which, after he had receiv'd Baptiſm, he was (q) vouchſafed the Degree of Presbyter by the favour of the Biſhop, who by Impoſition of Hands Ordain'd him Prieſt: Who being (r) deny'd [Orders] by all the Clergy, and many of the Laity, (becauſe it was not lawful for one who had been baptized in his Bed by reaſon of ſome Infirmity, as he was, to be admitted into (ſ) any ſacred Order,) the Biſhop intreated licence might be granted him to Ordain this Perſon only." To theſe impious acts he afterwards ſubjoyneth this other, the worſt of all his wicked Exploits; ſaying thus; 'For he made Oblations, and diſtributed to every one a part thereof; which when he had (t) delivered, in ſtead of bleſſing them, he compelled the wretched Men to ſwear, holding the hands of him that received with both his hands, and not letting them go, till the Perſons had ſworn, pronouncing theſe words; (for I will here make uſe of his own words:) Swear to me by the Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that thou wilt never deſert me, and revolt to Cornelius. So the miſerable Man was not permitted to taſte before (u) he had curſed himſelf. And at the receiving of the Bread, inſtead of ſaying † Amen, he ſays, I will never return to Cornelius." Again, after ſome other words he ſays thus: 'Now you muſt underſtand he is ſtrip'd naked of all his Followers, and left deſolate. The Brethren daily deſerting him, and returning to the Church: And (x) Moſes a bleſſed Martyr, (who lately amongſt us ſuffered a famous and admirable Martyrdom,) taking notice in his life-time of this Man's Impudence and Folly, (y) depriv'd him of Communion, together with the five (z) Presbyters, who with him had voluntarily ſeparated themſelves from the Church." Now at the end of his Epiſtle, he makes a Catalogue of thoſe Biſhops who were preſent at Rome, and condemn'd the folly of Novatus. He alſo gives an account of their names, and the name of every one's particular Church, in which he govern'd. He does alſo expreſly mention thoſe, who were not then preſent [at Rome,] but by Letters approv'd of the Sentence of the foreſaid Biſhops, together with their names, and the names of the Cities, from which each of them wrote. Thus much Cornelius has recorded in his Epiſtle to Fabius Biſhop of Antioch.

Decius.

(o) The Canon was this, That they who were baptized in their beds, if they recovered again, ſhould afterwards go to the Biſhop, that he might ſupply what was wanting in that Baptiſm. Novatianus is here accuſed by Cornelius, becauſe, after his recovery, he never went to the Biſhop for the completion of Baptiſm, as the Canon of the Church injoineth: For it is expreſly commanded in the 47th Canon of the Council of Laodicea, and in Chap. 38. of the Council of Eliberis. Valeſ.

(p) Ruſinus thinketh that by this Phraſe [τὸ σφραγισθῆναι ὑπὸ τῦ ἐπισκόπυ] is meant the Chriſm, but I rather think he means the impoſition of Hands, by which the Biſhops gave the Holy Ghoſt to them who were baptized. Cyprian, to Jubaianus, confirms our interpretation. 'Tis true σφραγίζειν ſignifies to ſign, or mark, it alſo ſignifies, to lay hands on, as Innocentius uſes it in his 3d and 6th Chap. to Decentius, and Marcus in his Life of Porphyrius Biſhop of Gaza, and Ambroſe (or whoſoever it is who is the Author of thoſe Books) upon the 4th Chap. of Paul's Epiſtle to the Epheſians. This Sealing of the baptized was ſometimes perform'd with the Chriſm, (that is) when the Perſon, in caſe of approaching death, had been baptized by ſome of the inferiour Clergy, and not anointed; but if he had been perfectly baptized before, only impoſition of Hands by the Biſhop was required, as the Canon Arauſicanus tells us. Hence I conjecture aroſe the cuſtom of not uſing the Chriſm in Baptiſm amongſt the Novatians, (as Theodoret tells us they did not, in his third Book Hæret. Fabul.) becauſe their Ringleader Novatianus received Baptiſm without the Chriſm. Valeſ.

(q) Hence we may gather that Novatianus immediately received Prieſt's Orders, being never Ordained Deacon, or Subdeacon: Which thing was at that time cuſtomary in the Church, as we may ſee in Origen and others. Valeſ.

(r) Formerly Biſhops could not Ordain Prieſts without the conſent of the Clergy, and People. Now concerning the requiring of the People's Votes in the Election of Presbyters, the Nicene Fathers themſelves do evidence that, in their Synodical Epiſtle to the Biſhops of Egypt. Out of ſeveral places of that Epiſtle we may gather, that the conſent of the People was required in the Ordination of Clergy-men. The Holy Fathers alſo in that ſame Epiſtle deprive thoſe Biſhops who adhered to Meletius the Schiſmatick, of all Authority of propoſing their names to the People, who were to be admitted into Holy Orders, and only granted it to thoſe Biſhops who were pure from all Schiſm. For, in thoſe days, the Biſhops gave up the names of them who were to be Ordained to the People, that if they had any thing to object againſt any of them, they might atteſt it openly; as we may read in the Sacramentarium of Gregory the Great. There is alſo an excellent paſſage in St. Chryſoſtome upon the ſame thing in his 18th Homily upon the ſecond Epiſtle of Paul to the Corinthians. We have the whole Solemnity excellently deſcribed in the Sacramentarium of Gregory the Great, pag. 236. upon which place conſult the whole Annotations of that moſt learned Man Hugo Menardus. Valeſ.

(ſ) Κλῆρος ſignifies a Degree or Order of them who have any Office in the Church. So Cornelius calls κλῆρον πρεσβυτερίας, the Presbyterſhip. Euſebius and Irenæus very often uſe κλῆρον ἐπισκοπῆς for the Dignity of a Biſhop: κλῆρός τις ſignifies any degree whatſoever. Valeſ.

Decius.

(t) It was the proper duty of the Prieſt to deliver the Euchariſt, and the Cup into the Hands of the Receivers. See Chryſoſtome's 46 Homily upon Matthew: In the 2d Council of Orleans, Chap. 15. the Deacons are forbid to preſume to deliver the Body of Chriſt to the Believers, when the Prieſt is preſent. Valeſ.

(u) Every Oath has a Curſe annex'd to it, which though it is not always expreſſed (as in this place) yet may be tacitly underſtood; which thing the Latin Tranſlators did not take notice of, and hence they make αὐτῷ κατασῆσαι to ſignifie, before he had devoted himſelf to him (i. e.) as they ſuppoſed to Novatianus: But I had rather read it ἑαυτῷ, with George Syncellus. The meaning of the place then is this, That the unhappy Man was not permitted to taſte, before he had ſolemnly curſed himſelf. Valeſ.

† This Phraſe [ἀντὶ τῦ εἰπεῖν τὸ ἀμὴν, inſtead of ſaying Amen] has the ſame import with what Cornelius has ſaid a little before, viz. [ἀντὶ τῦ εὐλογεῖν, inſtead of bleſſing him.] For the faithful (when they received the Euchariſt from the hands of the Prieſt) uſed to anſwer Amen, after the Prieſt, delivering the Sacrament: had ſaid, The Body of our Lord, &c. See Ambroſ. in his B. 4. Chap. 5. De Sacrament: Cyril of Jeruſalem, in his laſt Catechiſm; and Auguſt. B. 12. Chap. 10. againſt Fauſtus, Valeſ.

(x) Concerning this Moſes, a Presbyter of Rome, Cyprian in his Epiſtles do ſpeak frequently. After the Martyrdom of Fabianus Biſhop of Rome (who ſuffered Anno Chriſti 250.) this Moſes was apprehended, (together with Maximus the Presbyter, and Nicoſtratus the Deacon,) caſt into Priſon, where after 11 Months and 11 Days, he dy'd. See Cyprian's 15th Epiſtle to Moſes and Maximus. Valeſ.

(y) Moſes being a Presbyter had no Authority to excommunicate his fellow-Presbyters: All he could do was to ſeparate himſelf from their Communion, when they came to viſit him in Priſon. This Phraſe here [ἀκοινώνησεν ἐποίησε, i. e. he deprived him of Communion] the ancient Writers frequently uſed, when they ſpake of thoſe Presbyters, who abſtained from Communion with others. See Paulinus in the Life of St. Ambroſe. Moſes's depriving of Novatianus of Communion was, I ſuppoſe, done by him a little before his death. For at firſt Moſes the Confeſſor had Communion with Novatianus: And when the Clergy of Rome wrote that Epiſtle to Cyprian (which among Cyprian's Epiſtles is accounted the 31,) Moſes then had Communion with Novatianus; for both of them ſubſcrib'd that Epiſtle. Moreover, Novatianus himſelf wrote an Epiſtle, as Cyprian atteſts in his Epiſtle to Antonianus: From which Epiſtle we may perceive the Wit and Eloquence of Novatianus; for that Epiſtle, we muſt confeſs, is a moſt elegant Piece; and it was written when Moſes had been a year in Priſon, as may be collected from Cyprian's Epiſtles to Moſes. Valeſ.

(z) Who theſe five Presbyters were, who with Novatianus made a Schiſm, 'tis to me unknown. I can't think that Maximus the Presbyter and Confeſſor, who with Urbanus, Sidonius, Nicoſtratus, and the reſt of the Confeſſors were ſeduced by Novatianus, adhered to his Party any long time. For Maximus and the reſt of the Confeſſors went went over to Novatianus's party after Moses's death. Indeed Novatianus separated himself from the Church before Moses's death, which happened in February, Decius 3, and Etruscus being Consuls: But the Confessors did not betake themselves to Novatianus's side till after Moses's death. So great was the power and authority of Moses. Besides, 'tis evident the Confessors were not dismist of their imprisonment till Moses was dead: For why should they be freed rather than Moses? Therefore they became Novatianus's followers after Moses's death. One Maximus, name-sake to Maximus the Presbyter and Confessor, seems to have been one of these five Presbyters; whom Novatianus sent as his Messenger afterwards into Africa. Vales.

CHAP. XLIV.

Dionysius's Story concerning Serapion.

Decius. DIONYSIUS Bishop of Alexandria sent Letters to to this same Fabius, who was something inclining to this Schism, and having discoursed several things concerning Repentance in his Letters to him, and also related the Combats of some who had undergone Martyrdom a little before at Alexandria, amongst other Stories, he relates a miraculous thing, which I thought necessary here to insert into this our History, it runs thus: 'I 'will here propose to you one Example which 'hapned amongst us. There was amongst us one Serapion an old Man, a Believer; who for a long time had liv'd blameless: But in the time of Persecution he lapsed; he often petition'd for pardon, (a) but no body gave attention to him, because he had sacrific'd. Being taken with Sickness, he remain'd for the space of three days speechless, and senseless: Being a little refresh'd on the fourth day, he called his Daughter's Son to him, and said, Child, how long do you detain me? I pray make haste, and absolve me quickly, call one of the (b) Presbyters to me: And when he had spoken these words, he was again speechless. The Child ran to the Presbyter. It was now Night; and the Presbyter also was sick, and not able to come. But (because I had before given command, [that those People who were dying, if they desired it, and (c) especially if they had before humbly requested it, should be (d) absolved, that they might depart with a lively hope) he (e) gave 'to the Child a piece of the Sacrament, bidding him to (f) moisten it in Water, and put it into the old Man's Mouth: The Child return'd with it. And when he approached, before he came in; Serapion again recover'd himself a little, and said, Child thou art come, the Presbyter was not able to come; but do thou perform quickly what he enjoyn'd thee, and let me depart. The Boy moisten'd it in Water, and put it into his Mouth immediately: And when he had swallow'd it by little and little, he straightway gave up the Ghost. Is it not plain that he was preserved, and his Life prolong'd till he was absolv'd, that his Sin being quite blotted out, he might for the several good Works he perform'd, be (g) acknowledg'd [by Christ?"] Thus much Dionysius.

(a) He means that none of the Clergy, or Laity, were moved with his entreaties so as to think him worthy of absolution. (For the People's Suffrages were required when any one was to be received into the Church, who for any fault had been excommunicated.) And the Bishop himself sometimes asked the Consent of the People, The People also did often intercede for the Penitents to the Bishop, as we may see in the preceding Chapter in the Epistle of Pope Cornelius to Fabian Bishop of Antioch. Vales.

(b) Some one may perhaps ask why Serapion did not rather send for the Bishop, whose Office it was to reconcile Penitents. The Bishop had given this Authority to the Presbyters, for fear, lest he being absent, any one should dye without Absolution and the Communion. See Epiphanius in his Heresie of the Arians. This custom of committing this Authority to the Presbyters was usual in all great Cities. Vales.

(c) This was the Decree of the African Synod about the same time that Dionysius wrote these things. Vales.

(d) In the Savil and Fuk. MSS. before this word [ἀφιέσθαι] there are some Words inserted which also Christophorson inserts in his Translation: It may appear from this place that the Sacrament was delivered to such Penitents in case of necessity, without the reconciliatory imposition of Hands. And this Communion was called, the Vitaticum. See Canon the 77 and 78 of the 4th Council of Carthage, and the 39th Canon of the first Council of Arausica: This Communion was called also dispensatoria, because it was granted to dying Penitents, before the completion of the full time appointed for Repentance, and if the penitent Communicant recovered, it was perfected after his recovery by Imposition, he compleating his time of Repentance. Vales.

(e) This that Dionysius here says concerning the giving of the Eucharist to the Boy to carry to the sick Person, ought not to seem strange, for it was frequently done a long time after; So that St. Udalric thought it necessary expresly to prohibit it, in his Synodical Speech which Gretser published, together with the Life of Gregory the Seventh, Chap. 20. But that which Gretser takes to be St. Udalric's Oration, I found lately to be the Synodical Epistle of Ratherius Bishop of Verona to his Clergy. And so 'tis entitled in the old Laudunensian MS. Vales.

Decius. (f) Rufinus translates this Phrase ἐπιῤῥέξαι κελεύσας, thus, He commanded it should be given him being dipped. So the Ancients us'd to dip the Consecrated Bread in Water, as Adamannus witnesseth in his 2d Book concerning the Miracles of St. Columba, Cap. 6. And Bede also in the Life of St. Cuthbert, Chap. 31. and in his Poem upon the same Man's Life; and several other Ecclesiastical Writers. But the Eucharists being put into the mouth of sick Persons, is mentioned in the 76th Canon of the 4th Council of Carthage; which Canon is, concerning sick Persons, who desired Repentance, but were speechless before the Priest came to them. See the Contents of that Canon. Vales.

(g) Langus, Wolfius and Musculus render ὁμολογηθῆναι in this place by the Latin word confiteri; which, in my opinion, is intolerable. Christophorson renders it, in numerum Confessorum referri, to be reckoned amongst the Confessors: Which translation I like, if it be understood thus, referri à Christo, to be reckoned by Christ. For Dionysius alludeth to Christ's Words in the Gospel; He who shall confess me before Men, him will I also confess before my Father, &c. Matth. 10. 32. Vales.

CHAP. XLV.

Dionysius's Epistle to Novatus.

LET us now see what the same Person wrote to Novatus, who about this time disturb'd the Fraternity of the Roman Church. Take notice therefore how he writes to him, because he pretended that some of the Brethren were the Authors of his Apostacy and Schism, and how he yielded to it, being compelled by them. 'Dionysius sendeth greeting to our 'Brother (a) Novatus. If 'you (as you say) were seduced unwillingly, you 'should manifest it by a 'voluntary return. For better it were to endure any 'thing whatever, than that 'the Church of God should 'be rent asunder. Nor were 'Martyrdom less honourable if a Man suffer death 'before he will yield to 'raise Schism in the Church, 'than if he undergo it rather than he will yield to 'sacrifice to Idols. Yea, in 'my opinion, 'tis much 'more glorious, for in that 'case Man suffers Martyrdom for his own Soul's 'sake only: But in this he undergoes it for the 'sake of the whole Church. Wherefore now, 'if you can perswade or compel the Brethren to 'return to concord, your Good Deed will be 'greater than your Crime; for this will not be 'imputed to you; but that will be commended. 'But if you can effect nothing upon the Disobedient, save your own Soul. I wish you Health, 'and that you may embrace Peace in the Lord." These things he wrote to Novatus.

(a) Hieronymus, in his Catalogue, where he relates the beginning of this Epistle, in stead of Novatus more truly writes Novatianus. And so in George Syncellus's Chronicle we read Διονύσιος Νοβατιανῷ Rufinus says that Dionysius wrote two Epistles after the same Copy; one to Novatus, another to Novatianus; and at the end of Dionysius's Epistle to Novatus, which Eusebius here rehearseth, he adds thus much, And he wrote these same Words to Novatianus: Which Words are no where found in the Greek Text. The Greek Writers being deceived through the likeness of the Names, make a confusion betwixt Novatus, and Novatianus, using them both to signifie one and the same Person. Our Author Eusebius is also guilty of this mistake. Vales.

Decius.

CHAP. XLVI.

Concerning Dionyſius's other Epiſtles.

HE alſo wrote an Epiſtle concerning Repentance to them (a) in Egypt; in which he layeth down his Opinions concerning the Lapſed, and makes diſtinctions in the degrees of Faults. There is alſo extant a particular Book of his concerning Repentance, to Conon Biſhop of the Church of Hermopolis. And another (b) objurgatory Epiſtle to his Flock at Alexandria. And amongſt them there is an Epiſtle written to Origen concerning Martyrdom: And an Epiſtle to the Brethren at Laodicea, over whom Thelymidres was Biſhop: He alſo writ concerning Repentance to the Brethren in Armenia, over whom (c) Meruzanes was Biſhop. He writes to all theſe, and alſo to Cornelius Biſhop of Rome, after he had received his Epiſtle concerning Novatus: Where he declares that he was invited by Helenus Biſhop of Tarſus in Cilicia, and thoſe who were with him; and alſo by Firmilianus Biſhop of Cappadocia, and by Theoctiſtus Biſhop of Paleſtine, to meet them at the Synod at Antioch, where ſome Men endeavour'd to eſtabliſh the Novatian Schiſm. (d) Moreover, he ſends him word that he had heard Fabius was dead, and that Demetrianus was appointed to be his Succeſſor in the Biſhoprick of Antioch. He alſo writes concerning the Biſhop of Jeruſalem in theſe very words: 'Alſo bleſſed Alexander being in Priſon, there 'died a happy death." There is extant beſides this another Epiſtle of his ſent by Hippolytus to the Brethren at Rome, concerning the (e) Office of a Deacon. He alſo wrote another to them concerning Peace, and concerning Repentance likewiſe. And again he wrote another to the Confeſſors there, who even at that preſent were favourers of Novatus's Opinion. He alſo ſent to thoſe ſame Men two other Epiſtles, after their return to the Church. He alſo compiled many more Epiſtles written to divers perſons, wherein he has left to them, who at this time ſtudiouſly peruſe his Works, variety of profit.

(a) Hieronymus in his Book concerning the Eccleſiaſtick Writers, ſaith, that Dionyſius wrote this Epiſtle about Repentance, and the Order and Degree of Sins, to the Armenians. Valeſ.

(c) In the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. inſtead of μερυζάνης, 'tis μερυαζάνης; he was Biſhop of Armenia the Leſs, as I think. Valeſ.

(d) We muſt underſtand this News was written in the ſame Epiſtle, and not in another, as Chriſtophorſon thinks. Valeſ.

(e) Ruſinus tranſlates Διακονικὴν de Miniſteriis, as if the Epiſtle were ſo intitled, becauſe it treated concerning the Miniſters of the Church. Jacobus Goar, who publiſhed Georgius Syncellus, and illuſtrated him with his Notes, thinks that this Διακονικὴ was a kind of an Eccleſiaſtick Epiſtle, as were the Synodical, the Dimiſſory-Epiſtles, and the like: But I rather aſſent to Ruſinus, that it was called Διακονικὴ, becauſe it treated concerning the Duty of a Deacon. Valeſ.

EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS.

The PREFACE.

DIonyſius the Great, Biſhop of Alexandria, ſhall again aſſiſt us with his Words in the Compoſure of of this Seventh Book of the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory; who particularly relates all the Actions of his own Times, in the Epiſtles which he left to Poſterity: And our Narration ſhall take its beginning from hence.

CHAP. I.

Concerning the Wickedneſs of Decius and Gallus.

Gallus.

GALLUS ſucceeds Decius, who was ſlain in a ſhort time, together with his (a) Children, before he had fully compleated the (b) Second Year of his Reign. (c) About this time died Origen, having lived Seventy Years wanting one. But Dionyſius in his Epiſtle to Hermammon, writes thus concerning Gallus: 'But neither did Gallus underſtand what 'was Decius's Deſtruction; neither did he before 'ſee what brought his Ruin; But he alſo ſtumbled upon the ſame Stone, which lay before his Eyes. He, (his Kingdom being in a happy ſtate, and all Affairs ſucceeding according 'to his (d) deſire) perſecuted the Holy Men 'who offer'd up their Prayers to God for his 'Peace and Safety, and together with them, drove 'away thoſe Prayers, by which they interceded 'for him." This he writes concerning Gallus.

(a) Decius the Emperor had 2 Sons, the elder was named Quintus Herennius Etruſcus Meſſius Decius; The younger, Caius Valens Hoſtilianus Meſſius Quintus. They were both made Cæſars by their Father, and afterwards Auguſti, as may appear by their Coins, and the Inſcriptions upon them. Valeſ.

(b) Euſebius in his Chronicle ſaith, Decius reign'd one year and three months. Aurelius Victor ſaith, he died after he had reign'd two Years compleat. But Victor in his Epitomy ſaith he reigned thirty months. Euſebius in his Chronicle aſſigns one year and three months to Decius, becauſe he had before ſaid that Philip reign'd ſeven years, whereas he reigned but ſix. After his Death Decius proclaim'd himſelf both Emperor and Conſul, which was in the Year of Chriſt 249. And in the Year 250. he was again Conſul: And alſo the Year after he kept his Government, as we may gather by a Decree of the Senate which was made in that Year, which Pollio in Valerian relates. Wherefore he died the Year following, together with his Sons (when Gallus and Voluſianus were Conſuls,) being all kill'd in the Wars in Thrace. Valeſ.

(c) Baronius placeth Origen's Death at the Year of Chriſt 256. in the third Year of Gallus and Voluſianus: Euſebius here placeth it in the ſame year that Decius died, and Gallus began to govern. But Euſebius himſelf in the 36th Chapter of the 6th Book of this Hiſtory confirmeth what Baronius ſaith: For he ſays that in the 3d Year of Philip the Emperor's Reign, Origen was above 60 years old. And from the 3d Year of Philip's Reign to the 3d Year of Gallus and Voluſianus's Conſulſhip, 'tis 9 years. Moreover, if we ſay Origen liv'd 69 years, and died in the firſt year of Gallus the Emperor, he muſt neceſſarily be born in the 4th year of Commodus the Emperor: But the Chronicon Alexandr. aſſigns his Birth to the 9th Year of that Emperor. Valeſ.

CHAP. II.

Who about theſe Times were Biſhops of Rome.

COrnelius having poſſeſs'd the Biſhoprick of Rome about three years, Lucius was appointed his Succeſſor. He having miniſtred in the Office not eight whole months, died, and relinquiſhed the Dignity to Stephen. It was this Stephen to whom Dionyſius wrote the firſt of his Epiſtles concerning Baptiſm, there being about that time a great Controverſie raiſed, whether it were lawful for the Converts, of what Sect ſoever, to be cleanſed by Baptiſm. (a) For an old Cuſtom had prevail'd, that about theſe Converts only Impoſition together with Prayer was to be uſed.

(a) At theſe words we ſhould begin the 3d Chapt. for what follows concerning Cyprian, ought to be contain'd in the ſame Sentence with theſe laſt words in this Chapter. And before theſe words in all Books we find a diſtinction, which ſhews, here is to begin another Period. But Muſculus and Chriſtoph. begin the third Chapter where we do. Valeſ.

CHAP. III.

How Cyprian, with ſome Biſhops which were of his mind, was the firſt that was of the Opinion, that the Converts of any Heretical Sect whatever, ought to be a rebaptized.

CYprian then Biſhop of Carthage was the (a) firſt of all, who thought, that Hereticks ſhould not be admitted unleſs they were cleanſed

(a) Cyprian was not the firſt Author of this Opinion; but Agrippinus, who was Biſhop of Carthage a long time before before him, having aſſembled together the Biſhops of Africa and Numidia, made a Decree that Hereticks ſhould be re-baptiz'd, as Cyprian ſaith in his 71 and 73 Epiſtles. Therefore Cyprian ought here to be excuſed, who only endeavoured to maintain his Predeceſſors Opinion, which was eſtabliſh'd by the Authority of a Synod. But this Cuſtom of re-baptizing Hereticks, had been uſed in Cappadocia time out of mind, as Firmilianus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia teſtifieth in his Epiſtle to Cyprian. Valeſ.

Gallus. from their former Error by Baptiſm. (b) But Stephen thinking no Innovations ought to be raiſed in oppoſition to the Tradition which had prevailed of old, was in no wiſe well pleaſed the Biſhops at this.

(b) The Epiſtle of Stephen to the Biſhops of Africa is in the 74 and 75 Epiſt. of Cyprian. Firmilianus alſo, in his Epiſtle to Cyprian, relates ſome Heads of that Epiſtle, and confutes them. Valeſ.

CHAP. IV.

How many Epiſtles Dionyſius wrote concerning this Controverſie.

* To Stephen. DIonyſius therefore having written at large to * him concerning this buſineſs, at laſt certifieth him, that the Perſecution being allay'd, the Churches in all places, which deteſted Novatus's (a) Novelties, had regain'd a general Peace amongſt themſelves: Thus he writes.

(a) Νεωτερηγποίια (the term here) has ſome alluſion to Novatus, or Novatianus's name: Other Greek Authors call that which the Latines call Novitates hæreſeon, Novelties, Innovations, or newneſs of Doctrine, νεωτερηγποίιας. Valeſ.

'(d) frequently relieve, and to whom you have now written: Meſopotamia alſo, Pontus, and Bithynia: And in a word, all People every-where rejoyce for the Concord and Brotherly-love, and praiſe God." Theſe are the words of Dionyſius. But Xyſtus ſucceeds Stephen after he had executed the Epiſcopal Office two years. To him Dionyſius wrote a ſecond Epiſtle concerning Baptiſm, and ſet forth to him the Judgment and Opinion of Stephen, and the other Biſhops. Concerning Stephen thus he writes: 'Indeed he before '(e) wrote Letters concerning Helenus and Firmilianus, and all the [Biſhops] of Cilicia, Cappadocia, and Galatia. And moreover, concerning all the neighbouring Provinces, that he would have no communion with them for this very reaſon, becauſe, ſays he, they rebaptize Hereticks. And conſider the weightineſs of the Affair; for truly I hear that there have been Determinations made in the (f) greateſt Synods of Biſhops concerning this buſineſs, that Hereticks which were converted, ſhould be firſt Catechized, and then ſhould be waſh'd and cleanſed from the Filth of their old and unclean Leaven. And I wrote to him, making interceſſion for all theſe Men. And afterwards he ſays; Alſo to our Well-beloved and Fellow-Presbyters, Dionyſius and Philemon (who were formerly of Stephen's Opinion, and wrote to me concerning the ſame things) I before wrote in ſhort, but now I have written more at large." But thus much concerning the ſaid Controverſie.

(d) The Church of Rome was wont formerly to relieve other Churches, and to ſend Money and Cloaths to the Brethren in Captivity, and to thoſe which wrought as Slaves in the Mines. So Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth ſaith in his Epiſtle to Pope Soter; which Epiſtle Euſebius quotes in his 4th B. Chap. 23. Euſebius alſo in that ſame place ſays, that this laudable cuſtom continued in the Church of Rome in his days. And to that purpoſe Collections were made in the Church. Ἐπαρκεῖν properly ſignifies, to ſupply one with all things neceſſary for a journey, viaticum præbere, and alſo it ſignifies (as it does here) to relieve charitably, as we do Beggars, with Money, or Alms. So Clemens Alex. in his firſt Book Stromat. and Chryſoſt. in his 67 Homily upon Matthew, uſe the word. Valeſ.

(e) Stephen wrote another Epiſtle (beſides that we mentioned, before he wrote to the Biſhops of Africa) to the Eaſtern Biſhops, which Firmilianus mentions in his Epiſtle to Cyprian, near the end: Where Firmilianus ſays, that he broke off all Peace and Friendſhip with the Eaſtern Biſhops, but he did not, only threatned that he would renounce all communion with them, if they perſiſted in their old Opinion, as Dionyſius here expreſly teſtifieth. It is certain that Stephen never proceeded in this matter farther than threats; for after Stephen's death, Dionyſius wrote to Xyſtus deſiring his judgment in that point. For Dionyſius inclined to the Opinion of the Africans, and the Eaſtern Biſhops, as Hieronymus witneſſeth. Firmilianus in his foreſaid Epiſtle does ſtrangely aggravate the buſineſs; ſo that ſome think from his words they may gather that Stephen excommunicated thoſe Biſhops: He was indeed much diſpleaſed that the African Synod ſhould pretend to diſannul ſo ancient a cuſtom, and make Decrees, that Hereticks ſhould be rebaptized, without the knowledge of the Church of Rome: But he never broke Peace with them, nor excommunicated them: For he wrote an anſwer to Cyprian. And altho' his Letters to Cyprian were ſomething ſharp, yet they ſtill remain'd Friends: For Cyprian afterwards in his Letters to Pompeius, called Stephen Brother. In fine, the Africans, notwithſtanding Stephen's Letters, rebaptiz'd Hereticks till the Times of Conſtantine, as we may ſee from the Council of Orleans. Valeſ.

(f) He means by theſe great Synods, the Synod of Iconium, of which ſee Firmilianus's Epiſtle to Cyprian; the Council of Synnada, and the Council of Carthage under Cyprian: In which Council above eighty Biſhops gave their Opinion, ſome of which were Martyrs and Confeſſors: In the Council of Iconium fifty Biſhops met, as Auguſt. atteſts in Book 3. and Chap. 3. againſt Creſconius. But the Eaſtern Churches, eſpecially the Churches of Cappadocia, ſtill retained their old cuſtom of rebaptizing Hereticks. And that cuſtom remained amongſt them even till the firſt Synod of Conſtantinople. Valeſ.

CHAP. V.

Concerning the Peace which followed the Perſecution.

(a) Baronius from this Epiſt. of Dionyſius's (at the Year of Chriſt 259) gathers that the Eaſtern Biſhops had renounced their Error, and adher'd to Stephen's Opinion, that Hereticks were not to be rebaptiz'd.

'(a) BUT know (my Brother,) that all the Churches throughout the Eaſt, amongſt which there were formerly Diviſions, are now united." (b) And a little farther he writes, And all the Prelates every-where are in perfect concord, as to their Sentiments, and rejoyce exceedingly for this unexpected Peace: [to wit,] Demetrianus Biſhop of Antioch; Theoctiſtus of Cæſarea, Mazabanes of (c) Ælia, Alexander being dead, Marinus of Tyre; Heliodorus of Laodicea, Thelymidres being deceaſed; Helenus of Tarſus, and all the Churches of Cilicia; Firmilianus, and all Cappadocia. For I have here only named the more eminent Biſhops, that my Epiſtle might not be too long, nor my Relation troubleſome: Alſo all the Provinces of Syria and Arabia, whom you

But any conſiderate Reader of this Epiſtle will find it far otherwiſe. For the Subject of this Epiſtle is twofold. 1. Whether Hereticks were to be rebaptized. 2. Concerning the Unanimity of the Oriental Churches, which had abominated the Novatian Hereſie, and decreed that the Lapſed ſhould be received. He therefore tells him, that Demetrianus Biſhop of Antioch, Metropolitan of the Eaſt, and the reſt had ſubſcribed to this Opinion; which he knew would pleaſe Stephen, becauſe Fabius, Demetrianus's Predeceſſor, endeavour'd to eſtabliſh the Novatian Hereſie, as Dionyſius before ſignified in the end of the 6th Book of this Hiſtory. Valeſ.

(b) Theſe words [καὶ ἔτι προϊόντως, 'and a little farther,'] are not in the Fuk. and Savil MSS. but Syncellus, Nicephorus, King's, Maz. and Med. MSS. have them; and though ſome will have theſe words to ſignifie προϊοντως Ἐκκλήσιαι, the more remote Churches, yet I think that they are Euſebius's own words, repeating the Heads of Dionyſius's Epiſtle. And this is my Reaſon, becauſe in moſt of our MSS. there is a middle diſtinction at theſe words; therefore we tranſlate it thus, a little further he writes. Valeſ.

(c) This City was in Dionyſius's Days, and alſo till Conſtantinus's Time called Ælia. It was afterwards called Jeruſalem (as I before noted) through the Pride of the Biſhops of that See, who termed themſelves the Succeſſors of James the Juſt: Hence is it that Rufinus never calls it Ælia, but according to the manner of his Times, always Jeruſalem. Valeſ.

CHAP. VI.

Concerning the Hereſie of Sabellius.

(a) AFter this Head of diſcourſe, he informs him of the (b) Sabellian Hereticks, who at that

(a) Inſtead of σημαίνων ἐν τούτῳ, the King's MS. reads ἐπ' αὐτῷ, which reading we follow, and underſtand κεφαλαίῳ, which word is uſed in Euſebius before. Now ἐπ' αὐτῷ κεφαλαίῳ, ſignifies, Poſt illud capitulum, after that Chapter, or Head of his Diſcourſe. Dionyſius's Epiſtle to Xyſtus conſiſted of two principal Heads, which were the Matter and Subject of the whole, (viz.) Concerning Hereticks being rebaptized, and concerning Sabellius's Hereſie. Valeſ.

(b) Theſe Hereticks were very ancient, even before Sabellius, though thoſe those who maintained these Opinions were afterwards also denominated from Sabellius. For we find this was the Opinion of Praxeas, against whom Tertullian wrote. After Praxeas followed Noetus, (See Epiphan. Hæres. 57.) from whom they were called Noetiani. Suddenly after Noetus arose Sabellius, from whom all which held the same Opinion, were afterwards called Sabellians. This Sabellius (the reviver of this Heresie) was a Lybian, born at Ptolemais a City of Pentapolis: He affirmed the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, to be but one Subsistence, one Person under three several Names, which in the time of the Old Testament gave the Law under the notion of the Father: In the New, was made Man in the capacity of the Son, and descended afterwards upon the Apostles, in the quality of the Holy Ghost. Dionysius undertakes this Man; but managing the Cause with too much eagerness and fervency of disputation, he bent the Stick too much the other way, asserting not only ἑτερότητα τῆς ὑποστάσεως, a distinction of Persons, but also ἄνισας διαφορὰς, a difference of Essence, and an inequality of Power and Glory. Upon which account he is severely censured by St. Basil, (Epist. 41. ad Magn. Philosoph.) and others of the Ancients, as one of those who in a great measure opened the Gap to those Arian Impieties, which afterwards broke in upon the World.

Gallus. time abounded mightily; and thus he writes; 'For concerning the Opinion which lately 'sprung up at Ptolemais a City of Pentapolis, which 'is impious, and full of Blasphemies against God 'Almighty, Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; 'and contains much Infidelity against his only-'begotten Son, the first-begotten of every Crea-'ture, the Word that was conversant amongst 'Men; and is full of stupidity and senselesness 'about the Holy Ghost: When Letters came to 'me from both Parties and Brethren to discourse 'with me, I wrote some (c) Epistles according to 'my ability with God's assistance, explaining 'those [Points] more at large like an Instructor: 'Of which Epistles I have sent you Copies.

(c) Dionysius here seems to mean his Epistle to Ammon Bishop of Bernice, and that to Telesphorus, and that to Euphranor: All against Sabellius. Eusebius mentions these Epistles, in Chap. 26. of this seventh Book. Athanasius in his defence of Dionysius Alexandrinus mentions but one Epistle of Dionysius's to Ammonius and Euphranor. Dionysius was accused by some Bishops of Egypt, for speaking some things about Christ in that Epistle which were not Orthodox. Vales.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning the most execrable Error of the Hereticks, and concerning the Vision sent from God, which appeared to Dionysius, and the Ecclesiastick Canon he received.

THE same Dionysius in his third Epistle concerning Baptism, written to Philemon, Presbyter of the Church of Rome, annexeth these words: 'I have read over the Books and Tra-'ditions of the Hereticks, defiling my Mind for 'a little while with their most accursed Inven-'tions: Indeed, I received this advantage from 'them, that I can the better confute them in 'my own thoughts, and do grow to a greater 'detestation of them. And when one of my Bro-'ther-Presbyters prohibited me, fearing lest I 'should be mixed and disordered with the Filth 'of their Wickedness; (for he said my Mind 'would be defiled, and truly I was sensible he said 'true:) a Vision sent from God corroborated me. 'And a voice came to me, which gave me 'this express command, saying, Read all things 'that thou shalt take into thy hands, for thou art 'able to search into, and to examine every thing, 'and this was the principal cause of thy becoming 'a Christian: I gladly received the Vision, as 'being consonant with the (a) Words of the Apo-'stle, who speaketh thus to those who are able,

(a) These Words γίνεσθε δόκιμοι τραπεζῖται, be ye skilful Tryers or Examiners, are no where found in the Apostle. Indeed we have, in the first Epistle to the Thessalonians Chap. 5. ver. 21. these Words, Prove all things, and hold fast that which is good: Which are the same in effect with these, be ye Tryers, &c. But Origen and Hieronymus say that these words, Estote boni Trapezitæ, are an express command of our Saviour's: And that the place out of the Thessalonians above-quoted has relation to these words δόκιμοι τραπεζῖται, and exactly agrees with them; wherefore I am of the same mind with the Learned Usher, who in his Proleg. to Ignatius's Epist. cap. 8. says, this command of Christ is taken out of the Gospel according to the Hebrews. These words are also quoted in Cyril Hierosolymit. his 6 Catechism, near the end. Vales.

'Be ye skilful * Examiners." Afterwards, having spoken something concerning all the Heresies, he continues, saying; 'I received this Rule and 'Canon from Heraclas our Blessed Pope. For 'those who were Converts from Heresies, (altho' 'they were (b) Apostates from the Church; or 'rather not Apostates, but seemingly assembled 'themselves, and were privately discovered to 'frequent any of the Heterodox Teachers) he ex-'communicated, and would not again admit 'them into the Church although they intreated 'him before they had made a publick Confession 'of what they had heard from the adverse Party. 'And then he again admitted them to Commu-'nion, but thought no second Baptism was re-'quisite for them, because they had before re-'ceived Holy * [Baptism] from him." Again, after a copious discourse upon this Question, he thus concludes: 'This furthermore I understand, 'that the Africans of this Age were not the 'only Introducers of this Custom, but this was 'established long before by Bishops, who were 'before our Age, in their most populous Assem-'blies, and in the (c) Synods of the Brethren at 'Iconium, and at Synnada, and amongst many o-'ther Persons; whose Sentiments and Determi-'nations I will by no means overthrow, nor ex-'cite them to Contention and Strife. For it is Gallus.

* The term in the original is τραπεζῖται, which word occurs Matt. 25. 27. where our Translation renders it Exchangers. The Israelites being bound by the Law (Exod. 30. 13.) to come up to Jerusalem, how far soever they dwelt from it, and there to sacrifice and offer the half-shekel for the use of the Temple, (which by the length of their journey they were sometimes disabled to do) these Trapezitæ set up their Tables in the very Temple, that so they might traffick with all that had use of them; in like manner as others brought Oxen and Sheep and Doves, to sell there to them which had not brought their Sacrifices with them. See Dr. Hammond on Matt. 21. v. 12.

(b) Here we may see the Difference between Apostates, and those which are simply called Hereticks. Apostates were them, who had been baptized in the Catholick Church, but had deserted the Church and revolted to Hereticks: Simple Hereticks were those who had never been admitted into the Church. And this was the custom in the Church, that Apostates as well as simple Hereticks should be received (when they returned to the Church) by imposition of Hands. St. August. in his 48 Epistle to Vincentius saith, the Church dealt more kindly with them who were never received into the Church, (that is with them who were simply Hereticks) than with them who had been received into her, and deserted her, (that is Apostates.) This is therefore the sense of Dionysius's words here, as we may gather by the aforementioned Words of St. August. Dionysius here says, Heraclas his Predecessor had this form of admitting Converts, who had been Apostate Hereticks, into the Church. He required a publick Confession (which is called Exomologesis) of the Principles of that Heresie which they had followed; but he did not baptize them, because they had been before baptized: Immediately after this Confession he laid his Hands upon them (as we may gather from Dionysius's words;) this imposition of hands upon an Apostate, and a simple Heretick, was different. The one was ad pœnitentiam, in order to Repentance: The other was ad tradendum Spiritum Sanctum, for the delivery of the Holy Ghost; the first was used at the admission of Apostates, the other at the admission of them whom they called pure Hereticks. See Cyprian's Epistle to Stephanus. Vales.

* In the Med. MS. and Rob. Stephen's Edit. the reading is [τὸ γὰρ ἅγιον πνεύματος, &c. for they had received the holy Spirit, &c.] In the King's, Maz. and Fuk. MSS. the word [πνεύματος, Spirit] is wanting: Which in my judgment is the truest reading. For Dionysius gives the reason why Heraclas did not reiterate Baptism in the admission of Hereticks in these words [τὸ γὰρ ἅγιον πρότερον παρ' αὐτοῦ τετυχήκεσαν] [understand βαπτίσματος, Baptism] [for they had before received Holy Baptism from him.] Dionysius calls Baptism Holy, to difference it from the Baptism of Hereticks; which Cyprian, Firmilian. and others (who at that time defended the opinion of not rebaptizing Hereticks) call profane: Dionysius was a favourer of their party, as appears both from his Epistles here quoted by Eusebius, and also from St. Jerom's Testimony. Vales.

(c) That these Synods were before Dionysius Alexand. his time, we may easily gather by his own Words here: For he expressly affirms that these Synods were πολλῷ πρὸ ἡμῶν, long before our time. The same thing Firmilianus witnesseth, in his Epistle to Cyprian concerning the Synod of Iconium. This Synod was a long time before the Days of Stephen Bishop of Rome, as we may gather by Firmilianus's Words in his said Epistle to Cyprian, where he expressly affirms that this Synod

of Iconium had been long ſince aſſembled: Alſo Dionyſius Alexand. in his Epiſtle to Philemon Presbyter of Rome, which he wrote about the beginning of the preſidency of Xyſtus, ſaith, that this Synod was ſolemnly aſſembled by the Biſhops which preceded him a long time. Therefore this Synod ſeems to have been aſſembled about the end of Alexander Severus's Reign: About which time, as Euſebius in the 6th Book of this Hiſtory recordeth, Firmilianus was newly promoted to the Dignity of Prieſt in the Church of Cæſarea. Therefore I cannot aſſent to Baronius and Binius, who reckon this Synod of Iconium in the Year of Chriſt 258, which was the 2d Year of Stephen's preſidency. Valeſ.

Gallus. ‘written: Thou ſhalt not remove thy neighbour's land- ‘mark, which thy fathers have ſet in thine inheritance.” His fourth Epiſtle concerning Baptiſm, is written to Dionyſius, who was at that time Presbyter of the Church of Rome, and a little while after obtained the Biſhoprick there. From which Epiſtle we may learn what a Learned and Admirable Man this ſame Dionyſius was, by Dionyſius Alexandrinus's Teſtimonies of him. After other things he writes to him in that Epiſtle concerning Novatus in theſe words:

CHAP. VIII.

‘FOR with ſufficient reaſon we abominate
‘(a) Novatianus, who ſtir'd up Schiſm in the ‘Church, and ſeduced ſome of the Brethren to ‘Blaſphemies and Impieties, and introduced moſt
‘prophane Doctrine concerning God, and calum-
‘niouſly accuſed our moſt gracious Lord Jeſus
‘Chriſt as unmerciful; beſides all theſe things he
‘(b) diſalloweth of Holy Baptiſm; and utterly ‘aboliſheth Faith, and the (c) Confeſſion of Faith
‘before Baptiſm: And he perfectly (d) baniſheth
‘the Holy Ghoſt from them, (although there,
‘were ſome hope that it ſtill reſted in them
‘or would return to them again.)

(a) The Maz. Med. Fuk MSS. read Νοουατιανῷ, and truly, as we afore-noted Book 6. Chap. 45. 'Tis ſtrange that we find the true name of this Heretick only in this place of Euſebius. Valeſ.

(b) Ἀθετεῖν τὸ λετρὸν ἅγιον· What may be the true meaning of ἀθετεῖν, in this place may be beſt conjectured by conſidering the divers Significations of the Word, for from the various meanings of the Word, aroſe the different Tranſlations of this place. Ἀθετεῖν ſometimes ſignifies to reject, to ſcorn, ſometimes to diſgrace, or diſhonour, as Heſych. ſaith, ἀθετεῖ, ἀτιμάζει, not to eſteem, or value one, but to deſpiſe: So Clemens Alexand. Stromat. Book 4. uſes the word. Οὐκ ἄνθρωπον ἀλλὰ τὴν θεὸν ἀθετεῖ. Novatianus who did not allow but condemn the Baptiſm of the Catholick Church, is fitly ſaid here ἀθετεῖν τὸ ἅγιον βάπτισμα· (i. e.) he rejected, and contemned that Baptiſm as unprofitable and ineffectual to Salvation. Valeſ.

(c) 'Twas the cuſtom for the Catechumeni, or Catechized, before the receiving of Baptiſm to repeat the Creed. And at every Article the Prieſt asked them whether they believed; to which they anſwered, Yes, I believe: Wherefore when they ſaid that they believed the Remiſſion of Sins, Novatianus who did not allow Remiſſion of Sins, but aboliſhed it, muſt alſo aboliſh that Confeſſion of Faith which the Catechized repeated before Baptiſm. See Cyprian's 70th and 76th Epiſtle. Valeſ.

(d) It is very difficult to underſtand what Dionyſius here means by ſaying, Novatianus baniſhed the Holy Spirit from the Brethren: Perhaps by the Holy Spirit he means the Grace which was given to Penitents by impoſition of Hands when they were admitted into Communion, after the performance of the duty of Repentance. But then theſe words are very obſcure (altho' there was ſome hope that it ſtill reſted in them, or would return to them again.) 'Tis plain and evident that Dionyſius here ſpeaks concerning them who had lapſed, but how can the Holy Spirit be ſaid to abide in them who had ſinned? Indeed it may be ſaid to return again to them after their Repentance, but can in no wiſe abide in them, for the Scripture ſaith, Every Soul which ſinneth ſhall likewiſe periſh. We muſt then underſtand it of them who had lapſed through weakneſs and ignorance: Who in thoſe days were called libellatici, or ſacrificers, (who had purchaſed libels of ſecurity from the Heathen Magiſtrate, for fear leſt they ſhould be compelled to ſacrifice) for ſuch as ſin through weakneſs or ignorance, do not forfeit the Grace of the Spirit: But if this explication pleaſe not, we will underſtand it ſpoken of the Faithful: Some of whom retained the Holy Spirit which they received in Baptiſm, ſome loſt it. From them who had loſt it, Novatianus utterly expelled and baniſhed the Holy Spirit, by denying them Repentance and Peace, by which the Grace of the Holy Spirit is regained; he drove it away from them who retained it, and kept it, by inſinuating into their minds falſe and ſiniſter Opinions of the Holy Ghoſt, as that he was unmerciful, implacable, &c. And ſo denied them, and utterly deprived them of all hopes of pardon for Sin committed. Valeſ.

CHAP. IX.

Gallus.

Concerning the Baptiſm of the Hereticks, that it is impious.

Dionyſius's Fifth Epiſtle was written to Xyſtus Biſhop of Rome. In which after much diſcourſe againſt Hereticks, he relates this very accident which hapned in his days. ‘For truly ‘(Brother) I want your advice, and deſire your ‘judgment. Such a thing as this, coming to my ‘knowledge, I fear leſt I ſhould err in it. For ‘one of the Congregation of the Brethren, who ‘was accounted an ancient Believer, a perſon who ‘had been a Member of the Congregation before
‘my Ordination, (yea, and as I think) before
‘ever bleſſed Heraclas was conſtituted Biſhop:
‘This Man (I ſay) being preſent at the Bap-
‘tiſm of ſome who were lately baptized, and ‘having heard the Queſtions and their Anſwers,
‘came to me weeping, and lamenting his own
‘caſe: And falling down at my Feet he made a ‘confeſſion of, and renounced the Baptiſm which ‘he had received from the Hereticks, that it was ‘not of this kind, neither had it any likeneſs at ‘all to this of ours; but was full of Impieties and ‘Blaſphemies. He alſo ſaid that he was now moſt ‘grievouſly prick'd in Mind, and had not the ‘confidence to lift up his Eyes to God, having ‘been initiated by ſuch impious words and ce‘remonies. For this reaſon he pray'd that he might

(a) υἱοθεσία is by Chriſtophor. rendred ſuſceptioin Eccleſiam, a receiving into the Church; 'tis by Muſculus rendred ſuſceptio only; which Verſion I rather approve of. For Baptiſm is termed υἱοθεσία, becauſe in it God receiveth us as his Sons: υἱοθεσία may alſo be tranſlated perceptio, for ſo Baptiſm is ſtiled in the MS. Acts of the Paſſion of St. Geneſius Mimus. Valeſ.

(b) When the Prieſt had finiſhed the ſolemn Prayer of the Euchariſt, all the People with a joint Acclamation uſed to ſay aloud Amen, (that is) ſo be it. We muſt underſtand that place of St. Paul in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinth. Chap. 14. v. 16. to be ſpoken in reference to this Cuſtom, in which place St. Paul taxeth the Hebrews, who uſed the Hebrew or Syrian Language commonly in their Oblations and Divine Service, when the Grecians were preſent with them, (as the Commentator ſays upon the place.) This word Amen denotes the aſſent of the People to the Prayer made by another before them, and it is an expreſſion of affirmation, which the Church ſtill retaineth. Valeſ.

(c) From theſe Words [τραπέζῃ προσάντα] we may gather that the Communicants came to the Altar, and received the Body of Chriſt from the Presbyter, ſtanding up, and not upon their Knees, as we do now: Had it not been ſo, Dionyſius would not have added προσάντα; which word we find to be properly uſed in reference to them who miniſter at the Altar. Chryſoſtom in his 41 Homily, upon the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinth. uſeth [ὁ παρεδρὸς τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ] for the Prieſt; but [οἱ προεστῶτες, or προσελθόντες] he uſeth to ſignifie the Laity. But in the 44 Canon of the Council of Laodicea all Communicants were prohibited from coming to the Altar, except the Prieſts. Valeſ.

(d) In the Primitive Church the faithful Communicants came to the Altar with their Hands carefully waſhed, and when they were about to receive the Body of our Lord, they ſtretched out their right Hands bending them and making them hollow, and they put their left Hands under them leſt they ſhould drop any of that Holy Food. See Chryſoſt. 3d Homil. upon the Epheſians, and alſo his 52 Homil. upon Matthew. Valeſ.

'Table, and can scarce endure to be present at 'the Prayers, altho' he be desired." There is also extant another Epistle of his, besides those beforespoken of concerning Baptism, which is directed from him and the Church he presided over, to Xystus and the Church at Rome. In which Epistle he enters into a prolix Argumentation about, and discourses at large upon the Question proposed. There is also extant another Epistle of his, besides these concerning Lucianus, which he wrote to Dionysius the Roman. But thus much concerning these things.

CHAP. X.

Concerning Valerian, and the Persecution in his Reign.

Valerian. MOreover, Gallus having not possessed the Empire two compleat years, was slain; Valerian and Gallienus his Son, succeeded in the Government. Again therefore, what Dionysius relateth concerning this [Valerian] we may gather out of his Epistle to Hermammon, in which he makes this Narration: 'This also is reveal'd 'to St. John; for saith he, '(a) And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things, and blasphemies, and power was given unto him, [to continue] 'forty and two months. It is matter of wonder to 'see how both these things are fulfilled in Valerian, and especially if we consider how he behaved himself before the Persecution, how kind 'and how loving he was to the Servants of God: 'For no Emperor of all his Predecessors was so courteously, so lovingly disposed towards them '(no not (b) those who are manifestly reported 'to have been Christians) as he was, who at the 'beginning of his Empire seem'd most merciful, 'most loving towards them. His whole Houshold was filled with pious Men, and was [seemingly] a Church of God. (c) But his Master, and '(d) Chief of the Magicians of Egypt, persuaded him to change his resolution: Bidding him murther and persecute those pure and holy Men, as being Impugners and Obstructors of accursed and abominable Sorceries. For there were then, and are yet living, Men, who with their very aspects, or (e) blowing upon, or words, are powerful enough utterly to dissipate the Cheats of noxious Demons. He advised him to perform impure Rites of Initiation, abominable Inchantments and execrable Sacrifices; to cut the Throats of miserable Infants, to sacrifice the Children of unhappy Parents, to rip open the Bowels of new-born Babes; and to tear in pieces and cut asunder God's own Workmanship, as if by these Acts he should purchase for himself a prosperous Felicity." He also adds these words: 'Indeed, (f) Macrianus offer'd acceptable Thank-offerings to the Demons for the Empire which he hoped for, who at first when he was named the Emperor's (g) Rationalist, did mind nothing that was reasonable, (h) or for the Publick: But he lay under the curse of the Prophet, which saith, (i) Wo to them who prophesie after their own hearts, and regard not the publick good. For he did not understand that there was a Providence which over-ruled all things. Neither had he regard to the Judgment of him, who was before all, is in all, and above all. Upon this account he was indeed an Adversary of his Catholick Church: But he alienated, and banished himself from the mercy of God, and fled away from his own * Salvation as far as he could; in this thing verifying his own name." After some other Passages he again saith: 'For Valerian, who was induced 'to act these things by his means, was exposed to Affronts and Reproaches, according to what was spoken to Esaias, saying, They have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations; I also will chuse their delusions, and recompence their sins upon them. (k) This Macrianus was most extraordinarily desirous of the

(a) Baronius (at the year of Christ 257. cap. 7.) does excellently well explain this passage of Dionysius's; to wit, concerning the space of time, during which Valerianus's Persecution lasted.

For whereas Valerian reigned almost seven years, as 'tis acknowledged by all; in his former three years he was mild towards the Christians, but in his latter triennium he raised a Persecution against the Church- Valerian began to reign in the year of Christ 253. (about the end of the year) Volusianus 2. and Maximus being Coss. This is manifest from the old Coins produced by Occo and Goltzius, wherein Valerian is inscribed TRIBVN. POTESTAT. 3. Consul 3. Also, TRIB. POT. 5. Cos. 4. The same may be gathered from Gallienus's Coins. Vales.

(b) By these Christian Emperors he means Philip the first Christian Emperor (as many of the Ancients do affirm) of the Romans: But because he speaks in the plural number, we may add Alexander Severus, who in his private Chappel had Christ's Image, and favoured the Christians. But Dionysius here means those Emperors who were called and thought to be Christians, not that they were really so. Vales.

(c) This ἀρχισυνάγωγος τῶν ἀπ' Αἰγύπτου μάγων, Baronius at the year of Christ 252. saith, was the same Man that excited the Alexandrians in the Reign of Decius to persecute the Christians. (See Chap. 41. Book 6. of this History:) But I think it was quite a distinct Person, namely Macrianus, he that was afterwards Emperor, who stirred up Valerian to persecute the Christians: This Macrianus was Valerian's Master or Tutor, and by his evil Counsel it was that Valerian raised this Persecution; which thing Dionysius's following Words do confirm. Vales.

(d) This ἀρχισυνάγωγος, is a term borrowed from the Jews; for in their Synagogues there were these degrees of Officers; the ἀρχισυνάγωγοι, or Rulers of the Synagogues; also Fathers of the Synagogues; Priests, Presbyters and Deacons of the Synagogues, whom they called Azanites; there were also Apostles and Patriarchs, who were set over all these: But what this ἀρχισυνάγωγος may mean in this place, we are yet to seek; Neither know we what these μάγοι ἀπ' Αἰγύπτου were, except we call them Aruspices or Diviners, who were at Rome: Or we may call them the Priests of Isis and Serapis, over whom this Macrianus was Ruler or Chief. Now these Magicians were prohibited by the Jews, but the Roman Emperors, in imitation of Alexander the Great, had these Magicians with them in their Camps and in all their Exploits. Dio says, M. Antony, in his expedition into Germany, took Arnuphis an Ægyptian Sorcerer along with him; so Valerian here had Magicians in his Army, and the Chief or Head of them was this Macrianus, as Dionysius attests. Vales.

Valerian.

(e) This Participle ἐμπνέοντες, Vales. renders insufflantes, (i. e.) blowing upon. For the Christians used to blow upon the Demons and their Delusions, Temples, and Images; shewing thereby that they abominated them: Concerning this usage amongst the Christians, see Brissonius's Notes in Commentar. ad Tit. Cod. Theod. de Feriis. And Heraldus in his Notes on Minucius Felix.

(f) This Phrase κατὰ γὰρ αὐτοῖς μακελανὸς, is spoken in reference to the δαιμόσι, the Demons, and not βασιλεῦσι, the Emperors, as some think; which interpretation if we should follow, the sense would be lost; but in our Translation the sense is plain and entire. And also although here we find Μακελῖνος, yet the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. read Μακελανὸς. So likewise the Writers of the Roman History, and the old Coins name this Tyrant. Vales.

(g) The Greeks call them ἐπὶ τῆς καθόλου λόγων, whom the Latines call Rationales, vel procuratores summæ rei; Receivers-General, or Stewards of the Emperor's Estate. Whose Procurator or Steward this Macrianus was, we cannot certainly tell; we must not suppose he was Valerian's. Vales.

(h) Dionysius here jesteth upon the word καθολικὸν, by which he meaneth both the Steward's Office, and also the Catholick Religion, from which signification some gather our Religion to be called καθολικὸς, quod sit rationalis, because 'tis rational: But I can scarce think that we can hence gather the Catholick Religion to be so called; for this word καθολικὸς does not signifie rationalis, except we understand λογοθέτης a Steward, or Rationalist. We find this Title attributed to the Church about the first Age after the Apostles, see B. 4. Chap. 15. pag. 59. and in the Acts of the Martyrdom of Pionius the Martyr, who suffered in the Reign of Decius Augustus, it is so termed: About which time several Heresies arose, and endeavoured by their Traditions to subvert the true Faith of Christ, and the Doctrine of the Apostles. At that time, that the true Church might be distinguished from the adulterate Conventicles of Hereticks, this name Catholick was attributed to the Congregation of the Orthodox Persons. Vales.

(i) This place out of the 13th Chap. of Ezek. vers. 3. μὴ καθόλου βλέπωσι, Hieronym. translates, non omninò vident, see not at all: But our Author Dionysius renders it as if it were τὴν καθόλου ψεύδειαν; accommodating the words of the Prophet, or rather of the Septuagint, to his own purpose. Vales.

* Robert Stephens reads [τῆς ἑαυτοῦ ἐκκλησίας, from his own Church:] But in the Kings, the Maz. Fuk. and Savil MSS. the reading is [τῆς ἑαυτοῦ σωτηρίας, from his own Salvation.] Vales.

(k) Christoph. thought these words [ὅτος δὲ τῇ βασιλείᾳ ὑπὲρ τὴν ἀξίαν ἐπιμανεὶς, he was most extraordinarily desirous of the Empire] were spoken concerning Valerian, when as 'tis plain they must be referred to Macrianus. For he could not possibly say of Valerian, that he was unfit for the Empire which he coveted, for he was a most eminent Man, the very chief of the City: And before he reigned (as Hiſtorians aver) was judged worthy of the Empire by common conſent. This Tranſlation and Miſtake of Chriſtoph. has alſo brought Baronius into an Error. Valeſ.

Valerian. ‘Empire, but being unable to put on the Imperial Dignity, becauſe of his feebleneſs of Body, he made his two Sons Emperors, who were Heirs of their Father's Iniquities. The Prophecy which God ſpake is moſt evidently accompliſhed in theſe two Brothers: Viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me: For he impoſed his own (l) evil Luſts which he could not enjoy, upon the Heads of his Children, and imprinted on them his own Wickedneſs and Hatred againſt God.” Thus much Dionyſius writeth concerning Valerian.

(l) Ων ἠπύχει we have rendred (which he could not enjoy) And if that reading [ἠπύχει] be true, it muſt be ſo rendred: The King's MS. and Steph. Edit. read [ἠπύχει·] But the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. read ὧν ἐυπύχει, which he ſucceſsfully obtained; and in my opinion 'tis the better reading: For Macrianus did obtain the Empire, which he was ſo deſirous of, but by reaſon of his debility of Body he was unable to carry the Inſignia of the Empire, but raiſed his two Sons to that Dignity, wherefore upon the obtaining of all theſe his deſires, Dionyſius might well ſay of him, ὅτι ἠπύχησε τῶν ἰδίων ἐπιθυμιῶν, that he was votorum compos, Maſter of all his wiſhes. As for this feebleneſs of Body (ἀναπηρῳ σώματι) which he attributeth to Macrianus, we find it mentioned in no Hiſtorians, except in Zonaras's Annals (who was the only Man that gave us a true Relation of the Acts of Macrianus and his Sons) and he ſays Macrianus was lame. Valeſ.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning what then happened to Dionyſius, and to thoſe Chriſtians which were in Egypt.

BUT concerning the Perſecution which raged exceedingly againſt him; what [Sufferings] alſo he and others ſuſtained upon account of the worſhip of the Supream God, his own words will declare, which he wrote in anſwer to * Germanus, a Biſhop of thoſe times, who endeavour'd out of malice to revile him: Thus he anſwers him. ‘(a) I run the hazard ‘of falling into great folly ‘and ſtupidity, being compelled of neceſſity to relate the miraculous Providence of God concerning us. But becauſe 'tis ‘ſaid; (b) It is good to keep ‘cloſe the ſecrets of a King, ‘but it is honourable to reveal ‘the works of God: Therefore I will hand to hand engage in the aſſault made againſt me by Germanus. I came to Æmilianus not without company, for there followed me Maximus my Fellow-Presbyter, and Fauſtus, Euſebius, and Chæremon who were Deacons. One of the Brethren of Rome alſo then preſent went in with us. Neither did Æmilianus ſay to me at firſt, do not you hold ſolemn Aſſemblies; For this was needleſs for him to have ſaid, and a recurſion from the laſt to the firſt, or principal thing in hand: For it was not his deſire that we ſhould not aſſemble others, but his principal care was that we ourſelves ſhould not be Chriſtians. And he commanded me to leave off that way of Worſhip, for he thought that if I would change my mind, others would follow my example: I replied not impertinently but in ſhort, that (c) we ought to obey God rather than man. But I openly proteſted that I worſhipped him who is the only true God, and adored no other, and that I would never change my mind, nor ever ceaſe being a Chriſtian. After theſe words he bid us depart thence into a Village called Cephro adjoyning to the Wilderneſs. But hear what words paſſed on both ſides, as we find them inſerted in the (d) Publick Records (e): When Dionyſius and Fauſtus, and Maximus and Marcellus and Chæremon, were brought in, Æmilianus the Governour ſaid; I have alſo diſcourſed with you by word of mouth concerning the Clemency which our Lords the Emperors have uſed towards you, for they have given you power to remain in ſafety, if you will but turn to that which is agreeable to nature, and adore the Gods which are Protectors of their Empire, and forget thoſe things which are repugnant to nature. What ſay you to theſe [Propoſals?] For I hope you will not ſhew yourſelves ungrateful towards their Clemency, becauſe they incite you to better things. Dionyſius replied, all Men do not worſhip the ſame Gods, but every one worſhips thoſe whom they think to be Gods: But we pay reverence and adoration to one only God, the Creator of all things, who gave the Empire into the hands of the moſt Sacred and Auguſt Emperors Valerian and Gallienus. And to him we offer up our Prayers inceſſantly for the permanency and ſtability of their Empire. Æmilianus the Governour ſaid unto them, who hindreth you but you may alſo worſhip him (if he be a God) together with them who are by nature Gods: For you are commanded to worſhip the Gods, and alſo thoſe Gods whom all Men own to be ſuch: Dionyſius replied, we adore no other. Then ſaid Æmilianus the Governour unto them, I ſee you are altogether ungrateful and inſenſible of the Emperor's Lenity towards you: Wherefore you ſhall not abide in this City, but ſhall be ſent into the parts of Libya, to a place called † Cephro; for this place I have deſign'd for you according to our Emperor's command; and it ſhall in no wiſe be ſuffer'd that either you, or any others, keep your Meetings, or have recourſe to the places called the (f) Cœmeteries; but if it appears that any one of you be not gone to the place which I have commanded you to go to, or ſhall be found afterwards in any Aſſembly, he will bring imminent ‘danger upon himſelf, for a neceſſary obſervation [thereof] ſhall not be wanting. Therefore ‘depart Valerian. (c) These words occur in Chap. 5. of the Acts of the Apoſtles, ver. 29. they are St. Peter's anſwer to the Sanhedrim, when they laid to their charge the preaching the Goſpel: But how theſe words come in in this place I cannot tell, except we read with the Kings MS. ἀπεκειναμεν δὲ ἐν ἀποιτιπωςὶ δὲ μαχεςὴν τῶ Αποςολε, &c. Chap. 9. Note (b.) Thoſe which wrote theſe, ὑπομνηματογράφοι, the Latines call ab Actis, Regiſters, Recorders. We find mention of the Regiſters of Alexandria in ſeveral places. Lucianus was once Recorder of Alexandria, and he ſaith he had a large Salary out of the City-Treaſury for the performance of this Office; and for the good execution thereof he had the Government of a Province conferred upon him. Valeſ.

Cephro was the moſt rude and barbarous tract of the Lybian Deſart; and Coluthio (a place hereafter mentioned in this Chapter, to which Dionyſius was in particular deſigned) was, 'tis like, the moſt uncomfortable part of that tract. See Nicephor. B. 6. Chap. 10.

(f) Thoſe places which Euſebius in Greek here calls κοιμητήρια, the Latines call Areæ. Valeſ. They were the places where the Martyrs were uſually buried; upon which account the Chriſtians frequented them. See Book 4. Chap. 15. Note (o.)

*The paſſage which follows, is an eminent fragment of the Epiſtle (or rather the Book) which Dionyſius wrote againſt Germanus the Biſhop; and it is to be joined to that other fragment of the ſame Book, which you had in Chap. 40. of Book 6. Valeſ.

'depart hence whither you are commanded: And 'he compell'd me, altho' I was sick, to depart, 'and gave not one day's respite. (g) How then 'could I have any leisure to call or not to call a 'Meeting?'' After some Passages again he saith; 'But neither were we absent (by God's assi-'stance) from a corporal 'Congregation: For with 'greater diligence I gather-'ed together those in the 'City, as if I had been pre-'sent with them, being ab-'sent in Body (as I (h) said) 'but present in Spirit. In 'Cephro also there was a 'great Congregation as-'sembled with us, some of 'whom were the Brethren 'who follow'd us out of the 'City; others came thither 'from the rest of Egypt: 'And there God opened to 'us a Door [to preach his] 'Word: At first indeed we 'were persecuted and sto-'ned: But afterwards some 'of the Heathens, and those not a few, forsook 'their Idols, and were converted to God; for the 'Word, which they had not before received, was 'then first sown amongst them by us; as if God 'had sent us away to them for this End. After 'we had here fulfilled the Ministry, he again 'removed us to another place. For Æmilianus 'resolved to convey us into places more uncom-'fortable (as he thought) and more like the 'Lybian Desart: And he gave command that we 'should altogether repair to Mareotis, having 'allotted particular Villages throughout that Re-'gion for every of us. But he ordered us to 'reside near the High-road, that we might be the 'first that should be apprehended. For this was 'wholly his Contrivance and Provision, that when-'ever he had a mind to apprehend us, he might 'have all of us easily taken without any trouble. 'But when I was commanded to depart to Ce-'phro, although I knew not where the place lay, '(having scarce ever before heard the name of 'it,) yet I went away willingly, and not at all 'disturb'd. But when they told me I was to 'depart thence to the (i) '[Parts] of Colluthio, they 'who were present with 'me can tell how I was 'then disposed; for here I 'will blame myself: At 'first indeed I was grieved 'and sorely vexed; for al-'tho' I had a better know-'ledge of, and was more ac-'quainted with those places, 'yet they reported it was a 'Country not inhabited by 'Brethren and good Men, and exposed to the 'Disturbances of Travellers, and Incursions 'of Thieves. But I received comfort by the 'Brethren, when they suggested to me, that it 'lay nearer to the City; and although Cephro 'had brought us a great Multitude of Bre-'thren out of Egypt, so that we could hold 'larger Assemblies, yet there, the City lying 'nearer, we should more frequently enjoy 'the Company of our truly beloved Friends 'and Acquaintance, for they would flock 'thither, and reside with us. And there would 'be (k) particular Congregations, as if it were in 'the more remote Suburbs. And so it fell out to 'be.'' After some other discourse he thus again writeth concerning what happen'd unto him. '[But perhaps] Germanus * glorieth in his many 'Confessions; and he can enumerate a great ma-'ny [Afflictions] which 'have befallen him. But 'how many Sentences of 'the Judges may he reckon 'up which were pronounc'd 'against us; [how many] 'Confiscations, Proscri-'ptions, Plundering of 'Goods, (l) Deprivations of 'Dignities, Contempts of 'worldly Glory, Despisings 'of the Praises of the Pre-'fects and (m) Senators: 'What patient sufferance of 'publick Menaces, of Excla-'mations against us, and of 'Perils, and of Persecutions, 'of wandring up and down 'in Exile, and of Anxieties, 'and of all sort of Tribula-'tion: What things hap-'pen'd to me under Decius, 'and (n) Sabinus, and what 'to this present under (o) 'Æmilianus. But where 'appear'd Germanus? What 'report is there concerning 'him? But I desist from this 'great Imprudence which 'I am fallen into upon Ger-'manus's account. Where-'fore I willingly give those 'Brethren, who perfectly 'know these matters, leave 'to make a Narration of e-'very thing which did be-'fal us.'' The same Diony-sius, in his Epistle to Do-mitius and Didymus, doth a-gain in these words menti-on some things concerning this Persecution; 'It is su-'perfluous to recite to you, 'who knew them not, the 'names of all our [Mar-'tyrs,] which were very 'many. But understand 'thus much, that both Men 'and Women; Young and 'Old; young Women and 'ancient Women; Soldi-'ers and Rusticks; Persons 'of all sorts, and all Ages; 'some of them having been 'victorious in the Combate 'by Scourges and Fire, and 'others by the Sword, re-'ceived Crowns of [Mar-'tyrdom.] But a long in-'terval of time pass'd away, 'being insufficient to make 'some appear acceptable to 'the Lord: In like manner, 'as for me it hath not 'seem'd [sufficient to make 'me acceptable] who have continued even till this 'time: Wherefore God hath reserved me for a time 'which he knows to be opportune, who saith; (o) In (g) Here Dionysius answers Germanus's Cavil, who accused him, because he never called an Assembly of the Brethren before the Persecution began; which was a custom in those days, (viz.) That the Bishops, upon the approach of a Persecution, should gather the People together, and exhort them to a constant perseverance in Christianity; and Baptize Infants, and Catechumens, lest they should die unbaptized; and also distribute the Sacrament to Believers. Vales.

(h) Altho' we read here [ὡς ἄπον] and have so translated it; yet the Maz. and Med. MSS. read [ὡς εἰπεῖν] [as one may say:] The Fuk. and Savil MSS. read ὡς εἶπεν ὁ Ἀπόστολος, as the Apostle said: 'Tis certain Dionys. here alludeth to that of the Apostle in the First to the Corinth. Chap. 5. Ver. 3. Vales.

(i) In the Original the reading is [τὰ κολλυθίων·] but we must necessarily understand μέρη [parts,] and so we have translated it. This Colluthio was a part of the Mareotic Prefecture in Egypt; so called from them who were formerly Possessors of it. Colutho is a common name amongst the Egyptians, and hence came κολλύθιον· which in Niceph. we find written with a single (L.) There were several Egyptians called by this name Colutho. Vales.

(k) These words, which we here translate particular Congregations, are in Greek κατὰ μέρος συναγωγαί. Those that dwelt in the remotest parts of the Suburbs were not bound to come to the Congregation of the Great Church: But in that part of the Suburbs there were particular Assemblies in a Church, or some other place fit for that purpose. Thus much we may gather by this Passage of Dionysius. Moreover, the Greeks did not call those places only which joyned to the City πρόαστια, but also the Villages which were a great way distant from the City. Canopus which was twelve miles from Alexandria, is called by Athanasius, in his Libel which he presented to the Council of Chalcedon, πρόαστιον. Further, from this place we may gather, that in Dionysius's days there was but one Church in Alexandria, whither all the Christians assembled themselves to pray: But afterwards, in the Days of Athanasius, the number of the Churches being increased by the bounty of the Bishops of Alexandria, the Citizens of Alexandria had particular Congregations in divers Churches; except in the solemn Festivals of Easter and Whitsuntide, when all the People assembled themselves in the Great Church. Vales.

(l) By these words, ἀξιωμάτων ἀποθέσεις, Deprivations of Dignities; we may conjecture that Dionysius was descended of a good Family; for dignitas is that which cometh by nobleness of birth. Thus we find, In Gest. Purgat. Cæciliani, that Victor being ask'd by Zenofilus the President, cujus conditionis esset, he answered, he was Professor litterarum Romanarum, and when he ask'd him cujus dignitatis esset, he answered he was sprung a Patre Decurione Constantinensium, avo milite, qui in Comitatu militaverat. Dionysius Alexandrinus, before he turn'd Christian, was by Profession an Orator, or Teacher of Rhetorick. Vales.

(m) Augustus commanded the Alexandrians to govern their City without any Senators or Aldermen. But afterwards Severus the Emperor granted the Alexandrians power of having a Senate, as we may read in Book 51. of Dio. And in Athanasius's Epistle Ad solitarios, there is mention of the Senators of Alexandria. Vales.

(n) This Sabinus was Prefect of Egypt under Decius the Emperor; of him Dionysius speaketh in his Epistle to Fabius, which Epistle is quoted in Chap. 41. Book 6. of this History: But Æmilianus, who is here mentioned as Governour, afterwards seized the Empire, as Pollio writeth in his 30 Tyrants. Vales.

(o) These words occur in Isa. c. 49. v. 8.

Valerian.

'In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of ſalvation have I helped thee. But becauſe you are inquiſitive after our Affairs, and deſirous to be informed in what condition we live: You have fully heard, how when I, Caius, Fauſtus, Peter, and Paul were led away Priſoners by the Centurion, and (p) the Magiſtrates [of Alexandria] and the Guards and Officers that were with them, (q) ſome of them of Mareotis came upon them, and took us away by force, dragging us by violence who were unwilling, and would not follow them. But at this preſent, I, and Caius, and Peter being alone, and deprived of the reſt of the Brethren, are ſhut up in a deſert and moſt uncomfortable place of Libya, being three days journey diſtant from Parætonium. And a little after theſe words, he ſaith; 'Some have hid themſelves ſecretly in the City that they may viſit the Brethren; as Maximus, Dioſcorus, Demetrius, and Lucius, who are Preſbyters. (For Fauſtinus and Aquila being Men more eminently known in the World, travel up and down Egypt.) But the Deacons that are ſurviving, beſides thoſe that died in (r) the Plague, are theſe: Fauſtus, Euſebius, Chæremon. Euſebius, [I ſay,] one whom God hath impower'd from the beginning, and furniſhed with great vigour to fulfil the Office of Miniſtration to the Confeſſors in Priſon, and to perform the Funeral (ſ) Rites due to the Bodies of the perfected and bleſſed Martyrs, with great hazard and danger. For to this very preſent the Governour ceaſeth not moſt cruelly to ſlay ſome who are brought before him, (as I before told you) to tear in pieces others with tortures, and to make other-ſome to pine away in Priſons, and Bonds, giving a ſtrict charge that none approach them, and making diligent ſearch whether any one be ſeen to come near them. Notwithſtanding, God through the chearfulneſs and fortitude of the Brethren, doth inceſſantly refreſh the afflicted.' Theſe are Dionyſius's words, and are contained in that Epiſtle. We muſt further underſtand, that this Euſebius whom he before called a Deacon, was a (t) great while after conſtituted Biſhop of the Church of Laodicea in Syria. And Maximus, who he ſaid was then a Presbyter, ſucceeded Dionyſius himſelf in the Government of the Brethren at Alexandria. Fauſtus alſo, (who together with Dionyſius was at that time famous for his being a Confeſſor) was reſerv'd even till the Perſecution in our days, and being very old, and full of years, he was perfected by Martyrdom, being beheaded even in our Age. But thus much concerning what happen'd to Dionyſius about that time.

(p) Tranſlators generally miſtake in rendring this word στρατηγοὶ in this place, by the Latin wordduces, captains: Chriſtoph. ſaw the abſurdity it led to by rendring it duces, and therefore he renders it dux: But neither does he by thus rendring it, avoid an abſurdity, for it was not the leaſt branch of the Captain's duty to lead Criminals into baniſhment, but that was rather the Centurion's or the Guard's duty. Wherefore this word στρατηγοὶ muſt here ſignifie ſome other Officer beſides a Captain, we will therefore render it the Duumviri, or, as we call them, the Sheriffs, or Magiſtrates of Alexandria; which are in Greek often called στρατηγοὶ. Now it was the duty of theſe Magiſtrates to apprehend Criminals, commit them to Priſon, examine them, &c. ſtill reſerving the power of judging to the Roman Preſident. Wherefore 'tis not here abſurd, but very reaſonable to ſay, theſe Duumviri aſſiſted the Governour in leading theſe Men into baniſhment: The following Words alſo στρατιῶται and ὑπερέται confirm our Opinion: For στρατιῶται are the Guards which belonged to the Preſect; ὑπερέται are the Officers belonging to the Duumviri, or Sheriff. Athanaſ. in his Epiſtle ad Solitarios, calls this Magiſtrate, or Duumvir, στρατηγόν. Valeſ.

(q) Theſe things hapned in the firſt Perſecution under Decius, at that time when Dionyſius, by the ſentence of Sabinus the Governour, was led to Tapoſiris. See his own Epiſtle to Fabius in Chap. 40. Book 6. And whoſoever does compare that Epiſtle with this here, he will conclude them both written concerning the ſame thing. Wherefore, Euſebius miſtakes when he thinks that the ſubject of this Epiſtle here to Domitius is that thing which happened in Valerian's Reign: For none of theſe things which he here mentioneth, happened in Valerian's Reign, but in the Perſecution which begun a little before Decius's Reign, as Dionyſius himſelf ſaith in his Epiſt. againſt Germanus, which Euſebius quoteth in the 6th Book. But in the Perſecution under Valerian, he had only thoſe Companions which he mentions in the beginning of this Chapter. Valeſ.

(r) Ruſinus inſtead of νόσῳ readeth νήσῳ, and accordingly he tranſlates the place, ſome who dyed in the Iſland: But Dionyſius means the Plague, which in Gallus and Voluſianus's time, ſpread itſelf quite through the Roman Empire, as Euſebius and others Record. Valeſ.

(ſ) Chriſtoph. renders this word τελεῖσθαι, by a long Periphraſis thus, ad lintea, quibus corpora beatorum Martyrum jam vitâ defunctorum involverentur, conficienda; he all along having relation to the uſage in our days, for with us the dead are wrapped in linnen-cloth, and ſo interr'd. But the Ancients, I mean the Chriſtians, uſed to wrap the dead in moſt coſtly cloathes, and ſo bury them: But for Chriſtophorſon's tranſlation, we have Athanaſius's authority, who ſaith, in his life of St. Anthony, that the Ægyptians uſed to wrap their dead Bodies, eſpecially thoſe of the Holy Martyrs in Linnen, and did not inter them, but laid them upon Beds, and kept them within their own private Houſes. Valeſ.

Valerian.

(t) These words ὑ μικρὸν ὕστερον ἐπισκοπῆς τῆς χρ Συ εἰαν ἐκκλησίας, are in the Med. Fuk. and Maz. MSS. and not without reaſon; for it was a great while after that Euſebius was ordained Biſhop of Laodicea. For he ſucceeded Socrates, as Euſebius atteſts a little lower. Valeſ.

CHAP. XII.

Concerning the Martyrs which ſuffered at Cæſarea in Paleſtine.

IN this Perſecution under Valerian, three Men of Cæſarea in Paleſtine very eminent for their Confeſſion of Chriſt, were crown'd with Divine Martyrdom, being made food for the Wild Beaſts. One of them was called Priſcus; the other Malchus; the name of the third was Alexander. They report that theſe Men, living in the Country, ſhould blame themſelves firſt for being careleſs and ſlothful Perſons, becauſe they were negligent of, and did not eagerly catch at the Crown of Martyrdom, ſeeing that was a ſeaſonable time of diſtributing thoſe rewards of Victory to them who had the leaſt ſpark of Celeſtial love in them. Then, when they had conſulted about theſe things amongſt themſelves, they took a journey to Cæſarea, and went immediately to the place where the Judge was, and received the afore-mention'd Sentence of Death. Beſides theſe, there was a Woman of the ſame City, in the ſame Perſecution, who they report, ſtrove in the ſame Combat: But 'tis famed that ſhe was one of Marcion's Sect.

CHAP. XIII.

Concerning the Peace under Gallienus.

(a) BUT not long after, Valerian being (b) captivated and enſlaved by the Barbarians, his Son reigned alone, who behav'd himſelf more prudently in his Empire. He immediately putteth a ſtop to the Perſecution againſt us by his Edicts; and gave command that the Prelates of our Religion ſhould ſecurely, and with freedom execute their uſual Offices, by his Reſcript which runs thus: EMPEROR CÆSAR PUBLIUS LICINIUS GALIENUS, PIUS FELIX AUGUSTUS, To Dionyſius, Pinna, Demetrius, and the reſt of the Biſhops: We have commanded that the Indulgence of our Gracious Bounty be publiſhed through the whole World: That all ſhall quickly depart out of Religious places. And for this cauſe you are impower'd to make (a) Ruſinus here alters the courſe of the Chapters, and placeth theſe which we place here as the 13th and 14th, after the 19 Chapter immediately; but in his Index before his Hiſtory he keeps the ſame method as the Greek Copies of Euſebius does: Why he ſhould here pervert the Order, I cannot tell; except it is, becauſe he thinks it is more convenient to ſubjoin the ſufferings of Marinus, and Aſturius to the ſufferings of the Martyrs of Cæſarea. But he ought to obſerve that thoſe Martyrs of Cæſarea ſuffered in Valerian's Perſecution; but Marinus and Aſturius ſuffered in the Reign of Gallienus. This miſtake of Ruſinus has brought ſeveral other Authors into the ſame Error. Valeſ.

make use of a Copy of our Rescript, that no body may molest you: And that which is lawful for you to put in execution was granted by Us long ago: And upon this account Aurelius Cyrenius, Our (c) High-Steward shall keep the Copy of this Edict granted by Us. For the more manifest understanding of these things, they were translated by Us out of Latin into Greek, and here inserted. There is also extant another Rescript sent to other Bishops, in which he permitteth to them the Restauration of the places called (d) Cæmeteria.

(c) For an explication of this Person's Office, see Valesius's Notes, Ad Excerpta ex Dione Cocceiano, pag. 112.

(d) They were the places where they buried their Dead, and often assembled for their Religious Solemnities, especially the Memorials of the Martyrs; as has before been remark'd.

CHAP. XIV.

What Bishops flourish'd in those Times.

(a) Xystus was dead long before; for he died a famous Martyr in the Persecution under Valerian, when Tuscus and Bassus were Consuls, on the 8th of the Ides of August; as we may see in Cyprian's Epistle. Vales.

AT this time (a) Xystus still continued to preside over the Church of Rome; but Demetrianus succeeded Fabius in the Bishoprick of Antioch; Firmilianus was Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia: Moreover, Gregorius, and his Brother Athenodorus governed the Churches of Pontus; they were both Origen's Scholars. Theoctistus Bishop of Cæsarea in Palestine being dead, Domnus succeeded in that Bishoprick: He living but a little while, Theotecnus, who lived till our times, was constituted his Successor. And this person also was one of Origen's School. But Mazabanes of Jerusalem being dead, Hymenæus succeeded in that See, who also was very eminent in our days.

CHAP. XV.

How Marinus was Martyr'd at Cæsarea.

(a) He means the Cohortalis Militia, as may be collected from what follows. For mention is made of Achæus the Judge,

A General Peace being at this time restored to the Churches in Cæsarea of Palestine, Marinus, a Man honour'd with a (a) Military Dignity, and eminent for Descent and Riches, was beheaded for his Confession of Christ, upon this account. There is a certain Dignity amongst the Romans termed the (b) Vine, which those that obtain'd, are said to be made Centurions; (c) this place being vacant, Marinus, whose course in order it was, was called to that Promotion: When he was forthwith to have been invested in that Dignity, there came another before the Tribunal, and accused him, saying, it was unlawful according to the Old Laws, for him to hold any Dignity amongst the Romans; for he was a Christian, and did not sacrifice to the Emperors; therefore the Office belonged to him. (d) Achæus (for that was the name of the Judge) being enraged at this, first ask'd Marinus what Opinion he was of: Then when he saw that he stedfastly confess'd himself to be a Christian, he granted him three hours respite for deliberation. When he was gone out of the place of Judicature Theotecnus the Bishop of that City coming to him, taketh him aside to discourse with him; and laying hold of his Hand, leads him to the Church; wherein when he had placed him at the very Altar, he put his (e) Cloak a little aside, and shewed him the Sword wherewith he was girded, and also brought the Book of the Sacred Gospels and placed it right against him, bidding him on his own accord to take which of those two best pleased him. When Marinus without any delay had put forth his Right Hand, and taken up the Sacred Book, Theotecnus said unto him, adhere therefore, adhere to God; and being impower'd by him thou shalt obtain what thou hast chosen; go in peace. Immediately as he return'd from the Church, the Cryer, who stood before the Tribunal, called him; for the time allotted him was now accomplish'd: When he was brought before the place of Judicature, and had shew'd a greater courage in the Caafession of the Faith than he did before, immediately he was halled away to Execution, and was (f) crown'd with Martyrdom.

Gallienus.

(b) The Phrase in the Original is [Τὸ κλῆμα] which we have rendred [The Vine.] It was enacted by a Law amongst the Romans, that no Citizen should be beaten with Rods, but with Vines: See Livy, in his 57 Book. Upon this account the Soldiers were by the Centurions beaten with Vines; whence at last the Vine came to be the Badge of the Centurion's Office. Spartianus (in the Life of Hadrian) uses it in this sense; and so does Plutarch in Galba.

(c) In the Maz. Fuk. and Med. MSS. there is a stop here; but in the King's MS. there is none: Which Punctation in the three MSS. first named, Salmasius (in his Notes on Spartianus) defends against Casaubon, (in his Notes on the same Author,) who thought that the Vine was a Badge which denoted those that were to be chosen Centurions, who should bear that Office, when there was a Place vacated. And therefore Casaubon read this Passage thus; [There is a certain Dignity amongst the Romans termed the Vine, which those that obtain are said to be made Centurions when there is a place vacant:] Which Reading agrees with the King's MS. But Salmasius makes a stop (as we do) at the word [Centurions,] which doubtless is the truest Reading: See Note (b) in this Chapter. Vales.

(d) That was the Judge's name: So a famous Captain was call'd, who heretofore rebelled against Antiochus, as Polybius relates. This Achæus was President of Palestine, and had his residence at Cæsarea, which was the chief City of that whole Province. Vales.

(e) We read τῆς χλαμύδος, not τῆς χλανίδος; which is a common, but an erroneous Reading. The Clamys and the Balteus (i. e. the Cloak and the Belt) were Military Badges, as may be proved from innumerable places in Chrysostom, Libanius, and others. Vales.

(f) The term here is [τελειῶται,] i. e. he was perfected by Martyrdom. For Martyrs were initiated by Confession, and perfected by Death; as Dionysius phrases it at the end of Chap. 11. in this Book. Clemens Alexandrinus (in Book 4. Stromat. pag. 206.) gives another reason, why Martyrdom is called τελείωσις ὅτι τέλειον ἔργον ἀγάπης ἐπεδείξατο, because it demonstrates the Perfection of Love. Vales.

CHAP. XVI.

A Relation concerning Astyrius.

Astyrius also is much fam'd for his Religious boldness and freedom at that time: A Man who was a Roman Senator, a singular Favourite of the Emperor's: And both for his nobleness of Birth and Estate, known to all Persons. He, being present at the Death of the foresaid Martyr, took up the Corps, wrapped it in a white and precious Garment, laid it upon his Shoulders and carried it away; and when he had adorn'd it very richly, he deposited it in a decent Grave. This Person's Familiars, who lived till our days, relate infinite other things concerning him.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning the mighty Miracles of our Saviour at Paneas.

AMongst which they relate this Miracle. At Cæsarea-Philippi, (which the (a) Phænicians call Paneas) they report there are Springs to be

(a) Those whom our Eusebius here calls φοίνικες, Phænicians, are the Grecians which inhabited Phænicia. For Paneas is a Greek name, the Syrians, or rather the Syro-Phænicians, called this City Dan, as S. Jerom affirms in his Questions on Genesis; his words are these: Dan Phænices oppidum, quod nunc Paneas

Paneas dicitur. Dan autem unus è fontibus Jordanis. Nam & alter vocatur Jor, quod interpretatur ῥεῖθρον. Duobus ergo fontibus, qui haud procul a ſe diſtant, in unum rivulum fœderatis, Jordanis deinceps appellatur; i. e. Dan is a Town of Phœnicia, which is now called Paneas. Alſo Dan is the name of one of the Spring-heads of Jordan. For the other is named Jor, the Interpretation whereof is [a Stream.] Theſe two Fountains therefore, which are not far diſtant from each other, are united into one Rivulet, which is afterwards called Jordan. Valeſ.

Gallienus. ſeen at the foot of the Mountain called Panius, out of which the River Jordan hath its Original. They ſay, that on a certain Feſtival they uſed to (b) caſt a Sacrifice into theſe Springs, and by the Power of the Devil it would miraculouſly vaniſh out of ſight: And that this was a Miracle much talk'd of by them who had ſeen it. Aſtyrius therefore being upon a time preſent with thoſe that did this, and ſeeing many ſtruck with admiration at what was done, was ſorry for their Error. Then he lifted up his Eyes to Heaven, and beſought the ſupream God, by Jeſus Chriſt, that he would rebuke this Devil which ſeduced the People, and command him to ceaſe from deceiving of Men. They report that when he had prayed thus, the Sacrifice floated upon the Waters immediately. Thus periſh'd their Miracle, and never afterwards was there any Prodigy done near that place.

(b) This cuſtom, σφάγιον καταβάλλεσθαι, of caſting the Sacrifice into the Springs, or Wells, which they worſhipped, was uſed by the Heathens. And hence it is that Publicola asked Auguſtine, in his 153. Epiſtle, whether it were lawful to drink of that Spring or Well, into which any part of a Sacrifice had been caſt. Valeſ.

CHAP. XVIII.

Concerning the Statue, which the Woman who had the Flux of Blood, erected.

BUT ſince I have made mention of this City, I think it not at all unſuitable to produce a Story, which is worthy to be related to Poſterity. For they ſay that the Woman, (a) who had the Iſſue of Blood, whom the ſacred Goſpels inform us to have been healed by our Saviour, was born in this City: And that her Houſe may be ſeen there, and that the illuſtrious Monuments of our Saviour's beneficence ſhown towards her do yet remain. For near the Gate of her Houſe ('tis ſaid) ſtands upon a Pillar of Stone, the Effigies of a Woman in Braſs, kneeling on her Knees, and ſtretching forth her Hands forward in the form of a Suppliant. On the other ſide oppoſite to it ſtood another Image of a Man made of the ſame Metal ſtanding upright, dreſſed decently in a * ſhort Veſture, and ſtretching out his Hand towards the Woman. At whoſe Feet upon the Baſe of the Pillar 'tis ſaid there ſprings up a ſtrange kind of an Herb, which grows up to the (b) Skirt of his brazen Doublet, and is a preſent Remedy to remove all ſorts of Diſeaſes: They ſay that this Statue repreſented our Saviour. This remained till our Age, and therefore we our ſelves went to the City to ſee it. Nor need it ſeem a wonder that the ancient Gentiles, who received Benefits from our Saviour, did theſe things; ſeeing that we have ſeen the Pictures of his Apoſtles Peter and Paul, and of Chriſt himſelf, drawn in colours, and preſerved till our days. It is probable enough that thoſe Ancients, according to the cuſtom of the Heathens, were wont (c) unadviſedly to honour all thoſe after this manner as Saviours, by whom they have been any ways benefited.

(a) This place of Euſebius, concerning the Woman who had the Iſſue of Blood, is quoted in the Seventh Synod, Action 4. pag. 508. See alſo what Philoſtorgius ſaith in his Seventh Book, Chap. 3. And what Nicephorus, who borroweth it from him. Valeſ.

* Διπλοΐδα· it ſometimes ſignifies a Military Cloak: This term occurs Pſal. 109. 29. where 'tis rendred a Mantle.

(b) Rufinus underſtands this place [μεχεὶ τῆς κρασπέδα ἄνιον] ſo, as if this Herb had no healing vertue till it was grown up to the Skirt of our Saviour's Veſture: But ſince Euſebius does not expreſly determine it that way, every one may interpret the place as pleaſeth him beſt. I think Euſebius meaneth by the addition of theſe words, that the Herb grew up no higher than the Skirt of our Saviour's Doublet, as if it were in reverence to him. See Nicephor. Book 6. Chap. 15. Valeſ.

Gallienus.

CHAP. XIX.

Concerning the Chair of James the Apoſtle.

THE Epiſcopal Chair of James the Firſt Biſhop of Jeruſalem, who was conſecrated by our (a) Saviour himſelf, and the Apoſtles; (who in Holy Writ is honoured with the title of the Brother of Chriſt;) being reſerved till this time, the Brethren who have ſucceeded in that Church do reverence it: Hence they plainly manifeſt to all what great veneration and reſpect, both the Ancients, and alſo thoſe of our Age, have, and do pay to Holy Men for their love to God. But thus much concerning theſe things.

(a) This was an old Tradition that James the Apoſtle was ordained Biſhop of Jeruſalem by Chriſt. Beſides Euſebius, St. Chryſoſt. in his 38 Homil. upon the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, on theſe words, Deinde viſus eſt Jacobo, Then he was ſeen of James; expreſly affirmeth it: The ſame alſo Epiphanius, Niceph. Calliſt. and others do affirm. They all ſeem to borrow this Opinion from the Firſt Book of Clemens's Recognitions: Alſo in the Eighth Book of his Conſtitutions, Chap. 35. we find him ſpeaking of James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem in theſe words, ὑπ' αὐτῆς τῆς κυρίου, καὶ τῶν ἀποστόλων χειροτονηθείς, Ordained by our Saviour himſelf, and the Apoſtles. We muſt farther advertiſe the Reader that theſe words τῆς Ἀποστόλου, the Apoſtle, are wanting in the King's, Fuk. and Maz. MSS. and in Rufinus: But in our Maz. Med. Fuk. MSS. in the Contents of this Chapter, we find this word Ἀποστόλου, the Apoſtle: Although in the Index of the Chapters which is prefixed, we find it thus written, περὶ τῆς θρόνου Ἰακώβου τοῦ ἐπισκόπου, concerning the Chair of James the Biſhop. Valeſ.

CHAP. XX.

Concerning Dionyſius's Paſchal Epiſtles, in which he preſcribeth a Canon concerning Eaſter.

MOreover, beſides thoſe his fore-mention'd Epiſtles, the ſame Dionyſius at the (a) ſame time wrote theſe ſtill extant, called (b) Paſchal Epiſtles: Amongſt which he interweaves Panegyrick Diſcourſes concerning the Feaſt of Eaſter. One of theſe Epiſtles he dedicateth to Flavius; another to Domitius and Didymus: In which he publiſhed a Canon of eight years, having proved that we ought to celebrate the Feaſt of Eaſter, at no other time, but after the Vernal Æquinox. He compoſed anether Epiſtle beſides theſe, to his Fellow-Preſbyters at Alexandria, and others to divers other Perſons, and theſe he wrote whilſt the rage of the Perſecution ſtill continued.

(a) From this word πανηγυρικοῦ at the ſame time, ſome would conclude, that Dionyſius wrote theſe Epiſtles in the Perſecution, raiſed by Valerian: But that is falſe; for this Epiſtle to Domitius and Didymus, was written in the Reign of Decius the Emperor. Valeſ.

(b) Rufinus very well tranſlates this word ἑορταστικὰς, in this place, Paſchales, Paſchal Epiſtles. The Biſhops of Alexandria uſed to write theſe Paſchal Letters every Year, and ſend them to the reſt of the Churches of Egypt; that they might all agree in the time of the Celebration of Eaſter. There are at this day extant Epiſtles of this ſort, written by Theophilus, Cyril, and others: What was the Form of theſe Epiſtles we may underſtand from the 30 Paſchal Homilies of Cyril; firſt they diſcourſed ſome thing concerning Eaſter: In the end they declared the beginning of Lent, and the Day of Eaſter, whence we may call them Homilies, as well as Epiſtles. Concerning what things hapned at Alexandria.

Dionysius returned to Alexandria, Peace being as yet scarce throughly settled there. But when Sedition and War joyntly raged again there, so that he could not visit all the Brethren in the City, they being divided into the one or the other Party of the Faction: Again, even on Easter-Day, as if he had been exiled out of Alexandria, he conversed with them by Letters. And in his other Paschal Letter, which a little after this he wrote to Hierax, one of the Egyptian Bishops, he mentioneth the Sedition then at Alexandria, in these words: 'It is no wonder if it be difficult 'for me to converse with Men far remote even 'by Letters, whenas it is render'd now no easie 'matter for me to discourse with my self, and 'to give advice to my own Soul. For I am com-'pel'd to send Letters even to my own Bowels, 'my Brethren, who live under the same Roof, 'have the same mind, and are Members and In-'habitants of the same Church; and it appears 'to me a great difficulty, how I should convey 'my Letters to them: For a Man may with more 'ease and less danger travel not only beyond 'the Bounds of this Province, but even from East 'to West, than out of Alexandria into Alexandria. 'For the very Middle-street of this (a) City is 'more unfrequented and unpassable than that vast 'and invious Wilderness which Israel travelled 'through in two Ages. (b) Those calm and still 'Havens do represent the Sea through which the 'Israelites had a spacious passage, it being divi-'ded, and made like a Wall on both hands; '(c) but the Egyptians were drown'd in the Paths 'thereof. And through the frequent slaughters 'perpetrated therein, they were like a Red-Sea. 'The River which runneth by the City seemed 'sometimes more dry and uncomfortable than 'the thirsty Wilderness, through which, when 'the Israelites travelled, they were so thirsty, 'that they murmur'd against Moses, until by the 'Power of God (who only doth marvellous 'things) Water gush'd out of a craggy Rock 'for them. At other times it overflow'd in such 'abundance, that it laid all the Country round 'about under water, the High-ways and the 'Fields, and seem'd to threaten a return of that 'Deluge which was in the Days of Noah. It 'runneth by, being continually polluted with 'Blood, and murthered, and drowned Bodies; 'like that River which by Moses, in the sight of 'Pharaoh, was turned into Blood, and stank: 'And what other Water can purifie this Water 'which purgeth all things itself? How can that 'vast and immense Ocean which is unpassable 'by Men, cleanse this bitter Sea? Or how can 'that great River which springeth out of Eden, 'though it gather its four Heads, into which it 'is divided, into that one of Geon, wash away 'this putrified Gore? Or how can that * Air 'be purified, which on every side is defiled with 'most noisome Exhalations? For such Vapours 'arise from the Earth; such Winds from the 'Sea; such Blasts from the Rivers; and such 'Mists from the Havens, that the very Dews are 'nothing else but the Gore of dead Carkases 'putrified in all the subjacent Elements. After 'all this they wonder, and seem to doubt whence 'these (d) continued Plagues; whence these noi-'some Diseases; these Contagions of all kinds; 'and this various, and numerous Destruction of 'Men proceeds. They admire why this great 'City contains not in it as many Inhabitants, '(should they be number'd even from Infants to 'the most Aged and Decrepit) as it formerly 'maintained Persons, who were (e) lively old 'Men, as they called them. But in those days 'there were many persons betwixt forty and se-'venty years old, that their number could not 'now be made up, although all from fourteen to 'fourscore years of age were registred, and their 'names enrolled in the Tables, that they might 'partake of the publick Distribution of Corn. 'And our youngest Men now look as if they 'were of the same age with our old Men for-'merly. And altho' they see Mankind so much 'diminished and consumed from off the Earth, '(their intire Destruction being increased and 'augmented incessantly) yet they tremble not.

Gallienus.

* The very situation of Alexandria did doubtless conduce much to the insalubrity of the place. For the River Nile, coming from the West, was convey'd into the City under Ground by Arches made under the houses. The manner how this was done, is set down by John Leo, in his description of Africa: His words are these; Cuique fere domui civitatis ingens cisterna concamerata, crassisque innitens fornicibus substructa est, in quas exundans Nilus per aquæductum in planitie magno artificio constructum extra Alexandriam deductus, sub ejus manibus demittitur, &c. This artificial conveyance of the River, though it were otherwise acceptable to the Inhabitants, yet it could not be without some annoyance to the Air, the Complexion whereof suffered much alteration by the noysome Vapours which rose up out of the Waters, which in tract of time putrified in their Cisterns. It is the collection of the foresaid Leo, in his following Words, Cisternæ porrò temporis successu turbidæ ac cænosæ redditæ, plurimis æstivo tempore languoribus occasionem præbent, &c. The same Author gives us another reason for the unwholesomeness of that City; which was caused by certain little Gardens planted near the City, the Fruits whereof were so unwholsome, that the Inhabitants were thereby made subject to very noxious Feavers, and many other Diseases. See John Leo's descript. Afric. 675, and 676. Edit. Lugd. Batav. 1632.

(a) In the King's MS. we find, in stead of τῆς πόλεως, this City, ἧς πόλεων, these Cities; which reading is not to be rejected: for that Faction had so divided Alexandria, that in a manner it became of one City two, as before he seemeth to intimate, when he saith, that a Man may with more ease travel from East to West, than out of Alexandria into Alexandria. This great Sedition, I think, happened, when Æmilianus possest himself of the Government of Alexandria. Vales.

(b) There are divers ways of translating this place according as we point it. Most Translators have erred here, by an Erroneous conjunction of this Sentence with what precedeth. But Dionysius's following words confirm our Punctation and Version: The sense of which is that the Havens of Alexandria, overflowing with the Blood of the slaughtered Citizens, did truly represent the Red Sea. Wherefore it is not the Middle Street of the City which is compared to the Red Sea (although some so interpret it) but the Ports or Havens are said to represent that. Vales.

(c) Betwixt these words where we use only a middle distinction or comma, Robert Stephens uses a full period, contrary to the Authority of all the MSS. we ought rather to follow the punctation of the MSS. and join this passage with what precedeth: But here we meet with a Genitive case plural of the Article [ὧν,] which we translate in the singular number, and refer it to θαλάσσης the Sea, which is a singular put for the plural number. For the Sea was divided into two parts, and opened a broad way for the Israelites; so that what was really but one Sea, seemed to be two; but if we translate it according to Stephanus's Punctation, we can find no word to which this Genitive case plural of the Article can reasonably be referred. Vales.

(d) Συνεχεῖς λοιμοὶ, continued Plagues without intermission. The Plague even from the times of Gallus and Volusianus, over-ran and destroyed almost all the Roman Empire. Eutropius saith that the Reign of Gallus and Volusianus was only remarkable for the great Plague which happened in their Days. Aurelius Victor affirms that Gallus and Volusianus were beloved very much on this account, because they took care of every ones, even of the poorest Man's Funeral. The Plague afterwards raged at Rome, and in the Roman Provinces, in the Days of Gallienus, as Pollio in Gallienus's Life attests. Vales.

(e) Ὠμογέροντες; vivid, lively, lusty old Men. So they were called at Alexandria, who were between forty and seventy years old. Their names were registred in Tables that they might partake of the publick distribution of the Corn, as Dionysius attests in his following Words. Over these were the Archigerontes, of whom mention is made in the first Law of the Codex Theodosianus, de Alexandrinæ plebis primatibus. Hither may be referred that which Gregor. Naz. affirms, in his 21 Oration concerning St. Athanasius, to wit, that the Alexandrians were wont to be distributed into Sexes, Ages, and Trades, as often as, out of respect, they went forth to meet any Person. Vales.

CHAP. XXII.

Concerning the Plague which then raged.

AFterwards the Pestilence succeeding the War; when the Feast [of Easter] was at hand, Dionysius again writeth to the Brethren, Gallienus. deſcribing the Miſeries of that Calamity in theſe words: 'To ſome Men this preſent may ſeem 'not a time to celebrate a Feſtival; but neither 'this which we obſerve, nor any other time (I 'ſpeak not only of the mournful, but alſo of a-'ny of thoſe times which they account moſt joy-'ful) is a time of Feſtivity 'to them. Now indeed all 'places are full of mourning, 'all perſons lament, and 'the City rings on every 'ſide with continual lamen-'tations for the Multitudes 'of them who are already 'dead, and who are daily 'dying: For as the Scri-'pture ſaith concerning the 'Firſt-born of the Egyptians, 'ſo now a great cry is heard: 'For there is no Houſe, in 'which there is not one 'dead;((b) and I wiſh there 'were but one in every 'Houſe:) Indeed many 'and ſore Afflictions have 'befaln us before this Ca-'lamity. (c) Firſt of all they 'expel'd us out of the City: 'And when we only were 'perſecuted and oppreſſed 'by all men, yet nevertheleſs 'even then we kept the Feſti-'val days. And every place 'where every one of us par-'ticularly underwent affli-'ction; the Field; the De-'ſart; the Ship; the Inn; 'the Priſon, was a place 'for holding our ſolemn 'Aſſemblies: But the per-'fected Martyrs, who are 'ſatiated in Heaven, kept 'the moſt joyful Feaſt of all. 'After theſe [Miſeries] 'ſucceeded War and Famine; 'in which we were Fellow-'ſufferers with the Heathens. 'We alone ſuffer'd what-'ever they afflicted us with; 'but whatever Calamities 'they brought upon them-'ſelves and ſuffer'd, we par-'ticipated of. And we were 'again made joyful by the 'Peace of Chriſt, which he 'granted to us alone: But when both we and 'they had enjoy'd a very ſhort time of Refreſh-'ment, this Plague immediately invaded us. A 'thing moſt formidable to them, and more cala-'mitous than any accident whatſoever. And, as 'one of their own Writers ſaith, it was the only 'thing which ſurmounted all Men's expectation 'and fear. It was indeed no ſuch thing to us; 'but rather an exerciſe and tryal, nothing infe-'rior to our former Sufferings: For this Plague 'did not ſpare us; but it raged grievouſly a-'mongſt the Heathens." After theſe words he continues, ſaying; 'Indeed many of our Brethren 'through their ſuperabundant love, and brotherly 'kindneſs neglecting their own ſelves, and firmly 'adhering to one another, without any thing of 'caution viſiting them who are infected, care-'fully miniſtring to them, and healing them in 'Chriſt, moſt willingly died with them; infe-'cting themſelves with other Men's Diſtempers, 'attracting the Diſeaſe from their Neighbours 'upon themſelves, and voluntarily (d) drawing 'the Infection out of them by tranſlating it into 'themſelves. And many who had cured and 'reſtored others to their former health, died 'themſelves, having brought their Death upon 'themſelves; and being thus made the Ranſom 'and Expiation for them all, they died, really 'fulfilling that common ſaying, which always 'hitherto hath ſeem'd to contain no more than 'an officious (e) Friendſhip. Thus therefore died 'the beſt of our Brethren; ſome of whom were 'Prieſts, and others Deacons; alſo thoſe of the 'Laity which were eminent died voluntarily: So 'that this kind of death which was ſuffered upon 'account of Piety, and a ſtedfaſt Faith, may be 'eſteem'd no leſs honourable than Martyrdom. 'They took the dead Bodies of the Saints up in 'their open hands, and into their Boſoms; they 'cloſed their Eyes, and ſhut their Mouths; car-'ried them upon their Shoulders; and (f) buried 'them: They ſtuck cloſe to them; embraced 'them; waſhed them; and (g) adorned them cu-'rioufly in their Cloaths; not long after they 'had the like good Offices performed to them-'ſelves: For thoſe who ſurvived did continually 'tread in the ſteps of ſuch as went before them. 'But the Gentiles practice was quite contrary to 'this. They thruſt out of doors thoſe which 'begun to be infected; they fled away from thoſe 'who were moſt dear to them; they deſerted 'them being half-dead in the High-ways; and 'caſt forth the dead Bodies unburied; being ut-'terly averſe from a Participation and Society '[with them] in Death, which yet was in no 'wiſe eaſie for them to avoid, though they uſed 'all Arts and Devices to decline it." After this Epiſtle, when Affairs in Alexandria were in a peaceable and quiet poſture, he again ſendeth another Paſchal Epiſtle to the Brethren throughout Egypt; he alſo writ ſeveral other beſides this. There is alſo extant an Epiſtle of his concerning the Sabbath, and another concerning Exercitation. Again, in an Epiſtle to Hermammon, and the Brethren in Egypt, he has a long Diſcourſe concerning the Improbity of Decius and his Succeſſors, where he alſo makes mention of the Peace in the Reign of Gallienus.

Gallienus.

(a) This Exordium of this Paſchal Epiſtle of Dionyſius's is really a moſt elegant one. Here he ſaith, that this preſent time, when all things were in ſo lamentable a poſture, would ſeem to the unbelieving Heathens no fit time to keep a Feaſt in: But neither this time, which (ſaith he) is really a time of mourning, nor any other, though never ſo undiſturb'd, never ſo merry, could poſſibly yield the Heathens any true Joy. For the Wicked and Unbelievers can never keep a Feaſt, altho' they daily ſacrifice, becauſe they can't enjoy any true Mirth: Only the Pious and Virtuous do truly keep a Feaſt, becauſe they perform their duty, and offer Prayers and unbloody Sacrifices to God. Origen, in his 8th Book againſt Celſus, diſcourſes at large concerning this Opinion: Which Paſſages in him are borrow'd from the Stoicks, and they give much light to the underſtanding of this place of Dionyſius. Valeſ.

(b) Here we read only ὄφελόν γε, and I wiſh: But Turnebus in the Margin of his Book very well correcteth and pointeth it thus; Καὶ ὄφελόν γε εἷς; And I wiſh only one had died in every Houſe. The King's MS. reads thus καὶ ὄφελόν γε· εἰς πολλὰ, &c. But Turnebus does very well amend this place of Dionyſius, by his foreſaid Punctation of it. Valeſ.

(c) Dionyſius here makes a compendious Repetition of all the Sufferings of the Chriſtians from the time he was firſt ordain'd Biſhop of Alexandria. Firſt, he recounts the Perſecution and Expulſion, which began in the laſt Year of Philip the Emperor. Next the Civil War which immediately followed; concerning which Civil War, ſee Chap. 41. Book 6. of this Hiſtory. Then he ſaith, after a little Ceſſation follow'd the Plague; which raged grievouſly in the times of Gallus and Voluſianus; but it began in Decius's Reign: For it is evident by Dionyſius's Epiſtle to Domitius and Didymus, that ſome Deacons died of this Plague in the Reign of Decius. See Chap. 11. Book 7. Valeſ.

(d) Ἀναμασσόμενοι τὰς ἀλγηδόνας, ſome Tranſlators render mitigantes eaſing and leſſening their Diſtempers; but I cannot approve of that Verſion; for the Verb ἀναμάσσειν, or ἐκμάσσειν, ſignifies to ſqueeze out, or to wipe off. Dionyſius's meaning is this, that they who viſited the infected Chriſtians, did in a manner force the Infection from them, and tranſlate it to, or take it upon themſelves. And this is the true notion of ἐκμάσσειν, to take upon himſelf, and as it were, to ſuck out another's Diſeaſe and Infection. It is no more than what he ſaid in theſe words, τὴν νόσον ἐφ' ἑαυτὸς ἕλκουσες, drawing the Infection upon themſelves. Valeſ.

(e) This word φιλοφροσύνη we have here rendred Friendſhip; yet the word primarily and properly ſignifies that which the Latines call Comitas, that is, Complaiſance, Courteouſneſs, Civility, Affability: As for this term περίψημα, which we have tranſlated a Ranſom; we find it in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinth. Chap. 4. v. 13. This word ſeems to have been uſed by the Alexandrians in their Salutations: When they met together, and promiſed their ſincere love, willingneſs and diligence in ſerving one another, they uſed to ſay ἐγὼ εἰμὶ περίψημα σοῦ; or elſe we may take the word in this ſence; as if the Heathens ſhould call the Chriſtians the very περίψημα πάντων, the Off-ſcouring, the Filth, the very Fæces Populi, and the Purgamenta Seculi; which Interpretation is not to be rejected here. Valeſ.

(f) Chriſtoph. in his Latin Verſion, renders this word [διατιθέντες] decenter ornantes, dreſſing them up neatly: But he miſtakes; for Dionyſius ſpeaks of their Dreſs afterwards in theſe words, περιστολαῖς κατακοσμοῦντες, decking them in their beſt Cloaths: Διατιθέντες, here we therefore render Componentes, (that is) burying them; and ſo the word is uſed in Prophane as well as in Sacred Authors: Compoſtus pro ſepulto, in Virgil, and Horace. Valeſ.

(g) Περιστολαῖς κατακοσμοῦντες, ſome render linteo funebri involventes, ſhrowding them in a Winding-ſheet. But this is contrary to the cuſtom of Buryings in thoſe Days; for the Heathens uſed to dreſs the Dead in their beſt Cloaths, and ſo interr them. And the Chriſtians uſed in like manner ſo to dreſs the Saints Corps: See Chap. 16. of this Seventh Book, concerning Aſturius. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXIII.

Concerning the Reign of Gallienus.

NOthing hinders but we may hear his own words, which run thus: ‘ [(a) Macrianus] ‘ therefore, having treacherously betray'd one of ‘ the Emperors which preceded him, and made ‘ War upon the other, was immediately extirpa- ‘ ted, and together with his whole Family be- ‘ came extinct. Gallienus was ‘ now proclaim'd, and by ‘ common consent receiv'd ‘ Emperor. He was both an ‘ old Emperor and a new; ‘ for he was before * them, ‘ and also surviv'd them: ‘ For according to that ‘ which was spoken by the ‘ Prophet Esaias, † Behold ‘ the former things are come to ‘ pass, and new things shall now ‘ rise up. For as a Cloud ri- ‘ sing up before the Rays of ‘ the Sun, overshadoweth it ‘ for a while, and appears to ‘ be substituted into the place thereof: But when ‘ the Cloud has gone over it, or is dissolved; the ‘ Sun, which before was risen, seems then to a- ‘ rise again: So Macrianus, who set himself be- ‘ fore, and (b) approach'd the very Empire of ‘ Gallienus, now is not, for he never was: But Gal- ‘ lienus, as he was Emperor ‘ before, so he now conti- ‘ nues to be. And the Em- ‘ pire itself, having deposited ‘ its old age as it were, and ‘ being cleansed from the ‘ Dregs of its former Impro- ‘ bity, now flourisheth with ‘ greater vividness; is seen ‘ and heard of at a larger distance, and spreads its ‘ fame in all places.” He afterwards declares the time when he wrote these things, in these words; ‘ It now again comes into my mind to contem- ‘ plate the Years of our Emperor: For I see how ‘ those most impious Persons who had so great a ‘ name, are in a short time become most obscure. ‘ But our most Pious and Religious Emperor, ‘ having pass'd his seventh, is now in the ninth ‘ year of his Empire, in which we are about to ‘ solemnize the Festivals.

(a) Tho' we find here barely ἐκεῖνος μὲν οὖν, he therefore; yet we must understand Macrianus: For by his treachery it was that Valerian was delivered into the hands of the Persians. Other Historians assert that he was delivered to them by his own Captains; so Aurel. Vict. Syncel. and others. These words of Dionysius are to be joyn'd with those in Chap. 10. of this Book; for they are Fragments of one and the same Epistle to Hermammon; we also find a piece of it in Chap. 1. of this Seventh Book. Vales.

* He means Macrianus, and his two Sons: See Chap. 1. of this Book, at the Close of the Chapter.

† Esai. 42. 9.

(b) Dionysius here speaks of Macrianus's Empire, because he was owned, and received as Emperor by Egypt, and the Eastern Provinces: Which his Coins declare; for on the fore-side there is this Inscription, ΑΥΤ. Κ. Μ. ΦΟΥΛ. ΜΑΚΡΙΑΝΟΣ; And on the Reverse this; ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΕΙΑ. Vales.

CHAP. XXIV.

Concerning Nepos, and his Schism.

BEsides, Dionysius wrote two Books concerning the Promises. The occasion of his writing these Books was Nepos, an Egyptian Bishop, who taught that the Promises, which were made to the Saints in the Sacred Scriptures, should be perform'd in the * Jewish sence, and affirmed that there was to come a thousand year's State upon Earth, which should be spent in bodily pleasures. Now he supposing he could confirm his own Opinion out of John's Revelation, wrote a Book upon this Question, and intitled it, A Confutation of the Allegorical Expositors; which Piece Dionysius confutes in his Books concerning the Promises. In the first Book of which he proposeth his own Opnion concerning the Question. In the second he discourseth concerning the Revelation of John, where in the very beginning he makes mention of this Nepos, and writes thus concerning him: ‘ But because they produce a ‘ Book of Nepos's, on which they rely very much, ‘ as if it did (a) infallibly ‘ demonstrate that the King- ‘ dom of Christ should be ‘ [set up] [on Earth: In- ‘ deed for several other ‘ things I commend and ‘ love Nepos, for his Faith, ‘ his industry and study in ‘ the Scriptures, and also for ‘ the many (b) Psalms and ‘ Hymns he composed, with ‘ which many of the Bre- ‘ thren are even at this time ‘ much delighted. And I re- ‘ verence the Man for this ‘ reason chiefly, because he ‘ is (c) dead. But I judge ‘ Truth most to be beloved, ‘ and to be the most precious ‘ of all things. It is our ‘ duty to praise, and freely ‘ to commend whatever is ‘ truly said: But we are al- ‘ so to examine and correct ‘ whatever unsound opinion ‘ appears to have been com- ‘ mitted to writing. Now ‘ could he be present, and ‘ discuss his Opinion by ‘ word of mouth, then a bare ‘ discourse by Questions and ‘ Answers, without any wri- ‘ ting might suffice to con- ‘ vince and reduce the ad- ‘ verse Party to an agree- ‘ ment. But since there is ‘ a Book published (and as ‘ to some it seems) a most ‘ perswasive one; since some Teachers look upon ‘ the Law and the Prophets to be of no value; ‘ neglect to follow the Gospels; have small e- ‘ steem for the Epistles of the Apostles; and ‘ (d) promise great things concerning the Doctrine ‘ of this Book, as containing some great and hid- ‘ den Mystery; since they ‘ will not suffer the more ig- ‘ norant of our Brethren to ‘ think of any thing that is ‘ sublime and great, neither ‘ of the glorious and truly ‘ divine Advent of our Lord, ‘ nor of our Resurrection ‘ from the Dead; our ga- ‘ thering together to him, ‘ and our being made like ‘ him: (e) But perswade 'em ‘ to think that Men hope for ‘ nothing in the Kingdom ‘ of God, but abject and mortal things, such as ‘ they now hope for: It is necessary we enter ‘ into a dispute against our Brother Nepos, as if ‘ he himself were present.” After some words he continues saying; ‘ When I was in the Province ‘ of the (f) Arsionitæ (where, ‘ as you know, this Opinion ‘ was long since propagated ‘ so far, that there were ‘ Schisms and Revoltings of whole Churches ‘ together;) having convened the Presbyters and Teachers

Gallienus.

(a) We have here sufficient evidence that this Book concerning the Promises was written in answer to Nepos. I wonder that Hieronymus in his Preface before the eighteenth Book of his Comments upon Esaias, should affirm that this Book was written against Irenæus Bishop of Lions. Indeed Irenæus was one of them who believed that Christ should come and reign on the Earth 1000 years, which Opinion was grounded on Papias's Authority, as Hieronymus himself affirms, and also our Author Eusebius in the end of the third Book. But as well from this place, as also from Hieronymus himself, in his Book De Script. Eccles. we may gather that this Book was not written against Irenæus, but against Nepos. Vales.

(b) Ψαλμῳδίας, we have here translated, the Composition of Psalms and Hymns; according to the custom of the Christians, who used to compose Psalms and Hymns in honour of Christ, as Eusebius in the end of the fifth Book attesteth. We also find mention of these Hymns in the Epistle of the Council of Antioch against Paul of Samosata, and in the last Canon but one of the Council of Laodicea, where there is an expres prohibition, that no Psalms which in Greek are called ἰδιωτικοὶ, that is, composed by private or ignorant Persons, should be sang in Churches. Vales.

(c) Pliny in his 28 Book, Chap. 2. asketh, why we affirm, when we mention any dead persons, that we will not vex or disturb their memory. Vales.

(d) This word καλλεπτύνω γέλλω signifies properly to promise a great while before any performance; it is a Metaphor taken from the Mysteries of the Grecians, who promised strange and great things to them who are initiated, and tormented them with a long expectation; that by keeping their thoughts thus in suspence, they might beget in them an Opinion, and a Fear and Reverence. Vales.

(e) The true reading of this place in the Greek, we owe to the Maz. MS. according to which reading we have here translated it. Vales.

(f) This Province was so called from Arsinoe, who was Queen of it, before it was a Roman Province. Vales.

* That is, that the Promises were to be literally understood.

Gallienus. ‘Teachers of the Brethren in every particular ‘Village, (ſuch Brethren alſo as had a mind to ‘come being preſent,) I adviſed them that there ‘might be Reſearches made into this Doctrine, ‘in the preſence of a publick Aſſembly. And ‘when they produced this Book as a defence, and ‘an impregnable Bulwark, ſitting with them three ‘whole Days together from Morning till Eve‘ning, I endeavour'd to diſcuſs the Contents ‘thereof. In all which time I did extraordinarily ‘admire the Conſtancy of the Brethren, their ‘love to Truth, and the ‘(g) great quickneſs and ‘readineſs of their Under‘ſtanding, with ſo much or‘der, modeſty and modera‘tion did we propoſe Que‘ſtions, propound Doubts, ‘and yield our aſſents. For we took ſpecial care ‘never pertinaciouſly to defend our former Opi‘nions, when once they were found to be erro‘neous: Neither did we ſhun the Objections of o‘thers; but to the utmoſt of our power, we endea‘voured to (h) keep cloſe ‘to the Points of the preſent ‘Queſtion, and confirm 'em ‘as well as we could: Nei‘ther, if we were convinc'd, ‘were we aſham'd to be per‘ſwaded out of our Opini‘on, and conſent with others: But with a good ‘Conſcience, unfeignedly, and with (i) Hearts ‘diſplay'd to God, we received whatever was ‘grounded upon the Demonſtrations and Decla‘rations of the Sacred Scripture. In the conclu‘ſion, the chief Maintainer and Champion of this ‘Doctrine, by name Coracio, confeſſed and made ‘a Proteſtation to us, in the audience of all the ‘Brethren there aſſembled, that he would no lon‘ger adhere to this Opinion, nor diſpute concer‘ning it, nor mention it, nor preach it, ſo power‘fully was he convinc'd by the Arguments which ‘had been brought againſt it. And the reſt of ‘the Brethren, which were preſent, rejoyced at ‘this Conference, and at the (k) Reconciliation ‘and Unanimity which was amongſt all Men."

(g) Εὐπαρακολούθητον, is the term in the Original; I have rendred it docilitatem, aptneſs to be taught. For Auditors are properly ſaid παρακολουθεῖν, when they apprehend the ſence of words. Valeſ.

(h) The Greek Phraſe is ἐπιβατεύειν τῶν προκειμένων, which Valeſius renders, ad ea de quibus inſtituta erat diſputatio eniti; and we, to keep cloſe to the Points of the Queſtion in hand, or the preſent Queſtion.

(i) This phraſe ἡ-πλωμέναις ταῖς καρδίαις, is truly tranſlated thus, expanſis cordibus, & patefactis, with hearts unfolded, and, as it were ſpread abroad: But ſome tranſlate it puris & ſimplicibus cordibus, with pure and ſingle hearts: Which ſence tho' the words may bear, yet it is not ſo good in this place, as the other Verſion. Valeſ.

(k) Συγκατάβασις, is not put in this place for Diſpenſation, but for the ſame as συμβίβασις, (i. e.) an Union, and Reconciliation: And ſo Dionyſius uſes the word a little before: St. Paul alſo in his Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, Chap. 2. Ver. 2. and 19. uſeth συμβιβάζειν, and συμβιβασμὸς, in this ſence. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXV.

Concerning the Revelation of John.

HAving interpoſed ſome words, he afterwards ſays thus concerning the Revelation of John: ‘Indeed ſome of our Anceſtors diſown'd, and ‘wholly rejected this Book; confuting every ‘Chapter, and demonſtrating it to be an un‘known and ſenſeleſs Work, and that the Title is ‘forged; for they ſay it is not John's: Neither ‘is it a Revelation, becauſe it is covered over with ‘ſo thick and dark a Veil of Ignorance; And ‘that not only no Apoſtle, but alſo no Holy or ‘Eccleſiaſtick Perſon, could have been the Com‘piler of this Work: But that it was * Cerinthus, ‘the Founder of the Hereſie, called from him the ‘Cerinthian Hereſie, who was deſirous to have ‘a creditable name prefix'd before his Forgery: Gallienus. ‘For this, they ſay, was Cerinthus's Opinion and ‘Doctrine; that Chriſt's Kingdom ſhould be ter‘reſtrial: And whatſoever he, being a carnal ‘and voluptuous Man, moſt luſted after, in theſe ‘he dream'd the Kingdom of Chriſt conſiſted; ‘as in indulging the Belly, and the Parts beneath ‘the Belly; I mean, in eating, drinking, and ‘marrying; and alſo in Feſtivals, Sacrifices, and ‘killing of Victims, by which theſe might with ‘more ſpecious pretences be acquired. I dare ‘not indeed reject this Book, ſince many of the ‘Brethren have it in great eſteem. But this is ‘the Opinion I have of it, I think the Sence or ‘Subject thereof ſurpaſſeth my apprehenſion, and ‘that there is a myſterious and admirable mea‘ning covertly contain'd in every part of it; ‘for though I do not underſtand it, yet I ſup‘poſe there is a more profound meaning com‘prehended in the words. I do not judge of, ‘nor fathom theſe things by the Line of my ‘own Reaſon; but attributing much more to ‘Faith, I eſteem them more ſublime than to be ‘comprehended by me. I do not condemn thoſe ‘things I could not underſtand, but I the rather ‘admire them becauſe I cannot ſee through ‘them." After theſe words, having carefully look'd into the whole Book of the Revelation, and demonſtrated that it was impoſſible to be underſtood according to the obvious ſence of the words, he goes on, ſaying, ‘But having fini‘ſhed his Prophecy, (as I may call it,) the ‘Prophet pronounceth bleſſing upon all them ‘who keep it, and moreover on himſelf too; ‘for he ſaith, * Bleſſed is he that keepeth the words * Revel. c. 22. v. 7, 8. ‘of the Prophecy of this Book: And I am John ‘which ſaw and heard theſe things. I do not in‘deed deny that his name was John, and that ‘this was John's Book: [For I grant that it was ‘written by ſome Holy and Divinely inſpired ‘Perſon:] But I cannot eaſily be brought to ‘give my conſent that this was John the Apoſtle, ‘the Son of Zebedee, the Brother of James, the ‘Author of the Goſpel according to John, and of the ‘Catholick Epiſtle. For I conjecture by the ‘Genius and Nature of them both, by the form ‘of the Stile, and the Me‘thod and (a) Diſpoſition ‘(as they call it) of the ‘Book, that it is not the ſame ‘Writer. For the Evange‘liſt does no-where inſert ‘his name; neither does ‘he make himſelf known ‘either in his Epiſtle, or ‘Goſpel." Afterwards he thus proceeds again: ‘John no where [ſpeaks] ‘either as concerning him‘ſelf, or as concerning ano‘ther. (a) Διεξαγωγὴ is a term proper to the Rhetoricians, as plainly appears by the following word λεγομένη: I think that διεξαγωγὴ has the ſame import with Diſpoſitio, or διοικονομία; for διεξαγαγεῖν, in Suidas is the ſame as διοικεῖν, to diſpoſe, or handle. Or we may render it the form and manner of writing: For firſt he proves the Revelation not to be John's the Apoſtle, by the τὸ ἦθος, the Genius, or Nature of the Writer: Then by the Stile and Mode of writing, that is, by the Phraſe and the Sentences. Valeſ.

‘ them. Therefore that it was John who wrote ‘ theſe things, we ought to believe, becauſe he ‘ affirms it. But what John it was 'tis uncertain;
‘ for he has not ſaid that he himſelf was that John,
‘ who in ſeveral places of the Goſpel is called ‘ the beloved diſciple of the Lord; or that he was he ‘ who lay in the Boſom of the Lord; or that ‘ he was the Brother of James; or that he was ‘ the perſon who with his own Eyes and ‘ Ears ſaw and heard the Lord. For certainly
‘ he would have mentioned ſome of theſe fore-
‘ mentioned [Deſcriptions,] if he were deſi-
‘ rous to have made himſelf apparently known.
‘ But he has recorded none of theſe Paſſages in ‘ his Writings, but ſtiles himſelf our Brother
‘ and Companion and Witneſs of Jeſus, and calls
‘ himſelf Bleſſed, becauſe he ſaw and heard theſe
‘ Revelations. I ſuppoſe there were many of ‘ the ſame name with John the Apoſtle, who thro'
‘ their love to, admiration and zealous emula-
‘ tion of him, and becauſe they were deſirous
‘ to be beloved of the Lord as he was, had a ‘ great love for his name:
‘ (b) As we ſee many ‘ Children of the Faithful
‘ called by the name of Paul
‘ and Peter. Moreover there
‘ is another John mention'd
‘ in the Acts of the Apoſtles, ‘ ſirnamed * Mark, whom ‘ Barnabas and Paul took to be ‘ their Companion. Concer‘ ning whom it is again
‘ ſaid, * They had John to be
‘ their Miniſter. Whether it
‘ were he that was the Au‘ thor of this Revelation or ‘ not, I dare not affirm. For ‘ 'tis no-where written that
‘ he came with them into ‘ Aſia, but 'tis ſaid that when ‘ Paul and his Company
‘ looſed from Paphos, they came
‘ to Perga in Pamphilia:
‘ and John departing from ‘ them, returned to Jeruſalem.
‘ Therefore I think it was ‘ ſome other John, one of ‘ them who lived in Aſia.
‘ For 'tis ſaid there are two Tombs at Epheſus,
‘ and both called by the name of John's Tomb.
(c) This is Dionyſius's ſecond Argument; by which he proves that the Goſpel and Revelation were not written by one and the ſame John; for he had urged his firſt Argument begun at Note (a) to this place: Now here he begins a ſecond, (viz.) to prove by the Words and Sentences, and by the placing of the Words or method, that they were two diſtinct perſons: For I render this word σύνταξις, the placing or modelling of words, according to Cicero; though σύνταξις in this place may as well comprehend the ordering and modelling of ſentences, as of words. But here we may take notice what an excellent Critick Dionyſius Alexandrinus was. For it is the property of a Critick to judge of the Writings of the Ancients, and to diſcern what is true and genuine, and what ſpurious and ſuppoſititious. Valeſ.

‘ (c) Alſo from the Sentences, the Words, and
‘ the diſpoſition or placing of them, this John who ‘ wrote the Revelation, may with good reaſon be ‘ ſuſpected to be a diſtinct perſon from the other
‘ John; for there is a mutual agreement betwixt
‘ the Goſpel and the Epiſtle, and they both begin a-
‘ like. The Goſpel begins thus; In the beginning
‘ was the Word. The Epiſtle thus; That which ‘ was from the beginning. The Goſpel ſays; And
‘ the Word was made fleſh and dwelt amongſt us;
‘ And we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only- ‘ begotten Son of the Father. The Epiſtle ſays the ‘ ſame with a very little variation: That which ‘ we have heard, which we have ſeen with our eyes,
‘ which we have looked upon, and our hands have ‘ handled of the word of life; for the life was mani-
‘ feſted. For theſe are his Preludiums, directing ‘ his words (as in the following Paſſages he has ‘ declared) againſt thoſe who denied that Chriſt
‘ came in the Fleſh: Wherefore on ſet purpoſe
‘ he ſubjoyneth this, And what we have ſeen we ‘ bear witneſs to, and ſhew unto you that eternal life
‘ which was with the Father, and was manifeſted unto ‘ us. That which we have ſeen and heard, declare we ‘ unto you. He is conſtant to himſelf, and does ‘ not in the leaſt wander from his Subject pro-
‘ poſed, but in the ſame
‘ (d) Periods and Words he ‘ does proſecute all Points,
‘ ſome of which expreſſions
‘ we will briefly recount.
‘ He who does carefully
‘ read them, will both in his ‘ Goſpel and Epiſtle, very frequently meet with ‘ life; very often with light, an avoiding of dark-
‘ neſs; very frequently with truth, grace, joy, the ‘ fleſh and blood of our Lord, judgment, forgiveneſs
‘ of ſins, the love of God towards us, the command-
‘ ment of mutual love one towards another, and that ‘ we ought to keep all the Commandments. There
‘ is alſo contained in them
‘ the (e) condemnation of the ‘ World, of the Devil, and
‘ of Antichriſt; the promiſe
‘ of the Holy Ghoſt; the A-
‘ doption of the ſons of God;
‘ a faith univerſally required
‘ of us; mention of the Father and the Son in eve-
‘ ry place. In ſum, they who note the Phraſe
‘ in all things throughly, may eaſily diſcern, that
‘ the Genius and Stile, both in the Goſpel and the ‘ Epiſtle, appears to be one and the ſame. But
‘ the Revelation is altogether different from, and ‘ unlike to theſe; it has no alliance to, nor (as ‘ I may ſo ſay) familiarity with either of theſe:
‘ Nor has the Revelation ſo much as one ſyllable
‘ in it which is common to theſe: Neither does
‘ the Epiſtle (for I omit the Goſpel) make the ‘ leaſt mention of the Revelation; nor the Reve-
‘ lation of the Epiſtle: And yet Paul in his Epi-
‘ ſtles mentions ſomething concerning his Reve-
‘ lations, which he did not digeſt into a Volume
‘ by themſelves. Furthermore by the Phraſe,
‘ the difference betwixt the Epiſtle and Goſpel
‘ and the Revelation, may be eaſily conjectured:
‘ For thoſe are not only written moſt † correct-

(b) We ought to take ſpecial notice of this Paſſage concerning the Primitive Chriſtians cuſtom of calling their Children, by the names of Peter and Paul, which they did both for the reverence and love they bare to thoſe Saints, and alſo that their Children might be beloved and no leſs dear in the ſight of God than thoſe Saints were. Chryſoſtom in his Oration concerning St. Meletius faith, that the Antiochians had ſuch a reverence and eſteem for him, that the Parents called their Children after his name, that they might have their Houſes in a manner adorned with his preſence. The ſame Father alſo in his 21 Homily upon Geneſis, adviſeth his Auditors that they ſhould not careleſly call their Children by their Grandfather's or Great-Grandfathers, or ſome noble Heroes names, but that they ſhould rather give them the names of ſome Men who were famous for Virtue and and Piety; that the Children, by their Example, might be excited to an imitation of them. Valeſ.

For [the Evangeliſt] ('tis apparent) had (f) both Faculties; the Lord had endow'd him with both, that is, the gift of knowledge, and the gift of ſpeaking. As touching this other John I do not indeed deny that he ſaw the Revelation, and that he received the [gift of] knowledge and of prophecy. But I take notice that his Dialect and Stile is not pure Greek, but he makes uſe of ſome barbarous words, yea and in ſome places he has Solœciſms, which it is not now neceſſary to give a Catalogue of. For I would have no one ſuppoſe that I have ſaid theſe things in a way of deriſion; but only on this account, that I might explain the Diſſimilitude of theſe Books.

(f) By both faculties he means that which the Greeks call λόγος προφορικὸς, and ἐνδιάθετος, (i. e.) externus and internus ſermo, which is afterwards mentioned, πνεῦμα τῆς γνώσεως, πνεῦμα τῆς φρονήσεως λόγον, the gift of knowledge and the gift of ſpeaking; by which ſubſequent words the preceding are explain'd. Valeſ.

(a) Hence we may gather that the two Books concerning the Promiſes, out of which Euſebius has the fragments afore-quoted, were Epiſtles. We may alſo confirm this by a paſſage in Chap. 22. where Dionyſius uſes ὡς εἶπας which is an Epiſtolary phraſe.

THere are extant many more of Dionyſius's Epiſtles (a) beſides theſe. As for example, his Epiſtles to Ammon Biſhop of Berenice againſt Sabellius; and an Epiſtle to Teleſphorus; alſo one to Euphranor; and again, another to Ammon and Euporus. He alſo wrote (b) four more Books upon the ſame Subject, and dedicated them to his Nameſake Dionyſius Biſhop of Rome. There are alſo more of his Epiſtles beſides theſe extant amongſt us: And moreover ſome Books of his, which are ſomething verboſe and prolix, and are written in an Epiſtolary form: As for example, his Books concerning (c) Nature, which are dedicated to Timotheus a Child, concerning Temptations, which he dedicated to Euphranor: Beſides theſe Books, in his Epiſtle to Baſilides Biſhop of Pentapolis, he ſays he wrote a Comment upon the beginning of Eccleſiaſtes. He has alſo left us ſeveral Epiſtles which he wrote to this (d) Baſilides. Thus many are Dionyſius's Works. But now after an Hiſtorical Relation of thoſe things, we will deliver to the knowledge of Poſterity an Account of our own Age.

But becauſe theſe Epiſtles were ſomething prolix, they were therefore called Books. Ruſinus truly calls Dionyſius's Epiſtles concerning Baptiſm, Books, and the four Books againſt Sabellius here mentioned are nothing elſe but a longer ſort of Epiſtles, which Euſebius teſtifies: For he ſaith that all the reſt of Dionyſius's Books were written in an Epiſtolary form and ſtyle. Valeſ.

(b) Dionyſius Alexand. in his Epiſtles againſt Sabellius ſeemed not to be Orthodox, as touching the Divinity of Chriſt, and he was accuſed of it before Dionyſius Biſhop of Rome, by ſome of the Biſhops of Pentapolis, who went to Rome. Dionyſius Roman called a Synod, heard the Accuſers, and having examined ſome ſelect Opinions in Dionyſ. Epiſtles, he wrote to Dionyſ. Alexand. deſiring him that he would more diſtinctly declare his Faith and Opinion concerning thoſe matters. Upon this account Dionyſ. Alexand. wrote four Epiſtles to Dionyſ. Roman. which he intitled, περὶ ἐλέγχου καὶ ἀπολογίας, (that is,) concerning the confutation of his Adverſaries, and concerning his own Apology, or defence of himſelf. Valeſ.

(c) Euſebius, in his 14th Book De Præparat. produces an excellent piece of this Book De Naturâ. It was dedicated, Τιμοθέῳ τῷ παιδὶ; this word being dubiouſly taken to ſignifie either a Son, or any other Child or Servant, 'tis ſome difficulty to determine who the Perſon was, to whom it was dedicated, ſome ſay to his Son: I have here rendred it to a Child. For I cannot think that Dionyſ. was ever married. The like difficulty occurs in Book 6. Chap. 40. Valeſ.

(d) Of theſe many Epiſtles written by Dionyſius to this Baſilides, only one is now extant, which Theodorus Balſamo has preſerved for us. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXVII.

Concerning Paul of Samoſata, and the Hereſie founded by him at Antioch.

DIonyſius, Nameſake to Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria, ſucceeds Xyſtus, after he had preſided over the Church of Rome (a) eleven years. About the ſame time alſo died Demetrianus Biſhop of Antioch, whom Paul of Samoſata ſucceeded in his Biſhoprick. This Paul had an abject and low Opinion of Chriſt, contrary to the Doctrine of the Church, as if he had been by nature no more than a meer Man; Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria was intreated to come to the Synod: He having complained of his Age, and alſo of his Infirmity of Body deferr'd his coming: But he openly declared by Letter what was his ſence and opinion concerning the matter in debate. But the reſt of the Paſtors of the Churches from all Parts haſtned to Antioch, and were convened there, as againſt the Corrupter of Chriſt's Flock.

(a) Here Euſebius is in a groſs miſtake, for Xyſtus was not Biſhop of Rome 11 Years, but only 2 Years and Eleven Months, as we may ſee in the Book De Pontificibus Romanis, which account of Cuſpinianus firſt publiſhed, and that Book is moſt exact in its account of the times of the Popes from Calliſtus to Liberius: The ſame alſo ſays, Xyſtus ſuffered Martyrdom on the eighth of the Ides of Auguſt: But our Author neither here, in his Hiſtory, nor in his Chronicle mentions any thing of Xyſtus's Martyrdom, which I really admire, and ſhould more admire, did not I certainly know that Euſebius is not over-ſollicitous and curious in his Hiſtory concerning what things were done in the Weſtern parts. Moreover Euſebius in his Chronicle aſcribes Eight Years to Xyſtus, and he ſays that Dionyſius ſucceeded Xyſtus in the 12th Year of Gallienus, and that Maximus ſucceeded Dionyſ. Alexandrin. in the 11th Year of the ſaid Gallienus the Emperor. Which is moſt abſurd, whenas 'tis evident that Dionyſ. Alexand. dedicated his four Books againſt Sabellius to Dionyſ. Roman. as our Author tells us in Chap. 26. of this 7th Book. Valeſ.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Concerning the Eminent Biſhops of thoſe Times.

THE moſt Eminent of theſe aſſembled were Firmilianus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia; Gregory and Athenodorus both Brothers, Biſhops of the Churches of Pontus: Beſides theſe there were Helenus Biſhop of Tarſus, and (a) Nichomas Biſhop of Iconium: Alſo Hymenæus Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and Theotecnus Biſhop of Cæſarea upon the Confines of Jeruſalem: Beſides theſe, Maximus, who with great commendation governed the Brethren of Boſtra. And a great many more may be reckon'd: who, together with Presbyters and Deacons, were convened in the aforeſaid City at the time aforeſaid, and upon the ſame account. But theſe were the moſt eminent of them. All theſe therefore being aſſembled in the ſame place together; (b) divers times and often, Diſputations and Queſtions were rais'd in every Synod. On the one ſide Paul of Samoſata endeavoured to conceal and hide his Heterodox Opinions; on the other, theſe Perſons ſtriving with all diligence to denudate and make apparent his Hereſie and Blaſphemy againſt Chriſt. In the

(a) This name Nichomas ſeems to be abbreviated, & ſhould rather be Nichomedes or Nicomachus. In the old MS. in the Abbey of Corbie which contains a Collection of the Canons; amongſt the Biſhops which ſubſcribed to the Council of Nice, Nicomas Biſhop of Boſtra is named the firſt of the Biſhops of the Province of Arabia: But the common MSS. read Nichomachus, and ſo we find it in the MS. of C. Juſtellus, which is of no leſs antiquity than the other. Valeſ.

(b) We here tranſlate it, divers times, though ſome Greek Copies read only χρὸν διαφόρως· But all our MSS. read χρὰς διαφόρους. There were ſeveral Synods called againſt this Paul of Samoſata: Hence follows the word [πολλάκις] which we muſt in no wiſe ſuppoſe to be ſuperfluous here. Euſebius ſays, There were many Synods aſſembled at ſeveral times, and in every Synod there were many Seſſions or Actions. The firſt Synod againſt Paul was at Antioch in the twelfth year of Gallienus; of which Synod Firmilianus was Preſident: Concerning which ſee Bartnius, Anno Chriſti 265, and 266. Valeſ.

How Paul being confuted by Malchion a Presbyter, (who formerly had been one of the † Sophistæ*) was deposed.*

Aurelianus. (a) IN this Emperor's time was the last Synod convened, which consisted of a very great number of Bishops: The Author of that Heresie at Antioch being now convicted, and by all manifestly condemned of false Doctrine, was Excommunicated out of the Catholick Church, which is under Heaven. But one (b) Malchion most especially confuted and convinced him, being desirous to keep himself concealed: He was a most eloquent Man, and Master of the Grecian Philosophy-School at Antioch. And moreover, for his surpassing sincerity in the Faith of Christ, he was honour'd with a Presbytership of the Church there. Now this Man having undertaken to dispute against Paul, (the Notaries having written down all the Passages of that Disputation, which is at this day extant) was the only person that was able to detect and convince that crafty and deceitful Fellow.

(a) Hence it may be gathered, that the Synod of Antioch was assembled in the beginning of Aurelianus's Reign. But I cannot assent to Baronius, who says this Synod was called in the second year of Aurelianus. The Council of Ephesus, in pag. 228. utterly destroys this Opinion of Baronius: For it says that Paul of Samosata was excommunicated 160 years before that time; and if we reckon backwards we shall find, that the year of Claudius and Paternus's Consulship, that is, the year of Christ 270. is the 160 year backwards from the time that Book was written, which was, Theodosius 13th, and Valentinianus 3d being Consuls. Moreover, if Baronius reckon these things done in the 2d year of Aurelianus, he must of necessity make Dionysius to continue Bishop of Rome till that Year; but that is contrary to the Authority of the Lib. Pontifical. Farther, in the second year of Aurelianus his Reign, there was a War waged against Zenobia, when Antioch and other Cities were taken, so that 'tis impossible there should be a Synod of Bishops that year there. Vales.

(b) Leontius in his first Book against Nestorius, has a Fragment of this Disputation. In Theodoret, this Malchion is called Malachion; but falsly: This Man gained such Honour in this Confutation of Paul, that he was thought worthy to be Canoniz'd in the Greek Menology, at the 28th day of October. Vales.

CHAP. XXX.

Concerning the Epistle of the Bishops against Paul.

THE Prelates therefore, being assembled together, by common consent writ an Epistle to Dionysius Bishop of Rome, and Maximus Bishop of Alexandria: And then sent it over all the Provinces; both manifesting their diligence to all Men; the perverse Heterodoxy of Paul, the Confutations and Disputes which were held against them; and also giving in a Narration of the whole Life and Morals of the Man, whose words in which Epistle, that Posterity may remember them, it will be convenient here to relate.

The EPISTLE.

To Dionysius and Maximus, and to all our Fellow-Ministers over the whole World, Bishops, Presbyters, and Deacons; and to the whole Catholick Church under Heaven; Helenus, Hymenæus, Theophilus, Theotecnus, Maximus, Proclus, Nicomas, (a) Ælianus, Paul, Bolanus, Protogenes, Hierax, Eutychius, Theodorus, Malchion, and Lucius; and all the rest of the Bishops of the neighbouring Cities and Provinces which are with us, the (b) Presbyters and Deacons, and the Churches of God, To the beloved Brethren in the Lord, health. After some words interposed, they add these following. We have written to, and intreated many of the Bishops far remote, that they would come and assist in the Curing of this Pestiferous Doctrine: For we wrote to Dionysius Bishop of Alexandria, and to Firmilianus Bishop of Cappadocia, Men of blessed Memory. The first of them wrote to Antioch, but did not so much as vouchsafe the Author of the Heresie a Salutation; (c) neither did he write to him by name, but to the whole Church: A Copy of which Letter we have here inserted. The other, Firmilianus came twice, and condemn'd Paul's Novelties, as we who were then present do attest, and many others do also know as well as we. But when he promised to recant, Firmilianus believing him, and hoping that the business might be composed (d) without any reproach to our Religion, deferr'd his Sentence; being deceived by him who denied his God and Lord, and who kept not the Faith which he formerly profess'd. But Firmilianus was now about coming to Antioch: And he came as far as Tarsus; for he had had experience of his malicious wickedness who denied his God. But in the interim of our assembling, and whilst we were sending for him, and expecting his coming, he died. After some other Passages they describe his Morals, and what course of Life he led, in these words: But since he turn'd to forged and spurious Opinions, departing from the (e) true Rule, it is not our concern to examine the Actions of one who is out of the Church: Neither how he, who was formerly poor and indigent, (having had no Estate from his Parents, nor got any thing by any Trade or Profession) is now become incredibly rich, by his unlawful and sacrilegious dealings, (f) by extortion, and vexatiousness used towards the Brethren, and by (g) taking Bribes from Aurelianus.

(a) In the Maz. Fuk. Med. and Sav. MSS. 'tis writ thus, ἀιλιανὸς Ælianus; but in some printed Editions, 'tis ἀμιλιανὸς, Amilianus. Also Rufinus, and Nicephorus call him Ælianus. Athanasius says there were Seventy Fathers in this Synod, who divested Paul of Samosata. Vales.

(b) We ought to take notice of the inscription of this Epistle: For we find here not the Names of Bishops only, but also of Presbyters, and Deacons, and of the Laity also. The same we may see in the Acts of the Council of Carthage, in which Cyprian was President, and in the Council of Eliberis. Vales.

(c) Hence we may gather, the Epistle of Dionys. Alexand. to Paul of Samosata, which is inserted in the 11th Volume of the Bibliotheca Patrum, is suppositious, together with the ten Propositions of Paul, and Dionysius's Answers to them. For the Fathers of the Council of Antioch do here affirm, that Dionys. did not write to Paul, but to the whole Church of Antioch. In that Epistle which goes under the name of Dionysius, we find that he wrote to Paul twice. But the stile of the Epistle and Answer is not at all like Dionysius's Works. So that I am fully perswaded, although Baronius takes that Work to be true and Genuine, it is false, and adulterate. Vales.

(d) The Greek words [ἄνευ πάνυ τοῦ καὶ τὸν λόγον λαιδορίας] must be translated, Sine ullâ Religionis nostræ contumeliâ, and we have rendred them in English accordingly: But Christophorson scorned to follow that excellent Version of Rufinus, which agrees with us. Vales.

(e) The Fathers called the Rule of Faith τὸν κανόνα, the true Rule. See the 4th Book of our Author Eusebius and Chap. 23. where we find the same use of κανὼν exactly with this here. Vales.

(f) Extortion is twofold; and is committed either by the Terror of Authority, as when a Soldier, or Magistrate demands any thing; or else by Deceit and Cunning, when under pretence of favouring, or succouring and helping a Man we get something from him, And this latter is that which the Fathers of the Council of Antioch here mean: The Greeks call it σείειν; so here, σείειν τὰς ἀδελφὰς; to which the Latin word concussio, and concutere does exactly answer; in which sense they were used among the old Lawyers. We also find the word in the Gospel, where John gives this command to the Soldiers: (viz.) Μηδένα διασείσητε, Luke Chap. 3. 14. And amongst the Grecians, the ancient use of the word σείειν is in the same sense as calumniari. So Aristophanes and Teleclides, use the word. Vales.

(g) Καταβραβεύειν is by Langus very well translated præmia accipere, to take Bribes: St. Paul uses that term, Colos. 2. 18. Vales.

thoſe that were injured, promiſing to help them to their Right, for a Reward; but he deceived them too, (h) getting Money for doing nothing through their willingneſs, who were entangled in Suits, to give any thing for a delivery from thoſe Troubles: He (i) ſuppoſed godlineſs to be gain. Neither need we declare how proud and inſolent he was, being inveſted with ſecular Dignities; and deſiring to be ſtiled a (k) Ducenarius, rather than a Biſhop: And how he walked in ſtate through the * Forum, reading and dictating Letters as he walked in publick, with a numerous Guard about him, ſome going before and ſome following him: In ſo much that were was an ill Opinion and an Odium brought upon the Faith through his Pride and Haughtineſs. Neither [does it concern us to examine] his vain-glorious Ambition in the Eccleſiaſtick Conventions, which he greedily purſues, being deſirous of Glory, and affected with an imaginary Pomp: With ſuch Devices as theſe terrifying the Minds of the Faithful and Ignorant. Beſides, he erected for himſelf a (l) Tribunal, and a lofty Throne, not like one of Chriſt's Diſciples, but had a place called his (m) Secretum, like as the ſecular Magiſtrates have. He alſo uſed to clap his Hand upon his Thigh, and ſtamp'd upon the Throne with his Feet. And ſuch as did not commend him, and ſhake their (n) Oraria, as they uſually did in the Theaters, and did not make loud Exclamations, nor leap'd up and down in the ſame manner as his Favourites (which were a company of ſilly Men and Women that during their hearkning to him uſed ſuch Indecencies) did; but were attentive to him with ſuch a ſeemly reverence and decency as befits the Houſe of God: Thoſe Perſons he rebuked and reproach'd. In his publick Diſcourſes he reflected upon thoſe Doctors of our Religion that were dead, with all imaginable ſcorn and petulancy; but he magnified himſelf not as became a Biſhop, but rather like a Counterfeit, and an Impoſtor. He aboliſhed the Pſalms, which were uſually ſung in honour of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as novel, and the Compoſures of modern Men. On the great Feaſt of Eaſter, he appointed Women to ſing Pſalms in his commendation in the Body of the Church, which whoſoever heard might juſtly tremble at: He alſo privately ſent the (o) Biſhops of the neighbouring Villages and Towns, and the Preſbyters who were his Flatterers to make Diſcourſes to the People in commendation of him. For he will not joyn in a Confeſſion with us, that the Son of God came down from Heaven, that we may now premiſe ſome things of what we ſhall hereafter more at large declare in writing: Neither ſhall this be affirmed on our bare word, but it is evident in many places up and down his (p) Acts which we have ſent you; And moſt eſpecially there where he ſays that Jeſus Chriſt is of the * Earth: But thoſe who chaunt out his Praiſes, and ſing his Encomiums amongſt the People, do ſay, that this their impious Maſter is an Angel come down from Heaven: Nor does that haughty Fellow prohibit theſe Expreſſions, but is himſelf preſent when they are ſpoken. What need we here mention his and his Presbyters and Deacons (q) ſub-introduced Women (as the Antiochians term them?) in whom he conceals not only this, but many other damnable Crimes, (which he is conſcious of, and of which he has been convict they are guilty) that by this means he may keep them ſo obnoxious, as not to adventure, through a fear of their own guilt, to accuſe him for his impious words and practices. Moreover, he has enrich'd them. And this is the reaſon he is beloved and admired by them who covet ſuch things. But why do we write theſe things? We know (Beloved) that it is the duty of a Biſhop, and of the whole Clergy, to be Examples of good Works to the People: Neither are we ignorant, that by introducing Women into their Society, ſome have wholly fell away from Goodneſs, and others have been ſuſpected. Although therefore it be granted he committed nothing that was unchaſte, yet the very ſuſpicion which ariſes from ſuch a thing, ought carefully to be avoided, leſt it ſhould be offenſive to any one, and induce others to imitate it: For how can he reprove, or admoniſh another not to frequent the company of Women, and to take heed leſt he fall, (as it is wrieten,) who has now indeed ſent away one, but keeps two that are young and beautiful with him? And where-ever he goes, he carries them along with him; and therefore indulges, and (r) ſtuffs himſelf with Delicacies. Theſe are the Reaſons that all People ſigh and lament privately: But they ſo dread his Tyranny, and Authority, that they dare not accuſe him; now, (as we have before ſaid) any would call a Man, who profeſſes the Catholick Doctrine, and is reckon'd of our Communion, to an account for theſe things. But from one, who has abjured the Myſtery [of our Religion,] and has boaſted in that curſed Hereſie of Artemas, (for why may we not manifeſt to you his Father:) We judge it needleſs to require an account of theſe things. Afterwards in the Cloſe of the Epiſtle they adjoyn theſe words. Having therefore excommunicated this contumacious Enemy of God; we were neceſſitated to Ordain another Biſhop in his ſtead over the Catholick Church, (as we are perſwaded, not without the Providence of God) [to wit,] Domnus (the Son of Demetrianus of bleſſed Memory, who before him was the Eminent Governour of that See) a Man adorn'd with all Accompliſhments requiſite to a Biſhop. Which we have therefore ſignified to you, that you may write to

* See Book 5. Chap. 1. Note (c.)

(l) The Fathers do not here condemn Paul, becauſe he had a Throne; for that was cuſtomary amongſt Biſhops, even from the times of the Apoſtles, as we may ſee in Chap. 19. Book 7. concerning the Throne of James the Brother of the Lord. But for this they condemn him, becauſe he erected a Tribunal for himſelf in the Church, and built a high Throne, as Ruſinus well tranſlates the place, higher than it was before. Biſhops did ſit higher than the People; but they had not a Tribunal. Valeſ.

(m) This Secretum was only proper to Magiſtrates, and the Judices Majores, or Judges of Life and Death. It was the inner-part of the Court of Judgment, and was compaſſed about with Rails, and Curtains were drawn about it; in it the Judges ſate, when they heard the Tryals of Criminals. But Aurelianus borrowed this cuſtom from the Eaſtern People, who long before his time uſed theſe Oraria after the ſame manner. Valeſ.

(o) Euſebius ſeems here to mean the Chorepiſcopi, which ſome term Vicarios Epiſcopi, and Vicarios, Epiſcopos, i. e. Deputies of the Biſhop, and Vicar-Biſhops. They here make a diſtinction betwixt the Epiſcopi Civitatum, and Epiſcopi Pagorum. And theſe latter, the Fathers here ſay, ſang, or repeated theſe Songs or Hymns in their Sermons, and Congregations. See Damaſi Epiſt. concerning theſe.

(p) Ὑπομνήματα are here Geſta, or Acta, Publick Acts; ſuch are commonly Regiſtred; but ſome falſly tranſlate them Commentaries. Now the Acts of this Synod of Antioch were nothing but the Diſputations of Malchion againſt Paul of Samoſata; which were Regiſtred by the Notaries. Valeſ.

* See Joh. 8. 23.

(q) Theſe Subintroduced women were neither Wives, nor Concubines, but a third ſort of Women; which the Presbyters, &c. kept, not to have Children by, nor upon account of luſt, but as 'twas pretended out of a deſire of Piety. See John Langus's Notes on Book 6. Niceph. Eccleſ. Hiſtor. Chap. 30. Theſe ſort of Women, Valeſius ſays, were called Siſters; which he was informed of from the third Canon. Concil. Nicen. They were alſo termed Commanentes. See Jerom's Epiſtle to Euſtochius, where he inveys againſt theſe ſort of Women.

(r) Here the Fathers accuſe Paul becauſe he kept theſe fair Women with him; and becauſe [ὑπὸ ἐμπιπλάμενος] he glutted himſelf with all ſenſual delights, as, Feaſts, Drinking, and the like, which are the common incentives of Luſt. Valeſ.

to him, and receive from him (f) Communicatory Letters: But as for this [Paul] let him write to Artemas, if he pleases, and let the followers of Artemas, hold Communion with him.

(f) Τὰ κοινωνικὰ γράμματα. The Latines call them, Literas communicatorias, communicatory Letters; the use whereof is very ancient in the Church. They were also called Formatæ, as Augustine, in Epist. 163. attests. There were two sorts of these Letters. One sort was given to the Clergy and Laity that were going to travel, that they might be admitted to Communion by foreign Bishops. Another sort were those, which Bishops sent to other Bishops, and received from them mutually, to attest and declare their mutual Communion: Concerning this latter sort the Synod speaks here. They were usually sent by the new Bishops a little after their Ordination. See August. 162 Epist. and Cyprian's Epistle to Cornelius, p. 92. Vales.

(t) Baronius at the year of Christ 272. (in which year he has placed this Synod of Antioch) accuses Eusebius of Fraud, or rather of Connivence; because he on set purpose (as he says) omitted that Creed which the Fathers made in this Council of Antioch, which utterly destroy'd Arianism. But Baronius, as in other places, so here also, causelessly accuseth Eusebius. For that Creed which he there produceth out of the Acts of the Synod of Ephesus, was not the Creed which was composed by the Fathers of the Council of Antioch, but by them of the Nicene Council. For the more certain demonstration of this, See the 3d Tome of the Acts of the Council of Ephesus, pag. 378; where this Creed, which Baronius mentions as composed by the Fathers of this Council of Antioch, is expresly assign'd to the Fathers of the Council of Nice. Wherefore that Creed which Baronius, and Binius, following his example, have placed in the Acts of this Council of Antioch, must be razed out. There is also extant an Epistle of this 2d Synod of Antioch to Paul of Samosata in the 11th Tome of the Bibliotheca Patrum, which Epistle was written about the beginning of the Session of this 2d Synod; but Baronius ascribes that Epistle to the first Synod, which cannot possibly be, because of the title, and the Persons mentioned in it, and other Circumstances. Vales.

(t) And let these things be here by us inserted. * Paul therefore having been devested of his Bishoprick, and being also fallen from the Orthodox Faith, Domnus (as is aforesaid) succeeded in the Government of the Church of Antioch: But (u) Paul being by no means willing to quit the Possession of the * Church; an Address was made to Aurelianus the Emperor, who most justly determined concerning this business; giving command that the Palace should be resign'd, to whom the Bishops of the Christian Religion in Italy and Rome should assign it by their Letters. Thus therefore the aforemention'd Paul, was with the greatest disgrace thrust out of the Church by the secular Power. Thus indeed was Aurelian affected towards us at that time; but in the following part of his Empire, his Mind towards us being alter'd, he was induced by the advice of some Men to raise a Persecution against us. Much discourse there was every-where concerning it: But the Divine Vengeance assaulted him, (being now ready, and, as I may say, almost subscribing the Edicts against us, [repressing] his design, and binding him (as it were) by the Arms; making it evidently apparent to all Men that the readiness of the Princes of this World [to persecute us] can never prevail against the Churches of Christ, unless the invincible Hand of God in his Divine and Celestial Judgment, permits it to be done for our chastisement and amendment, at those times in which he judgeth it most seasonable. Moreover, Probus succeeds Aurelian, having Reigned six years. And after he had held the Empire the like number of years, Carus together with his Sons, Carinus and Numerianus, succeed him. Again, these having not lived three full years, the Empire falls to Diocletian and those who were adopted with him. In whose times the Persecution against us was accomplish'd, and at the same time with it was the demolishing of the Churches: But a little before this died Dionysius, after he had govern'd the See of Rome nine years, and Felix succeeded him.

(u) After the Sentence of being deposed was passed against Paul, he kept his Church for some years; and would not obey the decree of the Bishops; relying on the power of Zenobia an Eastern Queen. Theodoret says, in his 2d Book Hæretic. Fabul. that Paul did flatter her, and used all means possible to get her favour. When Zenobia was conquered, the Christian Prelates petition'd Aurelianus, that this Paul, who had conspired with Zenobia against the Romans, might be removed from the See of Antioch, which was done in the third year of Aurelianus. Vales.

* Τὸ τῆς ἐκκλησίας οἶκος· the import of which words, being literally rendred, is the House of the Church: Perhaps they mean the Bishop's Palace; a little after they call it τὸν οἶκον; which we have rendred the Palace. Valesius renders the first Phrase Ecclesiæ Domus, and the second Domus.

CHAP. XXXI.

Concerning the Heterodox and Corrupt Opinion of the Manichees, which sprang up at this time.

Diocletian.

AT the same time that Mad-man, (truly called (a) Manes) who gave denomination to that furious Heresie, was arm'd with madness; Satan himself that Adversary of God, having produced him for the destruction of many Men. This person was barbarous in his whole course of life, in his very Discourse and Manners, he was as to his Disposition devilish and mad: He undertook what was agreeable hereto, and attempted to feign himself to be Christ. Sometimes he declared himself to be the * Paraclete, and the very Holy Spirit, being also, besides his Madness, puft up with Pride: At other times, as if he were Christ, he elected twelve Disciples to be Colleagues of his new-form'd Opinion. Moreover, when he had patch'd up a Collection of false and atheistical Opinions, gather'd out of various Heresies which were long since extinct, he pour'd them, like some deadly Poison, out of Persia into (b) our Country. Hence came that impious name of the (c) Manichees, which at this time abounds in many places: Such therefore was the Original of this (d) forged Doctrine which sprang up in the times before mention'd.

(a) Eusebius, as we here see, derives the name of this Heretick from the Greek word μανεὶς, a Mad-man: The Learned Bishop Pearson on the Creed, supposes Manes to be a Title rather than a name, and to be derived from the Hebrew מָנָא, or מְנָא, signifying an Heretick: See his Reasons for this derivation, in his marginal Notes at p. 64. of his Exposition on the Creed; Edit. Lond. 1669.

* See the Note on Chap. 14. B. 5.

(b) The Phrase in the original is ἐπὶ τὴν καθ' ἡμᾶς οἰκουμένην; which Valesius renders in Orbem Romanum, into the Roman Empire.

(c) Manes was not the first Author of this Heresie, though his followers were from him called Manicheans. Indeed Manes disseminated this Heresie in the days of Aurelianus, or Probus the Emperor: But he had a Predecessor, though not a Master, called first Terebinthus, afterwards Buddas: Which Buddas had a former Master, by name Scythianus, who was the first Author of this Heresie, and lived about the Apostolick times. See the Pedigree of this Heresie drawn at large by Epiphanius, Adversf. Manichæos; pag. 176, &c. Edit. Petav.

CHAP. XXXII.

Concerning those Ecclesiastick Men who were famous even in our Age, and which of them lived till the demolishing of the Churches.

AT this time Eutychianus succeeded Felix, who had been Bishop of the Church of Rome five years. And (a) he, having not lived not full ten months, leaves the dignity to Caius, who lived in our Age: When he had presided there about fifteen years, Marcellinus was ordain'd his Successor; whom the Persecution overtook: At this time Timæus succeeded Domnus in the Government of the Church of Antioch: After him Cyril succeeded in our memory. In his time we knew one (b) Dorotheus, who then had the dignity of Pres-

(a) This Eutychianus, sate Bishop of Rome 8 years and 11 months as is evident from the old book of the Popes; in which the years of all the Popes from Callistus are very well digested by the Consuls, under whom they began their Presidencies, and under whom they died. Eusebius here takes away 8 years from Eutychianus, and ascribeth them to Xystus. See Chap. 27. Note (a.) Vales.

(b) This Dorotheus Presbyter of Antioch, Baronius (in his Notes on the Roman Martyrology) takes to be the same with that Dorotheus, who was a Presbyter of Tyre: But this is a Mistake in him; which Error Blondellus undertakes to correct; but in the interim committeth one far worse. For he confounds this Dorotheus Presbyter of Antioch, with Dorotheus

Dorotheus, Diocleſian's Groom of the Chamber; whoſe Martyrdom our Author in the 8th Book giveth us an account of: I do not in the leaſt doubt but there were two of this name, (viz.) Dorotheus's, one was Presbyter of Antioch, and the other was Eunuch, Groom of the Chamber to Diocleſian. And this may be proved by ſufficient Arguments. (1.) This Dorotheus, the Presbyter, was not a Martyr; for we find no mention of him as ſuch in Euſebius, and certainly had he been ſo, Euſebius would not have omitted him amongſt the Eccleſiaſticks he reckons up Book 8. Chap. 13. who ſuffered Martyrdom, ſeeing alſo he was his Maſter. (2.) This Dorotheus the Presbyter was a Man nobly deſcended, and he bore Office before he was a Presbyter; but the other Dorotheus was a Man of a ſervile condition, an Eunuch, and Groom of the Chamber to Diocleſian. Beſides, 'tis impoſſible that the ſame Man ſhould be a Groom of the Chamber, and a Presbyter; for that was inconſiſtent with the Eccleſiaſtick Canon, and with reaſon; only Youths of great beauty were choſen to ſerve in the Emperor's Bed-Chamber. Laſtly, we read in Euſebius, and others, that Dorotheus the Groom of the Chamber ſuffered Martyrdom while he had that Office. Hence aroſe this Confuſion; both theſe Dorotheus's were Eunuchs, and both the Emperor's Favourites. Valeſ.

Diocleſian. byter in the Church of Antioch, a very learned Man: He was very ſtudious in the Sacred Scriptures, and uſed ſo great ſedulity in attaining the Hebrew Tongue, that he could read the Scriptures in Hebrew with great skilfulneſs. He was a perſon that had been (c) excellently well educated, and was not unexperienc'd in the Grecian Literature: But he was by nature an Eunuch, having been ſo from his very birth. The Emperor for this reaſon, (it being for example a thing which was wonderful,) took him into his favour, and advanced him to the Office of over-ſeeing the Purple Dye-houſe at Tyre: We have heard this perſon expo und the Holy Scriptures in the Church indifferently well: But after Cyrillus, Tyrannus ſucceeded in the Biſhoprick of the Church of Antioch; in whoſe time the deſtroying of the Churches was very violent: After Socrates, Euſebius govern'd the See of Laodicea, who was born at the City of Alexandria; the Cauſe of his removal [out of his own Country] was the Controverſie about Paul: Upon which account coming into Syria, he was detained from returning home by thoſe Perſons who in that place diligently buſied themſelves about Celeſtial matters; he was in our memory a moſt amiable Ornament of Religion, as we may eaſily underſtand from the words of Dionyſius before-quoted: (d) Anatolius was ordain'd his Succeſſor, a good Man (as the ſaying is) ſucceeding a good Man. He alſo was an Alexandrian by birth; for Eloquence, Grecian Literature and Philoſophy, he was acknowledg'd the chiefeſt of the moſt eminent Men in our Age; for he had arrived to a perfection in Arithmetick, Geometry, Aſtronomy, Logick, Phyſical Contemplations, and Rhetorick. Upon which account (as report ſays) he was intreated by the Citizens of Alexandria to ſet up a School there of the (e) Ariſtotelick Order [of Philoſophers:] They relate indeed many other famous Acts of his in the Siege of the (f) Bruchium at Alexandria: For by an univerſal conſent he was dignified with the chiefeſt place of pre-eminence and authority amongſt the Magiſtracy of that City. But for inſtance I will here mention only this Act of his. There being (as they ſay) a great ſcarcity of Corn amongſt the Beſieged, (in ſo much that the Famine was more intolerable to them than the Enemies without;) this afore-mention'd Anatolius being there, made this proviſion [for their relief:] the one (g) part of the City being Confederates with The Roman Army, and upon that account not beſieg'd; Anatolius ſendeth to Euſebius (for as yet he was there, this happening before his removal into Syria,) who was amongſt them that were not beſieged, (and had gotten great repute, and a famous name even with the Roman General,) to inform him of [the number] of thoſe that died by the Famine in the Siege. Euſebius underſtanding this, petition'd the Roman General as for the higheſt favour, that ſafety might be granted to thoſe who would deſert the Enemy: Having obtain'd his requeſt, he made it known to Anatolius; who, having forthwith receiv'd the [General's] promiſe, called together the Senate of Alexandria, and at firſt entreated them all to enter into an amicable friendſhip with the Romans. But when he perceived them to be exaſperated at that his propoſal; but (ſays he) I ſuppoſe you would not contradict me in this, ſhould I counſel you to ſend out of the Gates all perſons which are ſuperfluous, and of whom we have no uſe at all, to wit, old Women, Children, and old Men, and let them go whither they will: For why ſhould we to no purpoſe retain them with us, who are even dying? Why do we deſtroy them with Famine, who are diſabled and maimed in their Bodies? We ought to feed only Men, and thoſe that are young and ſtrong, and to (h) diſtribute neceſſary Corn to ſuch as are fit to defend the City. When by ſuch Arguments as theſe he had prevailed with the Senate, riſing up he gave his Vote firſt: That all thoſe who were not fit for ſervice, of what Sex ſoever, whether Men, or Women, ſhould quit the City; for ſhould they continue with them, and being wholly uſeleſs tarry in the City, there could be no hopes of ſafety, but they would be deſtroy'd by the Famine. All the reſt of the Senate having approved of his Propoſal, he ſaved almoſt all the Beſieged. Firſt, he provided that thoſe of our Religion, then that others of all Ages throughout the City, (not thoſe

(d) This is the ſame Anatolius (if I miſtake not) that Eunapius mentions in the Life of Iamblichus; where he ſays that Iamblichus was at firſt the Scholar of Anatolius, who at that time was eſteem'd the beſt Philoſopher next to Porphyrius. This Anatolius, here ſpoken of by Euſebius, lived in the ſame Times Porphyrius did, and according to Euſebius's Character, he was a Man well-verſed in all ſorts of Learning. Valeſ.

(e) The Phraſe in the Original is Ἀριστοτέλους διαδοχῆς, Ariſtotelicæ ſucceſſionis, of the Ariſtotelick Order. Anatolius being an excellent Philoſopher was requeſted by the Citizens of Alexandria to ſet up an Ariſtotelick School, in imitation of the Platonick School long ſince erected at Athens. The Maſters of Plato's School were called διδάσκοι, and were promoted to that place by a publick Decree. This School had great annual Revenues, raiſed out of Eſtates, which Learned Men left as Legacies to this School, which were hence called διαδοχικά. In imitation of this School at Athens, there was afterwards founded a Philoſophical School at Alexandria, of which that moſt excellent Philoſopher Hierocles was Maſter. See Damaſcius, in vitâ Iſidor. pag. 1058, &c. Valeſ.

(f) This Siege of the Bruchium was in Aurelianus's Time, as we find aſſerted in the end of B. 22. of Amm. Marcell. Euſebius in his Chronicle ſays it hapned on the 2d. Year of Claudius: For which Scaliger reproves and corrects Euſebius, relying on the authority of Marcell. But I had rather follow our Author's Opinion here: For that Euſebius mention'd in this Chap. and Anatolius were ſtill at Alexandria, and could not poſſibly travel to Antioch till the Siege was raiſed. But Euſebius, we ſee, went to the Synod of Antioch, which, as before we proved, was in the ſecond Year of Claudius. [And intending to return from Antioch, he was detained by the Laodiceans, and made Biſhop of that place. But if we ſay that the Bruchium was not taken till Aurelianus's Reign; how could Euſebius, who was at the Siege go towards that Synod, and be made Biſhop of Laodicea. Valeſ.

(g) Whilſt Claudius warr'd againſt the Barbarians, Zenobia ſent Zabda her Captain, who, by the aſſiſtance of Timogenes an Egyptian, ſeized upon Egypt, and put a Garriſon into Alexandria: But Probus the Roman-General, with ſome aſſiſtance of the Egyptians, who did not affect the Syrians of Palmyra who kept the Garriſon, forced them out thence; as Pollio in the Life of Claudius, and Zoſimus record. And this, I think, was the time when the Bruchium was beſieged by the Romans. Valeſ. Martinius thinks that this Bruchium, here mention'd as a part of Alexandria, and in the Greek called πυρρίχειον, was in that which the Romans called the Forum frumentarium, or Corn-Market; it being derived from πυρὸς ἔχω, Annonæ præfectus; and that compounded of πυρὸς and ἔχω, tritici curam habeo, to have the charge of the Wheat: See Martin. Lexicon. Philolog. in the word Bruchion.

(h) Chriſtoph. renders the word ταμιεύεσθαι, here uſed, Congerere, to lay up Corn; but it muſt here be rendred quite contrary, to give out, or meaſure out Corn ſparingly; which was cuſtomary in Famines and in Sieges.

The Church of Laodicea was honoured with two such Pastors as these by the Divine Providence, one succeeding the other, [for] after the War aforesaid was ended, they both removed from Alexandria into [Syria.] Indeed Anatolius did not write many Books: But so many [Works of his] came to our hands, that from them we may perceive both his Eloquence and his great Learning; especially from those [Canons] of his in which he gives us his Opinion concerning Easter: Out of which it may be requisite to make mention of these words in this place.

(k) Excerptions out of Anatolius's Canons concerning Easter.

(l) Ἔχεις τοίνυν. These words being imperfect, and unintelligible; there must of necessity be something understood. Christoph. conjectures that τὸ πάσχα, Easter, is to be understood; but that is absurd, for the feast of Easter does never fall on the New-Moon of the first Month. I rather think we ought to read ἔχεις, you have, or ἔχε in the imperative, reckon the New-Moon, &c. Vales.

'(l) You have therefore in the first year the 'New-moon of the first month, (which is the 'beginning of the Circle of nineteen years;) according to the Egygtian account on the 26 day of the month Phamenoth; but according to the 'Macedonian Computation of months, on the 22 day 'of the month Dystrus; and 'as the Romans phrase it, 'before the 11 of the Calends of April: On the aforesaid 26 day of the 'month Phamenoth, the Sun 'is found not only to have 'entred the first Segment '[of the Zodiack,] but is 'then going the fourth day 'in it: They usually call this Segment, the first 'Dodecatemorion, the Æquinox, the beginning of 'months, the head of the Cycle, and the (m) origi'nal of the course of the Planets. The Segment 'next before this they commonly call the end of 'the months, and the twelfth segment, the last Dode'catemorion, and the term of the circuit of the Planets. 'Wherefore we affirm that they who place the 'first month in this Segment, and take the 14 s day (n) from it to be the Feast of Easter, are, 'as it happens, in no small mistake. Neither is 'this our Opinion, but it was known to the ancient Jews even before Christ's [coming;] 'and it was also in an especial manner observ'd by them; which may be understood from the 'words of Philo, Josephus, and Musæus. And not 'from the words of these persons only, but from 'them who were ancienter than they; to wit, 'from the two (o) Agathobulus's, who were sir'named the Masters: And also from the (p) Famous 'Aristobulus, who was one of the seventy, that at 'the request of Ptolomæus Philadelphus and his Father, translated the Sacred and Divine Scriptures 'of the Hebrews, and dedicated his Expositions on 'Moses's Law to the same Kings. These Authors 'in their Solutions of the Que'stions upon Exodus, say that 'all ought to sacrifice the 'Passover together after 'the vernal Æquinox, in 'the middle of the first 'month. Now this happens when the Sun goes 'through the first part of 'the Solar Circle, or (as 'some of them term it) 'the Zodiack: But Aristo'bulus addeth, that not only 'the Sun, but the Moon also must of necessity pass 'through the Æquinoctial Segment on the Feast of 'the Passover: For whereas there are two Æquinoctial Segments, the one 'called the Vernal, the other 'the Autumnal; and they 'diametrically opposite the 'one to the other; and whereas the Feast of the 'Passover is granted to be on the 14 day at evening, the Moon shall be diametrically opposite 'to the Sun, as we may see it is in full Moons. 'Wherefore the Sun will be in the vernal Æquinoctial Segment; and the Moon will necessarily be in the Autumnal Æquinoctial Segment. I 'know they have said a great deal more; (part 'whereof is probable, and part concluded from 'most certain Demonstrations;) by which they 'endeavour to make it evident, that the Feast of 'the Passover, and that of Unleavened Bread must 'always be celebrated after the Æquinox. But I 'omit the requiring such abundance of Demon'strations from them, off whom the Veil of the 'Mosaick Law is taken: And by whom (the face 'being now uncover'd) may be seen as in a 'Glass for the future, both Christ himself, 'Christ's Doctrines, and his Sufferings. Now, 'that the first month amongst the Hebrews does 'begin about the Æquinox, the Precepts in the '(q) Book of Enoch are a sufficient evidences."

(m) Ἄφεσις (the term which occurs here) does properly signifie Carceres, the place whence the horse-races were begun. Anatolius therefore calls the first Dodecatemorium, ἄφεσις, because from that, as it were from the Original and Source thereof the course of the Planets should begin. Vales. The Translation of this Canon of Anatolius's will be scarce understood by the unlearned Reader, because so many terms of Art occur in it. The Learned Reader, that is desirous of farther satisfaction herein, may consult Petavius's Notes on Epiphan. p. 188, &c. and Ægydius Bucherius, De Doctrinâ Temporum, pag. 440. Edit. Antverp. 1634.

(n) That is, from that segment: For although the reading in the Greek Text be καθ' αὐτὴν, yet it is to be corrected thus, καθ' αὐτὸ; understand τμῆμα, segment: So Petavius corrected it in his Notes upon Epiphanius, pag. 190. Vales.

(o) Anatolius here affirms that there were two Agathobulus's, sirnamed the Doctors, or Masters. But I fear he mistakes in affirming them to be ancienter than Philo and Josephus. For Eusebius in his Chronicle says, that Agathobulus the Philosopher flourished in the times of Hadrianus. Vales.

Diocletian

(p) Rufinus renders Ἀριστόβουλος τὸν παῖδα. Aristobulus of Pancas; but he is in a gross error. I wonder that Scaliger, (in his Animadversions upon Eusebius, p. 130.) should think, these words of Anatolius ought to be corrected according to Rufinus's Translation of them. Bede also follows this corrupt Version of Rufinus, and takes Paniada to be the name of a Jewish Writer. Scaliger in the place afore-quoted largely proves that what Anatolius says of Aristobulus (viz. he was one of the 72 Translators) is false. This Aristobulus was also sirnamed the Master, or the Doctor; as we may see 2 Maccabees, Chap 1. because he was Tutor to King Ptolomy. For I cannot assent to Scaliger, who makes a distinction betwixt that Aristobulus mentioned in the History of the Maccabees, and Aristobulus the Peripatetick, who dedicated his Expositions upon Moses's Law to Ptolomy Philometor. Vales.

(q) This Book of Enoch is quoted by Jude in his Canonical Epistle. It was an Apocryphal Book, and not received amongst the Authentick Scriptures of the Jews. But the Apostles, and the ancient Fathers in imitation of them, have not been afraid to quote Apocryphal Books which seemed to confirm the truth. Georgius Syncel. in his Chronicle, quotes an excellent Fragment out of this Book of Enoch's. Vales.

The same Anatolius has left us Institutions of * Arithmetick in ten entire Books, as also several other evidences of his diligence about, and great experience in, the Holy Scriptures: Theotecnus Bishop of Cæsarea in Palestine first Ordain'd him Bishop by Imposition of Hands, providing him to be his Successor in his own Church. And indeed for some small time they both (r) presided over that Church together. But the Synod against Paul being convened at Antioch,

* Some Excerptions out of Anatolius's Arithmetick are yet extant. Vales.

(r) We have the like Example in Chap. 11. Book 6. Where Alexander ruled the Church of Jerusalem jointly with Narcissus. These two are the most ancient Instances of Assistant Bishops (as they are now called.) These sort of Assistants were first instituted for the ease of Aged Bishops; but afterwards they grew customary; and were chosen not out of necessity, but ambition and pride: But the Fathers of the Council of Sardis put a stop hereto. Vales.

Diocletian

(ſ) Euſebius relates the ſamething concerning Euſebius Alexandrinus in the beginning of this Chapter: (viz.) that he went to the Synod of Antioch, which was called upon Paul's account, and in his return was ſtopped by the Laodiceans, and made Biſhop of that place. Now again we find the ſame concerning Anatolius: Which cannot poſſibly be defended, except we ſhould ſay that Euſebius died ſome few Days after his Ordination: But in oppoſition to that we will produce Hieronymus's authority, who in the ſecond year of Aurelianus writes thus; Euſebius is now famous at Laodicea. Valeſ.

(ſ) he going through the City of Laodicea [towards that Synod] was there detained by the Brethren, Euſebius being then dead: After the death of Anatolius, Stephen is ordained Biſhop of that Church, being the laſt before the Perſecution. He was indeed admired by many for his Eloquence, Philoſophy, and his other Grecian Learning: But he was not (t) ſo well affected towards the true Faith [of Chriſt,] as the time of the following Perſecution afterwards demonſtrated; which manifeſtly declared him to be a diſſembler, fearful and cowardous, rather than a true Philoſopher. But after this the affairs of that Church did not forthwith run to decay; for Theodotus (u) ordained Biſhop of that Church by God himſelf the preſerver of all things, immediately reſtor'd all things to their former ſplendour. He was a perſon who in deeds verifi'd his own name, and made a true repreſentation of the Epiſcopal Office; he was of all men the moſt eminent for his skill in Phyſick and in curing of the Body. And there was no Man his equal for healing of Souls; for Humanity, ſincerity of Mind, Commiſeration, and Diligence in helping thoſe who wanted his aſſiſtance: He was alſo incomparably well exerciſed in divine learning. Such a perſon was this Theodotus. Agapius ſucceeded Theotecnus, who had governed the Biſhoprick of Cæſarea in Paleſtine with great care. Who, we know, was very laborious, and moſt ſincerely ſollicitous for the good of the People over whom he preſided; and with a liberal hand relieved all, moſt eſpecially the Indigent: In this Man's times we knew Pamphilus (a moſt Eloquent Man, and a true Philoſopher in the Practices of his Life) honoured with a Presbyterſhip of that Church. To declare what a Perſon this Man was, and whence deſcended, would be a copious Subject. But all things relating to his life, the † School he founded; the Conflicts which during the time of Perſecution he underwent in ſeveral Confeſſions, and laſtly the Crown of Martyrdom with which he was encircled, we have fully declared in a (x) peculiar Work. Indeed this Pamphilus was the moſt admirable perſon of all that lived here. (y) Amongſt thoſe Men who lived neareſt to our Times, we knew theſe to be moſt eminent, Pierius one of the Presbyters of Alexandria; and (z) Meletius Biſhop of the Churches in Pontus: Pierius was egregiouſly eſteem'd for his [voluntary] Poverty, and his Philoſophick Literature: He was alſo a Man ſingularly exerciſed in Contemplations upon the Scriptures, Expoſitions, and publick Diſcourſes in the Church: and Meletius (whom the Learned called the (a) Honey of Attica) was ſuch a Man as one would deſcribe to be moſt accompliſh'd with all ſorts of Learning. The powerfulneſs of his Eloquence can't worthily be admired. But, ſhould any one ſay that he had this Faculty by nature, [we anſwer,] who could excel him in his knowledge in many other Arts and Sciences, and in his various ſorts of Literature? Certainly, ſhould any perſon have made tryal of him, he would have affirm'd that he was a Man moſt acute in all Sciences which have a dependance on reaſon; and alſo moſt eloquent: The Virtue and Piety of his Life was alſo correſpondent to theſe his Accompliſhments. In the time of the Perſecution we knew this Man, when he abſconded for the ſpace of ſeven years compleat in the Regions of Paleſtine. After Hymenæus Biſhop of Jeruſalem, a little before mention'd, Zambdas entred upon the Government of that Church; who dying not long after, Hermon, the laſt of the Biſhops before the Perſecution in our Age, ſucceeded in the Apoſtolick Chair, (b) which is preſerved there even to this day. Theonas ſucceeded Maximus in the Biſhoprick of Alexandria, who had been Biſhop there eighteen years, ſince Dionyſius's Death. In his days Achillas, who at the ſame time with Pierius was honour'd with a Presbyterſhip, was very famous [at Alexandria] who was intruſted with the care of the * Catechetick School. He in his Actions exhibited a moſt excellent Example (inferior to none) of a more ſublime Philoſophy, and a genuine Pattern of an Evangelick Converſe. After Theonas had born the Epiſcopal Office nineteen years, Peter ſucceeded in the Epiſcopate of Alexandria. He alſo was eſteemed a perſon very eminent in his Function, which he bore twelve years compleat. Having preſided over the Church almoſt three of thoſe twelve years before the Perſecution, he paſt the reſt of his time in a more ſtrict and (c) Aſcetick courſe of life: but

(t) That is, he was not ſo well affected to the Chriſtian Faith, as he was to Philoſophy and Grecian Learning: Some will have the Greek Phraſe [οὐχ ὁμοίως] to have reference to ſomething elſe; but thus I underſtand it. Valeſ.

(u) Muſculus and Chriſtophorſon, becauſe of the falſe punctation of this place, tranſlate it otherwiſe than we have done. They miſtook ἀνορθῶται, for a paſſive, and thus point it, ἀνορθῶται ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ, &c. all things were reſtored to their former ſtate by God the preſerver, &c. But after a diligent inſpection into this place, I think the Words [ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ] ought to be referred to ἀναδειχθείς, and then the ſenſe will be agreeable to our tranſlation; to wit, Theodotus, who was elected Biſhop by God himſelf the preſerver of all things, reſtored the affairs of the Church to their former ſplendour. Valeſ.

† Ἧς σωεσήσαλο διαλειβῆς. Some tranſlate theſe words thus, concerning the School in which he was educated: But I underſtand them ſpoken of the School which Pamphilus founded at Cæſarea: Concerning the Library which he erected at Cæſarea, ſee Hieronymus's Catalogue; where he ſpeaks concerning Matthew; ſee alſo his Epiſtle to Marcella. Valeſ.

(x) Chriſtoph. takes theſe words, ἐν ἰδίᾳ συντάξει to ſignifie one Book only: But Euſebius wrote three Books of the Life of Pamphilus. Which Hieronymus atteſteth in his Book De Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis; and in his Apology againſt Ruſinus. Valeſ.

(y) Ἐν τοῖς μάλιστα καθ' ἡμᾶς, &c. (that is,) as we have tranſlated it, amongſt thoſe Men who lived neareſt to our times, &c. Some will have μάλιστα to be referred to σπανιοσάτους, moſt eminent Men; but that I cannot approve of. Pierius, and Meletius, of whom Euſebius afterwards ſpeaks, lived even till Conſtantine's time; concerning Pierius, ſee Photius and Hieronymus. Ruſinus does not call him Pierius, but Hierius. So does the old Roman Martyrology, at the fourth day of November. But this Martyrology, I think, is neither the old one, nor the Roman. For had it been the Roman Martyrology, we ſhould have had mention of none but Roman Martyrs. But in it we have a Catalogue of the Martyrs of all Countrys. That I think (if any deſire to know which it is) is the old Roman Martyrology, which Bucherius publiſhed with the Canon of Victorius Aquitanus, although that looks more like a Calendar, than a Martyrology. There is indeed none which is properly the Roman Martyrology: For that which Gregory the Great mentions in his Epiſtle to Eulogius, is St. Hierom's Martyrology, which the Weſtern Church then uſed, as we ſhall hereafter at another place demonſtrate. Valeſ.

(z) This is the man whom Athanaſius, in his Speech againſt the Arians calls Meletius the Great, pag. 291. Where in his Catalogue of the Orthodox Biſhops, he reckons Meletius Biſhop of Pontus for one. Philoſtorgius in his firſt Book calls him Biſhop of Sebaſtopolis in Pontus. He ſays he was at the Council of Nice with Baſilius Biſhop of Amaſia, and that he ſided with the Arians: But Athanaſius in the place above-quoted, proves that to be falſe. Valeſ.

(a) Therefore the name of Meletius is derived ἀπὸ τοῦ μέλιτος, from Honey. Gregory Nazianz. in his Iambicks calls Meletius the Biſhop of Antioch, μέλι καὶ ἐπώνυμον. Valeſ.

(b) By theſe words [εἰ ἔστι νῦν ἐκεῖσε παρυλαγμένον] he means, that the Throne of James the Brother of our Lord, was preſerved at Jeruſalem till that time, as 'tis recorded, Chap. 29. Book 7. So alſo at Alexandria, the Chair, or Throne of Saint Mark the Evangeliſt who firſt founded the Church of Alexandria, was preſerved there for a long time. Valeſ.

* Τῆς ἱερᾶς πίστεως τὸ διδασκαλεῖον; literally, the School of the Divine Faith.

(c) There is nothing more frequent in Euſebius than the uſe of theſe Words, ἄσκησις, and Φιλοσοφία; which terms the Chriſtians borrowed from the Philoſophers, as I noted Chap. 17. Book 2. Note (a.) The Philoſophers called called those ἀσκήτας who professed a stricter kind of life. Hence it is that Artemidorus in his fourth Book, Chap. 35. calls Alexander the Philosopher ἀνδρὰ ἀσκήτην. Ascetick Philosophy is opposed to Philosophy which consists in bare words. When the Christians first made use of this name Ascetæ, they bestow'd it on the Clergy: A long time after that, the Monks laid claim to this name. But at the first it was used as was before shown: See Chap. 17. Book 2. Note (a.) Which may be proved by the instance here of Peter, Bishop of Alexandria, and Pierius the Presbyter; both whom Eusebius in this Chapter calls Ascetas. Eusebius also, Chap. 11. concerning the Martyrs of Palestine, calls Pamphilus the Presbyter, Ascetа. Vales.

Diocletian. continued to be apparently solicitous for the publick Utility of the Churches. Upon which account being beheaded in the ninth year of the Persecution, he was adorned with a Crown of Martyrdom. But having here terminated the History of the Succession of Bishops from our Saviours's Nativity, to the demolishing of the Churches; which [History] comprehendeth the space of (d) three hundred and five years; in the subsequent [Books] we will record the Conflicts of those, who in our Age couragiously fought for Religion, how many and how great they were, and leave them for the information of succeeding Ages.

Diocletian.

(d) This place ought particularly to be taken notice of, in regard Eusebius here sums up the time which he hath comprehended in his Ecclesiastick History. He saith that from our Saviour's Birth to the demolishing of the Churches, which was in the nineteenth year of Diocletian, there were 305 years. Also in Eusebius's Chronicle the 305 year of Christ is set opposite to the 19 year of Diocletian. But in Scaliger's Edition, the year in which the Persecution under Diocletian began, is reckon'd the 304 year of Christ. Hence arises this difference; Scaliger in his Edition of Eusebius's Chronicle, reckons not that to be the first year of Christ in which he was born, but the year following. But Eusebius reckons that to be the first of Christ in which he was born, as I before noted Chap. 5. Book 1. Note (a.) For Eusebius places his birth on the 8th of the Ides of January. Indeed, in all the MSS. of Eusebius's Chronicle (which have the Years of Christ annex'd, particularly in that of Millain, which is ancienter than any other) that is noted for the first year of Christ in which he was born in Bethlehem of Judea. Vales.

The PREFACE.

HAving comprized the Successions of the Apostles in Seven entire Books, in this Eighth we have though it requisite to set forth the Affairs of our own Age, (which deserve no trivial Description,) being a matter most necessary to be derived down to the knowledge of Posterity. And our Relation shall take its beginning from hence.

CHAP. I.

Concerning those things which preceded the Persecution in our days.

(a) HOW great, and what manner of Glory and Freedom the Doctrine concerning the Adoration of the Supream God, declared unto Mankind by Christ, was dignified with amongst all Men, Grecians as well as Barbarians, before the Persecution in our Times; 'tis beyond our abilities deservedly to declare: But the Favours of the Emperors towards those of our Religion may be an evidence hereof; whom they entrusted with the Governments of Provinces, freeing them from their fears of (b) sacrificing, out of the abundant kindness they reserv'd for our Religion. What need we mention those who were conversant in the Imperial Palaces? Or the Emperors themselves? Who permitted their Domesticks, together with their (c) Wives, Children and Servants, freely and openly to make profession of their Religion by their words and practices, even before their own faces, and in a manner suffer'd them to boast of their fearlessness and freedom in professing their Faith: Whom also they had an high esteem for, and accounted them more acceptable than the rest of their Attendants. Such a one was that (d) Dorotheus, a person who of all Men declar'd the heartiest affection to, and fidelity in, their Service, upon which account he was more highly valued by them than the Magistrates and most Honourable Governours of the Provinces: To whom we will add the most renowned Gorgonius; and as many others as arrived to the same degree of Honour with them upon account of the Word of God. The same Affection, Observancy, and eminent Favour you might see vouchsafed to the Prelates of every Church, as well by all private

(a) In the most ancient Maz. MS. and in the Editions of Rufinus, the first Chap. is begun at these words, How great, &c. Vales.

(b) The Maz. and Med. MSS. retain the true reading of this place; which is [περὶ τὸ θύειν, of sacrificing:] the same reading Gruter found in his Copies. The Governours of Provinces were obliged to sacrifice to the Gods, and to the Emperors, and to be present at Sacrifices. Upon which account the Christians abstained from the Magistracy, and refused the Government of Provinces, offer'd them by the Emperors. Vales. The reading in Robert Stephens Edit. is [περὶ τὸ θεῖον.]

(c) Our Author means not the Empresses, as Christophorson supposed; but the Wives of the Emperor's Domesticks. Vales.

(d) This Dorotheus was of the Bed-chamber to the Emperor Diocletian, or Galerius Cæsar: So Metaphrastes affirms, in the Acts of the Martyrs, Indes, and Domna, chap. 23. Vales.

(e) In the Med. Fuk. Savil and Maz. MSS the reading here is [πρὸ πᾶσιν ὀπιτρόποις, &c.] amongſt the procurators, &c. which MSS. have not theſe words [καὶ ἐπιτροπείας καὶ ἀξιώσεως ἐκ τῆς τυχούσης, obſervancy and eminent favour.] But in the King's MS. and Rob. Stephens's Edit. the reading is [παρὰ πᾶσιν ἰδιώταις, by all private Men;] in which Copies alſo we have thoſe words, which we ſaid were wanting in the other MSS. Valeſ.

(f) The term in the original is [Ἐπισυναγωγάς.] Which word St. Paul uſes 2 Theſſal. 2. 1. where our Tranſlators render it, our gathering together. ὁπισυνάγειν does properly ſignifie, to collect Perſons diſperſt in divers places into one place. In this ſenſe Dionyſ. Alexandrin. uſes it B. 4. Chap. 23. of this Hiſtory; where he ſpeaks of Quadratus Biſhop of the Athenians. Valeſ.

(e) Private Perſons as Governours of Provinces. But now, how ſhould any one be able to deſcribe thoſe numerous (f) Congregations; and the Multitudes of Aſſemblies thro'out every City which flock'd [to embrace the Faith of Chriſt;] and thoſe famous Concourſes of the People] in the Churches? For which reaſon they were no longer contented with the old Edifices, but erected ſpacious Churches from the very Foundations throughout all the Cities. Theſe [proſperous ſucceſſes] increaſing in proceſs of time, and being daily augmented with a growth and greatneſs, no envy could put a ſtop to; neither was any Evil Spirit able to bewitch them; nor could the treacheries of Men prohibit them, as long as the Divine and Celeſtial Hand [of God] cover'd and guarded his People, continuing to be worthy of its [protection.] But, after the affairs of our Age were through too much liberty changed into looſeneſs and ſloth; when ſome began to envy and revile others, and we were in a manner at wars amongſt ourſelves, [wounding] one another with Words as it were with Arms and Spears; when Prelates daſh'd againſt Prelates, and the People raiſed Factions againſt the People; and when unſpeakable Hypocriſie and Diſſimulation had arrived to the height of miſchief; then did the Divine Vengeance, as it takes delight to do, gently begin to viſit us (the Multitudes [of the Faithful] as yet meeting in their Aſſemblies) by degrees and with moderation; the Perſecution being firſt begun with thoſe Brethren who bore Arms. But when we became inſenſible, and entertain'd not the leaſt thought of propitiating and appeaſing the Deity: But, like ſome atheiſtical Perſons ſuppoſing our Affairs to be managed regardleſly and without any inſpection, we added Impieties to Impieties: When they, who ſeem'd our Paſtors, rejecting the Sanctions of Religion, were inflam'd with mutual Contentions, ſtudying nothing elſe but the augmenting of Strifes, Menaces, Emulation, Envy, and mutual Hatred, and (g) greedily challenging to themſelves the preeminence, as if it were a Dominion: Then forthwith (according to the expreſſions utter'd by Jeremiah) * The Lord covered the Daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and caſt down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Iſrael, and remembred not his footſtool in the day of his anger: The Lord hath drowned all the beauty of Iſrael, and thrown down all his ſtrong-holds. And, as it is predicted in the Pſalms, † He hath made void the covenant of his ſervant, and prophaned his ſanctity in the earth, to wit, by the deſtruction of the Churches. He hath broken down all his hedges; he hath made his ſtrong-holds fear. All the multitudes of the people that paſs by the way ſpoil him; and further, he is a reproach to his neighbours. For he hath exalted the right hand of his enemies, and hath turned away the edge of his ſword, and hath not aſſiſted him in the war. But he hath put an end to his purification, and hath broken his throne by caſting it to the ground. The days of his life hath he ſhortned, and laſtly cover'd him with ignominy.

(g) That is, whilſt the Biſhops were at variance amongſt themſelves concerning preeminence, or about the bounds of their Dioceſſes. Valeſ.

The words of Euſebius in the original here do not agree with that Copy of the Septuagint, printed according to the Vatican MS. at Rome, (which is the common Septuagint we now uſe,) nor with the original Hebrew; the Learned Reader, upon comparing the Texts, will ſee the difference; we tranſlated our Author's Words as we found them in the Greek Copy.

CHAP. II.

Concerning the Ruin of the Churches.

ALL theſe [Predictions] were (a) fully compleated in our Times, when with our own Eyes we ſaw both the Houſes of Prayer thrown down to the Ground, even to their very Foundations, and alſo the Divine and Sacred Scriptures committed to the fire in the midſt of the Forum. [When we beheld] ſome Paſtors of the Churches baſely hiding themſelves, ſome in one place, ſome in another; others of them ignominiouſly apprehended and expoſed to the ſcorn of their Enemies. When alſo, according to another prophetick expreſſion * contempt was poured upon Princes, and he cauſed them to wander in the wilderneſs where there was no way. But 'tis not our [deſign] to deſcribe thoſe ſad Calamities which in concluſion befel them: For it is unfit for us to record their mutual Diſſenſions and Folly before the Perſecution. Wherefore we will relate no more concerning them, than whereby we may juſtifie the Divine Vengeance. We will not proceed therefore to mention thoſe who were (b) try'd by the Perſecution, nor thoſe who wholly made ſhipwreck of their Salvation, and were voluntarily precipitated into the Gulfs of the deep: but we will in general inſert ſuch paſſages only into this our Hiſtory, as may in the firſt place be profitable to our own ſelves, and in the next to poſterity. From hence then we will begin briefly to deſcribe the ſacred Combats of thoſe who were Martyrs for the Divine Religion. (c) It was the nineteenth

(a) In the Maz. MS. the reading is, ὅλα, omnino, wholly or fully. In the King's MS. and Robert Stephens's Edit. 'tis ὅλη πᾶ. The former is the better reading. At theſe Words Chap. 2. begins in all our MSS. and in Ruſinus's old Copy. Valeſ.

(b) Πεπειρασμένων, tryed, experienced; For this term is uſed inſtead of πεπειρασμένων. St. Paul uſes the word, Heb. 4. 15. where our Tranſlation renders it tempted. 'Tis a Metaphor taken from Ships, ſet upon by Pirates at Sea; as the following Words declare: Theſe Marine Thieves are called Pirates ἀπὸ τῆ πειρᾶζειν.

(c) So ſays our Euſebius in his Chronicon; and ſo alſo the Alexandrian Chronicle: with whom agrees Idatius (in faſtis) whoſe Words are theſe; Diocletiano VIII. & Maximiano VII. his Coſſ. perſecutio Chriſtianorum: i. e. When Diocletian was the eighth time Conſul, and Maximianus the ſeventh, the Perſecution of the Chriſtians began. The ſame may be concluded from the Acts of Munatius Felix (in Geſt. apud Zenophilum Conſularem Numidiæ.) According to Euſebius's account this was the 305 Year from our Bleſſed Saviour's Nativity; but according to the Dionyſian Æra, which we now make uſe of, it was the 303. But Baronius (in Annal.) and Petavius (in the ſecond part of his Rationar. Tempor.) affirms that the beginning of this Perſecution muſt be placed on the 302 Year of Chriſt; when Conſtantius IV. and Maximianus IV. Coſſ. Their Opinion is grounded on one only Argument, to wit, the Acts of the Council of Cirta (a City in Numidia, afterwards called Conſtantina,) which Council Auguſtine (in Breviculo Collat.) affirms was convened the Year after the Perſecution began, and after the Paſſion of the Martyrs. Now the Acts of that Council (which Auguſtine relates in the B. 3. againſt Creſconius) do ſhew, that it was convened Diocletian VIII, and Maximianus VII, Coſſ. But this Argument is eaſily anſwered. For there is a miſtake in thoſe Acts of the Council of Cirta; the true reading is, P. C. Diocletiani IX. and Maximiani VIII. This appears evidently ex Breviculo Collat. Diei 3. cap. 17. where we meet with theſe words; Nam Geſta Martyrum quibus oſtendebatur tempus perſecutionis, Coſſ. geſta ſunt Diocletiano IX. & Maximiano VIII. pridie Idus Februarias: Geſta autem Epiſcopalia decreti Cirtenſis, poſt eorundem conſulatum, 3. Nonas Martias, &c. This paſſage cannot be ſuppoſed to be falſe. For Auguſtine adds there, that the Officers being commanded by the Judge to ſee what diſtance of time there was between the Paſſion of the Martyrs and the Council of Cirta, were deceived, and through their Ignorance told him what was falſe. For whereas the Acts of the Martyrs were thus inſcribed [Diocletiano IX. and Maximiano VIII. pridie Idus Febr.] and the Acts of the Council of Cirta, thus] Poſt conſulatum Diocletiani novies, & Maximiani octies, 3. Nonas Martias,] the Officers taking [poſt conſulatus] for [conſulatus] made anſwer, That there was only one Month between the Acts, both of the Martyrs, and of the Council. But there really was 13 Months ſpace between them, as Auguſtinus truly affirms.——There is another Argument to evince, that the Council of Cirta was not convened in the eighth Conſulate of Diocletian.

Diocleſian. For whereas that Council was aſſembled to Ordain a Biſhop over the Church of Cirta, (as Auguſtinus affirms) I deſire to know who was Ordained Biſhop of that Church by thoſe Biſhops convened in that Council? Silvanus was not. For he in this very year was ſtill Subdeacon to Paul Biſhop of Cirta, as 'tis apparent from the Acts of Munatius Felix. Anſwer perhaps will be made (as Baronius does) that Paul was made Biſhop of Cirta. But this cannot be true, for the Perſecution began under Paul, as 'tis evident from the Acts, apud Zenophilum Conſularem Numidiæ, which are related in Auguſtine's third Book againſt Creſconius. See the place; and alſo Auguſtine's 165 Epiſtle. Thus much I have ſaid (and could have ſaid a great deal more) to evince that the Council of Cirta was convened 13 Months after thoſe Acts of the Martyrs of Africa; and therefore it could not be aſſembled in the eighth Conſulate of Diocleſian, and the ſeventh of Maximian; in which year the Perſecution began. Valeſ.

Diocleſian. year of Diocleſian's Empire, in the month (d) Dyſtrus, (which the Romans call March,) when (the Feſtival of the Saluteferous Paſſion (e) approaching) the Imperial Edicts were propoſed in all places, giving command that the Churches ſhould be totally deſtroyed, and the Scriptures conſumed by fire; and declaring that thoſe who were elevated to any degree of honour ſhould be rendred infamous; and (f) thoſe that were private perſons, if they perſiſted in a Reſolution of retaining the profeſſion of Chriſtianity, ſhould be deprived of their Liberty: Such was was the firſt Edict againſt us. But not long after, other Reſcripts arriv'd; by which command was given, that all the Prelates of the Churches every-where ſhould firſt be put into Bonds, and afterwards compelled to ſacrifice by all ways imaginable.

(d) The Alexandrian Chronicle places the beginning of this Perſecution in the ſame Month. But our Euſebius (in his B. concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine, which is put as an Appendix to this 8th Book of his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory) ſays it began in the Month Xanthicus, which the Romans call April. Valeſ.

(e) Theodoret (in Book 5. Chap. 38. of his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory) affirms, that the Edict for the demoliſhing of the Churches was propoſed on the Day of our Lord's Paſſion (i. e. Good-Friday:) The Author of the Alexandrian Chronicle ſays it came forth on Eaſter-day; which was on the 25th of March: But Eaſter-day could not fall on the 25th of March in the 19th year of Diocleſian, as Scaliger and Petavius have obſerved. Euſebius in his Chronicon, ſays it came forth in March, diebus paſchæ. The Greek Phraſe here imports only, that Eaſter was near at hand, when the Edicts were propoſed: Ἐισπλαωώσης; Ruſinus renders it, dies ſolennis paſchæ imminebat, the ſolemn day of Eaſter was at hand. In the year of Chriſt 303 (according to the Dionyſian Æra) Eaſter fell on the 18th day of April, amongſt the Eaſtern Churches. Valeſ.

(f) Τὰς ἐν οἰκέσεως· Ruſinus and Nicephorus ſuppoſed the Servants of the Chriſtians were hereby meant. But that cannot be the meaning of this place. For then the Imperial Edict would have been imperfect, providing only for the apprehenſion of thoſe who were honoured with any degree of preferment, and of Servants, and leaving out the Ruſticks and ordinary ſort of People. Beſides, how can Servants be ſaid to be deprived of their liberty? Chriſtophorſon tranſlates it privatos, private Perſons. I think he means the Actores and Procuratores, who were Servants to the richer ſort of Men. Zonaras expounds this place very well, thus, τὰς δὲ τύχης ἰδιώτας, Perſons of a private condition. Valeſ.

CHAP. III.

Concerning the various ſorts of Combats which [the Martyrs] underwent in the time of the Perſecution.

FOrthwith therefore many Prelates of Churches having endured moſt ſevere Torments with great alacrity of Mind, exhibited Spectacles of moſt illuſtrious Combats. Many others being prepoſſeſs'd with a faintneſs of Mind by reaſon of their Fear, were immediately diſcouraged at the firſt attack made againſt them. Every one of the reſidue had their courſes in various kinds of Tortures. One was ſcourged all over his Body with Whips; another was rack'd with Tortures, and had his Fleſh ſcraped off with Tormenting-irons that were intolerable. Under which [Torments] ſome made a lamentable Concluſion of their lives; but others accompliſh'd their Combat after another manner. One being forcibly thruſt forward by others, and conſtrain'd to approach their impure and moſt nefarious Sacrifices, was let go as if he had ſacrificed, altho' he really he did not. Another (when he had neither approach'd [the Altar,] not touch'd any thing that was execrable, yet becauſe others ſaid he had ſacrificed) ſilently bore that Calumny, and went his way. A third was taken up on their Shoulders half-dead, and caſt forth as if he had been really ſo: A fourth lying upon the ground, was drawn a great way by the Feet, and then accounted amongſt them who had done ſacrifice. One cried out, and with a loud voice atteſted, that he denied to ſacrifice: Another exclaim'd that he was a Chriſtian, adorning himſelf with the confeſſion of that ſalutary Apellation. A third affirm'd that he neither had, nor ever would ſacrifice. But theſe being ſtruck on the Mouth by the Soldiers with their Fiſts, (a great company of whom were placed there as a Guard) ſilenc'd, and (a) beaten on the Face and Cheeks, were by force thruſt out. So highly did theſe Enemies of Piety every way eſteem their being thought to have perfected what they deſired! But theſe [Proceedings] againſt the Holy Martyrs did in no wiſe prove ſucceſsful to them: Whoſe [admirable courage] ſhould we undertake accurately to ſet forth, what Expreſſions would be ſufficient to compoſe ſuch a Narrative?

Diocleſian.

(a) I ſuppoſe he means the plumbatæ (i. e. Inſtruments of torture made with lead) with which they beat the Martyrs on the Face and Cheeks. There is frequent mention of this ſort of torture in the ſufferings of the Martyrs. Our Author had ſaid before, that the Martyrs were beaten with the Fiſts of the Soldiers. Here therefore he muſt mean theſe Plumbatæ: Otherwiſe, what he ſays is a Tautology. Valeſ.

CHAP. IV.

Concerning God's Illuſtrious Martyrs; how they filled the World with their Fame, having been adorned with divers Crowns [of Martyrdom] for Religion.

FOR who ſhould be able to make a Relation of thoſe infinite numbers [of Martyrs,] who demonſtrated an admirable alacrity of mind for the Worſhip of the Supream God; not only from that time the Perſecution was raiſed againſt all the [Chriſtians,] but long before, when the times were calm and ſerene? For ſome time ſince, when the [Devil,] (a) who hath received power over this World, was firſt rouzed as it were out of a profound ſleep, and as yet made his attempts againſt the Churches in a ſecret and occult manner, after that interval which followed the Perſecution under Decius and Valerian: (For he would not ſet upon us cloſely and with an open War; but as yet made tryal only of thoſe that were engaged in the Milice; for he ſuppoſed the reſt would be eaſily vanquiſh'd, could he firſt overcome them:) Then [I ſay] you might have ſeen very many of thoſe who were Soldiers, moſt willingly embracing a private life, rather than they would renounce the Worſhip of the Creator of all things. For when the [Roman] (b) General (who he was it matters not) firſt ſet upon perſecuting the Chriſtian Soldiers, and began * to take a ſtrict view of, and purge thoſe that belonged to the Army; permitting them freely

(b) His name was Veturius; he was Magiſter Militum, the Maſter of the Camp, or Lieutenant-General of the Army: Concerning whom Euſebius in his Chronicon, at the 17th year of Diocleſian ſays thus, Veturius Maſter of the Camp perſecutes the Chriſtian Soldiers; the perſecution againſt us being from that time begun by degrees. Some few of which (one or two) procured not only the loſs of their Preferment, but Death alſo for their pious and reſolute Stedfaſtneſs: * The Framer of the Conſpiracy [againſt our Religion] being at that time moderate, preſumed to proceed to ſhed the Blood but of very few: The multitude of Believers ('tis likely) terrified him, and made him afraid as yet to enter into an open War againſt them all. But when he prepared himſelf more manifeſtly for an Engagement, it is impoſſible to relate how many and eminent Martyrs of Chriſt were viſible to the Inhabitants of all Cities and Countries.

* He means the Devil, not the Roman General, as Chriſtoph. ſuppoſed. Valeſ.

CHAP. V.

Concerning what was done at Nicomedia.

IMmediately therefore, upon the publiſhing of the Edict at Nicomedia againſt the Churches, (a) one who was no obſcure perſon, but eminently illuſtrious for ſecular Honour and Eſteem, moved with a Divine Zeal, and incited by an ardent Faith, took down [the Edict,] which was fixed up in the moſt open and publick place [of the City,] and (b) tore it, as being impious and moſt deteſtable: [Which he did] whilſt two of the Emperors made their abode in that City; one of which was ſeniour to the reſt, and the other held the fourth place in the Empire. But this Perſon who was the firſt of the Inhabitants of that City which appear'd thus eminent and zealous, having ſuffer'd ſuch Puniſhments, as were thought meet to be inflicted on him for ſuch a bold act, perſevered in an undiſturbedneſs and tranquillity of Mind to his very laſt gaſp.

(a) This perſon is called John in the Martyrology of Uſuardus, Ado, Notker, and in the old Roman Martyrology, at September 7. Valeſ.

(b) The Edicts and Reſcripts of the Emperors were written in paper. Therefore Nilus, in his 264 Epiſtle, ſays it was barely called Charta; but after it had been ſubſcribed by the Emperor, it was called Sacra; which appears alſo from the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon, and from Juſtinian's Novels. Valeſ.

CHAP. VI.

Concerning thoſe who were converſant in the Imperial Palaces.

BUT that time produced theſe Divine and Glorious Martyrs (which excelled all that ever were celebrated as admirable and famous for their Courage, both among Grecians and Barbarians,) Dorotheus, and the other Boys that were of the Bed-chamber to the Emperors: Who although they were accounted worthy of the higheſt ſtation of Honour by their Maſters, and were no leſs beloved by them than if they had been their own Sons; yet they ſuppoſed the Reproaches and Tortures for Religion, and thoſe various ſorts of Deaths deviſed for them, to be really of greater value than the Glory and Pleaſure of this life. We will here relate what an exit one of them made, and leave the Readers to conjecture from him what befel the reſt. In the foremention'd City, one of 'em was publickly brought forth before the foreſaid Emperors; and commanded to ſacrifice, which when he refuſed to do, Dioclesian. 'twas order'd he ſhould be ſtrip'd and hoiſted up on high, and that his whole Body ſhould be lacerated with ſtripes, until he ſhould yield, tho' againſt his will, to do what he was commanded: But when he continued immoveable after his ſuffering ſuch tortures as theſe, they mix'd Salt and Vinegar together, and pour'd it (his Bones being now laid bare) upon the putrified parts of his Body. When he had undergone theſe tortures alſo, then Fire and a Gridiron was brought forth; and the remains of his Body were laid on [and broiled,] like Fleſh dreſs'd to be eaten; not all at one time, but by little and little, that he might not end his life too ſoon: Neither were thoſe perſons who laid him on the fire, permitted to leave him, till after ſo great [tortures,] he ſhould give his conſent to perform what he was commanded. But, having conſtantly perſevered in his Reſolution, and gotten the Victory, he expired under his very tortures. Such was the Martyrdom of one of thoſe Boys who were of the Bed-chamber to the Emperors; being truly worthy of his name: For he was called (a) Peter.

(a) Concerning this Peter, Dorotheus, Gorgonius, and the others that were martyr'd; ſee the Acts of the Suffering of Indes and Domna, at the 26. of December. Valeſ.

The [Martyrdom] of the reſt, although not at all inferior to this, yet ſhall be omitted, leſt our Diſcourſe ſhould be too tedious. Thus much only we will relate, that Dorotheus and Gorgonius (together with many others that were Attendants at the Imperial Palace) after various Combats, having finiſh'd their lives by being ſtrangled, obtain'd the rewards of Divine Victory. At the ſame time Anthimus, the then Biſhop of the Church of Nicomedia, was beheaded for the Teſtimony of Chriſt. With whom was joyn'd a great multitude of Martyrs. For in thoſe days, by what accident I know not, there happen'd a (b) Fire in the Imperial Palace at Nicomedia: Which being laid to our charge as the Authors thereof, by a Report grounded on a falſe ſuſpicion; all ſorts of perſons that were the Worſhippers of God in that [City] were deſtroy'd by heaps, ſome with the Sword, and others by Fire. At which time, report ſays, both Men and Women, excited by a divine and unſpeakable alacrity, leapt into the fiery Pile. The Executioners alſo having bound another great company in Boats, caſt 'em into the Abyſſes of the Sea. Moreover, the Bodies of thoſe who were of the Bed-chamber to the Emperors, having been interr'd with decent Funeral-Obſequies, they who were accounted their Maſters, ſuppoſed it requiſite to dig up again, and caſt them into the Sea; leſt ſome (as they thought) ſhould look upon them as Gods, and worſhip them [in After-Ages,] ſhould they be let alone to reſt in their Graves. Such were the Exploits performed at Nicomedia in the beginning of the Perſecution. But not long after, when ſome attempted to poſſeſs themſelves of the Empire in the Region called (c) Melitina, and others in (d) Syria:

(b) There is an illuſtrious evidence of this Fire, which hapned at Nicomedia in the firſt year of the Perſecution, in the 25. Chap. of the Emperor Conſtantine's Oration, ad Cœtum Sanctorum. Valeſ.

(c) See B. 5. Chap. 5.

Note (b.) concerning Melitina. There was a City, and a Country called by this name in Armenia the Leſs. But I never met with any thing concerning this Tyrant, who ſeized the Empire in that Region. Valeſ.

(d) He means Eugenius, who for ſome little time tyrannized in Syria. Libanius (in his Oration to Theodoſius. pag. 411. and in his Antioch. pag. 363.) tells the whole Story. Whereto may be annex'd a Paſſage of the ſame Libanius's, out of his Oration to Theodoſius, concerning the Sedition at Antioch, pag. 399. There was a Tribune of Seleucia, by name Eugenius, who had the command of 500 Soldiers. Theſe Soldiers were order'd to open the Mouth and Paſſage of the Haven.

Haven. When they had laboured day and night without any intermission; being much displeased at their task, they force their Commander (Eugenius) to take the Empire upon him; threatning him with Death unless he would give his assent. The Tribune being after this manner compelled, took the Purple off the Image of one of the Gods, and was saluted Emperor. He goes forthwith to Antioch, (which then had no Garrison in it) supposing that if he could possess himself of that City, it would much advance his Designs: He makes himself Master of that place about Sun-setting. But his Soldiers, agreeable to their usual Irregularities, destroyed the Country as they marched, and stuft themselves with Wine, and good Cheer. Which being perceived by the Antiochians, they, despising the Paucity and Drunkenness of the Soldiers, killed them all with Stones and Weapons of all sorts, (the very Women giving their assistance) and their Leader also, as he was going towards the Palace: So that about the first Watch none of them were left alive. But the Emperor, who ought to have expres'd his thankfulness to the Antiochians, ordered the Princes of the Antiochensian and Seleucensian Order should be slain, when as neither of them deserved any punishment. Amongst them the Grandfather of Libanius (a proper comely old Man) was killed. All this I met with pag. 411 & 363. Moreover, Libanus (in Orat. ad Theodosium de seditione) tells us, the name of this Tribune of the Seleucensian Soldiers was Eugenius; and the name of the Emperor was Diocletian, whom he calls, by his true name, Diocles. Thus I have given you the Name and History of the Tyrant; and the time when this Eugenius made his attempts on the Empire, Eusebius here declares, to wit, when Diocletian was the eighth, and Maximian the seventh time Coss. Vales.

Diocletian. an Imperial Edict arrived, [commanding] that all the Governours of Churches every-where should be bound and imprison'd. The sight of what was done after that, no expressions are sufficient to describe: When infinite Multitudes were every-where committed to custody; and the Prisons in all places, which in former times had been provided for Murderers and Robbers of the Dead, were then filled with Bishops, Priests, Deacons, Readers and Exorcists: Insomuch that there was now no place left therein for those who had been condemn'd for their Crimes. Again, when (e) another Edict follow'd the former, wherein it was commanded that those who were imprison'd, if they would offer Sacrifice, should have their liberty to go whither they pleased: But if they refused should be cruciated with a thousand tortures: The multitudes of Martyrs in every Province cannot possibly be reckon'd up, especially those [who suffer'd] in Africa, Mauritania, Thebais, and Egypt. Out of Egypt some went into other Cities, and Provinces, and were there adorn'd with glorious Martyrdoms.

(e) This was the third Edict of the Emperors against the Christians. By the first it was ordered, the Churches should be ruin'd and the Scriptures burnt; and those who were honoured with any preferment (if they refused to sacrifice) should be deprived of their Dignity; the meaner sort were to lose their liberty; See Chap. 2. Another Edict soon followed this, that Bishops, Priests and Deacons should be imprisoned, and by all ways compelled to sacrifice. The third Edict comprehended all sorts of Christians, as well those of the Laity, as the Clergy; which Edict was proposed (says Eusebius in the Chap. 3. of his Book concerning the Martyrs of Palestine) in the second year of the Persecution. But this seems rather to have been the fourth Edict: For the second and third concern'd the Presbyters only; by the second 'twas ordered they should be imprisoned, and by the third it was enjoyned, they should by tortures be compelled to sacrifice. Vales.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning those Egyptians [who suffered] in Phœnicia.

SOme of them, we knew, were famous [for their Martyrdoms] in Palestine; and others in Tyre a City of Phœnicia. Whom any one that had seen, could not but have been astonish'd at their innumerable Stripes; at the Courage and Constancy of those truly (a) admirable Champions of Piety in suffering them; at their Combat with Wild Beasts, accustom'd to devour the Blood of Mankind, which immediately follow'd their Tortures with Scourges; at their Encounters in that Combat with Leopards, * huge wild Bears, fierce wild Boars, and Bulls, which were incited against them with Fire and red-hot Iron; and lastly, at the admirable patience of those courageous [Martyrs] in enduring [the assaults] of each of those wild Beasts. We ourselves were present at the performance of these things, when we saw the Divine Power of our Saviour Jesus Christ (whom the Martyrs then bore witness of) present, and evidently manifesting itself to the Martyrs: [for] those ravenous Beasts for a long time dared not to touch or approach the Bodies of these [Martyrs] beloved by God. But they turn'd their Fury upon others, to wit, those that were (b) Infidels, who instigated and provoked 'em: But the sacred Champions only, who stood naked, and by the motions of their Hands irritated them against themselves, (for this they were enjoyned to do,) they did not so much as touch. Sometimes indeed they assailed them; but, as it were by some Divine Power, they were stop'd, and retired back again: Which hapning for a long time together, gave occasion of no small admiration to the Spectators; so that because the first Beast perform'd not its assault, a second and a third were let loose upon one and the same Martyr: You would have admired the intrepid Stedfastness of those sacred persons at the sight of all this, and that firm and immoveable fortitude of Mind, which was in young and tender Bodies: For you might have seen a Youth, who had not yet compleated the twentieth year of his age, standing still without being bound; and (having stretch'd forth his Hands, in form of a Cross) in an undisturb'd and fearless temper of Mind, contending with the greatest earnestness in Prayers to the Divine Majesty, in no wise receding or removing from the place he stood on; when the Bears and the Leopards, breathing forth rage and death, almost touch'd his very Flesh with their Jaws. But their Mouths were (after what manner I know not) bound fast as it were by Divine and unspeakable Power, and they ran backward again. After such a manner as this, did this person behave himself. Again, you might have seen others (for they were in all five in number) cast to an enrag'd Bull, who tore some of the Infidels that approach'd him, tossing them into the air with his Horns, and leaving them to be taken up half-dead. But when he should have assail'd the sacred Martyrs only with rage and menaces, he could not approach them; but stamping on the Ground with his Feet, tossing his Horns this way and that way, and breathing forth rage and menaces by reason of his being irritated with red-hot Irons, he was notwithstanding drawn backward by the assistance of Divine Providence. When therefore none of them was at all hurt by him, they let loose other wild Beasts upon them. In fine, after these various and horrid assaults of the wild Beasts;

(a) Τῶν ὡς ἀληθῶς παραδόξων, is the reading of the Maz. and Med. MSS. accordingly we have rendered it of those truly admirable Champions, &c. Those Champions were termed paradoxi, who had gained many Victories. See Peter Faber (in Agonistico) B. 3. pag. 603. Vales.

(b) By [ἔξωθεν] the term which here occurs, Nicephorus (B. 7. Chap. 7.) thought those were meant, who stood without the Arena of the Amphitheatre, and incited the wild-beasts by their Clamours. But Rufinus supposed that the Arenarii were here spoken of, whose business it was to provoke the Beasts: Thus he renders the place, Verùm bestiæ illos ipsos qui ad instigandum mittuntur, incredibili velocitate discerpunt: But the Beasts tare in pieces those with an incredible swiftness, who are sent in to provoke them. Christophorson thought that as well the Infidels, as those who stood without the arena, were here meant. The same term occurs again in this Chapter; we have rendred it in both places Infidels. Vales.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning thoſe who [ſuffer'd] in Egypt.

SUch was the Combat of thoſe Egyptians, who glorioufly fought for Religion at Tyre: Thoſe [Egyptians] alſo may be deſervedly accounted admirable, who ſuffered Martyrdom in their own Country. Where infinite numbers of Men (together with Women and Children) contemning this temporal life in reſpect of our Saviour's Doctrine, underwent various ſorts of death. Some of whom, after their Fleſh had been torn off with torturing Irons, after they had been rack'd, moſt cruelly ſcourged, and [undergone] infinite other tortures, of different ſorts and horrible to be heard, were committed to the fire: Others were drown'd in the Sea. Otherſome cheerfully offer'd their Heads to be cut off by the Executioners. Some died under their tortures: Others were deſtroy'd by Famine. Again, others were Crucified; ſome of them according to the uſual manner of crucifying Malefactors, but others after a more cruel manner, being nailed to the Croſs with their Heads downwards, and kept alive, until they died by Famine on the very Croſſes.

CHAP. IX.

Concerning thoſe [who ſuffer'd] at Thebais.

BUT the Pains and Tortures, which the Martyrs underwent at Thebais, ſurmount all relation; who were torn all over their Bodies, until they expired, with [ſharp] Shells in ſtead of torturing Irons. Women were tied by one of their Feet, and drawn up on high into the Air, with their Heads downward, by certain Machines, and their Bodies being naked and wholly uncovered, were made a moſt deteſtable, moſt cruel, and inhumane Spectacle to all that look'd upon them. Again, others being bound to Trees and Boughs, were killed: For by certain Engines they drew together the [two] ſtrongeſt Boughs, and having faſtned the Martyrs Legs to each of them, they ſuffer'd the Boughs to return into their natural ſite, deſigning [thereby] to pull aſunder their Members, againſt whom they had invented theſe [ways of death:] And all theſe things were performed, not for a few days, or during ſome ſhort time, but continued for the ſpace of whole years: Sometimes no more than ten, at other times above twenty in number, were deſtroyed: Sometimes no leſs than thirty; at other, near ſixty; and again, at another time, an hundred Men, together with very ſmall Children and Women, were killed in one day, being condemned to various and interchangeable ſorts of puniſhments. We alſo ourſelves, being (a) converſant in thoſe places, ſaw very many [deſtroy'd] together in one day; whereof ſome were beheaded; and others underwent the puniſhment of Fire. Inſomuch that the Executioner's Sword became blunt, and being rendred unfit for uſe, was broken; and the Executioners themſelves being tired, ſucceeded one another by turns. At which time alſo we beheld a moſt admirable ardour of Mind, and a truly divine ſtrength and alacrity in thoſe who believed in the Chriſt of God. For no ſooner was Sentence pronounced againſt the firſt, but others ran haſtily from ſome other place before the Judges Tribunal, and confeſs'd themſelves to be Chriſtians. They regarded not dangers, nor thoſe various ſorts of Tortures; but with an undiſturb'd fearleſneſs made a bold confeſſion of the Worſhip of the Supream God; and with joy, laughter, and delight received their laſt ſentence of death; in ſuch ſort that they ſang, and to the very time of their expiration ſhouted forth Hymns and Thankſgivings in praiſe of God the Maker of all things: Such admirable perſons were theſe. But theſe in a moſt eſpecial manner deſerved the greateſt admiration, who [altho'] eminent for Riches, Nobility, Glory, Eloquence and Philoſophy; yet preferr'd the true Religion, and the Faith in our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt before all theſe. Of this ſort was Philoromus; a perſon that bore no ordinary Office, was the Emperor's (b) Rationaliſt at Alexandria; who together with his Dignity and Roman Honour, being attended with a Guard of Soldiers, did daily exerciſe a Judiciary Power. Phileas alſo, Biſhop of the Church of the Thmuitæ; a perſon eminent for his diſcharge of the publick Offices and Places of Magiſtracy in his own Country, and famous for his Philoſophick Studies. Theſe two perſons (altho' they were intreated by very many of their Relations and Friends, and moreover by (c) Perſonages of Honour, yea notwithſtanding the (d) Judge himſelf beſought them to take pity on themſelves, and have compaſſion on their Wives and Children, yet could in no wiſe be induced by ſuch perſons as theſe, that (out of a deſire to preſerve their own Lives) they ſhould contemn the Laws [made] concerning the Confeſſion and Renunciation of our Saviour. But having ſtoutly bore up againſt all the Menaces and Contumelies of the Judge, with a manly and philoſophick Mind, or rather with a pious and religious Heart, they were both beheaded.

(a) Hence it may be collected, that Euſebius lived in Egypt; which is alſo atteſted by Theodorus Metochita, (in Collectan.) Where he ſays, that not only the Egyptians, but alſo all thoſe who lived in that Country, uſed an intricate and obſcure Stile in their Writing; amongſt which he reckons our Euſebius. Valeſ.

(b) That is, the Procurator, or Receiver-General of the Emperor's Revenues in Egypt. For that Office is meant by theſe words, [τῆς βασιλικῆς διοικήσεως.] Valeſ.

(c) The phraſe is [οἱ ἐπ' ἀξίας ἀρχόντων, i. e. the honourable Magiſtrates.] But [ἀρχόντων] ſhould be expunged: For, as I think, 'tis a Scholion added to explain what went before, οἱ ἐπ' ἀξίας, does not ſignifie Magiſtrates, but Perſonages of Honour. Beſides, no body was ſtiled Ἄρχων, but the Judge himſelf. Valeſ. See Valeſius's Note on B. 14. of Amm. Marcellinus.

(d) In the Acts of the Paſſion of Phileas this Preſident is called Culcianus: He was Preſident of Thebais, ſays Epiphanius. Therefore Phileas ſuffer'd at Thebais, not at Alexandria, as ſome think. That which induced them to be of that mind, was a place in Euſebius's following Chapter, where he quotes Phileas his Epiſtle, which he wrote to the Thmuitæ from Alexandria, a little before his ſuffering Martyrdom. But being (as I ſaid) condemned by Culcianus Preſident of Thebais, 'tis manifeſt that he ſuffer'd there. Valeſ.

CHAP. X.

(a) The written Informations of Phileas the Martyr concerning what was done at Alexandria.

(a) In the Med. and Maz. MSS. the Title of this Chap. is thus, [The written Informations concerning what was done at Alexandria.] The Title of the foregoing Chapter is thus written [Phileas the Martyrs relation concerning thoſe who ſuffered at Thebais.] I doubt not but thoſe words [Phileas the Martyr] belong to the Title of this Chap. 10. For here Euſebius (out of Phileas's Epiſtle to the Thmuitæ) relates the Martyrdoms of the Alexandrians. Valeſ.

BUT becauſe we have ſaid that Phileas was a perſon worthy of great eſteem for his Græcian Literature, let him be produced as a Witneſs for

Diocleſian. for himſelf; both to demonſtrate what a perſon he was, and alſo to relate the Martyrdoms which in his time happened at Alexandria, which he will [declare] more accurately than we can, in theſe words:

(b) OUT OF PHILEAS'S EPISTLE TO THE THMUITÆ.

(b) These words ſhould be printed in Capital Letters, In the King's MS. they are disjovn'd from the Text: In the Med. MS. they are placed in the Margin: But in the Fuk. and Savil. MSS. they are omitted. Valeſ.

'All theſe Examples, Preſcripts, and good Documents being depoſited for us in the Divine and ſacred Scriptures, the bleſſed Martyrs, who were converſant amongſt us, without any delay manifeſtly fix'd the eye of their Mind upon the Supream God, and willingly embracing death upon account of Piety, they ſtedfaſtly adhered to their calling: For they found that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt had been incarnate for us, that he might aboliſh all manner of Sin, and provide us with aſſiſtances for our entrance into life eternal. For* he thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himſelf of no reputation, and took the form of a ſervant: And being found in faſhion as a man, he humbled himſelf unto death, even the death of the Croſs." Wherefore the Martyrs (who were (c) full of Chriſt) zealouſly affecting the beſt Gifts, endured all manner of ſorrow, and all ſorts of tortures that could be invented, not only once, but ſome of them a ſecond time alſo. And when the Soldiers that were of the Guard endeavoured with much earneſtneſs [to ſtrike a terror] into them, not only by all manner of menaces in words, but by deeds, they were in no wiſe diſcourag'd in mind, becauſe* perfect love caſteth out fear. Whoſe fortitude and courage under each torture what words would be ſufficient to relate? For, free leave being granted to all perſons that would be injurious towards them; ſome beat them with Clubs, others with Rods; otherſome with Scourges: Again, ſome ſcourged 'em with Thongs of Leather; others with Ropes: And the ſpectacle of theſe Tortures was variouſly interchanged, and full of malicious cruelty. For ſome [of the Martyrs] having their Hands bound behind them, were hung at an (d) Engine of wood, and every Member of their Bodies was diſtended by certain Machines. After that the Tormentors, by command [of the Judge,] made uſe of (e) Iron-nails to torture them with all over their Bodies, which were apply'd not only to their ſides, as Murderers are uſually tormented, but alſo to their Bellies, their Legs, and to their Cheeks. Others, being lifted up, were hung by one Hand at a* Gallery, the ſtretching of whoſe Joints and Members was a ſharper pain to them than all ſorts of tortures. Others were bound face to face to Pillars, their Feet not touching the ground; that ſo their Bonds being ſtrain'd by the heavineſs of their Bodies, might with ſtretching be cloſer drawn together: And this they endur'd not only as long as the Governour talk'd with them, and was at leiſure to hear them; but almoſt a whole day together: For when he went away [to hear] others, he left (f) Officers, that were impower'd by him, to be watchful over the former [Martyrs,] whether any one of them, being overcome by the ſharpneſs of his tortures, would ſeem to abandon his reſolution. He alſo commanded they ſhould be (g) ſtrained with Bonds without any commiſeration, and afterwards when they were dead, that they ſhould be thrown on the ground, and dragg'd up and down. For they ought not [he ſaid] to take the leaſt care of us; but that all perſons ſhould ſo think of, and behave themſelves towards us, as if we were not Men. This (h) ſecond torture (after they had beaten us with ſtripes) our Adverſaries invented. There were ſome alſo, who after they had been ſcourged, lay in the (i) Stocks, both their Feet being ſtretch'd to the fourth hole; in ſo much that they were forced to lie in the Stocks with their Bellies upwards, being unable to ſtand becauſe of their freſh wounds, cauſed by the ſtripes, which they had all over their Bodies. Others threw themſelves upon the ground, where they lay by reaſon of the innumerable wounds made by their tortures; yielding a more miſerable ſpectacle to thoſe that look'd on them, than in the very time of their being tortured; and bearing in their Bodies the various and different ſorts of tortures invented for them. Theſe things being thus perform'd, ſome [of the Martyrs] expired under their tortures, having made the Adverſary aſhamed by their perſevering conſtancy. Others, being half dead, were ſhut up in priſon, where having been ſorely afflicted with the ſmart of their wounds, they ended their lives not many days after. The reſidue having been refreſhed with methods of cure, became more ſtout and confident by time, and their abode in priſon. Therefore, when afterwards command was given, that they ſhould chooſe, whether by touching the deteſtable Sacrifices they would free themſelves from all moleſtation, and obtain from them an execrable liberty; or whether, refuſing to ſacrifice, they would receive the ſentence of death: Without any delay they cheerfully proceeded forth to death. For they well knew what was before preſcribed to us by the ſacred Scriptures: For* he (ſays the Word of God) that ſacrificeth to other Gods, ſhall be utterly deſtroyed. And again, † Thou ſhalt have no other Gods, but me." Such were the expreſſions of [Phileas] the Martyr, (a true Philoſopher, and alſo a ſincere lover of God,) which he ſent to the Brethren of his Church, before his laſt ſentence of condemnation, being yet in priſon: Whereby he inform'd them both in what condition he was; and alſo exhorted them ſtifly to retain their piety in Chriſt after his death, which was now approaching. (k) But what need we ſpend many words in relating

(c) Χειστοφόροι μάρτυρες, i. e. Martyrs full of Chriſt: So Ignatius Biſhop of Antioch, was called θεοφόρος, i. e. full of God. Valeſ.

(d) Περὶ τὸ ξύλον. I ſuppoſe he means the Eculeus; on which Offenders were hung, and had their Sides torn with Iron-nails. Valeſ.

(e) Ἀμυντήια (the term here) ſeems to ſignifie ſomething more than Iron-nails. For Heſychius interprets ἀμυντήιον by ξίφος δίστομον, a two-edged Sword. Note here the Cruelty of the Judges; who were not contented with Iron-nails only, but uſed Knives alſo, or Razors, with which they cut the Sides of the Martyrs. Valeſ.

* Ἀπὸ τῆς στοᾶς· στοὰ ſignifies a Porch, Gallery, or Walking-place under-propp'd with Pillars; in ſuch Philoſophers taught and diſputed: The Stoicks had their name from hence; ἀπὸ τῆς στοᾶς φιλόσοφοι.

(f) He means the Apparitors or Officers, who were under the Præfectus Auguſtalis; concerning whom Phileas ſpeaks in this Epiſtle, and calls him ἡγεμόνα, the Governour. The name of the Præfectus Auguſtalis at that time was Hierocles, as Epiph. ſays, in Hæreſ. Melitian. Valeſ.

(g) The phraſe in the Original is τοῖς δεσμοῖς προσιέναι; which me ſeems a new and uncouth Expreſſion. Valeſ.

(h) That is, the dragging of the Bodies up and down: The firſt ſort of torture was by Stripes and Scourges; the ſecond was, that they were laid on the ground, dragg'd about, and ſo drawn into priſon. Valeſ.

(i) See B. 4. Chap. 16. Note (c.)

(k) After theſe words Chriſtophorſon has inſerted many Chapters out of that Appendix, which Robert Stephens has publiſhed at the latter end of this Eighth Book. But that Appendix is an entire Book, and ſeparated from this Work, to wit, the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory; in which Euſebius deſcribes the ſufferings of the Paleſtine Martyrs, and eſpecially the Paſſion of his Friend

Pamphilus. Some ſtudious perſon added this Book to the eighth Book of the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, becauſe their Subjects were very like; whoſe Copy the Tranſcribers afterwards following, placed it in their Copies. In all the MSS. which I could ever yet ſee, this Book is extant after the end of B. 8. in ſuch manner as Robert Stephens publiſh'd it. Chriſtophorſon therefore did ill, and contrary to the Authority of all Copies, to put this Book in here, as if it had been part of the Eighth Book of the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. Muſculus was more prudent, who (following Stephen's Edition in his Verſion) tranſlated the Eighth Book as he found it in the Greek, and wholly omitted this Appendix: Which neither Ruſinus, nor Nicephorus ſeem to have found in their Copies. Beſides, the Titles of the Chapters of Book 8. (which, as uſually, are prefix'd before it) were ſufficient to have put Chriſtophorſon in mind, that this Appendix did in no wiſe belong to the Eighth Book. Valeſ.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning what was done in Phrygia.

FOR at that time ſome arm'd Soldiers inveſted a whole City of Chriſtians, that was very populous, in (a) Phrygia, and, having ſet it on fire, burnt the Men (together with the Women and Children) whilſt they called upon Chriſt the Supream God. The reaſon hereof was this, the whole Body of Inhabitants of that City, the (b) Curator, the (c) Duumvir, together with all the reſt who were of the Magiſtracy, and all the common People, profeſſing themſelves to be Chriſtians, would in no wiſe obey thoſe that commanded them to ſacrifice to Idols. Another perſon alſo, by name (d) Adauctus, (a man deſcended from a Noble Family in Italy, that had obtain'd a Roman Dignity, a perſon that had paſſed through all degrees of Honour in the Palace of the Emperors, in ſo much that he had faithfully diſcharged the Office of (e) Receiver-General, which amongſt them is called, The (f) Maſter of the Private Revenue, and that of Rationaliſt: Beſides all this, he was famous for his virtuous Performances in Religion, and for his Confeſſions of the Chriſt of God,) was adorned with the Crown of Martyrdom, having undergone the Conflict upon account of Religion, whilſt he bore the Office of Rationaliſt.

(a) Lactantius tells the ſame Story, in his B. 5. Inſtitut. Divinar. Chap. 11. where he treats concerning the injuſtice of the Judges, or Rulers of Provinces who puniſhed the Chriſtians: Alii (ſays he) ad occidendum præcipites extiterunt ſicut unus in Phrygia, qui univerſum populum cum ipſo pariter conventiculo concremavit; i. e. others were very haſty to murther [the Chriſtians] as was one in Phrygia, who burnt all the Inhabitants, together with the place they dwelt in, at one and the ſame time. Valeſ.

(b) The Curator of the City was he who look'd after the Treaſure, and what-ever elſe in general belonged to the Revenue of the City; this is manifeſt from the Pandects of the Law: He is alſo called Logiſta (from the Greek word λογιστὴς, which is the term here in the Original,) in Lege 3. Cod. de modo multandi. Hence [λογισεύειν] was uſed to ſignifie the performance of the Curator's Office, or Place. See Valeſius's Notes on Ammian. Marcellinus, pag. 36.

(c) Στρατηγὸς, is the term in the Original; which the Latines called Magiſtratus, or Duumvir: 'Tis taken in this ſenſe throughout the whole Title Cod. Theod. de Decurionibus: Et in Optatus, Lib. 1, &c. in which places (and in many others) Magiſtratus and Duumvir are promiſcuouſly uſed. The chief Magiſtrate amongſt the Corinthians, Rhodians, Tarſenſes, Epheſians, and Philippians, was called στρατηγὸς; and alſo amongſt the Athenians the στρατηγοὶ got the precedency and chief place, the name of ἄρχοντες being ſuppreſſed: See Cicero in Book 5. Epiſt. 11. ad Atticum. Laſtly, in all Grecian Cities it was at length cuſtomary to call the chief Magiſtrates Strategi; as 'tis manifeſt from the old Coins and Marbles. See Valeſius his Notes on Amm. Marcellinus, B. 31. pag. 423, 424.

(d) In the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil. MSS. this perſon's name is Ἀδαυκτος, Adauctus: So Ruſinus and Cedrenus wrote his name alſo. This perſon is mentioned in the Greek Menæum, on the third of October. There was at the ſame time another Adauctus, who ſuffered Martyrdom at Rome, and is mentioned at the ſeventh of February. Valeſ.

(e) He means the Procurator, or Steward of the Revenue. Ruſinus renders this place thus; rationes ſummarum partium adminiſtrans; which is truly tranſlated. Valeſ.

(f) Concerning theſe Magiſtri rei privatæ, ſee Leg. 2. and 4. Cod. Theod. de jure fiſci. Theſe Officers are uſually joyned with the Rationaliſts in the Cod. Theod. See Valeſius's Notes on Ammian. Marcellin. Book 15. pag. 78.

CHAP. XII.

Concerning many other Men and Women, who ſuffered Martyrdom in a various and different manner.

WHat need is there now of mentioning the reſt by name, or of recounting the multitude of men, or delineating the various ſorts of tortures [endured by] the admirable Martyrs of Chriſt? Part whereof were beheaded, as it happened to thoſe in Arabia; and part were [killed] by having their Legs broken, as it befel thoſe in Cappadocia. Some, being hung up on high by the Feet with their Heads downwards, (a (a) ſlow Fire having been kindled under them,) were ſuffocated with the Smoke that aſcended from the combuſtible matter ſet on fire; ſo it befel thoſe in Meſopotamia: Others had their Noſes, the tips of their Ears, and their Hands cut off, and the other Members and Parts of their Bodies were mangled, as it happen'd at Alexandria. What need is there of renewing the remembrance of what was done at Antioch? where ſome were broil'd on (b) Grid-irons ſet over the Fire, not till they were killed, but that their puniſhment might be prolonged: Others were more ready to thruſt their Right Hand, into the Fire, than to touch the impious Sacrifices. Whereof, ſome avoiding the being put to the teſt [whether they would Sacrifice,] before they would be apprehended and fall into the hands of thoſe that laid wait for them, threw themſelves headlong from the tops of high Houſes, having accounted death to be a gain, becauſe of the maliciouſneſs of the Impious. Alſo, a certain holy Woman (admirable for her virtuous Soul, and [her comely] Body, eminently famous, beyond all at Antioch, for Riches, Deſcent, and Reputation,) had educated two Daughters (Virgins that were eminent for beauty, and in the flower of their Age) in the Precepts of Religion: When many, moved thereto by envy, uſed all manner of induſtry in inquiring out the place where they abſconded; and it being at length underſtood they lived in a foreign Country, they were with much diligence ſummon'd to Antioch: After the Woman knew, that ſhe and her Daughters were now encompaſs'd with the Soldier's Nets, perceiving herſelf and Daughters reduc'd to an inextricable ſtate of peril, ſhe exhorted the Virgins, expreſly declaring to 'em the miſchiefs that would befal them from the Soldiers, and that of all evils, Raviſhment was the moſt intolerable, the menaces whereof it was unlawful for them to endure, even to hear: moreover, having ſaid, that to yield up their Souls to the ſervice of Devils, was worſe than all ſorts of death, and all manner of deſtruction; there was but one way (ſhe declared) to avoid all theſe evils, which was to fly to the Lord for refuge. Immediately after theſe words, having all agreed to embrace the ſame advice, they adorn'd their Bodies

(a) Such a Fire is that, which is made of Straw and ſmall Sprigs of Trees. It is called a ſlow, or ſlack Fire, to difference it from the ἄσβεστον πῦρ, the unquenchable Fire, which we took notice of before. This Fire was kindled at ſome diſtance, that ſo the Martyrs might be choak'd with the Smoak, rather than burn'd. Pionius the Martyr ſeems to have been killed by ſuch a Fire, as his Acts do atteſt. Seneca (in his Third Book De Irâ) ſeems to mention this ſort of puniſhment, in theſe words, Et circundati defixis corporibus ignes. Valeſ.

(b) Ruſinus tranſlates ἐσχάραις which is the term here, Grid-irons: So alſo the Old Gloſs renders this term. Valeſ.

Diocleſian. Bodies with a decent dreſs: When they had gone (c) half their journey, having intreated their Guard for a ſhort receſs out of the way, and that being granted them, they threw themſelves into a River which ran hard by: Thus theſe perſons [drown'd] themſelves. At the ſame City of Antioch, another pair of Virgins, in all points divine, and truly ſiſters, eminent for deſcent, ſplendid as to eſtate, in the flower of their age, beautiful in Body, chaſt of Mind, pious in their converſations, admirable for their induſtry, (as if the earth were unable to bear ſo great [an ornament,]) were, by the command of the worſhippers of Dæmons, caſt into the Sea. Theſe things were done amongſt thoſe [at Antioch.] But 'tis horrid to hear the relation of what others ſuffer'd in Pontus: Some had ſharp Reeds thruſt up the Fingers of both their Hands from the very tops of their Nails: Others had melted Lead poured upon their Backs, even whilſt the melted metal boiled, [which ran down and] burnt the moſt (d) neceſſary parts of their Bodies: Again, others without any commiſeration endured obſcene tortures (which are unfit to be related) in their Privy-Members, and Bowels, which thoſe * couragious and juſt Judges invented with much earneſtneſs and labour, demonſtrating thereby the acuteneſs of their Wit, as if the very power and ſtrength of Wiſdom [conſiſted in ſuch cruel Inventions:] and ſtriving continually (as if it had been for rewards in a Combat) to outdo one another in finding out new ſorts of Tortures. Theſe calamities therefore were not ended, till ſuch time as [the Judges,] deſpairing of making any further addition to theſe miſeries, wearied with ſlaughters, filled and ſatiated with the effuſion of Blood, betook themſelves to the thoughts of clemency and humanity, that in future they might ſeem to invent no further cruelty againſt us. For it was unfit (they ſaid) to pollute the Cities with the Blood of their Inhabitants, and to defame the Government of the Emperors (which was benign and gentle towards all perſons) by ſo (e) Superlative a Cruelty: But that rather it was fit, that the humanity and beneficence of the Imperial Authority ſhould be extended to all perſons, and that [the Chriſtians] ſhould not any longer be puniſhed with death, in regard thoſe of our Religion were exempted from ſuch puniſhment by the indulgence of the Emperors. At that time therefore (f) command was given to pluck out the Eyes [of the Chriſtians,] and that they ſhould have one of their Legs lamed. For ſuch was their civility towards us, and this ſeem'd to them the moſt gentle puniſhment [that could be inflicted] on us. In ſo much that, upon account of this lenity uſed by theſe impious Wretches [towards us,] it is impoſſible to give any further account of the Multitudes (which indeed are altogether innumerable) both of them who had their right Eyes firſt thruſt out with a Sword, and after they had been thus prick'd out, their [Eye-holes] were ſeared with a red-hot Iron; and alſo of thoſe, who had their Left-legs (as far as the bending of their Knees) made uſeleſs by being ſeared with hot Irons: After which they were condemned to the Brazen-Mines which were in the Province, not ſo much for the ſervice they could do, as upon account of the Affliction and Miſery they ſhould [endure there.] Beſides all theſe, there were many others, who were aſſaulted with ſeveral ſorts of Combats, which 'tis not poſſible to give a Catalogue of; for their couragious Exploits do ſurpaſs all relation. Therefore, the noble Martyrs of Chriſt, having obtain'd great renown over the whole world in theſe [(g) Combats,] did both deſervedly amaze every-where the Spectators of their Courage; and alſo exhibit in themſelves manifeſt tokens of the truly Divine and (h) Inexplicable Power of our Saviour. Indeed, the mention of every particular perſon of them by name, would be very tedious, if not a thing impoſſible.

Diocleſian.

(c) There may be a double meaning given of theſe words. For we may either underſtand that theſe Women had gone one half of their journey, in which ſenſe Nicephorus took the words; or that they ſtood on a Bank which was in the middle of the High-way. Concerning the Martyrdom of theſe ſort of Chriſtian Women (who drowned themſelves for the preſervation of their Chaſtity and Religion,) See St. Auguſt. De Civitat. Dei, Book 1. Chap. 26. There is extant an Encomium of theſe Women in the firſt Tome of Chryſoſtome, where the Mother is called Domnina, and the Daughters Bernice and Proſdoce. The Antiochians, celebrated their Martyrdom on the 20 day after the Feaſt of the Holy Croſs; the Greeks placed their Birth-day on Oct. 4. Valeſ.

(d) Τὰ ἀναίσχυντα τῶν σώματος; which Ruſinus tranſlates elegantly, Uſque ad loca pudenda quibus naturalis egeſtio procurari ſolet. The Grecians call [ἀναίσχυντον] that part of the Body, which Modeſty forbids to be named. Valeſ.

* Ironically ſpoken.

(e) The Med. Maz. and Fuk. MSS. read [τὴν ἀγωτάτω,] Superlative. Valeſ.

(f) Ruſinus ſays an Edict of the Emperor was ſet forth, whereby ſuch a ſort of puniſhment was commanded thenceforth to be inflicted on the Chriſtians: But I think this not to be true. For the Magiſtrates themſelves, being overcome by the conſtancy of the Chriſtians, at length betook themſelves to this ſort of puniſhment on their own accord. Valeſ.

(g) You muſt underſtand [ἀγώνων, Combats;] for he had ſpoken concerning theſe juſt before. Chriſtophorſon tranſlated theſe words ill, thus [at this time;] and from them began a new Chapter. Valeſ.

(h) The term here is [ἀπορρήτε, ſecret.] It ſeems to be uſed for [ἀρρήτε, inexplicable;] in which ſenſe Euſebius does frequently uſe it. But if any one will tranſlate it [ſecret,] I ſhall not withſtand it. Valeſ.

CHAP. XIII.

Concerning thoſe Prelates of the Church who demonſtrated the Sincerity of the Religion they aſſerted by [the Effuſion] of their own Blood.

NOW, of thoſe Eccleſiaſtick Prelates, who ſuffered Martyrdom in the moſt eminent Cities, the firſt that muſt be commemorated in the Monuments of the Pious, may be Anthimus, a Witneſs of Chriſt's Kingdom, Biſhop of Nicomedia, who was beheaded in that City. But, of the (a) Antiochian Martyrs [we will mention] Lucianus a Presbyter of that Church, a perſon moſt eminent [for ſanctity] throughout his whole life: He at firſt made a Declaration of the Celeſtial Kingdom of Chriſt in words, and by an Apologetick Oration at Nicomedia, in the preſence of the Emperor; and afterwards he [aſſerted it] in deeds and real performances. But the moſt eminent Martyrs in Phænice (which were moſt acceptable to God and Paſtors of Chriſt's Flock) were Tyrannio Biſhop of the Church at Tyre, and Zenobius a Preſbyter at Sidon; alſo Silvanus Biſhop of the Churches at Emiſa. This [Prelate laſt named] being together with ſome others, caſt as food to the Wild-Beaſts at the very City of Emeſa, was received into the number of the Martyrs. Both the other rendred the Doctrine of the Divine Faith famous at Antioch, by their moſt patient ſuffering [of Tortures] until their Deaths: [Tyrannio] the Biſhop was drown'd in the Depths of the Sea; and Zenobius (a moſt incomparable Phyſician) died couragiouſly under the Tortures, which were applied to his ſides. Amongſt the Martyrs of Paleſtine, Silvanus Biſhop of the Churches at Gaza, was, together with nine and thirty others, beheaded at the Mines of Braſs, which are in Phæno. Alſo Peleus and Nilus, Egyptian Biſhops, together with ſome others, were burnt to death at the ſame place. Amongſt which number we muſt in no wiſe omit the mention of Pamphilus the Presbyter, the moſt admirable perſon in our Age, and the greateſt Ornament of the Church at Cæſarea: Whoſe Fortitude and couragious Exploits we (b) will declare at a fit and convenient opportunity. [Moreover,] of thoſe who were perfected by a glorious Martyrdom at Alexandria, throughout all Egypt and Thebais, the firſt to be mention'd is Peter, Biſhop of Alexandria, a moſt divine Teacher of the Chriſtian Religion; alſo, Fauſtus, (c) Dius, and Ammonius (perfect Martyrs of Chriſt) who were his Presbyters. Beſides, Phileas, Heſychius, Pachumius, and Theodorus, Biſhops of Churches in Egypt. Moreover, there were many other eminent [Martyrs] who have an honourable mention among the Churches that are in thoſe places and Countries. But our [deſign] is not to commit to writing the Conflicts of all thoſe who ſuffered for the Worſhip of God over the whole World, nor yet to give in an accurate relation of every accident that befel them; but of thoſe rather, who with their own eyes beheld what was done. Moreover, thoſe [Conflicts] ourſelves were preſent at, we will commit to the knowledge of Poſterity in (d) another Work: But in this preſent Book I will annex to what has been declared, a Revocation of what had been practiſed againſt us, and the accidents that hapned from the very beginning of the Perſecution, which will be moſt uſeful to the Readers. Therefore, before the War [was denounced] againſt us, (during the time that the Emperors were friendly and peaceable towards us,) (e) how great a felicity and plenty of all that is good, the (b) To wit, in the Book concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine, which is placed after this eighth Book. For in that Euſebius at large declares the Martyrdom of Pamphilus, as may there be ſeen. Moreover, from this place it appears, that that Book concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine, was written by Euſebius after his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, and after his Books concerning the Life of Pamphilus the Martyr. Chriſtophorſon (who had inſerted that whole Appendix before this Chapter) was forced to omit theſe words of Euſebius here, leſt Euſebius ſhould ſeem to have forgot himſelf. I muſt indeed confeſs, that in the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil. MSS. the Reading is [ἀνεγεφάμεν, we have declared;] but if that Reading be true, Euſebius muſt mean his Books concerning the Life of Pamphilus the Martyr; which (as before we obſerved) he wrote before his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. Valeſ.

(a) In ſtead of [ἐπ' ἀντιοχείας, the Martyrs at Antioch] in Nicephorus the Reading is [ἀπ' ἀντιοχείας, the Martyrs of Antioch,] which doubleſs is trueſt. For Lucianus ſuffer'd not at Antioch, but at Nicomedia, as Euſebius atteſts in this place; to whom agree Jerome [in Catalog.] Ruſinus, and Nicephorus. The ſame is confirmed by Lucianus himſelf in the Epiſtle he wrote to the Antiochians, when he was (together with ſome other Martyrs) in priſon at Nicomedia. The laſt words of this Epiſtle are extant in the Alexandrian Chronicle, at the firſt year of the Perſecution. Valeſ.

(c) In the Maz. and Med. MSS. this perſon is called Dius; in Robert Stephens he is named Didius. Valeſ.

(d) He means doubtleſs his Book concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine. For no other Book but that can be found, wherein Euſebius relates the Conflicts of the Martyrs which he himſelf had ſeen. The Opinion of Chriſtophorſon is from this paſſage further diſproved, who ſuppoſed the Book concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine was part of this eighth Book: Upon which account, after theſe words [in another Work] he omitted ſome words, and inſerted others, againſt the authority of all Copies. Turnebus was ſenſible hereof, and therefore at the Margin of his Copy, he put this Greek Scholion at theſe words, [Σημείωσον ὅτι ταύτην ἔχεις τὴν γραφὴν εὐθὺς μετὰ τοῦτο τὸ βιβλίον, i. e. Note, that you will meet with this writing immediately after this eighth Book. Valeſ.

(e) How great the felicity of the Roman Empire was, in the Reign of Dioclesian and Maximian, Mamertinus atteſts in his Genethliacum, about the latter end. Neither did the Romans ever ſucceed more proſperouſly in their Wars againſt the Barbarians, than at that time. The Barbarians were in every Engagement ſlain, and the Limits of the Roman Empire enlarged. If we read the Hiſtories of thoſe Times, we ſhall find that the Affairs of the Empire were never in a better poſture; when four Princes, to wit, two Auguſti, and as many Cæſars, did each of them ſeverally repel the Barbarians. But although Dioclesian and Maximian obtain'd ſo many Victories over the Enemies of the Roman Empire; yet they Triumph'd but once, a little before they reſign'd the Empire, as Eutropius and Zonaras do atteſt. The words of Eutropius are theſe; Uterque una die privato habitu imperii inſigne mutavit; Nicomediæ Dioclesianus, Herculius Mediolani, poſt triumphum inclytum, quem Romæ ex numeroſis gentibus egerant, pompa ſerculorum illuſtri, &c. Hieronymus (in his Chronicon) has placed this Triumph of Dioclesian and Maximian on the eighteenth Year of Dioclesian. At which place Scaliger (in his Animadverſions) remarks, that Hieronymus has committed an Anachroniſm. For he ſays, this Triumph was performed on the twentieth Year of Dioclesian, ſome Months before he put off his Purple. But Scaliger himſelf is miſtaken rather than Hieronymus. For if Dioclesian triumph'd in the twentieth Year of his Empire, that is, ſome few Months before he reſigned it, it muſt be ſaid he triumph'd about January, in the year of Chriſt 304. and put off his Purple on the Kalends of April of the ſame year; which time of his reſignation Idatius declares (in Faſtis.) Whence it follows, that he trinmph'd in Winter-time, and in the depth of Winter travell'd from Rome to Nicomedia; neither of which is probable. For neither did the Roman Emperors uſually triumph in Winter; nor was Dioclesian (by reaſon of his Age and Infirmity of Body) able to endure the trouble of ſo tedious a Journey. Beſides, in the nineteenth year of his Empire, in March and April, Dioclesian was at Nicomedia; at which time the Perſecution againſt the Chriſtians began, as our Euſebius atteſts in Chap. 5. Book. 8. He was at Nicomedia alſo, when the Palace there was burn'd; (as Conſtantine witneſſeth in his Oration ad ſanctorum cœtum, Chap. 25.) which Fire happen'd ſome Months after the Perſecution was began. Let us therefore ſuppoſe, that that happen'd in May, is it credible that Dioclesian could go from Nicomedia to Rome, triumph there, return from thence to Nicomedia, put off his Purple there, and retire into Dalmatia to lead the reſt of his life in retirement there: Is it (I ſay) credible he could do all this within ten Months ſpace? Beſides, the Diſeaſe, by which Dioclesian was for ſome time put out of his Wits, ſeized him firſt at Nicomedia, a little after he raiſed the Perſecution, as Conſtantine relates. Wherefore, 'tis very improbable, that Dioclesian, troubled with ſuch a Diſtemper, undertook ſuch a long Journey. Further, the Author of the Panegyrick ſpoken to Maximian and Conſtantine, does expreſly affirm, that Dioclesian and Maximian triumph'd at Rome ſome years before the twentieth of Dioclesian's Empire; ſee his words. Scaliger therefore is much miſtaken, in ſaying Dioclesian and Maximian triumph'd in the twentieth year of Dioclesian's Empire; Hieronymus, more truly, placed it on the eighteenth of Dioclesian. In which year Idatius (in Faſtis) obſerves, that the Emperors gave command by their Edict that Corn ſhould be ſold cheap; which ſeems to have been order'd by them after the Triumph, to pleaſe the People of Rome. But Cedrenus places this Triumph on the ſeventeenth year of Dioclesian. Valeſ.

Dioclesian.

Roman Empire was dignified with, what words can be ſufficient to declare? At which time thoſe, in whoſe hands the Supream Power was, having compleated the tenth and twentieth year of their Empire, led their lives in a firm and continued Peace, [ſpending the time] with Feſtivities, publick Shows, moſt ſplendid Banquets, and Delights. When their Empire was after this ſort enlarged without any manner of impediment, and daily augmented with an increaſe of greatneſs, on a ſudden they revoked the peace with us, and raiſed a perfidious War [againſt us.] The (f) ſecond year of this War was not compleated, when a new and unexpected accident ſubverted the State of Affairs almoſt throughout the whole [Roman] Empire. For, (g) he that had the precedency amongſt the foreſaid Emperors, (having been viſited by an unfortunate Diſeaſe, which drove him into a diſorder'd and mad temper of mind,) betook himſelf to a private and Country life, together with that [Emperor] who was the next in dignity to him. Theſe affairs were no ſooner tranſacted after this manner, but the whole Roman Empire was (h) divided into two parts, which, as it has been re-

(f) Euſeb. had better have ſaid, the firſt year was ſcarce compleated. For this Reſignation of the Empire, made by Dioclesian and Maximian happen'd about the beginning of the ſecond year of the Perſecution, on the Kalends of April, in the year of Chriſt 304. the Perſecution having been begun in the month of March of the foregoing year. Whereas therefore Euſebius ſays [the ſecond year of this War was not compleated,] his meaning muſt be this [it was the ſecond year current of the Perſecution:] In this ſenſe that other place of Euſebius (which occurs in Chap 3. of his Book concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine, about the end of the Chapter) is to be taken. Valeſ.

(g) Chriſtophorſon tranſlates theſe words [τῷ πρωτοστάτῃ τῶν ἐμῶν μόχθων] thus, primus noſtrarum ærumnarum auctor, the firſt Author of our ſorrows; which Verſion is not good: But he ſeems to have followed Nicephorus herein; who (in B. 7. Chap. 16.) writes out this Paſſage of Euſebius; and in ſtead of his words here ſet down, uſes theſe [τῷ ἀρχηγῷ τῆς κακίας, the Author of our miſchief.] Valeſ.

(h) For Conſtantius and Galerius parted the Empire between themſelves: Which was the firſt diviſion of the Empire, as Euſebius here aſſerts. For although there had been more than one Auguſtus at the ſame time, yet they govern'd the Roman Empire together, without making any diviſion of it; thus it was in the Reign of Marcus and Verus. Neither was there any diviſion made of the Empire in the Reign of Diocletianus and Herculius Maximianus; when thoſe two Auguſti parted neither the Provinces, nor the Legions. See Eutropius, B. 10. Oroſius B. 7. Concerning this Diviſion of the Empire (which Rome was much diſpleaſed at) Porphyrius (in his Panegyrick to Conſtantine, written by him in the 15th year of Conſtantine's Reign,) ſpeaks theſe words,

Imperiis pars feſſa poli, diviſa gemebat
Sceptra, & Auſoniæ mœrebat perdita jura. Valeſ.

corded,

Diocleſian. corded, was an accident that never happen'd before. Within ſome ſmall interval of time, the Emperor Conſtantius (a perſon of extraordinary mildneſs throughout his whole life, moſt favourable to his Subjects, and one that had a ſingular affection for the Divine Doctrine [of our Religion,] ended his life according to the common Sanction of Nature, leaving his own Son Conſtantine Emperor and Auguſtus in his ſtead. And he was the (i) firſt that was Deified amongſt the [Romans,] being after his death vouchſafed all Honours due to an Emperor. He was the mildeſt and moſt benign of all the Emperors: And moreover, the only perſon of thoſe Princes in our days, that paſſed over the whole time of his Government ſuitably to his Imperial Majeſty: He behav'd himſelf with the greateſt graciouſneſs and candour imaginable towards all perſons, both in other Matters; and alſo was in no wiſe a Confederate in the War raiſed againſt us, but preſerved thoſe Worſhippers of God, that lived under his Government, free from harm and and injuries: and having neither demoliſh'd the fabricks of the Churches, nor attempted any other new deſign againſt us, he obtain'd an (k) honourable and thrice-happy concluſion of his life: Being the only perſon [of all the four Emperors] that ended his life in his Imperial Government fortunately and gloriouſly, [leaving] his own Son (a moſt prudent and pious Prince) his Succeſſor. Conſtantinus, Son to this Man, being immediately from the very time [of his Father's death] proclaim'd ſupream Emperor and Auguſtus by the Soldiers, (but long before that by the ſupream God) exhibited himſelf an Emulator of his Father's Piety towards our Religion. Such a perſon was he: Afterwards Licinius, by the common ſuffrage of the Emperors was declared Emperor and Auguſtus: At which Maximinus was ſorely diſpleaſed, who until that time had been honour'd only with the title of Cæſar (l) by all Men. He therefore, being a perſon of a moſt tyrannical Diſpoſition, by violence poſſeſs'd himſelf of that dignity, and was by himſelf declared Auguſtus. About that time [Maximianus,] (m) whom we before manifeſted to have re-aſſumed the Empire after his reſignation of it, being found to have contrived Machinations in order to the death of Conſtantine, ended his life by a moſt infamous death: he being the (n) firſt, whoſe Monuments, Statues, and whatever elſe of that nature has been uſually erected in honour of the Emperors, were aboliſh'd, upon account of his being a prophane and moſt impious perſon.

(f) The meaning of this paſſage is not, that Conſtantius was the firſt Emperor that had the honour to be Deified after his death: (For many Emperors, before Conſtantius, were by the Senate accounted amongſt the number of the Divi:) But that, of the four Emperors who governed the Empire together (to wit, Dioclesianus, Maximianus, Conſtantius and Galerius,) Conſtantius was the firſt that obtained this honour; becauſe he was the firſt of them four, that died. Valeſ.

(k) In the King's MS the Reading is [τελος εὐδαιμον, a fortunate end of his life.] But in the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Sav. MSS. the words here are [τέλος εὐδοκιμον καὶ τετιμημενον, an honourable and thrice happy concluſion of his life.] Valeſ.

(l) In the Maz. Med. and Fuk. MSS. the reading is [μόνον Καίσαρα ἀφ' ἁπάντων ὅσοι πώποτε χρηματίσαντα, honoured with the title of Cæſar only, before (or, otherwiſe than) all the reſt:] Which Reading is truer than [ἀφ' ἁπάντων by all men.] For, four Auguſti at that time govern'd the Affairs of the Roman Empire; to wit, Galerius, Conſtantinus, Maxentius, and Licinius. But Maximinus was long before made Cæſar by Galerius, and continued in that dignity until Galerius's death. Wherefore, 'tis moſt true (what Euſebius here ſaith) that Maximinus was much diſpleaſed, becauſe, there being then ſo many Auguſti, he alone had no other title than that of Cæſar, when-as notwithſtanding he had received that title of Cæſar before the other three Princes now mentioned. Valeſ.

(m) Theſe words [whom we before manifeſted to have re-aſſumed the Empire, after his reſignation of it,] are wanting in the Maz. and Fuk. MSS. They are in the King's MS. and in the Med. MS. they are written at the Margin here, in the ſame hand in which that MS. is written. Moreover, altho' Euſebius here ſays, he before related, that Maximianus Herculius re-aſſumed the Imperial Dignity; yet hitherto I cannot find the place where Euſebius has ſaid this. Valeſ.

(n) Πρώτε δὲ τότε (the expreſſion here) is to be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe with that we explain'd a little before in this Chapter, [πρῶτός τε ἐν θεοῖς, the firſt that was Deified.] See Note (i.) in this thirteenth Chapter. Valeſ.

CHAP. XIV.

Galerius.

Concerning the Morals of thoſe that were the Enemies of Religion.

MAxentius (Son to this * Man) who had poſſeſs'd himſelf of the Government of Rome, at firſt hypocritically pretended [himſelf a Profeſſor of] our Faith, that he might thereby pleaſe and flatter the People of Rome. Upon this account he commanded his Subjects to forbear perſecuting the Chriſtians, making a ſhew of piety, and [being deſirous] to ſeem benign, and much more mild than the former Governours. But in his Practices he manifeſted himſelf not to be ſuch a manner of perſon, as 'twas hoped he would have prov'd. But, having applied himſelf to [the commiſſion of] all ſorts of impious facts, he omitted no manner of action that was impure and libidinous. He committed Adulteries and Rapes of all ſorts. He parted the Husbands [by divorce] from their lawful Wives, whom (when he had by uncleanneſs abuſed) he moſt diſhonourably ſent back again to their Husbands. Nor did he make it his buſineſs to be thus injurious towards obſcure perſons, and thoſe of mean Quality, but towards them eſpecially, who were advanced to the higheſt place of Honour in the Senate of Rome; inſulting over the moſt eminent Perſonages. All perſons therefore, both the Vulgar and the Magiſtrates, as well the honourable as the obſcure, ſtanding in great fear of him, were ſorely afflicted with his intolerable Tyranny. And altho' they were quiet, and patiently bore the auſtere Servitude [they were oppreſt with;] yet none could ſo avoid the bloody Cruelty of the Tyrant. For, one time, upon a very trivial pretence, he delivered the People of Rome to be ſlain by his (a) own Guards. And ſo innnumerable multitudes of the Roman people (not Scythians, nor Barbarians, but his own Citizens) were killed with Spears and all ſorts of Weapons in the midſt of the City. Moreover, 'tis impoſſible to enumerate how many ſlaughters were made of thoſe that were Senators, to the end their eſtates might be ſeiz'd; infinite numbers of 'em being put to death at ſeveral times for various crimes framed [againſt them.] At length, as the Complement of his Impieties, the Tyrant proceeded to [exerciſe] the Deluſions of Magick Art: Sometimes ripping up Women great with child; otherwhiles ſearching into the Bowels of new-born Infants; he alſo killed Lions, and [performed] ſome other horrible Rites, to call forth the Dæmons, and repel the approaching War. For he moſt undoubtedly preſumed, that by theſe Performances he ſhould obtain the Victory. Whilſt this perſon therefore tyranniz'd at Rome, 'tis impoſſible to relate what miſchievous Acts he perpetrated, and [how miſerably] he enſlaved his Subjects: inſomuch that they were reduced to ſuch extream Penury and want of neceſſary Suſtenance, as ('tis recorded by thoſe of our Times)

*To Maximianus.

(a) Aurelius Victor (in the Life of Maxentius) ſays the ſame; Adeo ſævus, uti Prætorianis cædem vulgi quondam annuerit; He was ſo cruel, that one time he connived at his Guards for killing the common People. Conſtantine having vanquiſh'd Maxentius, did quite put down the Prætorian Cohorts; (i. e. thoſe Soldiers whoſe Office it was to Guard the Emperor's Body,) upon pretence of this Slaughter (here mentioned) they made among the common People; but in reality, that they ſhould not attempt any Alterations in the Government, nor make Emperors, as they had done Maxentius whom they proclaimed Auguſtus. Moreover, Zoſimus tells the ſame Story, (here mentioned by our Euſebius) but a little otherwiſe. For he relates, That when the Temple of the God Genius at Rome was accidentally fired, and the People flock'd together to quench the Fire; a Soldier who derided this God of the Gentiles, was killed by the common People; upon which there immediately happened ſo great an uproar amongſt the Soldiers, that the whole City had been deſtroy'd, had not Maxentius intervened. Valeſ.

Galerius. never hapned at Rome, nor any-where elſe. But Maximinus the Tyrant in the Eaſtern parts, having ſecretly made a League with Maxentius [the Tyrant] at Rome, as being his Brother in wickedneſs, endeavour'd to keep himſelf concealed for a long time. But being at laſt detected, he ſuffer'd condign puniſhment. It was wonderful [to obſerve] how near a relation and Brother-like affinity in Wickedneſs this Man expreſs'd towards the Tyrant at Rome; or rather, how far he exceeded and ſurpaſſed him in the perpetration of nefarious Facts. For Inchanters and Magicians were by him promoted to the chiefeſt places of Honour: He was exceeding timerous and ſuperſtitious, and a mighty favourer of the Impoſtures about Idols and Dæmons: Without Divinations and Reſponſes of Oracles he preſumed not to move any thing a Nail's breadth (as the ſaying is.) Upon which account he impoſed a more cruel and ſharper Perſecution upon us, than the former Emperors had done; commanding that Temples [to the Gods] ſhould be erected in every City, and that thoſe places dedicated to their Worſhip, which by length of time were decay'd, ſhould with all diligence be repair'd. He [conſtituted] Prieſts for the Idols in every place and City; and over them he appointed a (b) Chief-Prieſt of every Province, any one of thoſe who had moſt worthily diſcharged all the publick Offices in the Court [or Senate] of the City; and appointed him a military Guard [conſiſting of] a ſet number of Troops. [In fine,] he freely beſtowed the Governments of Provinces, and chiefeſt places of pre-eminence, on all thoſe that were impudent Soothſayers, as being Religious Perſons, and moſt acceptable to the Gods. After this, he proceeded to vex and oppreſs, not one City only, or Country, but all the Provinces in general that were under his Government, with exactions of Gold, Silver, and vaſt Summs of Money, with moſt burthenſome (c) Impoſts, and with various ſorts of forfeitures ſucceeding one another. Moreover, depriving the Rich of their Eſtates laid up for them by their Anceſtors, he beſtow'd a vaſt Treaſure and Heaps of Money on thoſe about him that were his Flatterers. Beſides, he was given to Ebriety and Drunkenneſs in ſuch an high degree, that in his Cups he would rave, and be out of his Wits; and in his Drunkenneſs he would command ſuch things to be done, as the next day when ſober he would repent of. In Sottiſhneſs and Luxury no Man was his Equal, exhibiting himſelf the Maſter of Debauchery both to his Princes and to his [inferiour] Subjects. He permitted his Soldiers to live effeminate lives, in all manner of Deliciouſneſs and Intemperance: But he perſwaded his Preſidents and chief Commanders (who in a manner were his Colleagues in his Tyranny,) to break forth into Extortion and Covetouſneſs towards thoſe under their Juriſdiction. What need we relate thoſe libidinous Courſes, in which this Man indulged himſelf? Or recount their Multitudes, which he vitiated by Adultery? For he paſſed through no City [in his Journey,] without committing Whoredom with Women, and Raviſhing of Virgins. Moreover, theſe [his practices] ſucceeded according to his deſire againſt all perſons, the Chriſtians only excepted; who, having contemned death, deſpiſed that his outragious Tyranny. (d) For the men (having endur'd the Fire, the Sword, the being * faſtned [to Wooden Engines] with Nails, the Wild Beaſts, the being drown'd in the depths of the Sea, the cutting off their Members, the Searings with hot Irons, the pricking and digging out of their Eyes, and the being maimed all over their Bodies; and, beſides all this, Famine, the Mines, and Bonds;) would rather demonſtrate their patient ſufferance under all [theſe Tortures] for Religion, than they would forſake the Adoration of God, and worſhip Idols. Again, the Women were not leſs corroborated by the Doctrine of the Divine Word than the Men: Some of whom underwent the ſame Combats with the Men, and obtain'd Rewards of their Fortitude equal to them: Others, haled away to be raviſh'd, were more ready to part with their Lives, than expoſe their Bodies to be defiled. Indeed, one only Chriſtian Woman, the moſt eminent and famous of the Alexandrian Women, (when the others had been vitiated by the Tyrant,) vanquiſh'd the diſſolute and incontinent Mind of Maximinus by her moſt valiant courage of Mind. She was a Woman eminent for Riches, Deſcent and Learning; but ſhe preferr'd Chaſtity before all theſe. When [the Tyrant] had often ſolicited this Woman [to commit Adultery with him,] he was indeed unable to kill her (who was prepared to die,) becauſe his Luſt was Maſter of his Cruelty: But he puniſh'd her with Exile, and deprived her of her whole Eſtate. Infinite other Women, being unable to endure the hearing of the Menaces of Raviſhment, which the Governours of Provinces threatned them with, underwent all ſorts of tortures, torments and capital puniſhments. But the moſt admirable perſon above all theſe was that Woman at Rome, the moſt noble and truly chaſteſt Woman of all thoſe, whom Maxentius (the Tyrant there, whoſe practices were like Maximinus's) attempted to vitiate. For, as ſoon as ſhe underſtood that the Miniſters, which the Tyrant made uſe of for the performance of ſuch [Villanies,] had aſſaulted her Houſe, (now ſhe alſo was a Chriſtian) and that her Husband, who was Prefect of the City at Rome, had by reaſon of his fear permitted them to take her and carry her away with them: (e) having requeſted that a ſhort [time] might be allow'd her, as if ſhe would have adorn'd her body, ſhe went into her Chamber; and, being alone, (f) ſheath'd a Sword in her own Breaſt. Expiring immediately here-

(b) Ἐπὶ πάσης ἐπαρχίας ἀρχιερέα; So our Author words it in the Greek. They were called Sacerdotes [i. e. Chief Prieſts] by the Gentiles, who had the Temples of a whole Province under their care: But the Flamines [the Prieſts] were thoſe, who in every Town and City took care of the performance of their Religious Rites. (See Valeſius's Notes on Amm. Marcellinus, Book 28. pag. 375. Moreover, Maximinus muſt not be ſuppoſed to have been the firſt that inſtituted theſe Chief-Prieſts of the Provinces: For there were ſuch Prieſts long before his time. But Maximinus increaſed their Honour, and allow'd them a Guard, i. e. Lictors and Apparitors. Theſe Chief-Prieſts of the Provinces were made out of the Body of the Curiales, (i. e. thoſe that were of the Court, or Senate in every City; ſee Valeſius's Notes on Amm. Marcell. B. 28. P. 374.) who had before born all publick Offices, and diſcharged them worthily. This place [of High-Prieſt of a Province] was accounted ſo honourable, that he that bore it took place of the Magiſtrates, or Duumviri. See the Geſta purgat. Cæciliani, B. 9. Chap. 4. Theſe High-Prieſts had the power of entring into the Secretum of the Judges, and of being Aſſeſſors with them, as appears from the Acts of Theodorus the Martyr at November 9.

And yet the judgment of the Church is, not to record them amongst the number of the Martyrs, who have been their own Executioners. For 'tis* [an argument] of fear, rather than courage, by death to prevent the dread of punishment: [But the Church looks upon those as Martyrs,] who suppose nothing to be dreadful upon account of the confession of Christ; but with alacrity suffer all [tortures,] that a tyrannick and deviliſh ſubtilty can produce [againſt them.] The Author of this Scholion has made a true remark, to wit, that the Church approves not of Self-murder; when Men out of a fear of death, or through deſperation, lay violent hands on themſelves. But as often as they are driven to do that by the inſtinct of the Divine Spirit, which rarely happens; then the Church approves and admires that act: But propoſes it not for imitation. See what St. Auguſtine thought concerning this matter, in his firſt Book, De civitate Dei, chap. 26. Valeſ.

Galerius. upon, ſhe left indeed her Corps to thoſe that came to conduct her [to the Tyrant;] but by this Act of hers (which reſounds more than any voice) ſhe has manifeſted to all Men that now are, and ſhall be in future Ages, that the Courage of the Chriſtians is the only thing that is inexpugnable, and which cannot be extirpated by death. Such indeed and ſo great was the fertility of wickedneſs produced at one and the ſame time; the Authors of which were two Tyrants, who had divided the Eaſt and Weſt between themſelves. And now, what Man is he, that, making his Reſearches into the cauſe of theſe ſo great [Calamities,] will be dubious in affirming the Perſecution [raiſed againſt us] to have been [the Original of all theſe Miſeries?] Eſpecially, [when he conſiders] that theſe mighty Diſturbances [in the Empire] were not terminated, before the Chriſtians had the free and open profeſſion of their Religion reſtored to them.

CHAP. XV.

Concerning what happen'd to the Gentiles.

(a) The Perſecution began in the year of Chriſt 303; when Diocleſian was in his 8th, and Maximian in his 7th, Conſulate. It ended in the year of Chriſt 312; then, when Conſtantine, having conquer'd Maxentius, ſent Letters to Maximinus Emperor of the Eaſt, to procure Liberty for the Chriſtians; as our Euſebius relates in B. 9. Therefore the Perſecution laſted ten years, as 'tis here affirmed. And ſo the years are noted in the MS. Copies of Euſebius's Chronicon, as Pontacus has obſerved. Epiphanius therefore is miſtaken; who (in his Book De Ponder. & Menſur.) ſays this Perſecution laſted twelve years: See the following Chapter, where our Author relates, that the Perſecution ceaſed on the tenth year. Valeſ.

INdeed, throughout the whole (a) ten year's ſpace of the Perſecution, there was no intermiſſion of mutual Conſpiracies and inteſtine Wars amongſt them: The Sea was unpaſſable to thoſe that made Voyages over it. Neither could any perſons arrive at any Haven whatſoever, but they muſt endure all ſorts of Scourges, be tormented, have their Sides torn with Nails, and be interrogated, by their undergoing all ſorts of tortures, whether they came from the Enemy's Country: And at laſt they underwent the puniſhment of Crucifixion, or were burnt to death. Furthermore, they provided Shields, Breaſt-plates, Darts, Spears, and other ſuch-like military Inſtruments: Alſo, Galleys, and Weapons for a Sea-fight were everywhere prepared. Neither did any perſon expect any thing elſe but an Incurſion of the Enemy. After all theſe [Calamities] follow'd a Famine and a Peſtilence; of which we will give a relation at an opportune place and time.

CHAP. XVI.

Concerning the Change of Affairs to a better poſture.

(b) At theſe words we began the 16th

(a) SUch were the Preparations during the whole time of the Perſecution; which by the Grace of God wholly ceaſed in the tenth year; beginning to be ſomewhat remiſs, after the eighth year. For, after the Divine and Celeſtial Grace demonſtrated [itſelf] in a benign and propitious inſpection over us, then the Governours in our times, even thoſe very Princes who had formerly waged Wars againſt thoſe of our Religion, having moſt miraculouſly alter'd their minds, ſounded a retreat; and extinguiſh'd the moſt ardent Flame of the Perſecution by Reſcripts favourable towards us, and by moſt mild Edicts. But, neither was any human cauſe, nor (which ſome one might conjecture) was the Clemency or Humanity of the Emperors, the occaſion hereof; no, 'twas far from that. For, from the beginning of the Perſecution unto that very time, they daily invented more and more grievous Cruelties againſt us, renewing the tortures [uſed] towards us by divers Machines [made uſe of] ſucceſſively, and in a various manner. But the apparent inſpection of the Divine Providence itſelf, which was now reconciled to its people, purſued the Author of theſe Miſeries, and was angry at the (b) Ring-leader of the Wickedneſs [committed] during the whole Perſecution. For altho' theſe things ought to have come to paſs, agreeable to the Judgment of the Divine [Will,] yet * Wo (ſays the Scripture) to that Man by whom the offence cometh. Therefore, a puniſhment ſent from God ſeiz'd him; which having made its beginning at his very Fleſh, proceeded even to his Soul. For on a ſudden an Impoſtume aroſe upon him (c) about the midſt of the Privy Parts of his Body; after that, a (d) Fiſtula in ano; both theſe Diſeaſes ſpread incurably, and did eat into his inmoſt Bowels. From them bred an unſpeakable multitude of Worms, and a moſt noiſome Stench proceeded therefrom; [for,] before this Diſeaſe, the whole Maſs of Fleſh upon his Body was (by reaſon of the abundance of Food he devour'd) grown to an immenſe fatneſs: Which being then putrified, became an intolerable and moſt horrid Spectacle to thoſe that approach'd him. Wherefore ſome of his Phyſicians, being altogether unable to endure the exceeding noiſomeneſs of the Stink [that came from him,] were killed: Others of them, when they could adminiſter no Remedy, (the whole Fabrick of his Body being ſwell'd, and paſt all hopes of a Recovery,) were cruelly ſlain.

Galerius. Chapter, agreeable to the Max. and and Fuk. MSS. But in the Med. MS. (which Rob. Stephens followed, in the diſtinction of the Chapters) there is no new Chapter began here. Valeſ.

(b) He means Maximianus Galerius, as 'tis apparent from the following words: for he was the Author of the perſecution raiſed againſt the Chriſtians. Ruſinus in the 15th Chap. of this Book ſpeaks thus concerning Galerius; Ille verò, qui eiſ ecundus in honore, poſtmodum etiam in primis ſucceſſor fuit, qui & incentor ac ſignifer noſtræ perſecutionis extiterat, &c. i. e. But he, who was the next in honour to him, afterwards ſucceeded him in the firſt and chiefeſt place; who alſo was the Incendiary and firſt Beginner of our Perſecution, &c. Cedrenus atteſts the ſame. Valeſ. * Matth. 18. 7.

CHAP. XVII.

Concerning the Retractation of the Emperors.

MOreover, whilſt he was ſtruggling with theſe many and great Miſeries, he began to be ſenſible of the villainous Acts he had perform'd towards the Worſhippers of God: * Having therefore ſeriouſly recollected himſelf, firſt he made his Confeſſion to the Supream God. Then, having called together the (a) Chief Officers of his Palace, he order'd them without any delay to inhibit the Persecution of the Christians, and by his Decree and Imperial Edict commanded that their Churches should with all expedition be built, wherein they might perform their usual [Solemnities,] and make Supplications [to God] for the *Emperor. Therefore, what he had given order for in words, being immediately follow'd by an actual performance, the Imperial Edicts were set forth in every City, containing a Revocation of the [Persecution] against us, according to this Form following.

(a) Τὰς ἀμφ' αὐτοῦ, which words Rufinus renders very well thus: Convocatis his qui in officio publico parebant; having called together those who served in any publick Office. Eusebius usually means, by this phrase, the Grandees of the Palace, whom Amm. Marcellinus does commonly term aulæ summates, & Imperatoris proximos, the Chief Court-Officers, and those neareſt to the Emperor. Valeſ.

*In the original 'tis ἐπὶ τὸ βασιλεῖον, for the Imperial Palace: But Nicephorus reads βασιλέως, for the Emperor. Valeſ.

EMPEROR CÆSAR GALERIUS VALERIUS MAXIMIANUS, INVICTUS, AUGUSTUS, PONTIFEX MAXIMUS, GERMANICUS MAXIMUS, ÆGYPTIACUS MAXIMUS, THEBAICUS MAXIMUS, SARMATICUS MAXIMUS the Fifth time; (b) PERSICUS MAXIMUS, CARPICUS MAXIMUS the Second time, ARMENICUS MAXIMUS the Sixth time, MEDICUS MAXIMUS, ADIABENICUS MAXIMUS, (c) TRIBUNE OF THE PEOPLE XX. (d) EMPEROR XIX. CONSUL VIII. FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY, PROCONSUL. And, EMPEROR CÆSAR FLAVIUS VALERIUS CONSTANTINUS, PIUS, FELIX, INVICTUS, AUGUSTUS, PONTIFEX MAXIMUS, (e) TRIBUNE OF THE PEOPLE V. EMPEROR V. CONSUL, FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY, (f) PROCONSUL. And, EMPEROR CÆSAR VALERIUS LICINIANUS, PIUS, FELIX, INVICTUS, AUGUSTUS; PONTIFEX MAXIMUS; TRIBUNE OF THE PEOPLE IV. EMPEROR III. CONSUL, FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY, PROCONSUL: To the Subjects of their own Provinces, Greeting.

(b) We find that the Persians were but once conquered by Galerius, which was in the Year of Christ 297; as 'tis affirm'd in Fastis Idatii, and in the Alexandrian Chronicle. The same is confirmed by Libanius, in his Oration intitled Βασιλικὸς; where he relates that the Persians, after that great Defeat they received from the Romans under the conduct of Galerius, spent forty years in Preparations to make amends for that Overthrow; and that, a little before the death of Constantine the Great, they entred upon a War with the Romans. Indeed from that Year of Christ we mentioned (i. e. Anno 297.) to the Year wherein Constantine died, there are forty years. Therefore, Eusebius's Chronicle must be corrected, in which this Persian Victory is placed on the seventeenth Year of Diocleſian; whereas it should be placed on his thirteenth Year; as it is in the Edition of Arnaldus Pontacus. Seeing therefore we can find no other Victory that Maximianus obtained over the Persians, this place ought to be pointed (as it is in Nicephorus, and as we have done in our Translation) after this manner: σαρματικὸς μέγιστος πεμπάκις· περσῶν μέγιστος. Sarmaticus Maximus the fifth time; Persicus Maximus. In Rufinus's old Copy, there is at this place no distinction by Points; but 'tis thus, Sarmaticus quinquies Persicus bis Carpicus Sexies Armenicus Medorum & Adiabenorum Victor.

(c) Rufinus renders this Passage thus, Tribuniciæ poteſtatis vicies, having been Tribune of the People twenty times. This is the Reading in the MSS. From this place we may perceive, that Galerius was made Cæsar, and Colleague in the Tribunician Power (or, Tribune of the People) at the same time; since in this Edict he accounts the years of his Tribunician Power from that time when he was proclaimed Cæsar. Now, he was made Cæsar in the Year of Christ 291, on the Calends of March. Moreover, he put forth this Edict in favour of the Christians, in the Year of Christ 311, in his eighth Consulate, as the Inscription of the Edict declares: Whence it follows, that this Edict was written before the Calends of March. For from that time Galerius began his Tribunician Power. Valeſ.

(d) Αὐτοκράτωρ ἐννεακαιδέκατον; i. e. Emperor the nineteenth time: For that's the Reading in the most ancient Copy of Rufinus. Christophorson translated this term ill, thus, Dictator. He knew not what was the import of the word Imperator. Imperator signifies one thing in the Titles of the Emperors, when 'tis put in the first place like a Pronoun; but it imports another thing, when 'tis subjoyn'd to the rest of the Titles. For the word [Emperor] put in the second place, denotes the Victory of the Emperors, and shews how often they were stiled Emperors by the Army, after they had obtained a Victory; so Dio informs us. Valeſ.

(e) In all Copies, there is an omission of the number of times that Constantine had born the Office of Tribune of the People, when this Edict came forth. I have added the Figure [V] which denotes the fifth time of his bearing the Tribuneship: Which addition is grounded upon a most certain conjecture. Valeſ.

(f) After this word [Proconsul,] (in the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil MSS. and in Nicephorus) there are these following words; [And, Emperor Cæsar Valerius Licinianus, Pius, Fælix, Invictus, Augustus, Pontifex Maximus; Tribune of the People IV. Emperor III. Consul, Father of his Country, Proconsul: To the Subjects of their own Provinces Greeting.] Which Passage, although it occurs not in Rufinus, yet is of good authority. And first, as to Licinius's Tribunician Power, the same must be thought of that which was of Galerius's, to wit, that it is to be begun from the time of his being made Cæsar. Now, Licinius was made Cæsar in the Year of Christ 308, on the third of the Ides of November, as it appears in the Fasti of Idatius. Therefore the 4th year of Licinius's Tribunician Power began in the Year of Christ 311, on the 3d of the Ides of November. But this disagrees with what we noted before, when we treated concerning the Tribunician Power of Galerius. Wherefore one of these places must necessarily be false. For if it were then the fourth Year of Licinius's Tribunician Power, it was the twenty-first of Galerius's. On the contrary, if this were the twentieth year of Galerius's being Tribune of the People, it was but the third year of Licinius's bearing that Dignity. As to the Consulate of Licinius, there is mention thereof in the Fasti of Prosperus, Cassiodorus, and Victorius; where he is placed Consul with Maximianus Augustus Cos. VIII. In my Notes on Amm. Marcellinus, I had remarked, that Licinius was made Augustus by Galerius, a little before Galerius's death; which I collected from hence, because in this Edict we now speak of, Galerius had made no mention of Licinius's being his Colleague: But since in our MSS. and in Nicephorus, Licinius is stiled Augustus in this Edict of Galerius, that Conjecture of ours is wholly destroy'd. Valeſ.

Galerius.

Amongst other things which we have constituted for the Profit and Utility of the Republick, it was our desire in the first place, that all things should be redress'd according to the Ancient Laws, and Publick Ordinances of the Romans. And we earnestly endeavour'd to effect this, that the Christians, who had relinquished the Rites and Usages of their Parents, should be reduced to a good Mind and Intention. For, so great an (g) Arrogancy and Unadvisedness has (by a Considerateness as it were) possess'd and invaded them, that they would not follow those Sanctions of their Ancestors, which even their Parents 'tis likely had before Ratified: But according to their own Arbitrement, and as each Person had a desire, so they would make Laws, and observe them, and assemble various Multitudes, of different Factions and Dissenting about their Opinions. Therefore, when we had published such an Edict, as should [oblige] them to return to the Rites and Ordinances of their Ancestors; many of them having been exposed to imminent Dangers, and many having been terrified [with the Menaces of Punishment,] underwent various sorts of Death. But, when many persisted in this Madness, and we perceived they did neither exhibit a due Worship to the Immortal God's, nor yet to the God of the Christians; having a respect to our Humanity, and that continued usage by which we have been accustom'd to bestow Pardon on all sorts of Men: We have thought good that our Indulgence should most readily be extended in this matter also; that the Christians should again be [tolerated,] and that they may [have licence] to rebuild the Houses wherein they used to assemble themselves, that

(g) In the Fuk. Savil, Maz. and Med. MSS. the Reading is [πλεονεξία καὶ ἐφήκει, καὶ ἄνοια καὶ ἐπιλήφει, So great an arrogancy and unadvisedness---- has possessed and invaded them.] Valeſ.

Πλεονεξία (which Valesius here renders arrogantia, arrogancy) is by Democrates (in his Γνωμ.) defined to be speaking all, and not enduring to hear any Body else. Dr. Hammond has given a large Account of the Significations of this Word, in his Note on Rom. 1. Ver. 29.

Galerius. that so [in future they may be forced] to do nothing contrary to their Discipline. In a particular Rescript we will signifie to our Judges what it shall behove them to observe. Wherefore, upon account of this our Indulgence they are obliged to supplicate their God for our safety, that of the Republick, and their own; that so both the Publick State of Affairs may in all respects be continued in an entire and safe posture, and they themselves live undisturbed in their own Habitations. These words (which we have, according to our ability, translated out of the Roman into the Greek Language,) are thus: Now therefore it is an opportune time to take a prospect of what follow'd hereupon. Galerius.

Diocletianus.

In some COPIES this occurs as a SUPPLEMENT to the EIGHTH BOOK.

BUT the * Author of this Edict, after this Confession, was forthwith released from his Pains, and ended his Life. Report says, that this Man was the first beginner of that Calamitous Persecution: For, long before the rest of the Emperors were instigated [to it,] he endeavour'd by force to withdraw the Christians that bore Arms [from their Religion,] especially those that were his Domesticks; some of whom he removed from their Military Dignities, most dishonourably abused others; and moreover, punish'd othersome with death: And at length he moved his Colleagues in the Empire to a General Persecution against the Christians. The manner how these Emperors ended their Lives, we judge unfit to be buried in silence: Of the (a) four therefore who had divided the Roman Empire between them, those (b) two, that had the precedency in Age and Honour, resign'd their Empire, before two years were compleated after the beginning of the Persecution, as we have (c) before manifested. And, having spent the remaining part of their time in a private and retired condition, they concluded their Lives after this manner: The (d) one, who in respect of his Age and Honour took place of all the rest, was consumed by a lasting and most painful Distemper of Body: The (e) other, who was the next to him in Honour, put an end to his Life by Hanging of himself; undergoing this [Punishment] which was agreeable to a certain Diabolical Prediction concerning him, upon account of those many Villanies he had most audaciously perpetrated. Of the remaining two, the (f) last, (who, as we (g) have said, was the Author of the whole Persecution,) underwent those [Miseries,] which we (b) have related before. But he who in Dignity preceded this Man, [I mean] that most favourable and merciful Emperor Constantius, who during the whole time of his Government behaved himself in such sort as befitted an Emperor; who both in other matters represented himself to be most courteous and beneficent, and also was unconcerned in the Persecution raised against us; who preserved the Worshippers of God living under his Government from all manner of Injuries and Molestations, who neither demolished the Edifices of the Churches, nor attempted any other new Design against us: This Emperor [Constantius I say] obtain'd a (i) fortunate and truly thrice happy Conclusion of his Life: Being the only person that ended his Life peaceably and gloriously during his swaying the Imperial Sceptre, and left his own Son (in all respects a most sober and pious Prince,) his Successor in the Empire. (k) He, being from the very beginning forthwith proclaimed Supream Emperor and Augustus by the Soldiers, declared himself to be an Emulator of his Fahters reverend regard towards our Religion. Such was the Conclusion of their Lives, which happened to the forementioned four Emperors, at different times. (l) Moreover, of them *he only (whom we mentioned a little before) (m) made the foresaid Confession, and (together with (n) those who were afterwards taken in to be Collegues with him in the Empire) made it publickly known to all Men by an Edict proposed in writing.

EUSEBIUS

Diocleſian. # EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS'S BOOK Diocleſian.

MARTYRS of PALESTINE.

(a) In one Copy, we alſo found theſe following Chapters at the End of the Eighth Book.

(a) Before I had looked into any of the MSS. I thought theſe words were added by Rob. Stephens, who in ſome Copies had found theſe two Supplements of the 8th Book. But when I had perceived, that the ſame words occurr'd in all the MSS. I was eaſily induc'd to believe, that all thoſe MSS. were tranſcribed from one and the ſame Copy. Moreover, this Second Supplement is nothing elſe but Euſebius's Book concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine; which appears from the words at the end of this Supplement. For in the Maz. and Med. MSS. theſe words occur there; Ευσεβίς τῦ Παμφίλς περὶ τῶν ἐν παλαιστίνῃ μαρτυρησάντων τέλος · i. e. the End of Euſebius Pamphilus's [Book] concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine. Valeſ.

IT was the Nineteenth Year of Diocleſian's Empire, the Month Xanthicus, which the Romans call April; (Flavianus being Governour of the Province of Paleſtine;) in which Year, [to wit, when the Feaſt of the Salutary Paſſion was at hand, the Edicts on a ſudden were everywhere ſet forth, commanding the Churches to be pulled down to the Ground, and the Scriptures to be conſumed with Fire; and ordering, that ſuch as were promoted to Honours ſhould be Degraded; and that the ordinary ſort of People, if they perſiſted in a Reſolution of retaining the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity, ſhould be deprived of their Liberty. Such was the Vehemency of the firſt Edict againſt us. But not long after, other Reſcripts were brought, wherein order was given, that all Prelates of the Churches every-where, ſhould firſt be put into Bonds; and afterwards compelled by all ways imaginable to offer Sacrifice.

CHAP. I.

Concerning Procopius, Alphæus, and Zacchæus, Martyrs.

(a) The ſame Relation is in the Acts of the Paſſion of Procopius the Martyr, which begin thus, The firſt of the Martyrs that appeared in Paleſtine was Procopius, &c. From whence 'tis evident, that thoſe Acts were tranſlated out of the Greek Copy of Euſebius into Latin. To make this more manifeſtly apparent, it will in no wiſe be unuſeful, to inſert here the entire Acts. For many things worth our knowledge are contained in them, which neither Baronius nor Molanus happened to have a ſight of. We have tranſcribed them from a moſt ancient MS. belonging to the Muſciacenſian Monaſtery, which is now in the Hands of that Learned Perſon Claudius Joly, Canon of the Church at Paris. Their Contents are theſe:

(a) PRocopius therefore, the firſt of the Martyrs of Paleſtine, (b) before he had experienc'd a Confinement in Priſon, was (c) immediately upon his very firſt arrival brought before the Preſident's Seat of Judicature: And being commanded to offer Sacrifice to thoſe [by the Gentiles,] ſtiled Gods, he ſaid that he knew but one only God, to whom Sacrifice was to be offer'd, according to that manner which he himſelf had appointed. But when he was bidden to Sacrifice to the four Emperors, having utter'd a Sentence which was in no wiſe pleaſing to them (that which he ſaid, was theſe words of the Poet [Homer;] It is not good [to have] many Lords, let there be one Lord, one King) he was

The Paſſion of S. Procopius the Martyr, who ſuffered under Fabianus the Preſident, on the fourth of the Nones of Auguſt.

The firſt of the Martyrs that appeared in Paleſtine was Procopius: A Perſon [full] of Celeſtial Grace, who before his Martyrdom ordered his Life ſo, as that from his very Childhood he applied his Mind to Chaſtity, and a Virtuous Converſe. He ſo macerated his Body, that 'twas, judg'd to be almoſt dead. But he comforted his Mind with ſuch Divine Words, that he infuſed Strength and Courage into his Body, by this Refection of his Mind. Bread and Water was his Food and Drink: He fed only on theſe; which he would forſake for two, or three, ſometimes for ſeven days together, and then return to that his Food again. Alſo, a Meditation on Divine Expreſſions had bound up his Mind ſo faſt, that he continued indefatigable in it Night and Day. He made himſelf an high Example of Courteſie and Meekneſs, looking on himſelf to be inferiour to others, ſo great was his Studiouſneſs in Divine Matters: He had alſo attained to competency in external Accompliſhments. His original Extract he had at Ælia [i. e. Jeruſalem;] But by Converſe and Habitation he was a Scythopolitan. He ſerved in three Offices in that Church; one was that of a Reader, another conſiſted in his Interpretation of the Syrian Tongue; and the third was an Impoſition of Hands, to caſt out Devils. And when he (together with his Companions) was ſent from Scythopolis to Cæſarea, he was led from the very Gates to the Preſident; and before he had experienced the Miſeries of Impriſonment and Bonds, he was upon his very firſt arrival commanded by Flavianus the Preſident, to offer Sacrifice to the Gods. But with a loud voice he atteſted that there was not a Multiplicity of Gods, but One Maker and Framer of all things. The Preſident, ſmitten with that Expreſſion of his, and being wounded in his own Conſcience, aſſented to what he ſaid. And, betaking himſelf to other Arguments, [perſwaded him] to Sacrifice at leaſt but to the Emperors. But the Holy Martyr of God, deſpiſing what he ſaid, repeated that Paſſage of Homer ——— It is not good [to have] many Lords, let there be one Lord, one King. Which words being heard, it being ſuppoſed that he ſpoke ſomething that was of ill conſequence to the Emperors, by the Preſident's command he was led to Execution; and being Beheaded, had an entrance into a Celeſtial Life, or found a compendious way into Heaven, on the ſeventh day of Deſius, that, is the Month July, which amongſt the Romans is called the Nones of July, in the firſt Year of the Perſecution againſt us. This was the firſt Martyrdom that was conſummated in Cæſarea, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt Reigning, to whom be Honour and Glory for ever and ever, Amen. Theſe Acts are alſo extant in two MSS. belonging to the Library of St. Germans. Valeſ.

(b) The foregoing Acts of the Paſſion of St. Procopius renders this Paſſage almoſt word for word, thus; Priuſquam carceris vel vinculorum experiretur anguſtias, before he had experienced the miſeries of Impriſonment and Bonds: By which words the Cruelty of the Judge is ſignified. For the Roman Preſidents were wont firſt to impriſon thoſe Offenders that were apprehended and brought before them, and to interrogate them afterwards at their leiſure. Valeſ.

(c) The foregoing Acts word this Paſſage thus; In ipſo ingreſſu ſuo à Judice Flaviano ut Diis ſacrificaret impellitur; i. e. He was upon his very firſt arrival, commanded by Flavianus the Preſident, to offer Sacrifice to the Gods. Many things are here omitted in the Greek Text of Euſebius, which muſt be made perfect by thoſe Acts in Latin (the Tranſlation whereof we have before inſerted.) For when Euſebius had here ſaid expreſly, that Procopius upon his firſt arrival was brought before the Judge, he adds nothing concerning the place from whence he came, where he was apprehended, or to what place he was brought: Nothing of which ought to have been omitted. Beſides, Euſebius does accurately relate the Deſcent and Country of other Martyrs mentioned in this Book; and if any of them had attained any degree of Eccleſiaſtick Honour, he does uſually take notice of that alſo. But of this Perſon (who was the Chief, and Leader of all the Paleſtine Martyrs) we ſee no ſuch Remarks made. This, 'tis probable, was not the fault of Euſebius, but of his Exſcribers. For, in the Latin Acts, which, as we before evidenced, were tranſlated out of Euſebius, all theſe Circumſtances are manifeſtly declared. See the Tranſlation of the Latin Acts, in Note (a.) in this Chapter. Valeſ.

Dioclesian. was forthwith beheaded,(d) on the eighth day of the month (e) Deſius, that is (as the Romans ſtile it) before the ſeventh of the Ides of June, on the (f) fourth Day of the Week. This was the * firſt Martyrdom that was conſummated at Cæſarea in Paleſtine: But after him, very many Prelates of Churches in that Province, having at the ſame City chearfully undergone moſt grievous tortures, exhibited to the Spectators a relation of illuſtrious Combats. But others, diſpirited by reaſon of their fear, were immediately diſcouraged at the very firſt attack made againſt them. Every one of the reſt underwent various and interchangeable ſorts of tortures: One was ſcourged with innumeraule ſtripes, another was rack'd, had the Fleſh of his Sides ſcrap'd off with Iron Nails, and was loaded with an inſupportable burthen of (d) The Latin Copies of theſe Acts do vary a little here: In Claudius Joly's Copy (the Tranſlation of which you have in Note (a.) in this Chapter,) the words are, Deſii Septima Julii menſis, quæ nonas Julias dicitur apud Latinos; i. e. on the ſeventh day of Deſius, [that is the] month July, which amongſt the Romans is called the Nones of July: In the two MS. Copies belonging to the Library of St. Germans, the Reading is thus, Dies erat Septima Julii menſis, quæ 7. Idus Julii dicitur apud Latinos; i. e. It was the ſeventh day of the Month July, which amongſt the Romans is called the ſeventh of the Ides of July. In the Greek Text of our Euſebius here; the words are theſe, Δεσίε μηνὸς ὀγδόη, πρὸ ἑπτὰ εἰδῶν ἰουνίων λέγεται ἀν παρὰ ῥωμαίοις, on the eighth day of the mouth Deſius, that is (as the Romans ſtile it) before the ſeventh of the Ides of June. By theſe words in the Latin Copies of the MSS. in St. German's Library, the Title before Claudius Joly's Copy of theſe Acts is to be amended, where 'tis ſaid Procopius ſuffer'd on the fourth of the Nones of Auguſt. Notwithſtanding, in all the Martyrologies, the Martyrdom of Procopius is ſet on the eighth of the Ides of July. The Greeks alſo celebrate the Memory of the Great Martyr Procopius on the ſame day, as may be ſeen in their Menæum. But that Procopius is a different perſon from ours, although he was born at Jeruſalem, and ſuffer'd at the ſame time almoſt; and in the ſame City, that our Procopius did. For our Procopius was a Reader, and an Exorciſt, as Euſebius atteſts: But the other was a Captain of Egypt. The firſt Procopius was a Chriſtian from his Childhood; the ſecond was at firſt a Worſhipper of Dæmons. Our Procopius was beheaded, having ſuffered no Tortures, and ſo obtained the Crown of Martyrdom by a moſt compendious and eaſie kind of death. The other Procopius ſuffer'd a tedious and moſt cruel Martyrdom, having undergone moſt horrid tortures under two Preſidents of Paleſtine, Juſtus and Flavianus. Upon which account he is reckon'd by the Greeks amongſt the Μεγαλομάρτυρες, Great-Martyrs: See Book 6. Chap. 32. Note (b.) Laſtly, our Procopius was taken at Scythopolis, brought to Cæſarea in Paleſtine, and there beheaded. The other was apprehended in Egypt, and Martyr'd in Cæſarea, a City of Phœnicia (which was alſo called Paneas) if we may believe Simeon Metaphraſtes. Valeſ.

(e) It is, I perceive, taken for granted amongſt all Men, that the Months of the Syro-Macedonians were wholly the ſame with the Julian Months, from that time when Julius Cæſar publiſh'd his Year. For Scaliger and our Petavius do in many places affirm this; and the only difference (as they ſay) was, that the Syro-Macedonians began their Year from October. But there are many things which make me diſſent from their Opinion. For firſt, Bede, (in his Ephemeris, and in his Book De ratione Temporum) ſays, that the Months of the Greeks began from Apellæus, which anſwers to December. But Marcus (in his Life of Porphyrius Biſhop of Gaza) atteſts, that thoſe of Gaza began thier Year from the Month Dius. For theſe are his words at pag. 1390. Primo menſe qui ab eis vocatur Dios, deinde etiam ſecundo, qui dicitur Apellæos, i. e. In the firſt month which they call Dius, then alſo in the ſecond which is termed Apellæus. The Emperor Julianus (in Antiochico) confirms this, where he expreſly ſays that Lous was the tenth month amongſt the Syrians. Now, if they began their Year from October, then Lous (which anſwers to Auguſt) would not have been the tenth, but the eleventh month. The ſame is manifeſted by Julianus (in Miſopogone, pag. 70.) in theſe words, ἡ σύρων ἥκει νεομηνία, καὶ ὁ Καῖσαρ αὖθις εἰς φιλίᾳ δίυς· εἶτα ἡ πάγκοινος ἑορτὴ, καὶ ὁ Καῖσαρ εἰς τὸ τῆς τύχης ἔρχεται τέμενος· ὑπερχὼν δὲ τὴν ἀποφράδα, πάλιν ἐς φιλίᾳ τὰς ἐυχὰς ἀναλαμβάνει καὶ τὰ πάτρια· i. e. The Calends of the Syrians were come, and Cæſar goes to the Temple of Jupiter Philius again. Then came the Calends of January. (For, in my Notes on Book 23. of Ammian. Marcellinus, pag. 253, I have ſhown that the πάγκοινος ἑορτὴ was the ſame with the Calends of January,) and Cæſar goes to the Temple of the God Genius. (Concerning the Temple of this God Genius at Antioch, ſee Evagrius's Hiſt. Book 1. Chap. 16.) Then paſſing by the ominous day, he renews his vows in the Temple of Jupiter Philius according to the cuſtom of his Anceſtors. Seeing therefore Julianus atteſts, that the New-Moon of the Syrians Year did a little precede the Calends of January; it is manifeſt that the beginning of the Roman and Syrian Year was not the ſame. But, it may be plainly collected from the ſame place of Julian, that Dius was the firſt Month of the Year amongſt the Antiochians: For Julian ſays, that on the Calends of the firſt Month of the Syrians, he went to the Temple of Jupiter, to ſacrifice, becauſe their firſt Month was ſacred to Jupiter, and received its name from him. For it was called Dius ἀπὸ τῦ Διὸς, from Jupiter: And the firſt Month was rightly called after his name, who was thought to be the principal cauſe, and origine of all things. Now if October were the firſt Month of the Syrian Year, that paſſage in Julian would have been impertinent. For, when the Antiochians would deride Julian, for his aſſiduity in worſhipping the Gods, they produce this example thereof; [The Calends of the Syrians were come, and Cæſar goes to the Temple of Jupiter Philius again: Then came the Calends of January, and Cæſar goes to the Temple of the God Genius.] There muſt therefore neceſſarily be ſome little ſpace of time between the Calends of the Syrians, and the Romans, that ſo Julian might deſervedly be derided by the Antiochians for his too frequent offering of Sacrifice. It is therefore neceſſary, that either Apellæus muſt have been the firſt Month amongſt the Syrians, (which is Bede's Opinion,) or elſe Dius. Thus far concerning the beginning of the Syro-Macedonian Year; which we have demonſtrated to be different from the beginning of the Julian Year. We will now enquire into the Syro-Macedonian Months, and ſee whether they began and ended at the ſame time that the Roman Months did. Indeed, this place in Euſebius does plainly ſhew, that the beginning of the Months amongſt the Syrians and Romans was not the ſame: For it makes the eighth Day of the Month Deſius to be the ſame with the ſeventh of the Month June. Therefore the Syrian Month Deſius began one Day before the Roman Month June. Moreover, Marcus (in the Life of Porphyrius) affirms, that the Months of the Inhabitants of Gaza preceded the Roman Months five Days. His words are theſe, Pluit autem Dominus, &c. Our Lord ſent a continued Rain from the eighth day of the Month Audynæus to the tenth. Now Audynæus amongſt the Romans is January. For their Months precede the Roman Months five Days. But on the eleventh day we celebrated the Feaſt of the Epiphany, praiſing God. From which words 'tis apparent, that the beginning of the Months amongſt thoſe of Gaza was almoſt the ſame with the beginning of them amongſt the Egyptians. Further, Epiphanius (in his Book De Ponderib. Chap. 20.) makes the ſixteenth day of May the ſame with the twenty-third of the Grecian Month Artemiſius. The Form of the Months amongſt the Tyrians was different from this; they made uſe of the Macedonian Account of the Months. For, in the Acts at Tyre (which are related in the Ninth Action of the Council of Chalcedon) the tenth Day of the Month Peritius is confounded with the twenty-fifth of February: And in the fifth Action Concil. Conſtantinop. ſub. Mena, the twenty-eighth Day of the Tyrian Month Lous is ſaid to have been the ſixteenth Day of the Roman Month September. From all this it may be concluded, that the Account of the whole Year, and of the Months, was not of one and the ſame form amongſt the Syrians. For thoſe of Gaza computed them after one way, thoſe of Tyre after another, and thoſe of Cæſarea after a third manner. But, I am fully perſwaded, that the Cæſareans uſed Months, wholly compoſed according to the Julian Form. For, in all places of this Book of Euſebius's concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine, wherever mention is made of the Macedonian Months amongſt the Cæſareans, (the mention whereof does frequently occur in it;) the Days of thoſe Months do always agree with the Days of the Roman Months; excepting this only place in this firſt Chapter. Therefore, I think, that the Reading in the Text of Euſebius here ſhould be thus, Δεσίε μηνὸς ἑβδόμη, on the ſeventh Day of the Month Deſius. Valeſ.

(f) Ἡμέρᾳ τε[ρ]ᾳδὶ σαββάτῳ; that is, on the fourth feria, or, (to render it word for word) on the 4th day of the Sabbath, or, of the Week. For the ancient Chriſtians having received a ſet Account of the ſeven Days of the Week from the Jews, named them as they did. Therefore they called them the firſt of the Sabbath, the ſecond of the Sabbath, &c. See Tertullian in his Book De jejuniis. Sometimes they called them Feriæ: Feria is the ſame with Sabbath. Therefore, as the Jews termed the Week-days the firſt, the ſecond, the third of the Sabbath; and ſo on to the Seventh-day, which they called the Sabbath; ſo the ancient Chriſtians termed them the firſt, ſecond, and third Feria, &c. making an alteration only in this, that they did not keep the Sabbath-day holy, as did the Jews; but obſerv'd their Sabbath on the firſt day of the Sabbath, which they alſo called Sunday, or the Lord's-Day. So Iſidorus in his Book, De Natura Rerum, Chap. 3. Bede (in his Book De Ratione Temporum) ſays the Week-days were called Feriæ, becauſe the Clergymen, by the Decree of Pope Sylveſter, were ordered to keep every day holy. But this Opinion cannot be true; for the Days of the Week were called Feriæ long before Pope Sylveſter's time, as Tertullian informs us. Moreover, not only the Chriſtians, but the Gentiles alſo received the Computation of the Week from the Jews, as Joſephus informs us, in the Cloſe of his ſecond Book againſt Apion. But the Gentiles called the Days of the Week by the names of the ſeven Planets; which names continue ſtill in uſe amongſt moſt Nations, being as it were certain Reliques of the ancient Error of the Gentiles: See Tertullian in his Book Ad Nationes. Valeſ. The Eccleſiaſtical Year of old began at Eaſter, the firſt Week whereof was all Holyday, the Days being diſtinguiſhed by prima, ſecunda, tertia, &c. added unto Feria. From thence the Days of any other Week began to be called Feria prima, ſecunda, &c. See Mr. Jo. Gregory of Oxford, in his Tract De Æris & Epochis, Chap. 5. The Original of the Names, which we in England give to the Days of the Week, may be ſeen in Verſtegan's Antiquities, pag. 68, &c. Edit. Antwerp. 1605.

* Πρῶτον σημεῖον, we render primum Martyrium, the firſt Martyrdom: So the Latin Acts render it; whence it appears, the Tranſlator thereof did read μαρτύριον. Valeſ.

Bonds,

Diocleſian. Bonds, by reaſon of which ſome happen'd to have [the Sinews] of their Hands weakened and made feeble. Nevertheleſs they all endured whatever befel them agreeable to the ſecret Judgment of God. For one being taken by the Hand by ſome others, who led him to the Altar, and thruſt the impure and deteſtable Sacrifice into his Right Hand, was diſmiſs'd, as if he had Sacrificed. Another, who had not in any wiſe touch'd [the Sacrifice,] yet when others affirmed that he had ſacrificed, went ſilently away. A third, taken up half-dead, was caſt forth as if he had been ſo really; and being looſed from his Bonds, was computed amongſt their number who had offer'd Sacrifice. A fourth, crying out, and making proteſtation that he would not perform what he was enjoyn'd by them to do, was ſtricken on the Mouth, and being ſilenc'd by a great company of perſons purpoſely appointed upon that account, was forcibly thruſt out, altho' he had not ſacrificed. * So highly did they every way eſteem their being thought to have perfected what they deſired! Of all theſe therefore, who were ſo numerous, only Alphæus and (g) Zacchæus obtain'd the Crown of Holy Martyrdom: Who, after they were ſcourged, and had their Fleſh ſcraped off with Torturing-Irons, when they had endured moſt grievous Bonds and cruciating Pains therein, after various other tortures they were put into the Stocks, where for four and twenty hours ſpace their feet were diſtended to the fourth hole, and having confeſt that there was but one only God, and one King Jeſus Chriſt, as if they had utter'd ſomething that was blaſphemous and impious, they underwent the ſame ſort of puniſhment with the firſt Martyr [Procopius,] and were beheaded on the ſeventeenth day of the Month Dius, which day amongſt the Romans is before the fifteenth of the Calends of December.

* See B. 8. Chap. 3.

(g) He was a Deacon of the Church of Gadara; Concerning whom we have this paſſage in the Menology at the 18*th* of November: The commemoration of the Holy Martyrs Michæus, Zacchæus, Deacon of Gadara, and Alphæus. The Bleſſed Zacchæus was led before the Tribunal, having an heavy Iron-Chain about his Neck. Valeſ.

(c) Exorciſt in the Church of Cæſarea: Coming to Antioch at that very time when the Churches were demoliſhed; and having ſeen many (d) Men, Women, and Children flocking in Crowds to the Temples of the Idols, and offering Sacrifice, he judged the ſight thereof to be a thing intolerable, and being incited by a Zeal for the Divine Worſhip, he drew near; and crying out with a loud voice, [began] to rebuke them. Being forthwith apprehended upon account of this his boldneſs, he demonſtrated himſelf (if ever any other perſon did) to be a moſt couragious Witneſs of the Truth. For, when the Judge had condemn'd him to be burnt to death, having gladly received his ſentence of Condemnation with a cheerful Countenance and a Mind moſt couragiouſly diſpoſed, he was led to execution. Then being bound to the Stake, and the combuſtible matter being laid together, whilſt the Officers, that were about to kindle the Fire, waited for the Determination of the (e) Emperor who was then preſent, he cried out, where is the Fire [provided] for me? When he had ſaid this, he was by command brought before the Emperor, in order to his being puniſhed with a new ſort of Puniſhment, [to wit,] the cutting out of his Tongue. Having moſt couragiouſly endured this puniſhment, he gave a real Demonſtration to all Men, that the Divine Power is always preſent with thoſe who undergo any ſort of Torture whatſoever for Religion, which does mitigate their Pains, and corroborate them with an alacrity of Mind. This couragious perſon therefore being ſenſible of the newneſs of his puniſhment, was in no wiſe terrified, but willingly put forth his Tongue, and with a moſt ready alacrity produced it to thoſe who cut it out. After which puniſhment he was put into Bonds, and being for a long time afflicted in priſon, in concluſion (when the (f) twentieth year

Diocleſian.

(c) There was in former times a twofold uſe of the Exorciſts in the Church. For their buſineſs was to cleanſe both thoſe poſſeſſed with Devils, and alſo the Catechumens, who were exorciz'd more than once. For after every Examination in their Catechiſm, they were brought to the Exorciſt ungirt, and with their Shoes off, that they might be purged by him. See Cyril. Hieroſolymit. in procatecheſi ad Illuminandos; and Chryſoſtom in his firſt Homily ad Illuminandos, in his firſt Tome. Valeſ.

(d) Many of thoſe perſons had renounced Chriſt, as Euſebius declares in his ſecond Sermon concerning the Reſurrection; where he ſpeaks of the Tortures inflicted on Romanus, which he mentions not here. Valeſ.

(e) I ſuppoſe he means Galerius Cæſar; For Diocleſian made his abode then at Nicomedia. The Cæſars, like Apparitors and Officers, went all over the Bounds of their own Diſtrict. Indeed, in that Year when the Perſecution begun, Diocleſian lived (together with Galerius) at Nicomedia, in April, as Euſebius atteſts in his eighth Book. Alſo, a little after the Perſecution began, when the Imperial Palace at Nicomedia was burnt by Lightning, Diocleſian was at that City, as Conſtantine informs us in his Oration Ad Cætum Sanctorum. Wherefore he could not be at Antioch, when Romanus was condemned to be burnt; which happened about the beginning of the Perſecution. For Romanus was ſtrangled on the 15th of the Calends of December, after he had lain in priſon ſome Months, as Euſebius here atteſts. Valeſ.

(f) This place is in an eſpecial manner to be taken notice of, becauſe it moſt evidently declares the Year wherein Diocleſian's Perſecution began. For Euſebius ſays, that in the firſt year of the Perſecution the Emperor's Vicennalia (i. e. the Feſtivals for his having arrived to the twentieth year of his Reign) were kept; which can only fall on that year, wherein Diocleſian was the eighth time Conſul, and Maximian the ſeventh. For, in this year (which was the year of Chriſt 303.) Diocleſian's twentieth year was begun at the fifteenth of the Calends of October; that being the firſt of Diocleſian's Reign, Carinus II. and Numerianus Coſſ. in the year of Chriſt 284; as 'tis ſet forth in the Alexandrian Chronicle. But, there ariſes no ſmall difficulty from what Euſebius here ſays, to wit, that Romanus ſuffered Martyrdom on the ſeventeenth day of November, when Diocleſian's Vicennalia were kept. Whence it ſeems to follow, that the firſt day of Diocleſian's Reign muſt have been in the month of November, and not in September, as the Alexandrian Chronicle atteſts. Wherefore, 'tis neceſſary, that either in our Euſebius, or elſe in the Alexandrian Chronicle, the name of the month ſhould be miſtaken. Unleſs we ſay, that Diocleſian's Vicennalia were kept at Antioch not on the ſame day which was the firſt of his Empire, but a little later. Euſebius indeed ſays (in his Chronicon) that Conſtantine's Vicennalia were kept at Nicomedia, and in the following year celebrated at Rome.

CHAP. II.

Concerning Romanus the Martyr.

(a) The Greeks, in their Menæum, make mention of two Romanus's both Martyrs; the one, they ſay, was condemned by Aſclepiades the Præfect at Antioch, in the Reign of Galerius: The other was a Deacon of Cæſarea (concerning whom Euſebius here ſpeaks) who, as they affirm, ſuffered under Diocleſian. But, in as much as they confeſs, that both of them ſuffered on one and the ſame day, (for they affirm that both of them had their Tongues cut out, that they both ſpoke after they were cut out, and that both of them were afterwards ſtrangled in priſon,) 'tis plain, that the Greeks miſtake in their making of them two diſtinct Martyrs. I wonder that this Opinion of theirs ſhould pleaſe Baronius in his Notes on the Martyrology. If there were two Martyrs called by the ſame name, to wit, Romanus, and if they both ſuffered Martyrdom on the ſame day at Antioch, why does Euſebius mention but one here? It will perhaps be anſwered, that Euſebius was reſolved to ſpeak of the Martyrs of Paleſtine only in this Book, and therefore that he only mentioned Romanus the Deacon, becauſe he was a Paleſtinian. But Euſebius has made mention of this Martyr in another place, to wit, in his ſecond Book concerning the Reſurrection and Aſcenſion of Chriſt, where he acknowledges but one Romanus who was Martyr'd at Antioch. Valeſ.

MOreover, what was done about (a) Romanus on the very ſame day at Antioch, does worthily deſerve to be commemorated: For he, being born in Paleſtine, was a (b) Deacon and

(b) Amongſt the Primitive Chriſtians, eſpecially in the ſmaller Towns, becauſe the Clergy were few in number, one and the ſame Clergy-man performed two or three Offices. Hence 'tis, that in the Acts of Procopius the Martyr, (which we related before) Procopius is ſaid to have born three Offices at the ſame time in the Church of Scythopolis, to wit, the Office of a Reader, of an Interpreter, and of an Exorciſt. After the ſame manner therefore Romanus was both a Deacon, and alſo an Exorciſt in the Church of Cæſarea. See Vetus Author Queſtion. Veter. & Novi Teſtamenti, Chap. 101. Valeſ.

Diocleſian. of the Emperor's Reign was come, wherein, (g) according to the uſual indulgence, liberty was publickly proclaim'd to all perſons in all places that were in bonds,) he only, lying in the Stocks, and having both his Feet diſtended to the diſtance of five holes, was ſtrangled, and (according to his deſire) was adorn'd with [the Crown of] Martyrdom. This perſon being a Paleſtinian, altho' he ſuffered [Martyrdom] without the limits of his own Country, yet deſerves to be reckon'd amongſt the Martyrs of Paleſtine. Theſe things were after this manner performed in the firſt year of the Perſecution, when it raged againſt the Prelates only of the Church.

(g) It was uſual amongſt the Romans, that on the 5th and 10th years of their Emperors Reigns, Offenders who were guilty of leſs notorious Crimes ſhould be diſcharged from their impriſonment; the Emperor's Edict being ſet forth for that purpoſe, which they called an Indulgence. See the Cod. Theodoſ. tit. de indulgentiis criminum. Valeſ.

CHAP. III.

Concerning Timotheus, Agapius, Thecla, and Eight other Martyrs.

AFterwards, in the ſecond Year, when the rage of the Perſecution againſt us was become more violent and ſharp, Urbanus being at that time Governour of the Province, the Imperial Edicts having been then firſt brought, wherein it was by a general command order'd, that all perſons in all places and Cities whatſoever ſhould publickly offer Sacrifice and Incenſe to the Idols; Timotheus underwent innumerable tortures at Gaza, a City of Paleſtine: After all which he was conſumed by a remiſs and ſlow Fire, and having exhibited a moſt genuine proof of his ſincere Piety towards God, by a patient ſufferance under all his torments, he obtain'd the Crown belonging to the ſacred and victorious Champions of Religion. Agapius alſo, and that Thecla (a) who lived in our times, having (together with the foreſaid Timotheus) given a demonſtration of their moſt undaunted Courage and Stedfaſtneſs of Mind, were condemn'd to be devoured by Wild-Beaſts. Who is he that would not have wondred at the ſight of what follow'd hereupon, or that would not have been aſtoniſh'd at the hearing a relation thereof? For when the Heathens celebrated their publick Feſtivals, and [exhibited] their uſual Shows; there was a great report, that (b) together with thoſe others whom they had a mighty eſteem for, the [Chriſtians] alſo, lately condemn'd, were to be expoſed to a Combat with the Wild-Beaſts [in the Amphitheatre.] This report therefore being increaſed and ſpread every-where, ſix Youths, whereof one was born in Pontus, by name Timolaus, another born at Tripolis a City of Phœnicia, whoſe name was Dionyſius, the third was Sub-Deacon of the Dioſpolitane Church, his name Romulus; beſides the two Egyptians, (c) Pauſis and Alexander; and another Alexander, Nameſake to the former, born at Gaza: [theſe ſix young Men, I ſay,] having firſt bound their Hands together, that they might thereby manifeſt their great readineſs and alacrity to [undergo] Martyrdom, ran in great haſte to Urbanus, as he was going to the Amphitheatre, and confeſs'd themſelves to be Chriſtians: And, by their being prepared to [endure] all ſorts of tortures, they demonſtrated, that they who make their boaſt in the Worſhip of the ſupream God, can in no wiſe be terrified at the furious aſſaults of the Wild-Beaſts. The Preſident himſelf, and thoſe who ſtood round him, having been forthwith ſtruck with no ſmall amazement, [theſe Confeſſors] were [order'd to be] ſhut up in priſon. Not many days after two others being added to their number, (one whereof, by name Agapius, having before them undergone horrid and various ſorts of tortures, had formerly been [ſignalized] for ſeveral Confeſſions: The other miniſtred bodily neceſſaries to them, his name Dionyſius) all theſe, being now made up eight in number, were beheaded on one and the ſame day at Cæſarea, [to wit,] on the twenty fourth Day of the Month Dyſtrus, which precedes the ninth of the Calends of April. At the ſame time happen'd a change of the Emperors, he that had the precedency of all the reſt and the next to him in place, [having left off their Imperial attire] put themſelves into a private habit: And the Affairs of the Empire began to be in an ill poſture. The Roman Empire being ſoon after divided, there brake out an implacable War between [the Romans] themſelves: Neither could the Diviſions, and (which were the Conſequences thereof) the tumults be made up and appeaſed, before the Chriſtians throughout the whole Roman Empire had a Peace ratified and firmed to them. For, as ſoon as that Peace (like Light after a cloudy and moſt darkſome Night,) darted forth its Rays upon all Men, the publick Affairs of the Roman Empire were again reſtored to their priſtine Stability, Amity, and Peaceableneſs; all perſons recovering that mutual Friendlineſs which had been derived down to 'em from their Anceſtors. But we will give an exacter account of theſe matters at a more opportune place and time. Now we are to proſecute the ſubſequent Series of our Narration.

Diocleſian.

(c) In the Maz. and Med. MSS his name is Paëſis. In the Greek Menology, (which Caniſius publiſh'd) at the 5th of March, inſtead of Paëſis, he is called Publius. Valeſ.

(a) These words [ἡ καθ' ἡμᾶς, who lived in our times] are, not without reaſon, added by Euſebius. For by them it was his intent to manifeſt, that this Thecla ſhould be diſtinguiſhed from the other Thecla, who was Companion to St. Paul the Apoſtle. In the Menæum, at the 19th of Auguſt, this Thecla is called, ἡ Βυζιῆτις, Byzietis; the meaning whereof I know not. For this Thecla here ſpoken of was a Paleſtinian, not born at Byzua a City of Thrace. Yet, it may be, this Thecla was a Thracian: for neither were all thoſe, whoſe Martyrdoms Euſebius here relates, Paleſtinians; nor does he in this Book, treat of the Martyrs of Paleſtine, but of thoſe who ſuffered Martyrdom in Paleſtine. Valeſ.

(b) The reading here is, ᾧ τῆς ἄλλως αὐτοῖς συναζουσῶν; our Rendition whereof is, together with thoſe others whom they had a great eſteem for. Chriſtophorſon read τῆς ἄλλων, but took it in the neuter gender; for thus he has rendred it; inter aliâ quæ magnopere ipſis in optatis erant ad contemplandum, amongſt other things, which they had a great deſire to be ſpectators of. I ſuppoſe it to be ſpoken in the maſculine gender; and that he means thoſe more eminent Beſtiarii, who amongſt the Grecians were termed θρασύβολοι, i.e. the ſtouteſt and ſtrongeſt ſort of Men, who let themſelves out to combat with the Wild Beaſts before the People in the Amphitheatre. Such a one was he, whom the People in the Amphitheatre at Conſtantinople called for, in theſe Words, δὸς τὸν ἕνα θρασύβολον μάχεσθαι; which Words Caſſiodorus (Hiſtor. Tripart. Lib. 2.) thus renders, crudeli beſtiæ artifex parabolus componatur. Valeſ.

CHAP. IV.

Concerning Apphianus the Martyr.

MAximinus Cæſar, (a) from the very time of his coming to the Empire, (as if he would demonſtrate to all Men the tokens of his innate hatred againſt God, and of his own Impiety,) attempted a more violent Perſecution againſt thoſe of our Religion, than the preceding Emperors

Maximinus.

(a) Chriſtophorſon has rendred this place ill; thus he tranſlates it, Maximinus Cæſar, who by his own power and ſtrength had poſſeſt himſelf of the Empire: As if αὐτόθεν, which is the Greek term here, ſignified, by his own power and ſtrength. Indeed, Maximinus proclaimed himſelf Auguſtus, as our Euſebius relates in Chap. 13. Book 8. But he was made Cæſar by Galerius Maximianus. Moreover, Euſebius ſpeaks here of Maximinus, whilſt he was only Cæſar, and of the time when he had that title firſt conferred on him, to wit, in the ſecond year current of the perſecution, immediately after the reſignation of Diocletianus, and Herculius. The import therefore of Euſebius's words words is this, that Maximinus, as soon as he was made Cæsar, shewed a proof of his impiety, by a most cruel Persecution of the Christians. Wherefore [ἀνόθεν] must be rendred [from the very time.] Now, Maximinus was made Cæsar in the year of Christ 304, on the Calends of April, as Idatius (in fastis) declares: Which agrees very well with the account here given by our Eusebius. For he relates that Maximinus (after the Relignation of Diocletian) was created Cæsar in the second year of the Persecution; immediately after which promotion (that he might shew his Power) he renewed the Persecution against the Christians. But this must not be understood of that very year, wherein Maximinus was made Cæsar: For during that year (Affairs being then in Confusion, and Galerius scarce well setled in the Empire) Maximinus was quiet. Therefore Eusebius mentions no Martyrdoms in Palestine during that year. But in the year following, which was the third of the Persecution, Maximinus set forth his Edicts against the Christians, and renewed the Persecution, as Eusebius expresly relates in this Chapter. Vales.

[had done.] When therefore no small Inquietude was impendent on all persons, and they were dispersed some in one place some in another, every one making it his chief business to avoid the danger, and all the Provinces were involved in a most terrible commotion, what expressions can be sufficient for us deservedly to set forth the divine love, and the bold and free confession of God, made by that blessed and truly innocent Lamb, Apphianus the Martyr, who exhibited an admirable example of Piety towards the only God, in the sight of all the Inhabitants of Cæsarea, (b) before the Gates of that City, when he had not fully compleated the twentieth year of his age? Indeed, whilst he resided at Berytus, where he had formerly spent much time upon account of [furnishing himself with] (c) secular Literature, (for he had his descent from very rich Parents:) 'Tis wonderful to relate how, during his continuance in that City, he subdued youthful Lusts: And having in no wise been debauch'd in his Morals, either by the vigour and youthfulness of his Body, or the society of his young Companions, he became a lover of temperance; leading an orderly, chaste, and religious life, according to the (d Prescripts of Christianity, and framing his Converse [agreeable thereto.] If it be [supposed] convenient that we should mention his Country, and commend it, because it produced so couragious a Champion of Piety; we will most readily do it. If any one therefore knows (e) Pagæ, a City of no mean note in Lycia; there this young man was born. After his return from his Studies at Berytus, (his Father being promoted to the chiefest place of Honour in his own Country,) he was unable to endure the converse of his Father, and those that were his Relations, because they refused to live according to the Sanctions of Religion: But having been inspired as it were by a Divine Spirit, and (by reason of his innate desire after Philosophy, or rather after the divine and true Wisdom) making small account of the reputed Glory of this Life, and contemning the Delights of the Body, he secretly withdrew himself from his Relations: And being not at all sollicitous about a daily provision for his subsistance, because of his hope and faith in God, he was led by the Hand [as it were] to the City of Cæsarea, by the Divine Spirit, where the Crown of Martyrdom for Religion awaited him. Being (f) conversant there with us, having in a short time made a great proficiency by reading the sacred Scriptures, and furnish'd himself with courage of Mind by congruous exercises of a strict and severe abstinence; at length he made such a glorious conclusion of his life, as who ever saw could not but be astonish'd thereat; and he that shall hear the bare relation of it, cannot but deservedly admire his confidence, his fearlessness, his continued earnestness and constancy of Mind, and above all the boldness of his attempt, which (g) contains most evident signs of a zeal for Religion, and of a Spirit more than human. For when Maximinus renew'd the Insolencies practised towards us, in the third year of our Persecution [under Diocletian,] and when the Tyrant's Edicts were first sent abroad over all the Provinces, [ordering] the Governours to make it their chief care and business, that all the Inhabitants in every City should publickly offer sacrifice; and when the Criers had made proclamation over all the City Cæsarea, that the Men, together with the Women and Children, should by the Governour's order go to the Temples of the Idols; and moreover when the Tribunes of the Soldiers had summon'd every particular person by name out of a written Roll; (all the [Christians] every-where being put into confusion by this unspeakable storm of Afflictions) this foresaid person, (having communicated to no body what he was about to do, it being unknown to us who lived in the same House with him, and even to the whole military Guard that stood round the Governour,) fearlesly approach'd Urbanus, as he was offering Sacrifice; and having with an intrepid Mind catch'd hold on his right Hand, stop'd him immediately from sacrificing. Then, with a divine gravity and confidence of Mind he prudently advised and exhorted him to desist from that erroneous way [of worship.] For 'tis absurd [said he] to relinquish [the Worship] of the one and only true God, and offer sacrifice to Idols and Dæmons. This the young Man attempted, induced thereto ('tis very probable) by a Divine power, which openly proclaimed

Maximinus.

(b) It is sufficiently apparent that the Greek Text is here corrupted; ἧ ἀφοπύλων being put instead of περὶ τὴν πύλην; wherefore we have rendred it before the gates, &c. Eusebius confirms this correction hereafter in this Chapter, where he says, that the dead body of Apphianus, which had been cast into the Sea, swam to the Cæsarian shore, hard by the Gates of the City. Vales.

(c) He means the Civil Law, and the Latin Tongue, the knowledge whereof was necessary for those that bore Offices in the Magistracy. At Bertyus there was a School for Civil Law, as many have taken notice from Gregory Thaumaturgus, Eunapius, Nonnus, and others. Hence 'tis, that Eusebius adds the term κοσμικῆς, that is, secular, or mundane literature. Gregorius Nazianzenus (in carm. Nicobuli ad filium) calls Berytus Φοινίκης πόλιν ἀγλαὸν ἄστυ, νόμων ἕδος ἠμονίδων, A famous City of Phœnicia, the seat of the Ausonian Laws. In the Menologies of the Greeks, at the second of April, Amphianus, with his Brother Ædesius, is mentioned to have been instructed in the Christian Religion by Pamphilus the Martyr, at Berytus. Vales.

(d) Κατὰ τὸν ἁρμόττοντα χριστιανισμῷ λόγον; which we have rendred, according to the prescripts of Christianity: ἁρμόττω seems to be put for πρέποντα, congruous, or εὐσχήμονα, agreeable: Which way of expression is frequently used by Eusebius. Vales.

(e) In the Med. MS. this City is called Arpagis; in the Maz. MS. Arapagis; in the Fisk. MS. Harpagis; but in the Margin notice is given that it should be ἁρπαγὰς, with an aspirate. I never met with any thing concerning Aragis, a City of Lycia; Araxa, a City of Lycia is mentioned by Ptolemæus and Stephanus. And, in the Constantinopolitan Council, amongst the Bishops of the Province of Lycia, who subscribed to that Synod, the last that is recounted is Theanthinus, Araxenus: Also in the Synod of Chalcedon there is mention of Leontius Bishop of the Araxi. In the Menæum of the Greeks, Amphianus is said to have been born in Lydia. Vales.

(f) Symeon Metaphrastes, who professes he transcribed the Martyrdom of Apphianus (or, as he calls him, Amphianus) out of Eusebius, has altered this passage, thus, And having been conversant with us in divine Studies, and instructed in the sacred Scriptures by the great Martyr Pamphilus, he obtained no mean habit of virtue; by which he opened a passage for himself, whereby he procured the Crown of Martyrdom. But Eusebius attests here, that Apphianus was not instructed in the sacred Scriptures by Pamphilus the Martyr, but by himself: Which, as I judge, is the truest account. For our Eusebius was a Person much learneder than Pamphilus. But the Menæa of the Greeks, and the Menology set forth by Canisius, agree with Symeon Metaphrastes: Excepting only in this, which Metaphrastes relates, that Apphianus (after he was returned from his studies at Berytus,) when he came to Cæsarea, was there instructed by Pamphilus. But in the Menæa, and in the Menology, Apphianus (with his Brother Ædesius) is said to have been instructed by Pamphilus at Berytus; no mention being made of Eusebius. So careful were the latter Grecians, that the blessed Martyr should not be said to have been instructed by Eusebius Pamphilus, who, as they perswaded themselves, was an Heretick. Vales.

(g) The reading I judge, should be [περέχον τὸ τεκμήρια, which contains most evident signs: For it refers to the foregoing Word [ἐγχείρημα, attempt.] Vales.

Maximinus. claim'd as it were by this fact, that the Chriſtians (to wit, thoſe that are truly ſuch) are ſo far from being withdrawn from the worſhip of the ſupream God, which they have once imbib'd, that they are not only above menaces and (which are the conſequences thereof) tortures, but alſo become more confident and fearleſs in their Confeſſions, with a couragious and intrepid voice freely ſet forth the truth, and (if it were poſſible) perſwade their Perſecutors to relinquiſh their ignorance, and acknowledge him who is the only true God. After this, the young man, of whom we ſpeak, was immediately (as it was likely [to happen]) torn by the Preſident's Guards, in ſuch ſort as if they had been ſavage Beaſts, becauſe of the audacious fact he had committed; and having moſt couragiouſly endured an infinite number of ſtripes all over his body, was forthwith committed to priſon. Where after he had lain a night and a day with both his feet diſtended in the Stocks, on the day following he was brought before the Judge. Then being compelled to offer ſacrifice, he demonſtrated an invincible conſtancy of Mind in undergoing all ſorts of pains and horrid tortures; his ſides being not once nor twice, but many times furrow'd to his very bones and entrails: And he received ſo many blows in his face and neck, that they who before had been very well acquainted with him, did not now know him, becauſe his face was ſo much ſwell'd. But, when he yielded not at [the ſuffering of] ſo many and great tortures, the Tormentors by the [Preſidents] order wrapt up his feet in Flax wetted in Oyl, and kindled a fire under them. The pains which the bleſſed [Martyr] was put to thereby, are in my judgment inexpreſſible. For the fire, having conſumed his fleſh, penetrated to his very bones: In ſo much that the whole moiſture of his body being melted like Wax, was diſtill'd, and deſcended by drops. But being not overcome even by theſe tortures, (altho' the Adverſaries were vanquiſh'd, and in a manner wearied out, becauſe of his miraculous fortitude,) he was again put into bonds. On the third day after he was brought before the Judge, and having profeſſed [that he continued in] the ſame Reſolution of Mind, altho' he was already half dead, yet he was drown'd in the depths of the Sea. What happen'd immediately hereupon, if we relate it, will by thoſe that ſaw it not, be diſbelieved as incredible. But although we know aſſuredly this will ſo fall out, yet we can in no wiſe forbear to deliver a full narration hereof to poſterity, becauſe all the Inhabitants of Cæſarea in a manner were witneſſes of what came to paſs. Indeed there there was no perſon [of Cæſarea] of what age ſoever, that was not preſent at this ſtupendious Spectacle. After therefore they had caſt this truly ſacred and thrice bleſſed perſon into the moſt unfathomable Abyſſes (as they ſuppoſed) which were in the midſt of the Sea, on a ſudden there happened an unuſual noiſe and ſhaking, which made the Sea and (h) Air about the Earth tremble in ſuch a manner, that the very Earth and City were ſhaken by that motion. And at that very moment wherein this wonderful and ſudden Earthquake happen'd, the dead body of the Divine Martyr was caſt up by the Sea (as being unable to contain it) before the Gates of the City. Such was the Exit, which the admirable Apphianus made on Friday the ſecond day of the month Xanthicus, which is before the fourth of the Nones of April.

(h) Τὸ περιέχον ἅπαν is the phraſe in the original; Metaphraſtes thought the ſhore was meant by theſe words; and therefore renders it circumſtans littus. But the Greeks by this expreſſion do uſually mean the Air that ſurrounds the Earth. Valeſ.

CHAP. V.

Concerning Ulpianus and Ædeſius, Martyrs.

Maximinus.

AT the ſame time, and almoſt on the ſame days, a young man in the City of Tyre, by name Ulpianus, after he had been cruelly ſcourged and endured moſt grievous ſtripes, * was ſewn up in the raw Hide of an Ox, together with a Dog and a venomous Serpent, and caſt into the Sea: (a) Wherefore we thought it agreeable to make mention of this perſon at [this place wherein we have related] the Martyrdom of Apphianus. Some ſmall time after this, Ædeſius, Brother (not only in reſpect of God, but by a bodily affinity alſo,) by the (b) Father's ſide to Apphianus, after [he had made] very many Confeſſions, and for a long time had been cruciated in Bonds; after he had been condemned to the Mines in Paleſtine by the Preſident's ſentence; and after he had, under all theſe [tortures,] led a life continually like a Philoſopher, in a Philoſophick habit; (for he had acquired far more learning than his Brother, in that he had applied his mind wholly to Philoſophick Literature.) At length, when, at the City of Alexandria, he ſaw the Judge (who was then examining the Chriſtians) moſt extravagantly inſulting over, and enraged againſt them; one while putting various and moſt reproachful abuſes upon grave Men; at another, delivering Women moſt eminent for their chaſtity, and (c) Virgins that had devoted themſelves to God, to Panders, that they might be defiled with all ſorts of obſcenity: He attempted the ſame fact that his Brother had done. For, becauſe what was thus performed ſeem'd to him intolerable, with a valiant boldneſs he approach'd the (d) Judge, and having by his words and deeds ſurrounded him with ſhame and ignominy, and after that,

* This was the puniſhment, which the Romans inflicted on Parricides. In Seneca's age (ſee his 5th Book, Controver. 4. at the latterend) only Serpents were put into the leathern ſack (which they termed Culeus) with the Malefactor; afterwards they ſewed up an Ape and a Cock with him, and at laſt a Dog. The Offender was firſt whipp'd with rods till the blood came, then ſewn up after this manner. See Cæl. Rhod. B. 11. Chap. 21. The Grecians had a way of putting Criminals to death, by drowning them in the Sea, which they termed καταπονησμὸν; but they made uſe of a leaden Veſſel only, into which they put the Malefactor; as appears from Athenæus, B. 14. his words are theſe, Πατροκλῆς οὖν ὁ τοῦ πολεμαίου τραπηζοποιὸς ἐν καύνῳ τῇ νήσῳ, λαβὼν αὐτὸν, καὶ εἰς μολυβδίνην κεραμίδα ἐμβαλὼν, καὶ ἀναγαγὼν εἰς τὸ πέλαγος κατεπόντισε, Patroclus therefore, Ptolemie's Governour in the Iſle Caunus, took him, and put him into a Leaden Veſſel, and carried him to the Sea, and drowned him. Neither was this accounted amongſt the heavieſt ſorts of puniſhment by the Grecians, as appears from Polybius, B. 2.

(a) Διό μοι δοκεῖ ἐν τοῖς, &c. that is, Although Ulpianus ſuffered not in Paleſtine, but in Phœnicia, yet becauſe he ſuffered Martyrdom at the ſame time, and died by the ſame ſort of puniſhment that Apphianus had inflicted on him, we judged it not unfit to make mention of him here, It is therefore apparent from theſe words, that Euſebius in this Book deſign'd to give an account of the Martyrs of the Province of Paleſtine only. Valeſ.

(b) In the Greek Menæum, at the ſecond day of April, Ædeſius is ſtiled Apphianus's Brother by the Mother's ſide. Valeſ.

(c) In the Med. Fuk. and Maz. MSS. the term is αὐτοπαρθένους, one entire word; which, in in my judgment is the better reading. Euſebius does uſually call thoſe Chriſtian Virgins by this name, who ſpontaneouſly had devoted their Virginity to God. Such Perſons the Latins called devotæ. For ſo Auſonius and others term them. Valeſ.

(d) The explication of this place is to be had from the Menæum of the Greeks; where Ædeſius is ſaid to have ſtruck Hierocles Præfect of Egypt (in the interim of his raging againſt the Chriſtians) with his Fiſt. The words there are theſe; Ὁ δὲ αἰδέσιος, ἐν ἀλεξανδρείᾳ τῇ πρὸς αἰγύπτου· τοὺς τῷ χαλκῷ μεταλλοις παραπορεύων, ἐπειδὴ τὸν ἄρχοντα ἱεροκλέα τιμωρούμενον τοὺς χριστιανοὺς ἐθεάσατο, ἐπαίσε ἀνελόντας, ἀυθοχειρίᾳ τὸν ἄρχοντα ἐπταισεν; i.e. But Ædeſius, who was [condemned] to work in the mines of Braſs, having ſeen (at Alexandria in Egypt) Hierocles the Preſident puniſhing the Chriſtians, he accounted him a deſpicable Perſon, and ſtruck the Preſident with his own hand. Wherefore, in this place of Euſebius, the term ἀτιμία denotes the blows given to the Preſident; and αἰσχύνη imports the reproachful language which Ædeſius gave him. Both which are intimated by Euſebius in theſe words, λόγοις τε καὶ ἔργοις, by his words and deeds. Epiphanius and Lactantius mention this Hierocles, Præfect of Egypt, who was famous for the great ſlaughter he made amongſt the Chriſtians. This was the Hierocles, againſt whom our Euſebius wrote a Book. Valeſ.

Maximinus. most couragiously endured various sorts of tortures, he was thrown into the Sea, and ended his life after the same manner that his Brother did. These things happened thus to Ædesius, altho' (as I said before) some small time after.

CHAP. VI.

Concerning the Martyr Agapius.

MOreover, in the fourth year of the Persecution against us, on the twentieth day of the month Dius, (which is before the twelfth of the Calends of December,) being Friday, such [a Martyrdom] was performed in the same City of Cæsarea, as worthily deserves to be recorded in writing, Maximinus the Tyrant being himself present, and exhibiting publick Shows to the People because of his Birth-day. Whereas it was an ancient custom, that (if at any time) in the presence of the Emperors, splendid Shows and such as were more pleasing to the Mind should be exhibited to the Spectators, (new and strange Spectacles, such as were different from the usual Sights, [being at such a time procured, which consisted] partly of Beasts brought out of India, Æthiopia, or some other place; and partly of Men, who, having before accustomed themselves to certain (a) artificial Exercises of their Bodies, entertain'd the Spectators with sights that created in them a wonderful delight and pleasure;) then also, because the Emperor himself [was at the charge of] exhibiting those Shows, something that was magnificent, and more wonderful than usual, must necessarily be made use of in those Sights. What therefore was this? A Martyr of our Religion was brought forth, to combat for the only true Worship of God. His name was Agapius, the (b) second of that name: The first (as we manifested a little before) was, together with Thecla, condemn'd to be devoured by the Wild-Beasts. He therefore (having before that time been (c) thrice [brought] out of Prison, [wherein he had been confined now three years,] and often times (d) led in pomp about the Stadium with those that were Malefactors; the Judge, after various menaces, putting him off to other Combats, either out of compassion to him, or because he had hopes that he would alter his resolution,) was then produced, (the Emperor himself being there present,) being reserved as it were on set purpose for that opportunity, that that saying of our Saviour's (which by his Divine knowledge he foretold his Disciples) might be accomplished in him, that they should be brought before Kings for their testimony of him. He is therefore brought into the midst of the Stadium, together with a certain Criminal; who was said to be guilty of murthering his Master. After this, he who had killed his Master, being exposed to the Wild-Beasts, obtain'd mercy and compassion [from the Emperor,] almost after the same manner that Barabbas did in our Saviour's time. At this, the whole Amphitheatre resounded with shouts and acclamations of joy, because the Emperor had out of his compassion saved a bloody Murtherer, and vouchsafed him Honour and Liberty. But this Champion of Religion is first called for by the Tyrant; after which, having, with the promise of Liberty, desired him to renounce the profession [of Christianity,] he professed with a loud voice, That (not for any crime, but) upon account of the Worship of the Framer of all things, with alacrity and pleasure, he would couragiously undergo what [Punishments] soever should be inflicted on him. And, having said thus, he annexed Deeds to his Words, ran to meet a Bear which was let loose against him, and most willingly offer'd himself to be devoured by that Beast. After the Beast had torn him, having some Breath left in him, he was carried back to Prison; where, after he had lived one day, on that following, Stones were hang'd at his Feet, and he was drown'd in the midst of the Sea. Such was the Martyrdom of Agapius.

Maximinus.

(a) He means the Pantomimi, Mimicks that used antick, filthy, and obscence gestures; the Pegmatarii, those that managed the Machines and Images in their Plays; the Contigeri, Pole-carriers; and Funambuli, Rope-dancers; and such other Artists, which were made use of by those that were at the charge to exhibit shews to the People. See Claudianus in his Book, De Consulatu Theodori. Vales.

(b) At first I thought the reading here should be δευτέρῳ ἔτει, in the second year: For so Eusebius had said above in Chap. 3. But the vulgar reading [to wit, ὁ δεύτερος, the second of that name) is best, for he is called Agapius the Second, to distinguish him from the former Agapius, who had suffered two years before; concerning whom Eusebius speaks in the said third Chapter. Vales.

(c) This place is corrupted, and imperfect. Christophorson reads, [δεσμωτηρίου ἐξαχθεὶς, brought out of Prison,] which reading is not amiss. But I think there is a whole line omitted here; which I thus make up, δεσμωτηρίου [ἐξαχθεὶς, ἐν ᾧ καθείχετο ἤδη τὸ τρίτον,] [Brought] out of Prison [wherein he had been confined now three years.] Agapius was cast into Prison at the beginning of the second year of the Persecution. Therefore, this was the third year of his confinement. Vales.

(d) Concerning this custom of leading the Criminals about the Stadium, see Book 5. Chap. 1. Note (z.)

CHAP. VII.

Concerning the Virgin Theodosia, and concerning Domninus, and Auxentius, Martyrs.

MOreover, the fifth year of the Persecution being now current on the second day of the month Xanthicus, which is before the fourth of the Nones of April, (a) on the very Lord's-day, the day of our Saviour's Resurrection, and also at Cæsarea, Theodosia a Virgin born at Tyre, one that was a Believer and a most modest Maid, not eighteen years old compleat, approach'd some Prisoners, (who were Confessors of the Kingdom of Christ, and sat before the (b) Prætorium,) both to salute them amicably, and also (as 'tis probable) to request them that they would be mindful of her when they came to the Lord. Having done this, as if she had committed some nefarious and impious fact, the Soldiers lay hold of her, and carry her before the President. He, in regard he was a furious person, and one of a most cruel temper of Mind, [ordered] that she should be cruciated with sharp and most horrid tortures, and that her Sides and Breasts [should be furrow'd] to her very Bones; [after this] Breath being still left in her, having with a pleasant and chearful countenance undergone all these tortures, by the President's command she was drown'd in the Sea. After he had done with her, he went upon [the Examination of] the other Confessors, all whom he condemn'd to the Brazen Mines at Phenos in Palestine. Furthermore, on the fifth day of the month Dius, that is (according to the Roman account) on the Nones of November, in the same City, to wit, Cæsarea, the said President condemned Silvanus (who then was a Presbyter and a Confessor, but some small time after was was honour'd with a Biſhoprick, and happen'd to finiſh his life by Martyrdom) and ſome others that were his Companions (after they had given demonſtration of a moſt reſolute courage and conſtancy in behalf of Religion) to labour in the ſame Mines of Braſs; having firſt given order, that the Flexures of their Feet † ſhould be ſear'd with a red-hot Iron, and ſo rendred infirm and uſeleſs. At the ſame time that this ſentence was pronounced againſt 'em, he condemn'd Domninus (a Man very famous for innumerable other Confeſſions, who for his ſingular freedom [in ſpeaking was much taken notice of by all perſons throughout Paleſtine) to be burnt alive. After he [had been thus puniſhed,] the ſame Judge, (a crafty Inventer of miſchief, and one that ſtudied new Devices and Deſigns [to extirpate] the Doctrine of Chriſt,) found out ſuch ſorts of puniſhments for the Worſhippers of God, as were never heard of before. He condemned three [and compelled them] to (c) fight with one another in ſuch a ſort as the Champions uſually did: Auxentius, a venerable and holy old Man, was by him condemn'd to be devoured by the Wild-Beaſts. Again, he [gave order] that ſome, who were arrived to the compleat age and ſtature of Men, ſhould be cut and made Eunuchs, and then condemn'd them to the ſame Mines. He ſhut up others in priſon, after they had undergone the ſharpeſt Tortures. Amongſt which number was Pamphilus, my deareſt Companion, a perſon that was the moſt eminent of all the Martyrs in our age for his ſingular Virtue and Piety: Urbanus firſt made tryal of his skill in Rhetorick and Philoſophick Literature, after that he compelled him to offer ſacrifice; which when the Martyr refuſed to do, and [Urbanus] perceived that he deſpiſed his menaces, he was exceedingly exaſperated, and gave order that he ſhould be tormented with the acuteſt ſorts of * torture. Moreover, this moſt enraged * Man, (being in a manner ſatiated with the fleſh of the Martyrs ſides, which he [had cauſed to be torn off] with torturing-irons, whereof he made a continued and reiterated uſe, pertinaciouſly deſiring thereby to get the Victory [over the Martyr] having after all theſe tortures, procured nothing but ſhame and ignominy for himſelf,) at length order'd him to be caſt into priſon amongſt the other Confeſſors therein confined. But, what ſort of puniſhment this perſon (who after ſo fierce a manner inſulted over the Martyrs of Chriſt,) was to expect, would be inflicted on him at the Divine Tribunal, for his cruelty towards the Saints, is eaſily known from thoſe beginnings [thereof which he underwent] in this life. Immediately after thoſe audacious Cruelties which he had practiſed towards Pamphilus, the Divine Vengeance forthwith ſeiz'd him, whilſt he was as yet poſſeſs'd of the Government. Which on a ſudden, in one night's ſpace, ſtrip'd him (who but the day before ſat as Judge upon a lofty Tribunal, was attended with a military Guard, govern'd the whole Province of Paleſtine; who alſo was Companion to the Tyrant himſelf, for he was his chief Favourite, and did uſually eat at the ſame Table with him) of all theſe great places and preferments, and reduc'd him to a diſconſolate and helpleſs condition; clouded him with ignominy and ſhame in the ſight of thoſe very perſons, who had formerly admired him as their Governour; propos'd him to the whole Nation, over which he had been Ruler, as a miſerable and diſpirited Wretch, pouring forth effeminate Intreaties and Supplications; and laſtly, conſtituted Maximinus himſelf (of whoſe favour he had in former times bragg'd and boaſted, having been dearly beloved by him by reaſon of the Cruelties he practiſed towards us Chriſtians) his inexorable and moſt ſevere Judge in the very City of Cæſarea. For, after many reproaches, which he ſuffer'd upon account of thoſe crimes, of which he was convict, the Emperor himſelf pronounc'd ſentence of death againſt him. But thus much we have ſaid by the by. There may happen a ſeaſonable opportunity, wherein we ſhall be more at leiſure to relate the Exits and calamitous Deaths, by which thoſe impious Wretches (eſpecially Maximinus and thoſe about him who were his adviſers) that were the greateſt Sticklers in the Perſecution againſt us, finiſh'd their lives.

(a) In the MS. Acts of the passion of Theodosia, she is said to have suffered not on Easter-day, but only, on a Sunday. Vales.

(b) πρὸ τῶν δικαστηρίων; so the Greek words it. Christophorson renders it, Ante tribunal considentibus, sate before the tribunal: Which Version I do not approve of. I have rendred it, before the Prætorium; i. e. before the palace of the President. For those Prisoners stood before his Palace, waiting, until the President (before whom they were to be brought) came forth to the Tribunal. This rendition is confirmed by the following Words. Vales.

Maximinus.

(c) See the following Chapter; from whence we are informed, that thoſe who were condemned to ſuch Combats, were delivered to the Procurators of Cæſar, who cauſed them to practiſe and exerciſe daily, that ſo at laſt they might be fit to engage in a Combat. Valeſ.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning other Confeſſors, and concerning the Martyrdom of Valentina and Paul.

WHen the Storm [of Perſecution] had now without any intermiſſion raged againſt us until the ſixth year, [there was] a very great number that were Confeſſors of the Divine Religion, who (a) heretofore had liv'd in Thebais, at Porphyrites, a place that had its appellation from the name of the Marble dug out there: Of which [company] an hundred Men, (wanting three,) together with their Wives and very ſmall Children, were ſent to the Preſident of Paleſtine. Concerning all which perſons, after they had made their confeſſion of God [the Framer] of all things, and of Chriſt, Firmillanus the Preſident (who was ſent thither as Succeſſor to Urbanus,) gave order, agreeable to the Emperors command, that they ſhould have thoſe very Sinews of their left Legs, by which they bent their Knees, ſear'd in two with red-hot Irons; and that their right Eyes, together with the Membranes and Balls thereof ſhould be firſt cut out with Swords, and after that [their Eye-holes] ſeared even to the very bottom with red-hot Irons: After which, he order'd they ſhould be ſent to work in the Mines that were in the Province, that they might be worn out there with labours and miſeries. Nor did we behold theſe perſons only undergoing ſuch puniſhments, but thoſe Paleſtinians alſo; (who, as we manifeſted a little before, were condemned to practiſe the Champions exerciſes, in order to their being made fit to engage in the Gladiators Combats;) becauſe they would not endure, either to receive thoſe Proviſions which were allow'd them out of the Imperial Treaſury, or to practiſe ſuch exerciſes as were neceſſary to render them accompliſh'd Combatants. For which reaſon they were brought not only before the (b) Procurators, but Maximinus himſelf: And, having given a demonſtration of their invincible

(a) πρὸ τούτου, heretofore, muſt be referred to the Verb ᾤκει, lived; not to the term [κλήθρου, had its Appellation] as Chriſtophorſon thought; who renders this place thus; in loco Porphyrite appellato, qui jam antea ex venâ lapidis quæ ibi naſcitur, nomen duxerat; i. e. in a place called Porphyrites, which had before, gotten its name from a vein of ſtone, which is there dug out. Valeſ.

(b) He means, as I judge, the Procurators of the company of the Gladiators, and of the Morning Exerciſes; of whom there is frequent mention in the old Inſcriptions. For the Gladiators, that were maintained by ſtipends paid out of the Imperial Exchequer, were committed to their care, and they gave them their allowances out of the Treaſury. Valeſ.

Maximinus. invincible constancy in the confession [of Christ,] and of their couragiousness in enduring Famine and Scourges, they suffer'd the same punishments with the foremention'd persons; some other Confessors in the City of Cæsarea being added to their number. Soon after these, others were taken at the City Gaza, (c) who were assembled to hear the sacred Scriptures read, some of whom suffer'd the same tortures in their Feet and Eyes with the forementioned persons; but others of them underwent more acute and horrid torments in the sides of their Bodies. One of which number, as to her Sex a Woman, but a person of a masculine and couragious temper of Mind, unable to endure the menaces of Ravishment; having utter'd some expressions against the Tyrant, (because he committed the Government [of Provinces] to such cruel Judges,) was first scourged: Then, being hung up a great heighth on [an Engine of] Wood, she was tortured in the sides of her Body. But when the Officers, appointed for that purpose, did, by the Judges order, apply their tortures to her with a most continued and exquisite vehemency, another Woman, who (like the former) had taken upon her the vow of Virginity, (as to the composure of her Body she was indeed no very taking object, and her aspect was despicable, but she was endow'd with a couragious temper of Mind, and was corroborated with a valour above her Sex, and far excell'd those Championesses amongst the Grecians, so much famed for their freedom in speaking;) being unable to endure the sight of those mercileſs, cruel, and inhuman practises, cried out with a loud voice to the Judge, out of the midst of the crowd, How long will you thus unmercifully torture my Sister? The Judge, highly exasperated by that expression, forthwith gave command the Woman should be laid hold on. She was then haled forth before him; and * having assumed to herself our Saviour's venerable appellation, first she was sollicited by kind words to offer sacrifice: Which when she refused to do, they drew her by force before the Altar: But she, behaving herself like herself, retain'd her former alacrity of Mind, with an intrepid and undaunted Foot trampled upon the Altar, and overturn'd that, together with (d) what lay upon it. Upon which account the Judge, enraged like a Savage Beast, first gave order, that she should suffer more and greater tortures in her sides, than any one had before undergone: [For] he seem'd in a manner desirous to gorge himself with her raw flesh. But when his rage was satiated, he order'd they should both (namely this last with her whom she called Sister) be fastned together, and condemned them to be burn'd to death; the (e) former of these persons, 'tis said, was born in the Country of the Gazites: You must understand that the other, well known to most Men by the name of Valentina, had her original extract at Cæsarea. But with what expressions can I deservedly set forth that Martyrdom (which follow'd immediately hereupon,) wherewith the thrice-blessed Paul was adorned? This person, having had sentence of death pronounced against him at that very interim these Virgins were condemn'd, when he was to be put to death, entreated the Executioner (who stood ready to cut off his Head) to allow him a short space of time. Having obtain'd his request, with a clear and audible voice he first pray'd for all those who were Professors of the Christian Religion, beseeching God, that he would be reconciled to them, and quickly bestow on them liberty and security: Then he supplicated for the Jews access to God by [the Faith of] Christ:] After this, he proceeded in an orderly method, putting up the same petitions even for the Samaritans; and besought God for the Heathens, that they, now entangled in error and an ignorance of God, might arrive to an acknowledgment of him, and undertake the [profession of] the true Religion; neither did he [in his petitions] omit to mention the promiscuous crowd that surrounded him. After all these (O the great and ineffable patience and mildness of his Mind!) He besought the Supream God for the very Judge by whom he had been condemned to die, for the Emperors, and also for the Executioner (who stood ready to strike off his Head,) both in the hearing of him himself, and of all those also that were present, beseeching [God] that the sin they committed [by taking away his life] might not be imputed to them. Having with a loud voice made these petitions, and melted almost all that were present into compassion and tears, because he was unjustly put to death; (f) nevertheless he made himself ready, and, yielding his naked Neck to be cut asunder by the Sword, he was crown'd with Divine Martyrdom, on the twenty fifth day of the Month Panemus, that is, before the eighth of the Calends of August. Such was the Exit of these [Martyrs]. Not long after, an hundred and thirty Champions, of the same Country, to wit, Egypt, admirable for the confession of Christ, having by Maximinus's order undergone the same calamitous [tortures] in their Eyes and Feet, with those formerly mention'd who suffered in Egypt, were condemned and sent away, part of them to the forementioned Mines in Palestine, and part to those in the Province of Cilicia.

Maximinus.

(c) Christophorson supposed these persons to be Priests and Deacons, who had convened the People to hear the sacred Scriptures read: Which at that time they were compelled to do in private Houses. For, their Churches and Oratories being then demolished, the Christians had only Private-houses to assemble themselves in. Vales.

* That is, having acknowledged herself to be a Christian.

(e) This Virgin's name is wanting here: But we will supply this defect, from the Grecian Menology; where this passage occurs, at the 15th of July: On the same day, the Holy Martyrs, Valentina and Thea, which were Egyptians, being brought to the City Dio Cæsarea before Firmilianus the Judge, made confession of Christ's Name, who is our God; after which, their left feet being burnt, and their right eyes pulled out, they were killed with a sword, and their bodies burnt. But this account disagrees with our Eusebius's relation here. For he says, the one was born at Gaza, the other at Cæsarea: Aud he makes no mention of the burning of their feet, or of the pulling out their Eyes. Vales.

(f) In the Fuk. & Savil MSS. in stead of [ὅμως αὐτὸς ἑαυτὸν ἡτοίμασεν nevertheless he made himself ready] the reading is [ἦν νόμος, &c. as the usual manner was, &c.] which reading, in my judgment, is not to be despised. Mention is made of this Paul's Martyrdom, in the Menology, at the 15th of July. Vales.

CHAP. IX.

That the Persecution was afresh renewed: And concerning Antoninus, Zebina, Germanus, and other Martyrs.

NOW, after such valiant Exploits as these, perform'd by Christ's Noble Martyrs; when the Flame of Persecution was somewhat abated, and, as it were, extinguish'd by their sacred Blood; when those in Thebais (condemn'd for [their Confession of] Christ to labour in the Mines there,) were permitted to enjoy rest and liberty; and when we hoped to see some few calm and serene days; then did * He (who had gotten the power of persecuting) re-assume his Rage against the Christians, upon what account, or by what impulse, I know not. For, on a sudden, Maximinus's Edicts against us were sent to all places throughout every Province:

* The Devil.

Maximinus.

Province: And the Preſidents and (a) Præfect of the Prætorium by Injunctions, Letters, and publick Orders excited the * Curators in every City, the Magiſtrates and (b) Tabularii to put in execution the Imperial Edict, (c) which contained an Order, That the decay'd Idol-Temple ſhould with all diligence be repaired; that all perſons, Men, Women, Servants, and young Children ſhould be compell'd to do Sacrifice, and by all means imaginable forced to eat part of the Fleſh which had been offer'd; that the Proviſions expoſed to ſale in the Markets ſhould be defiled with ſuch things as had been ſacrificed; and that ſome ſhould be order'd to ſit and watch before the [publick] Baths, to the end they might pollute ſuch as came to cleanſe themſelves therein, with the execrable Sacrifices. Whilſt theſe things were after this manner put in execution, the Anxieties of the Chriſtians, as it was likely, were renew'd and increaſed: Yea, the Gentiles that were Unbelievers [look'd upon] what was done to be intollerable, and condemned theſe Barbarities, as abſurd and too outragious: For, even to them ſuch Actions ſeem'd abominable and odious. When [therefore] ſuch a fierce Storm [of Perſecution] was impendent on all perſons every-where, the Divine Power of our Saviour did again infuſe ſo great a courage and confidence into his Champions, that, when no body induced or urged them to it, they contemned theſe high Menaces of their Adverſaries. Wherefore, three Believers with a joynt conſent ruſh in upon the Preſident then offering Sacrifice to Idols, and call out to him to deſiſt from his error: For there is [ſaid they] no other God, but he that is the Framer and Maker of all things. Being hereupon ask'd who they were, they boldly profeſs'd themſelves to be Chriſtians: At which Firmilianus was highly exaſperated, and paſſed ſentence of death upon them, (d) without inflicting on them any previous tortures. One of theſe was a Presbyter, by name (e) Antoninus; the name of the ſecond was Zebinas, by Country an Eleutheropolitan; the third was called Germanus. On the thirteenth day of the Month Dius, that is on the Ides of November, all this was done to theſe perſons. On the ſame day they had a Fellow-traveller added to their number, a Woman of Scythopolis, by name (f) Ennathas, who was adorn'd with the (g) Badge of Virginity. She had not indeed done what the former [three] did, but was carried by force and ſet before the Judge. Therefore, after ſhe had been ſcourged and moſt groſly abuſed; (all which injurious uſages were audaciouſly perpetrated, without any order from the ſuperior Magiſtracy, by one of the Tribunes in the neighbourhood, called Maxys, a Man worſe than his name, one indeed that was ſtout and of an undaunted courage, but as to his Morals, in all reſpects very impious, of a cruel diſpoſition, and odious to all his Acquaintance. This Fellow ſtripp'd the Bleſſed Virgin ſtark naked, (in ſuch a manner that ſhe was cover'd only from her Loins down to her Feet, but the reſt of her Body was bare;) led her round the City Cæſarea, and look'd upon it as a piece of Gallantry to dragg her through all the Market-places in the City, and ſcourge her;) after [I ſay] ſhe had endured ſo many ſtripes, having given a demonſtration of her moſt undaunted courage and conſtancy of Mind before the Preſidents Tribunal, the Judge commanded ſhe ſhould be burnt alive. This * Man improved his Inhumanity and Rage, ſhown towards God's Worſhippers, to the heighth, and tranſgreſt even the Laws of nature; for he was not aſhamed of denying burial to the dead Bodies of thoſe ſacred perſons. Upon which account he gave order, that the dead bodies (which were expoſed in the open Air, to be devoured by Wild-Beaſts,) ſhould be carefully guarded Night and Day: And you might have ſeen for many days together no ſmall number of Men, buſily obeying this beaſtly and barbarous order: Some of whom (as if this had been a matter of high concern and moment) watch'd on a Tower, that the Dead might not be ſtoln away. Alſo, the Wild-Beaſts, Dogs, and Fowls that prey'd on fleſh, ſcatter'd here and there pieces of Men's Bodies: And the whole City was ſtrew'd all over with Men's Bowels and Bones. So that, nothing did ever ſeem more cruel and horrid, even to thoſe who before had been our Enemies; all perſons bewailing not ſo much their calamitous condition towards whom theſe things were done, as the abuſe that was put upon themſelves, and on Mankind in general. For, even to the very Gates [of the City] ſuch a Spectacle was propoſed to publick view, as ſurpaſs'd all the bounds of expreſſion, and exceeded any the moſt tragical relation; [to wit] the fleſh of Men's Bodies, which were devour'd not in one place, but lay ſcatter'd everywhere. Yea, ſome affirm'd they ſaw Limbs of Men, whole Bodies, and pieces of Bowels even within the City. After theſe [horrid Butcheries] had been practiſed for many days together, there happen'd this Miracle. The Weather was fair, the Air clear, and the whole Face of Heaven moſt ſerene and bright; when, on a ſudden, from all the Columns which under-propp'd the publick Galleries throughout the City, there fell many drops, in the form of Tears: And the Market-place and Streets, (no moiſture having faln from the Air,) were wet and beſprinkled with Water which came from an unknown place. In ſo much that a report was immediately ſpread

Maximinus.

* The Preſident.

(a) I judge he means the Præfect of the Prætorium: For at that time they took care of Military matters. Indeed, Euſebius's following words are a ſufficient evidence, that the Præfect of the Prætorium is meant here: For he ſpeaks of the injunctions, and publick orders given to the Curators, Magiſtrates, and Tabularii of every City: which Orders were iſſued out by the Præfect of the Prætorium only; as might be made appear from ſeveral places. See Book 9. Chap. 1. & 9. where Euſebius ſpeaks of Sabinus Præfect of the Prætorium to Maximin.

* See Book. Chap. 11. Note (b.)

(b) Theſe Officers had in their cuſtody the publick Tables, or Rolls of the Cities, and look'd after the accounts of the Tribute. They were firſt call'd Numerarii: Afterwards Valens made a Law, that they ſhould be called Tabularii. See Valeſius's Notes on Amm. Marcell. Book 28. pag. 348.

(c) In ſtead of [προσταγμα κελευονλες,] as it is in Robert Stephens's Copy; in the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil MSS. the reading is [κελευον ὡς ἀν, which contained an Order that, &c.] which is the better reading: For Euſebius here relates the Contents of Maximin's Edict. Valeſ.

(d) Euſebius notes this, as a thing new, and unuſual; not that he deſign'd to praiſe Firmilianus the Preſident's Clemency, becauſe he did not torture the Martyrs; but he would hereby ſhew the Precipitancy and Rage of the Man; in regard he commanded, the Martyrs (who had provoked and confuted him) ſhould be immediately led away to be put to death, without ſuffering any tortures before their execution; as the common uſage was. For the Roman Judges did uſually torture the Chriſtian Martyrs before they diſpatch'd them, to the end thoſe valiant Champions might not finiſh their lives by too eaſie a death. Nor was this uſually done to the Martyrs only; but generally as often as any heinous Offenders were brought to examination, they were firſt tortured. And although the guilty Perſon confeſs'd the fact, yet did not the Judge preſently order him to be releas'd from his tortures; but continued to inquire out the Conſequences: For example, how often he had done the fact, with what weapons, and in what places: Then he queſtioned him about his Companions and Accomplices. See Tertullian, in his Book Ad Nationes; and in his Apologetick, Chap. 2. Valeſ.

(e) In the Greeks Menology, this Man is called Antonius, where (beſides Zebinas and Germanus) there is a fourth Companion of theirs named, to wit, Nicephorus. For the 12th day of November this paſſage occurs: The birth-day of the holy Martyrs Antonius and his fellows, who were [put to death] in the times of Maximinus. Antonius was an old Man; Nicephorus, Zebinas, and Germanus were in the flower of their age. They were taken at Cæſarea, and after they had boldly confeſſed Chriſt, were ſlain. Here you ſee, the Author of the Menology has rendred πρεσβύτες an old Man, not a Presbyter. Valeſ.

(f) In the Greek Menology ſhe is called Manatho. Valeſ.

(g) Euſebius means a little Mitre of purple-coloured-wool; which was the badge of profeſs'd Virginity, as Optatus informs us, in his ſixth Book. Valeſ.

Maximinus. amongst all people, that the Earth, unable to bear the horrid Impieties then committed, did shed Tears in an inexplicable manner; and that the Stones and senseless matter wept at what was done, to reprove the barbarous and unmerciful Dispositions of Men. This thing will, I doubt not, be look'd upon as fabulous and a ridiculous story by succeeding Generations: But they did not account it such, who had the certainty thereof confirmed to them by the authority of those times in which it happened.

CHAP. X.

Concerning Peter the Ascetа, Asclepius the Marcionite, and other Martyrs.

ON the fourteenth Day of the following Month, called Appellæus, which is before the nineteenth of the Calends of January, some other Egyptians, (going to minister to the Confessors in Cilicia) were apprehended by those persons, that were set at the Gates [of the City] to examine such as passed by: Part of whom received the same sentence with those they were going to minister to, having their Eyes and Feet rendred useless. But three of them were put into bonds at the City Ascalon, where after they had given an admirable demonstration of their Courage, they finish'd their lives by a different sort of Martyrdom. One af them, by name Ares, was burnt to death: The other two, whose names were (a) Probus and Elias, were beheaded. On the eleventh day of the month Audynæus, which is before the third of the Ides of January, (b) Peter the Ascetа, called also Apselamus, (who came from Aneas a Village that lies near to Eleutheropolis,) being refined by Fire like the purest Gold, exhibited an illustrious proof of his Faith in God's Christ, at the City Cæsarea. For when the Judge and those about him intreated him earnestly to be compassionate towards himself, and take pity upon his own youthfulness and vigour; he contemned [their Exhortations,] and preferred his confidence in the supream God before all things, yea, even Life itself. Together with this person [suffered] one Asclepius, (reported to have been a Bishop of the Sect of the Marcionites, out of a zeal to Piety, (as he thought,) but such an one as was not according to knowledge,) and finished his life in the same fiery Pile. These things were performed after this manner.

(a) In the Greek this Man's name is Promus: But, I suppose, it should be Probus. For I never met with such a proper name as Promus. This mistake arose from hence; in ancient MSS. Beta is usually written like My. In the Fuk. and Sav. MSS. 'tis Probus. Vales.

(b) Mention is made of this Person in the Greek Menea, at the 14th of October; although Eusebius says he suffered on the 3d of the Ides of January. In the Meneum he is called Auselamus: But, in the Menology Anselamus is, by a mistake, put for Auselamus, or Abselamus: The import of the passage there is this; On the same day is the Commemoration of the holy Martyr Petrus Anselamus of Eleutheropolis, who being in the flower of his age, and of a vigorous mind, behaved himself most admirably in the conflicts he underwent for Religion; and, having despised earthly things, was by fire offered up as a victim well-pleasing to God, in the sixth year of Diocletian's and Maximian's Empire. In which passage, this is observable, that the sixth year of Diocletian's Empire is put for the sixth year of the Persecution. Vales.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning Pamphilus, and twelve other Martyrs.

(a) Symeon Metaphrastes has transcribed this whole Relation of the Martyrdom of Pamphilus and his Companions, out of our Eusebius; adding some things, and altering others, as he usually does. But he seems to have been furnished with more perfect Copies of Eusebius, than those we now have, which will manifestly appear to the Reader; who may meet with Metaphrastes's account hereof in that Latin Version of him, which Lipomanus and Surius put forth; Tome the third, at the first of June; pag. 139. Edit. Venet. Anno 1581. Vales.

(a) THE time now calls upon me to record that great and famous Spectacle, which they [exhibited] who were perfected by Martyrdom together with Pamphilus, [a person] whose name and memory I have a great honour and high esteem for. They were in all twelve, being vouchsafed a (b) Prophetick, or rather Apostolick Grace, and equal to 'em in number; Pamphilus was their Principal, the only person amongst them that was adorn'd with the honour of a Presbytership in the Church at Cæsarea: (c) A man eminent for all manner of Virtue, even throughout his whole life; [whether we consider] his renunciation and contempt of the World, or the liberal contributions [he made] of his Goods to those that were necessitous; or his disregard of worldly preferments and expectations; or, lastly, his Philosophick, severe, and Ascetick course of life. But, he was most especially eminent, even beyond all men in our times, for his earnest and unwearied studies in the sacred Scriptures, for his indefatigable assiduity about those things he proposed to himself to do, and for the good offices he did to his Relations and all other persons that made their addresses to him. This person's other virtues and egregious performances, which require a larger relation, we have already comprized in three Books, being a peculiar Work which we wrote concerning his life. If therefore any are desirous of knowing these things more fully, we remit them thither; at present (d) let us prosecute our subsequent Narration concerning the Martyrs. The second person, after Pamphilus, that entred the combat, was Valens, a (e) a Deacon of Ælia, honourable for his holy gray Hairs, and as to his aspect a venerable old Man; better skill'd in the sacred Scriptures than any of the rest. For he had imprinted them in his memory so perfectly, (f) that no difference could be discerned between his reading out of a Book, and repeating by heart, whole pages of any part of sacred Writ. The third person, famous amongst them, was Paul, born at the City Jamnia, a man very fervent and zealous in acting, and filled with a warmth and ardour of Spirit. Before his Martyrdom he had been engaged in the Combat of Confession, having endured the searing [of his flesh] with red-hot Irons. After these persons had spent two years time in prison, the arrival of some other Egyptians Brethren was

(b) He means the Minor Prophets, who were twelve in number: This passage is more clearly expresst in Metaphrastes, thus: It is worth our while to admire the number of the Men, which represents a certain Prophetick and Apostolick Grace. For, it happened that they were in all twelve; of the same number with the Patriarchs, Prophets and Apostles, as we are informed. Vales.

(c) This passage also is more perfect in Metaphrastes, after this manner: He was Pamphilus, a Man truly pious, loving and friendly towards all Men, really demonstrating the truth of his name; [the import of Pamphilus, is, friend to all men:] the ornament of the Church at Cæsarea, &c. See Lipomanus and Surius's Version of Metaphrastes at the fore-cited place. Vales.

(d) In the Maz.Med. and Fuk. MSS. 'tis [ἐχώμεθα, let us prosecute] in the Imperative Mood. Moreover hence we may make this manifest collection, to wit, that this Book concerning the Martyrs of Palestine was Eusebius's own work, written by him after his Books Concerning Pamphilus's Life, and after his Ecclesiastick Hist. Vales.

(e) There may be a double meaning given of these Words. For the import of them may be, either that Ælia was Valen's Country, or that he was a Deacon of the Church of Ælia. Symeon Metaphrastes followed this latter sence, as appears from his Words. The like ambiguity I took notice of before, Book 5. Chap. 1. Note (o) where we spoke concerning Sanctus a Deacon of Vienna. Vales.

(f) 'Tis easily discernable, that the Greek Text is here corrupted; I suppose it may be thus amended; ὡς μὴ ἐνδεῖν τῆς ἀπὸ γραμμάτων ἐντεύξεως, τὸ πῆς ποτε ἂν λάβοι γραφῆς διασαφῆν αὐτὸν ἀπομνημονεῦσαι ῥᾳδίως· which reading we have followed in our Version; and it agrees with Symeon Metaphrastes's interpretation, as 'tis evident from Gentianus Hervetus's Translation in Lipomanus's Edition at the month of February; see Note (a) in this Chapter. But Hervetus has rendred ἀπομνημονεῦσαι, to get by heart; whereas that term signifies, to recite by heart, as we observed before. Vales.

Maximinus. the occaſion of their Martyrdom, who alſo ſuffer'd with them. Theſe Egyptians had accompanied the Confeſſors ſent into Cilicia, to the Mines there. As they were returning to their own Country, at the entrance of the Gates of Cæſarea they were examin'd (in the ſame manner with thoſe before-mention'd) by the Guard (men of a barbarous diſpoſition) who they were, and whence they came; and, having concealed nothing of the truth, as if they had been Malefactors taken in the very act, they were put into bonds. They were five in number; and when they were brought before the Tyrant, and had ſpoken boldly and freely in his preſence, they were forthwith committed to priſon. The next day (which was the 19th of the month Peritius, according to the Roman account before the 14th of the Calends of March,) order was given, that they, together with Pamphilus and his foremention'd Companions, ſhould be brought before the Judge. In the firſt place, he made tryal of the Egyptians invincible conſtancy, by all ſorts of torments, and various and new-invented Engines [of torture.] When (g) he had made uſe of theſe cruelties towards the chief of theſe perſons, firſt he ask'd him who he was. After he had heard him give himſelf the name of ſome Prophet inſtead of his proper name; (for they made it their buſineſs to call themſelves by names different from thoſe given them by their Parents, which were perhaps the names of Idols; therefore you might have heard them name themſelves Elias, Jeremiah, Iſaiah, Samuel, or Daniel, repreſenting not only by their actions, but by their proper names alſo, the true and genuine Iſrael (h) of God, which [conſiſts] of thoſe that are (i) inwardly Jews.) After, [I ſay,] Firmilianus had heard the Martyr give himſelf ſuch a name, being wholly unacquainted with the powerful import thereof, in the ſecond place he enquir'd, what Countryman he was: The Martyr expreſs'd himſelf in this his ſecond reply agreeable to his former anſwer, and ſaid, Jeruſalem was his Country; meaning that Jeruſalem, of which Paul ſpeaks--- But Jeruſalem which is above, is free, which is the mother of us all:* And [in another place,] †Ye are come to mount Sion, and unto the City of the living God, the heavenly Jeruſalem: The Martyr meant this [Jeruſalem.] But the Judge, having his mind depreſſed with low and terrene thoughts, was extraordinarily inquiſitive what City this was, and in what Country it lay. Then he applied tortures, that he might [force him thereby to] confeſs the truth. But he, having both his hands wreſted behind his back, and his Feet broken with certain new Engines [of torture,] ſtiffly affirm'd, that he ſpoke true. Again, being after this often asked, what City that he ſpoke of was, and where it lay, he replied, that that was their Country only, who were God's Worſhippers: For none but they ſhould enter it; and it was ſcituate Eaſtward, and towards the riſing Sun. After this manner did the Martyr Philoſophize again, agreeable to his own ſentiments, wholly diſregarding thoſe that on all ſides were tormenting of him: But, as if he had had neither Fleſh nor Body, ſeem'd to be altogether inſenſible of his tortures. But the Judge, doubtful and perplexed in his Mind, was in a great rage, ſuppoſing that the Chriſtians were about erecting a City that would be an Enemy, and in an hoſtile manner oppoſe the Romans. Upon which account he was very diligent in his enquiries about it, and in ſearching out that Country in the Eaſt ſpoken of [by the Martyr.] But when he perceived that the young man (after he had torn him with innumerable ſtripes, and inflicted on him tortures of all ſorts,) was immutable and firmly perſiſted in what he had ſaid before, he paſs'd ſentence of death upon him. Thus were the tragick [Cruelties,] uſed towards this Martyr, concluded: And when he had practiſed the like Preface of Tortures upon the reſt, he deſtroy'd them by the ſame ſort of death. Being then wearied out, and perceiving that he did in vain inflict tortures upon theſe men, (k) when his deſires were ſatiated, he paſs'd to Pamphilus and his Companions. And [although] he had by experience found, that in defence of their Faith they had before demonſtrated an alacrity of mind not to be vanquiſh'd by tortures; [yet] he again asked them, whether they would now be obedient to the Imperial commands; and when he could get nothing out of any one of them, beſides that laſt confeſſion which is made in Martyrdom, he condemn'd them to undergo the ſame puniſhment with the foremention'd Martyrs. Theſe things being finiſhed, a Youth, (l) one that belong'd to Pamphilus's Family, (in regard he had been educated under the genuine diſcipline and converſe of ſo eminent a perſon;) as ſoon as he underſtood that ſentence [was pronounc'd] againſt his Maſter, called aloud out of the midſt of the crowd, and requeſted that their dead-bodies might be interr'd. But [the Judge, (who deſerves not to be called a Man] but a wild Beaſt, or any Creature elſe [that can be thought] more fierce than a wild Beaſt) ſhew'd no compaſſion towards his youthful years; and, having found, upon his bare asking the young man that he confeſs'd himſelf a Chriſtian; ſwell'd with rage as if he had been wounded by ſome Dart, order'd the Torturers to make uſe of their utmoſt force againſt him. But after he ſaw, that he refuſed to be obedient to his commands in offering ſacrifice, he order'd that his fleſh (as if it had not been the body of a Man, but either Stones, or Wood, or ſome ſuch ſenſeleſs thing) ſhould without any intermiſſion be torn even to his very bones and inmoſt receſſes of his Bowels. Which being performed for a long time together, the Judge perceived his attempts were vain; [for although] his Body was mangled all over with the tortures, [yet] he (g) Ἐγγυμνάσας (the term here uſed) ſeems to be taken paſſively, for ἐγγυμνασθείς. For Euſebius's meaning is, that Firmilianus the Judge was well verſed in paſſing ſuch ſentences, and in extracting examinations by tortures. But becauſe the ſame term is taken in an active ſenſe hereafter in this chapter, it ought alſo to be taken ſo here. By the term [ἄθλα] Euſebius means, the ſcourges and tortures. Valeſ.

(h) These words [τῷ Θεῷ, of God] are wanting in the Med. MS. Euſebius's meaning is, that thoſe Egyptians who gave themſelves the names of Iſraelites, or Jews, did both by their actions and names repreſent the true and genuine Iſrael, and thoſe Jews, who were inwardly ſuch. Valeſ.

(i) Euſebius alludes to that paſſage in St. Paul, (Rom. 2. 28, 29.) where the Apoſtle makes two ſorts of Jews: Some that were Jews ἐν φανερῷ, outwardly; others that were ſuch ἐν κρυπτῷ, inwardly: The former, as he affirms, are not truly Jews, becauſe they obſerved the bodily Ceremonies only of the Law: The latter are really Jews; whoſe Circumciſion is that of the Heart in the Spirit, and not in the Letter. See Origen, Chap. 1. Philocal. Valeſ.

* Galat. 4. 26. † Heb. 12. 22.

(k) Euſebius ſeems to mean Firmilianus's deſire of knowing from the Egyptian Martyrs, where that Jeruſalem was, which they called their Country. Whence we may make this remark by the by, that 'tis ſufficiently evident, (as we obſerved before, Book 4. Chap. 6. Note (e)) there was no City upon Earth at that time called Jeruſalem. Otherwiſe Firmilianus Preſident of Paleſtine, would never have been ſo earneſt in his enquiries of the Martyrs, where Jeruſalem was ſcituated. But, the Greek term [ἐπιθυμία] cannot, I think, be taken in that ſenſe I have mentioned. Indeed, this place is obſcure, and (if I miſtake not) faulty. Therefore Symeon Metaphraſtes, when he tranſcribed this paſſage from Euſebius, on ſet purpoſe omitted theſe words. Valeſ.

(l) At this place Symeon Metaphraſtes adds ſome words, which deſerve to be ſet down here. Nondum autem dictum, &c. [The Judge] had ſcarce made an end of ſpeaking, when a young Man, belonging to Pamphilus's family, called out at ſome diſtance; and, coming out of the midſt of the crowd into the preſence of thoſe who ſate round in the place of Judicature, requeſted that their Bodies might be interred. This was the Bleſſed Porphyrius, one of Pamphilus's own breeding, not full eighteen years old, [a Youth] well-skilled in the Art of Writing; but one that concealed theſe praiſes by his modeſt behaviour, in regard he had been educated under ſo eminent a perſon. Valeſ.

he continued silent, and was as insensible of pain, as if he had in a manner been lifeless. [Nevertheless] the Judge, still persevering in his merciless and inhuman cruelty, immediately condemned him to be burnt (in the same habit he was in) by (m) a slow fire. And thus this person (altho' he was the last that entred the combat, yet (prevented his Master after the flesh, in that he obtain'd his departure out of this life before him; those, who were busied about [vanquishing] the former Martyrs, hitherto making some delays. You might therefore have seen Porphyrius [for that was his name,] in quality like a valorous Champion who had been Conqueror in all manner of exercises belonging to the sacred Games, proceeding forth to his death after he had suffer'd so great tortures, with a Body covered all over with Dust, but with a chearful Countenance, and a Mind full of joy and confidence: He was most truly filled with the Divine Spirit; and, being clad in a * Philosophick habit,) (having only a Garment wrapt about him, in fashion like unto a (n) Cloak,) with a calm and sedate Mind he gave commands to those of his acquaintance, and dispatch'd whatever he had a mind to do; retaining the serenity of his Countenance, even when he was at the very Stake. Moreover, when the Pile, which lay at a sufficient distance, was kindled round about him, with his Mouth he attracted the flame on every side of him: And after this one expression, which he uttered when the flame began to touch him, [to wit,] invoking Jesus the Son of God to be his helper, he most couragiously continued silent even to the very last gasp. Such was Porphyrius's combat: Whose Consummation Seleucus a Confessor that had formerly been a Soldier, having related to Pamphilus; as being the conveyer of such a message, he was immediately vouchsafed to be joyned in the same lot with the Martyrs: For he had no sooner related Porphyrius's death, and saluted one of the Martyrs with a kiss, but some of the Soldiers seize him, and carry him before the President. Who, as if he resolved to hasten Seleucus, that he might be Porphyrius's Companion in his journey to Heaven, forthwith order'd he should undergo a capital punishment. This [Seleucus] was born in Cappadocia, but had attained no mean degree of honour amongst the choicest young men that belong'd to the Roman Milice. For he far excell'd his Fellow-soldiers in the (o) fitness of his age for military services, in strength and stature of body, and in valour: In so much that his aspect was much discoursed of amongst all men, and the shape of his whole body greatly admired, upon account both of his stature and comelines. About the beginning of the Persecution, he was eminently famous for his enduring stripes in the combat of Confession: But after he had left off his military course of life, he became a zealous Emulator of those that were (p) Ascetæ in their Studies and Exercises of Piety; and, like a Father, and a Patron, demonstrated himself to be an Overseer as it were, and an helper of desolate Orphans and Widows that were destitute of assistance, and of those that were reduced to poverty and sickness. Wherefore, by God (who is more delighted with such [performances] as these, than with the smoak and blood of Sacrifices) he was deservedly accounted worthy of that admirable and high calling, [to wit,] Martyrdom. This was the tenth Champion, who, after the others before-mention'd, ended his life on the very same day; whereon (as it is probable) the great Gate of Heaven was open'd by the Martyrdom of Pamphilus, (suitable to the worth of that person) which gave both him, and his Companions, an easie entrance into the Celestial Kingdom. Also, Theodulus (a venerable and pious old man, belonging to the President's own Family, for whom Firmilianus had a greater esteem than for all his other Domesticks; partly upon account of his age, having seen his Children to the third Generation; and partly in respect of the singular affection and conscionable fidelity, which he had continually retain'd towards him;) having follow'd Seleucus's steps, and performed the same things that he did, was brought before his Master, against whom he was more exasperated than against any of the former [Martyrs;] and being forthwith put upon a Cross, he underwent the same sort of Martyrdom our Saviour suffered. Moreover, one being yet wanting, who might render the number of the foresaid Martyrs compleatly twelve, Julianus intervened to make up their number. At that very interim he was coming from a remote Country, and had not entred the City; but, being informed [of the slaughter] of the Martyrs, ran immediately (in the same habit he had on) out of the road, to see that spectacle. When he saw the dead Bodies of those holy persons lying upon the ground, being filled with an extraordinary joy, he embraced every one of them, and kissed them all. Whilst he was doing this, the [Soldiers] that were the Instruments to commit those Murders, apprehend him, and bring him to Firmilianus. He, doing herein what was agreeable to his [usual cruelty,] order'd that this person also should be consumed by a slow fire. Thus was Julianus also accounted worthy [to receive] the Crown of of Martyrdom, leaping for joy, and being exceeding glad; and with a loud voice giving great thanks to the Lord, who had vouchsafed him so great an honour. This Julianus was by Country a Cappadocian; as to his Morals, he was eminently pious and circumspect, and famous for his most genuine and sincere Faith: He was very active and diligent in all things, being inspired by the Holy Ghost. Such was the File [of Martyrs,] who were vouchsafed to arrive at Martyrdom in company with Pamphilus. The holy, and truly sacred Bodies of these persons were, by the impious President's order, watch'd for the space of four days, and as many nights, and exposed to be devour'd by

Maximinus.

(p) Christophorson judged amiss, in that he supposed by the term [ἀσκητὰς] Monks were meant. For, at that time there were no Monks; or, if there were any they differed much from the Ascetæ. For Monks (as their name, Monachi, denotes) affected solitude: But the Ascetæ did converse publickly in the Cities. Whosoever therefore lived a more strict and severe course of life according to the Precepts of the Gospel, and left all they had, upon God's account, were termed Ascetæ: Thus one Peter is called Asceta, and a Virgin is termed Ascetria, before in this Book of Eusebius: Should any one term these Monks, doubtless he would be much mistaken. St. Jerom says expressly, that there was no Monk in Palestine before Hilarion. But Peter, the Asceta, lived in Palestine long before Hilarion's time. Vales.

(m) In stead of [μακρῷ πυρὶ, a fire at a distance] Christophorson seems to have read [μαλθακῷ πυρὶ, a slow, or remiss fire: See his Translation. Hervetus also has rendred it thus, Pronuntiat sententiam ut tradatur molli & lento igni, he pronounc'd sentence upon him, that he should be set into [and consumed by] a soft and gentle fire. The same is confirmed by Eusebius's following Words: For he says, that Porphyrius was fastned to a Stake, and that the Pile, which lay round him, but at some distance, was kindled; that so the Martyr might be consumed by a slack fire. We read of the same sort of punishment in the passion of Pionius, and of other Martyrs. Eusebius uses [μακρὸν πῦρ] in the same sense hereafter, where he mentions Julianus. Further, we must take notice that both Porphyrius and Julianus were Catechumens; as Metaphrastes informs us. Vales.

* See B. 6. Chap. 19. Note (p.)

(n) This Garment is in the Greek termed Ἔξωμις; see its description in A. Gellius, Book 7. Chap. 12.

(o) Ἡλικία is the term in the original; it peculiarly imports that Age, which is fit for warfare; which Livy stiles militarem ætatem, the military Age; beginning from the seventeenth year of a Man's age, says Plutarch (in Graccho.)

Maximinus. by Beaſts that prey on Fleſh. But when (as it miraculouſly happen'd) no Wild-Beaſt, or Fowl, or Dog approach'd them [during that time,] at laſt (Divine Providence ſo ordering the matter,) they were taken away whole and untorn; and, having been allow'd ſuch Funeral Rites as befitted them, received the uſual Interment. Whilſt the diſcourſe concerning the [Preſident's] furious rage againſt theſe perſons was yet rife in all Mens mouths, Adrianus and Eubulus (arriving, from that Country called Manganæa, at Cæſarea, to give a viſit to the reſt of the Confeſſors,) were examined alſo at the Gate of the City, for what reaſon they came thither. And, having confeſſed the truth, they were brought before Firmilianus: He (as he had uſually done before) was in no wiſe dilatory in his Proceedings towards them alſo; but after he had furrow'd their Sides with many tortures, condemned them to be devour'd by Wild-Beaſts. Therefore, after two days ſpace, on the fifth of the month Dyſtrus, (that is, before the third of the Nones of March,) the day whereon the nativity of the (q) publick Genius (as the Heathens account it) is celebrated at Cæſarea, Adrianus was caſt to a Lyon; after which a Sword was thruſt through his Body, and ſo he ended his life. On the next day after ſave one, that is, on the very Nones of March, which is the ſeventh of the month Dyſtrus, Eubulus (after the Judge had entreated him with much earneſtneſs, that by offering Sacrifice he would procure for himſelf that which they account liberty,) preferring a glorious Death for his Religion before this tranſitory Life, (when he had been expoſed to the Wild-Beaſts, and been made a Sacrifice after the ſame manner with the former Martyr,) was the laſt that cloſed up the Combats of the Martyrs at Cæſarea. Moreover, it will be worthy our recording here, how Divine Providence ſoon after puniſhed theſe impious Preſidents, together with the Tyrants themſelves. For Firmilianus, who had been ſo reproachfully outragious againſt Chriſt's Martyrs, having with ſome others been adjudg'd to undergo a capital puniſhment, was beheaded. And theſe were the Martyrdoms, accompliſh'd at Cæſarea, during the whole time of the Perſecution.

(q) In times paſt all Cities had their Genius's, in honour of which Temples were erected, which they called τυχαῖα. Marcus (in the life of Porphyrius) mentions the Tycheum of Gaza: And there was a Tycheum at Alexandria, mentioned in Cod. Theod. and in Libanius's deſcriptions lately publiſhed by the Learned Leo Allatius. Alſo the Temple of the Genius at Antiochia is mentioned by Julian in Miſopog. which paſſage we cited before. The Genius of Cæſarea in Cappadocia had its Temple; concerning which ſee Gregor. Naz. in his firſt Invective againſt Julian, pag. 91. and in his 19th Oration, pag. 309. The Genius was a tutelar God, that (as the Heathens thought) had undertaken the particular protection of any City, or Town. Valeſ.

Concerning the Prelates of the Churches.

BUT, what happen'd to be done in relation to the Prelates of Churches (a) during this interval of time, and afterwards; how, inſtead of being continued Paſtors of Chriſt's Rational Flock, which they had not rightly and duly governed, Divine Juſtice, judging them as it were (a) Theſe Words are very obſcure. Chriſtophorſon thought they were to be underſtood concerning the time of the Perſecution; I am not of his mind. For Euſebius ſpeaks concerning what happened, when the fury of the Perſecution was in ſome meaſure abated. Therefore [ὅτι τότοις] ſignifies poſtea, afterwards; according to Euſebius's uſual way of expreſſing himſelf, both in other places, and alſo hereafter in this Chapter. The following Words [ἄχρι τὸν ἐν μέσῳ χειμῶνα] denote the whole interval of time from the beginning of the Perſecution to its ſeventh year, as Euſebius informs us in the following Chapter. Valeſ.

Maximinus. fit for ſuch Offices, condemn'd them to be employ'd in looking after (b) Camels, a brutiſh ſort of Creatures, whoſe Bodies are naturally crooked and miſ-ſhapen; and how it adjudged them to be Keepers of the Emperor's Horſes; alſo, what and how great Injuries, Diſhonours, and Tortures they ſuffered from ſuch, as during thoſe times were the Emperor's Procurators, and Governours of Provinces, upon account of the ſacred Veſſels and Treaſures belonging to the Church; moreover, the ambitious deſires of many, the inconſiderate and illegal Ordinations, and the Schiſms amongſt the (c) Confeſſors themſelves; beſides, what thoſe modern raiſers of Diſturbances with much earneſtneſs attempted againſt the remains of the Church, introducing Innovations ſucceſſively one after another, being without intermiſſion Authors of Evils even in the midſt of the Calamities cauſed by the Perſecution, and heaping Miſchiefs upon Miſchiefs: All this [I ſay] I think fit to omit, a relation hereof being in my judgment inconvenient, and which (as I ſaid in the (d) beginning of this Book) I do altogether diſlike, and am reſolved to avoid. Suppoſing it therefore to be moſt accommodate for an Hiſtory concerning the admirable Martyrs, to ſpeak, write, and inſtil into the Ears of Believers what ever is of importance to, and commendable in, our Religion, and thoſe paſſages which are virtuous and praiſe-worthy; I thought good to adorn the cloſe of this Book with [a Relation of] that Peace, which afterwards appeared to us from Heaven.

(b) It was a ſort of puniſhment amongſt the Romans, that free-men, (i.e. thoſe that were free of Rome) ſhould be condemned to look after the Emperor's Horſes and Camels, and to ſuch like offices. This employment was called Camelaſia, and it is reckoned amongſt the perſonal Offices, in the Pandects (Tit. de Muner. & Honor.) Altho' in that place of the Pandects, the Emperor's Camels are not ſpoken of, but thoſe Camels are meant belonging to every City, which were uſed to fetch Wood and other burthens; as appears from the 18th Law, in the ſaid Title. But Euſebius does here ſpeak of the Emperor's Horſes and Camels, to the feeding whereof ſome Biſhops were condemned. Now, there is a great difference between theſe two Offices. For the former was a civil Office, to which the Decurions of the white Order were promoted, as 'tis ſaid in the fore-quoted Law. But the latter was a penal ſervitude, to which Criminals were condemned, as may be collected from Euſebius's words here. Moreover, theſe Camelarii (keepers of Camels) were under his care and diſpoſe, that was the Comes rei privatæ, (i. e. the Treaſurer of the Privy-purſe to the Emperor; ſee Valeſ. Notes on Amm. Marcell. Book 22. pag. 207.) under whom were the Maſters of the Flocks, and of the Stables; as appears from the Notitia Imperii Romani. See the Acts of Marcellus the Pope. Valeſ.

(c) He means the Schiſm between Meletius Lycopolitanus and Peter Biſhop of Alexandria; concerning which ſee Athanaſius and Epiphanius. He means alſo Donatus's Schiſm in Africa, againſt Cæcilianus the Biſhop. Valeſ.

(d) The place Euſebius here ſpeaks of is not to be found in this Book. Whence 'tis apparent, that this Book, concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine, is imperfect. Any body may perceive that the beginning of it is wanting. But this defect may be made up from Chap. 2. Book 8. of the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, where Euſebius ſays that, which he mentions here, as ſpoken of before by himſelf. Valeſ.

CHAP. XIII.

Concerning Silvanus, John, and Thirty nine other Martyrs.

THE ſeventh Year of the Perſecution againſt us was now compleated; and our Affairs, (having by little and little obtain'd ſome thing of a tendency towards a quiet poſture by an abatement of their Heats who had been our malicious Detractors,) proceeded on to the eighth year, when no ſmall number of Confeſſors were gather'd together about the Braſs Mines in Paleſtine, and enjoy'd their liberty to ſuch a degree, that they erected Buildings to make Churches of: But] the Governour of the Province (a cruel and wicked perſon, as he manifeſted himſelf to be, upon account of what he did againſt the Martyrs) making a journey thither, and being inform'd of their

Maximinus. their way of living in that place, acquainted the Emperor therewith, writing what he judged ſuitable to calumniate them. Afterwards, the Governour of the Mines came thither, and (as if he had had an Imperial Order ſo to do,) having ſeparated that Company of Confeſſors, allotted Cyprus to be the place of habitation for ſome of them, and Libanus for others. He diſperſed others of them in ſeveral places throughout Paleſtine, and gave order they ſhould all be wearied out with various ſorts of laborious Employments. Then he pick'd out four, which ſeem'd to be the moſt eminent perſons amongſt them, and ſent them to the Commander in Chief of the Military Forces in thoſe parts. Two of theſe were Egyptian Biſhops, by name Peleus and Nilus; the third was a (a) Presbyter; and the fourth was Patermuthius, a perſon ſignally renown'd amongſt all men upon account of his ſedulity in doing all men good offices. This Commander, having ask'd theſe men to renounce their Religion, and not obtaining his requeſt, order'd they ſhould be burnt to death. Again, there were others at the ſame place, (who were allotted a particular Country to inhabit in by themſelves,) to wit, ſuch of the Confeſſors, as either by reaſon of their age, or the mangling of their Members, or becauſe of other bodily Infirmities, were freed from doing ſervice in thoſe laborious employments. The principal among theſe was Silvanus, (b) a Biſhop born at Gaza, a perſon that demonſtrated himſelf to be a truly religious and moſt genuine Example of the Chriſtian Profeſſion. This man after he had been ſignally eminent in all ſorts of conflicts [undergone upon account] of Confeſſion, from the very firſt day (as I may ſay) of the Perſecution, and during the whole time it laſted, was reſerved for this opportunity, that he might in the laſt place ſeal up (as it were) all the Combats [of the Martyrs] in Paleſtine. Many Egyptians were with him; amongſt whom there was one * John, who for ſtrength of Memory far ſurpaſſed all Men of our age. This Man had been deprived of his Eye-ſight before. Nevertheleſs, in the conflicts of Confeſſion (wherein he got great renown) when one of his Feet (after the ſame manner that others were ſerved) was rendred uſeleſs by being ſcared with red-hot Irons; his Eyes alſo (altho' he could not then ſee) were burnt out with Searing-irons: To ſuch an height of cruelty and inhumanity had the mercileſs and incompaſſionate Executioners then arrived in their carriage [towards the Chriſtians!] 'Tis needleſs to extol this Man for his Morals, and the Philoſophick Life he led, eſpecially ſince he was not ſo admirable upon that account, as for his ſtrength of Memory; [for] he had whole Books of the ſacred Scriptures written (not on Tables of Stone, as the Divine Apoſtle ſays, nor on Parchments, or Paper, which are devoured by Moths and time, but) on the fleſhly Tables of his Heart, that is, on his bright Soul, [which were legible] to the moſt clear Eye of his Mind. In ſo much that, whenever he pleaſed, he could produce out of his Mouth, as it were out of a Treaſury of Learning, ſometimes the Books of the Law and thoſe of the Prophets, another while the Hiſtorical parts of Scripture, and again at other times the Evangelick and Apoſtolick Writings. I was, I confeſs, amazed, when I firſt ſaw this Man ſtanding in the midſt of a numerous Eccleſiaſtick Congregation, and repeating ſome parts of the Divine Scripture. For as long as I could only hear his voice, I ſuppoſed him to have read what is uſually rehearſed in ſuch Aſſemblies. But when I approach'd very near, and ſaw plainly what was done, to wit, all the reſt [in the Aſſembly] ſtanding round, and having their Eye-ſight clear and perfect, and him making uſe of the Eyes of his Underſtanding only, in reality delivering Oracles like ſome Prophet, and far ſurpaſſing thoſe that were ſound and healthy in body; I could not forbear praiſing and glorifying of God. And I thought that I really beheld a firm and moſt evident inſtance to perſwade me to believe, that he is to be accounted truly a Man, (not who appears ſo to be by the external ſhape of his Body, but) who is ſuch in reſpect of his Mind and Underſtanding. For altho' this perſon had a mangled and deformed Body, yet he demonſtrated the ſtrength of his internal Faculties to be great and moſt powerful. Moreover, God himſelf vouchſafed to allot theſe forementioned perſons (who, living in a place apart by themſelves, ſpent their time according to the uſual manner in Prayers, Faſtings, and in the performance of other ſevere exerciſes of Religion,) a bleſſed and ſalutary death; reaching out to them his propitious Right Hand. * But that malicious Enemy of all Goodneſs, unable to endure them any longer, in regard they were carefully arm'd againſt him with their continual Prayers to God, reſolved to have them killed and removed from off the Earth, as being troubleſome to him. Which God permitted him to attempt and perform; both that he ſhould not be hindred from doing miſchief, agreeable to his own mind and purpoſe; and that they might at length receive the Rewards of their various Combats. Thus therefore nine and thirty perſons were beheaded on one and the ſame day, by an Order from the moſt impious Maximin. Theſe were the Martyrdoms perpetrated in Paleſtine during the ſpace of ten years, and ſuch was the Perſecution in our days; which having been began from thoſe times wherein the Churches were demoliſhed, was much increaſed in the times ſucceeding by the Governour's Inſolencies. Amidſt which, their various and different Combats who were Religious Champions, made an innumerable company of Martyrs throughout every Province; to wit, in Libya, and throughout all Egypt, Syria, and all thoſe Provinces, which reach from the Eaſt round to the Country of Illyricum. For thoſe Regions ſcituate beyond theſe now mentioned, that is, all Italy, Sicily, France, and thoſe which lie towards the Sun-ſetting, Spain, Mauritania, and Africa, having not indured the rage of the Perſecution full out the ſpace of the two firſt years, were vouchſafed a ſudden viſitation from God, and [obtain'd] peace: Divine Providence taking compaſſion on the Simplicity and Faith of thoſe Men. Further, an accident (a parallel to which the Records from the very firſt beginning of the Roman Empire cannot ſhew) happened now firſt in

Maximinus.

* The Devil.

(a) His name was Helias; who together with Patermuthius, was burnt to death; as 'tis recorded in the Greek Manæa, at the 17th of September. Photius mentions Patermuthius, in his Biblioth. Chap. 118; where he ſpeaks of the Books written by Pamphilus the Martyr, during his impriſonment, in defence of Origen. Valeſ.

(b) By theſe Words Euſebius ſeems to declare, that this Silvanus was not Biſhop of Gaza: For Euſebius only ſays that Silvanus was born at Gaza, and made Biſhop over thoſe Chriſtians that wrought in the Mines in Paleſtine. The Greeks (in their Menæa, at the 14th of October) ſeem to have taken theſe Words of Euſebius in this ſenſe. For they ſay that Silvanus was Presbyter of the Church at Gaza: And, after he had ſuffered moſt acute tortures at Cæſarea, was condemned to the Mines, where the Office of a Biſhop was conferred on him by the Chriſtians. So the Menæa. But Euſebius (in Book 8. Chap. 13.) does expreſly call him Biſhop of Gaza. Valeſ.

* This John is mentioned in the Menæum, at the twentieth of September. Valeſ.

Maximinus. in theſe our days, contrary to all expectation. For, during the Perſecution in our times, the Empire was divided into two parts. Thoſe Brethren which were Inhabitants of the one part, that juſt now mentioned, enjoy'd peace: But ſuch as dwelt in the other part of the Empire, endured innumerable Conflicts [renew'd againſt them] ſucceſſively. But when Divine Grace gave ſome Indications of its candid and compaſſionate Viſitation of us, then thoſe very Governours of ours (who before had been raiſers of the Wars waged againſt us in our days,) having moſt miraculouſly altered their minds, ſounded a Retreat; extinguiſhing the flame of Perſecution kindled againſt us, by Reſcripts publiſhed in favour to us, and by mild Edicts. (c) 'Tis requiſite, that we record their Retraction. Maximinus.

(c) The concluſion of this Book is wanting; to wit, the Retractation, of the Emperors, or Galerius Maximianus's Edict, ordering a ſtop to be put to the Perſecution. But this defect may be eaſily made up from the laſt Chapter of the Eighth Book of the Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. Valeſ.

CHAP. I.

Concerning the counterfeited Ceſſation [of the Perſecution.]

THIS Revocation contained in the Imperial Edict (a) mentioned before, was publiſhed in all parts of Aſia, and (b) throughout the adjacent Provinces. After which Publications thus made, Maximin the Eaſtern Tyrant, a perſon as impious as ever breathed, and a moſt deadly Enemy to the Worſhip of the ſupream God;) being in no wiſe pleaſed with theſe Reſcripts, inſtead of the foremention'd Edict, iſſues out a verbal Order only to thoſe Governours within his Juriſdiction, that they ſhould ſtop the Perſecution againſt us. For, in regard he durſt not in any wiſe oppoſe the Decree of his Superiors, * having concealed the foremention'd Edict, and taken ſuch care, as that it ſhould not be publickly propoſed in the Provinces under his Juriſdiction; he gives order by word of mouth only to thoſe Governours under him, that they ſhould put a ſtop to the Perſecution againſt us; of which Order they inform one another by Letters. For Sabinus, who was then honoured with the Præfecture of the Prætorium (the chiefeſt Office (c) among them) in a Latin Epiſtle to the Governours of the Provinces declared the (d) Emperor's Pleaſure; (c) Inſtead of [παρ' αὐτοῖς, with them] the reading in Nicephorus is [παρ' αὐτῶ,] with him, ſhewing that Sabinus was Præfect of the Prætorium to Maximin. But our Copies do all agree in the former reading, that is [with them,] in the plural number; which is the trueſt. For, although Sabinus bore the Præfecture of the Prætorium (which we may call the Office of Lord Chief Juſtice, or of Lieutenant General under the Emperor, to govern Provinces in Civil Cauſes; See Pancirol. in Notitiam Imper. Orient. cap. 5.) under Maximinus Cæſar in the Eaſt; yet becauſe he was made Præfect by Galerius, therefore he is ſtiled the Præfect of the Emperors, meaning Galerius and Maximinus. For the Cæſars had not the power of creating Præfects; but they were made by the Auguſti, as may be ſhewn from many places in Amm. Marcellinus. Hence 'tis, that Sabinus in his Edict (which Euſebius does here inſert) always ſpeaks of the Emperors in the plural number, to let the Governors of particular Provinces underſtand, that that was the Command of the Emperors, to wit, Galerius, Conſtantinus, Licinius, and Maximinus. Alſo, by theſe words [παρ' αὐτοῖς] may be meant the Governors of thoſe Provinces which were under Maximin's juriſdiction: For Euſebius ſpeaks of them in the foregoing Sentence. Indeed, this expoſition ſeems moſt natural to me; but then we muſt render [παρ' αὐτοῖς] not with, but amongſt them; which Rendition the Greek will bear. Valeſ.

(d) Ruſinus tranſlates this place thus; Sed Sabinus, &c. But Sabinus, who at that time was chief of the Provinces; and inſerted the foremention'd Imperial Edict, thereby manifeſting to all Men that which Maximin had attempted to conceal. But Ruſinus has not expreſſed Euſebius's meaning in this Rendition of his words. For Sabinus did not ſet Galerius the Emperor's Decree before his own Order, as it was uſual for the Præfects of the Prætorium to do; in regard Maximin had made it his buſineſs, that that Imperial Conſtitution ſhould be concealed from thoſe Provinces under his Government. For he was highly diſpleaſed at Galerius's Reſcript; both in regard the Chriſtians (whom he had hitherto moſt barbarouſly perſecuted,) were delivered from his butcheries; and alſo becauſe his name was not prefix'd before the foreſaid Decree. For, after Galerius's and Conſtantine's name, Licinius's was ſet before the Reſcript: But Maximin's name, (he being as yet but Cæſar only) was not there. Therefore, partly for ſhame, partly out of indignation, Maximin ſuppreſſed that Edict. But Sabinus

(a) Προστεθεὶς (the term here uſed) muſt be taken for μεταστεθεὶς, as is frequent in our Author. We have this revocation of the Emperor's Decree in the 8th Book of this Hiſtory, at the latter end. Valeſ.

(b) By theſe words [τὰς ἀμφὶ ταύτην ἐπαρχίας] Chriſtoph. underſtands all the Provinces of Aſia; but Ruſinus thinks Pontus, Bithynia, Galatia and the reſt of the Provinces bordering on every ſide are meant, which were under the Emperor Galerius's Government; excepting only the Eaſtern Provinces, over which Maximinus Cæſar was Ruler. Valeſ.

* Ἐν ἀποβύστῳ θεῖς, we have tranſlated having concealed: The Phraſe is borrowed from the Attick Lawyers; ἀπόβυστον with them ſignifies that Court where Matters of ſmall importance were adjuſted, to wit, not exceeding one drachm. The Judges of this Court were the Undecemviri; This Court ſtood in an obſcure place of the City, and hence ἐν ἀποβύστῳ is in Demoſthenes, and here alſo in our Author, us'd metaphorically, for privily.

(in this Epiſtle of his to the Preſidents of the Provinces) makes very little mention of this Conſtitution, becauſe he would not diſpleaſe Maximin. Further, by the word [Emperor] Chriſtophorſon thought Maximin was meant. But I like Ruſinus's Verſion better, who ſuppoſed Galerius to be underſtood thereby; and beſides, Euſebius uſually calls Maximin by the name of Tyrant, not Cæſar. Valeſ.

Maximinus. the Contents of which Letter we have thus tranſlated:

The Majeſty of our moſt ſacred Lords the Emperors, by their earneſt and moſt devout Care, have long ſince determined to render the Minds of all Men conformable to the true and holy Rule of Living; that by this means they who ſeem to have embraced Uſages different from thoſe of the Romans, might be induced to exhibit due Worſhip to the Immortal Gods. But the obſtinate and moſt untractable Perverſeneſs of ſome Mens Minds was arrived at ſuch an height, that neither could the Juſtice of the [Imperial] *Decree prevail with them to recede from their own Reſolutions, nor the imminent Puniſhment annexed ſtrike any terror into them. Since therefore it might have happened, that upon this account many would have precipitated themſelves into danger; the Sacred Majeſty of our Lords the moſt Puiſſant Emperors, (according to their innate Clemency) judging it diſagreeable to their own moſt ſacred Intent, that upon this occaſion Men ſhould be ſurrounded with ſuch great danger; enjoyn'd our * Devotion to write to your Prudence: That if evidence be brought againſt any* Chriſtian for his following that way of Worſhip obſerved amongſt thoſe of his own Religion, you ſhould ſecure him and ſet him free from all danger and moleſtation, and that you ſhould condemn none to be puniſhed upon account of this pretence. For ſince it has been manifeſtly evidenced that during ſo long a tract of time they could by no means be perſwaded to deſiſt from their perverſe Stubborneſs; your Prudence therefore is enjoyn'd to write to the Curators, to the Magiſtrates, and to the Preſidents of the Villages [belonging to] every City, that they may underſtand, that for the future they are not to take any further care concerning (e) this affair.

* I ſuppoſe, theſe are the terms of honour, which theſe great Officers had given to them in all Addreſſes; and which they themſelves alſo made uſe of, when they mentioned themſelves in any Letters they wrote to others: The Words in the Greek are καθοσίωσις, which Valeſius renders devotio; and ἐγχείνεια, by him tranſlated Solertia.

(e) I doubt not but in ſtead of [τὸ γράμμα] Θ, this decree] it ought to be [τὸ πράγμα] Θ, this affair.] Which amendment Nicephorus confirms Book 7. Chap. 24. who has expreſs'd this place thus, that they ſhould not trouble themſelves any further about the Chriſtians. Valeſ.

Hereupon, all the Governours of Provinces, ſuppoſing that the Letter written to them [by Sabinus] contained [Maximin's] true and genuine meaning, did by their Letters communicate the Emperor's pleaſure to the Curators, Magiſtrates, and Preſidents of the Villages. Nor did they urge theſe things to them by Letters only, but much more by ſuch deeds, as that the Prince's Command might thereby be put in execution; bringing forth, and ſetting at liberty thoſe Priſoners which they had in hold for Confeſſion of the Faith of God; and alſo releaſing them who had been adjudged to the puniſhment of working in the Mines. For they ſuppoſed that this would in reality be well-pleaſing to the * Emperor, but herein they were miſtaken. Theſe things being thus finiſhed, on a ſudden (like ſome bright-ſhining Light which darts forth its Rays after a thick darkſome Night,) you might have ſeen Churches gathered together throughout every City; full Aſſemblies; and the uſual (f) ſolemn Services performed at theſe Meetings. All the Infidels were not a little aſtoniſhed at theſe things, wondring at ſo great and unexpected an alteration of Affairs; and crying out, that the God of the Chriſtians was the Great and only True God. Alſo, thoſe of our Religion, who had faithfully and manfully ſtrove in the Combat of Perſecution, obtained great confidence and freedom amongſt all Men. But as many as through weakneſs of Faith had made ſhipwreck of their Souls, with much earneſtneſs ran to ſeek for a remedy; begging and praying for an aſſiſting Right Hand from them that were ſtrong, and ſupplicating God to be merciful to them. Moreover, ſoon after this, the Noble Champions of Religion, releaſed from their ſervitude in labouring in the Mines, return'd to their own Countries; and being glad and jocund, travelling through the Cities, were filled with an inexpreſſible Joy, and a Confidence unutterable. Thus did numerous Companies of perſons that were Chriſtians perform their Journies, lauding God with Hymns and Pſalms in the midſt of the High-ways and Market-places. And you might now have ſeen thoſe, (who but lately had been in Bonds, groaning under moſt ſevere Puniſhments, and driven from their own Countries) with joyful and pleaſant Countenances poſſeſſing their own Habitations again: In ſo much that they, who formerly [threatned to] murther and deſtroy us, when they ſaw this Miracle which did ſo far ſurpaſs all Mens expectation, rejoyc'd with us at what had happened.

* To Maximin.

(f) Συνάξεις, aſſemblies, is here uſed inſtead of σωνάξεις, ſolemn ſervices. Dionyſius Alexandr. uſed this term in the ſame ſenſe, as we noted before. There was a twofold Synaxis; one of the Prayers; the other of the Sacraments. Athanaſius mentions the former, in his Apology to Conſtantius. Valeſ.

CHAP. II.

Concerning the Change of Affairs which did afterwards enſue.

BUT the Tyrant (who, as we ſaid before, Ruled in the Eaſtern parts) no longer able to endure theſe things, (he being a profeſſed Enemy to Goodneſs, and one who laid wait to enſnare all good Men) ſuffered not this ſtate of Affairs to continue (a) the ſpace of ſix months complete. But, inventing all the ways imaginable to ſubvert the Peace, firſt he attempted (upon ſome pretence or other) to hinder us from aſſembling in the * Cœmiteria. Afterwards (b) he ſends an Embaſſie to himſelf againſt us, having ſollicited the Antiochians, by the means of ſome impious perſons, that they ſhould petition to obtain this from him (under the notion of the greateſt favour,) to wit, that he would impower them to ſuffer no Chriſtians to dwell amongſt them: He alſo excited the Inhabitants of other Cities to do the like. The Chief of all theſe was one Theotecnus, an Antiochian; a turbulent Perſon, an Impoſtor, and a wicked Man, (whoſe Nature was not anſwerable to his † Name;) he was at that time (c) Curator of Antioch.

(a) Maximinus Galerius did not live long after he had made that Decree for the Peace and Liberty of the Chriſtians, but within a few months after, dy'd of a wound which had feſter'd. See the Appendix to the eighth Book of this Hiſtory. When Maximinus Cæſar heard of his death, he renewed the Perſecution againſt the Chriſtians, and proclaimed himſelf Auguſtus; whereas he was only Cæſar before, and was compelled to obey the Commands of Galer. Auguſtus. Valeſ.

* See Book 7. Chap. 11. Note (f.)

(b) What is meant by this elegant paſſage [αὐτὸς ἑαυτῷ καθ' ἡμῶν πρεσβεύεται] neither Chriſtophorſon nor Muſculus underſtood: the meaning of it is this: Maximin ſent underhand ſome cunning Men to ſollicit the Antiochians, to ſend Embaſſadors to his Court, to requeſt of him, that they might have liberty to drive out all Chriſtians from amongſt them. Hence Maximin, who did underhand procure this Embaſſy, may well be ſaid to have ſent this Embaſſy to himſelf, and he himſelf to have been the Embaſſador; this tranſpoſition of Words is frequent and familiar in Euſebius. Valeſ.

† The import of Theotecnus in the Greek, is, a Son of God.

CHAP. III.

Concerning an Image newly made at Antioch.

WHen this [Theotecnus] therefore had several ways made his attacks against us, and had taken all imaginable care to hunt those of our Religion out of their Coverts, (as if they had been Thieves and Malefactors,) and had invented all the ways and methods of calumniating and accusing us, and had been the occasion of putting many Men to death: At last he erects an Image of (a) Jupiter Philius, and (b) consecrates it with Magick Charms. And, having invented and instituted, in honour of it, impure Ceremonies, execrable Initiations, and most detestable Expiations; he gave the Emperor himself a demonstration of the imposture of his Oracles, by which he effected what he had undertaken. Moreover, this Man, to please the Emperor by his Flattery, stirreth up the Dæmon against the Christians; feigning that God commanded, that the Christians (as being his Enemies) should be banished the City, and all the Countries adjoyning to the City.

(a) This Temple of Jupiter Philius at Antioch is mention'd by Julianus, in Misopogone, and by Libanus (if I mistake not) in Antiochico. Vales.

(b) The Ceremonies of the Gentiles, used in the erection aud consecration of Images to their Gods, were various. For Jupiter Ctesius was consecrated with one sort of Rites, Herceus with another, and Philius with a third sort. Jupiter Ctesius, whose Image they kept in their Store-houses, was consecrated with a little Tub. Anticlides (in Ξηγλικῷ, that is, in his B. De Ritubus Sacris, apud Athenæum, B. 11. Cap. 6.) relates the Ceremonies of Consecration. Jupiter Herceus was consecrated with Pots: See Aristophanes in Danaidibus. After the same manner were those Images Consecrated, which they erected to Mercury, and other Gods: And this they termed, χύτρους ἱδρύειν, to Consecrate with Pots. In these Pots they boyled all sorts of pulse, of which they offered sacrifice to those Gods they Consecrated, in memory of the food eaten in old times, and of the frugality of the Ancients. But when they designed to be at greater cost in treating their God, then they killed a sacrifice at the erection of his Image; which they termed ἱδρύειν ἱερείῳ, to Consecrate with a slain Sacrifice. See Aristophanes (in Irene) and his Scholiast. pag. 693. See Suidas also, in the word χανῶν. Besides these Ceremonies, they used sometimes Magical Consecrations; So Theotecnus did here, in the Dedication of an Image to Jupiter Philius. Vales.

CHAP. IV.

Concerning the Decrees [of the Cities] against the Christians.

WHen Theotecnus, (the first person that acted against us) had had this desired success, all the other Magistrates, inhabiting the Cities under Maximin's Jurisdiction, hastned to establish the same Decree; also, the Governours of Provinces, perceiving that this was acceptable to the Emperor, prompted those that lived within their District, to do the same thing: Moreover, when the Tyrant had by his Rescript most willingly assented to their Ordinances, the Flame of Persecution was again kindled afresh against us. At length, Priests of the Images were constituted in every City; and moreover, such Men as had been most eminent in State Employments, and had acquitted themselves honourably in the publick Offices they had born, were by (a) Maximin himself created Chief Priests. These Men were very diligent and earnest about the Worship of their Gods. For, (that I may speak briefly) the great Superstition of this Emperor had such an influence as well upon the Governours, as the Private Persons within the Limits of his Government, that it induced them all to act any thing against us in compliance to him: And they thought, that to murther us, and to invent some new mischievous Stratagems against us, was the most grateful Acknowledgment they could pay for the Favours they expected to receive from him.

Maximinus.

(a) By ἀρχιερεῖς are meant Sacerdotes Provinciarum. Concerning whom see Book 8. Chap. 14. Note (b.) A Sacerdos Provinciæ was created by the Votes of the Decuriones, i. e. the Senators, or Aldermen of the City. Now those Men especially were advanced to this Dignity, who had with honour acquitted themselves in the discharge of all Offices belonging to the Court; as we may see in Cod. Theod. Tit. De Decurionibus. Eusebius here takes notice of it as a thing new and unusual, that Maximinus himself should elect the Sacerdotes Provinciæ. Vales.

CHAP. V.

Concerning the forged Acts.

HAving therefore forged some (a) Acts of Pilate concerning our Saviour, which were stuffed with all manner of Blasphemy against Christ; by [Maximin] the Emperor's Order they send them throughout all his Dominions; commanding by their Letters that these Records should be posted up in all places, both in the Country and in the Cities; and that such as were School-masters should give them to their Scholars in stead of their Lessons, and make them study them, that so they might have them imprinted on their Memories. Whilst these things were done after this manner, the Chief Commander in the Army at Damascus, a City of Phœnicia (whom the Romans call a Captain) having haled some infamous Women out of the Marketplace, compelled them by threatning them with tortures, to (b) testifie, by subscribing the said publick Records, that they were formerly Christians; and that they were conscious to their prophane practices; and that in their very Churches they perform'd obscene and lascivious actions; and what-ever else he would have them say, that might bring a scandal upon our Religion. The Testimonies of these Women he inserted into the said Acts, and sent them to the Emperor: By whose order these very Records were published in every City, and in all other places.

(a) Concerning the falseness of these Acts, see what Eusebius has remark'd B. 1. Chap. 9. These Acts are mention'd in Act. Præsidial. Tarachi, Probi, & Andronici, cap. 9. where Maximus the President says these words, Wretch, knowest thou not, that that Christ, whom thou callest upon, was a Man committed to custody by Pontius Pilate, and punished by him; the Acts of whose passion are extant? Moreover, these Acta Præsidialia Tarachi, &c. were performed when Diocletian was Consul the fourth time, and Maximian the third, as the inscription of the first interrogatory sheweth. Whence 'tis plain, that these Acts of Pilate were forged long before the Persecution; the contrary to which Eusebius affirms in this place. But, that I may freely speak my sense, the inscription of these Acta præsidialia is in my judgment false; and it should be corrected thus, when Diocletian was Consul the ninth time, and Maximian the eighth: For (1) there is, in those Acts, mention of the Imperial Command, whereby 'twas ordered that all Men should sacrifice to the Gods. Now this command was issued out on the nineteenth year of Diocletian's Empire. (2) In the ninth Chapter these Words occur. The President said, you curse the Princes, who have secured a lasting and continual Peace. Andronicus said, I have cursed the Plague, and the Blood-thirsty, which destroy the World. That expression [concerning the securing a lasting and continual Peace] cannot agree with the fourth Consulate of Diocletian; for at that time the Barbarians attacked the Roman Empire on every side. Besides, I can't see how Diocletian and Maximian can be termed, Blood-thirsty, till after the 19th year of Diocletian, when the Persecution began. Lastly, which is another Argument, Eusebius affirms, that these Acts of Pilate were forged in the time of this Persecution. Vales.

(b) Rufinus has rendred the Greek Phrase here (which is λέγειν ἐγγράφως) thus, Actis profiteri, to attest the truth of the said Acts by signing of them: For an evidence may be given both by word of mouth, and in writing also. Vales.

CHAP. VI.

Concerning them that suffered Martyrdom in those Times.

BUT not long after, this Captain was his own Executioner, suffering a condign Punishment for his malicious Wickedness. And now

Maximinus.

Baniſhments and moſt horrid Perſecutions were a freſh raiſed againſt us; the Preſidents in every Province renewing their cruel Inſurrections againſt us: In ſo much that ſome of the moſt eminent Aſſerters of the Divine Faith were apprehended, and without any Commiſeration had the ſentence of Death pronounced againſt them. Three of them having profeſſed themſelves Chriſtians, were caſt to the Wild-Beaſts and devour'd by them at Emeſa, a City of Phœnicia: Amongſt them there was a Biſhop, one (a) Silvanus, a very old man, who had born that Office forty years compleat. At the ſame time alſo, (b) Peter, that moſt eminent Prelate of the Alexandrian Church, (the chiefeſt Ornament and Glory of the Biſhops, both for his virtuous Life, and his Study and Knowledge in the ſacred Scriptures) being apprehended for no crime at all, was beheaded contrary to every bodies expectation) by Maximin's order on a ſudden, and without any ſpecious pretence. Likewiſe many other Egyptian Biſhops ſuffered the ſame death that he did. (c) Lucianus alſo, Presbyter of the Church at Antioch, a very pious Man, much famed for his Continency, and his Knowledge in the ſacred Scriptures, was brought to the City of Nicomedia, (d) where the Emperor then kept his Court; and after he had made his Apology, in defence of that Doctrine which he aſſerted, before the Preſident he was committed to Priſon and murther'd. In fine, Maximin, that profeſſed Enemy of all Virtue, did in a ſhort time load us with ſuch Burthens of Afflictions, that this lattter ſtorm of Perſecution raiſed by him ſeemed to us far more grievous than the former.

(a) This Silvanus is a different perſon from that Silvanus which Euſebius mentions in his Book concerning the Martyrs of Paleſtine, chap. the laſt. For this was Biſhop of Emeſa; the other was Biſhop of Gaza. The firſt was beheaded in the Mines at Paleſtine with 39 other Martyrs; in the eighth year of the Perſecution. But this Silvanus was caſt to the wild Beaſts at Emeſa, on the ninth year of the Perſecution. Concerning this Man's Martyrdom Euſebius has ſaid ſomething before, in his eighth Book, although not in its proper place; ſee Book 8. Chap. 13. Valeſ.

(b) Euſebius mentioned this Man's Martyrdom before in the eighth Book, Chap. 13. but not in its proper place. For the eighth Book does not go beyond the eighth year of the Perſecution. But Peter Biſhop of Alexandria was Martyr'd in the ninth year of the Perſecution (which Euſebius expreſly affirmeth in the end of the ſeventh Book) upon the ſeventh of the Calends of December, as we read in the Excerpta Chronologica publiſhed by Scaliger. Uſuardus ſays the ſame; and ſo does Ado, and the old Roman Martyrology. The Greeks celebrate his birth-day on the 24th of November. The Acts of his Paſſion are extant in a MS. in Greek, which the Reverend Father Franciſcus Combefiſius has, and will ſhortly publiſh, with many other things. Valeſ.

(c) Euſebius has mentioned this Man's Martyrdom at Book 8. Chap. 13. though not in its due place. But here he remarks the time more diſtinctly, wherein Peter and Lucianus ſuffered; to wit, under Maximin; not in the Reign of Galerius Maximianus, as Baronius would have us believe, at the year of Chriſt 311. cap. 3. Alſo, Baronius is miſtaken in placing the Martyrdom of Peter Biſhop of Alexandria on the year of Chriſt 310. for he ſuffered in the year of our Lord 311, on the ninth year current of the Perſecution. Baronius's error aroſe from his beginning the Perſecution a year too ſoon; which miſtake we have ſufficiently confuted before, at Book 8. Chap. 2. Note (c.) Moreover, in regard Lucianus's Martyrdom happened under Maximin, the Martyrdom of Anthimus Biſhop of Nicomedia ſhould in my judgment, be placed under Maximin alſo. Indeed Anthimus ſuffered a little before Lucianus, as Lucianus informs us in his Epiſtle to the Antiochians, which I made mention of in Book 8. Chap. 13. Note (a). We may alſo make the ſame concluſion from the Acts of Lucianus the Martyr; where, inſtead of Maximinus, we read Maximianus, which is a common error in the Greeks. Valeſ.

(d) When Galerius was dead, Maximinus took poſſeſſion of Aſia and Bithynia; which Provinces (together with Illyricum, and Thracia) were governed by Galerius. For Galerius kept theſe Provinces for himſelf, as Eutropius informs us; the ſame is aſſerted by the old Author of the Excerptions, which I publiſhed at the end of my Amm. Marcellinus. Maximinus therefore made his abode at Nicomedia, which was the chief City of Bithynia; where the Emperors had a Pallace ever ſince Diocletian's time. Further, the following Words do evidently manifeſt, that by the term [Emperor] Maximinus muſt be meant. Wherefore I wonder at Baronius, for aſſerting that Lucianus ſuffered under Galerius, not under Maximin; when as Euſebius, contemporary with Lucianus, affirms he was killed by Maximin. CHAP. VII.

Concerning the Edict againſt us, which was [ingraven on Brazen Plates and] hung up on the Pillars.

MOreover, in the midſt of every City ((a) which was never ſeen before) the Decrees of Cities, and alſo the Imperial Edicts againſt us, were ingraven on Brazen Plates, and propoſed to open view. And the Boys in the Schools had nothing in their Mouths * all day long but Jeſus and Pilate, and the Acts which were forged to diſgrace us. I judge it pertinent to inſert here this very Reſcript of Maximin's, which was ingraven on Plates of Braſs: Both that the proud and arrogant Inſolency of this Man's Hatred towards God may be manifeſted: And alſo that it may hence be made apparent, that Divine Juſtice (which hates the Impious, and keeps a continual watch againſt them) did within a very ſhort time purſue and overtake him: By which Divine Juſtice he was enforced to alter his Sentiments ſoon after concerning us, and to confirm them by his Edicts in Writing. But theſe are the Contents of his Reſcript.

(a) Any Man may juſtly wonder why Euſebius ſhould affirm here, that this was never ſeen before. Were the Decrees of the Cities, or the Edicts of the Emperors, never publiſhed before now? This cannot be deny'd: Nor is it deny'd by our Euſebius. But that which he aſſerts to have never been ſeen before, is, the ingraving of theſe Edicts upon plates of Braſs. For (as we obſerved before, Book 8. Chap. 5. Note (b.) the Imperial Edicts were written on Paper. Valeſ.

* Καθ' πᾶσαν ἡμέραν, all day long; ſo Rufinus and Langus render it: Chriſtophorſon and Muſculus tranſlate it, quotidiè, daily. Valeſ.

A COPY OF THE TRANSLATION OF MAXIMIN'S RESCRIPT, IN ANSWER TO THE DECREES OF THE CITIES AGAINST US, TRANSCRIBED FROM A BRAZEN PLATE AT TYRE.

Now at length the infirm Confidence of Man's Mind, having ſhaken off and diſperſed the Cloud and Miſt of Error (which heretofore inveſted the Senſes of Men, not ſo much wicked as wretched, being involved in the fatal Night of Ignorance,) may diſcern, that it is undoubtedly governed and ſtrengthned by the indulgent Providence of the immortal Gods. It is incredible to expreſs how grateful, how pleaſing and acceptable a thing it was to us, that you gave ſuch a Proof of your Pious Reſolution towards the Gods. Indeed, before this time no perſon was inſenſible of the Obſervancy and Religious Worſhip you ſhew'd to the immortal Gods; (b) for your Faith is made known to them not in bare and empty Words, but by uninterrupted and miraculous eminent Acts, upon which account your City may deſervedly be ſtiled the Seat and Manſion of the immortal Gods. For it is manifeſtly evident by many Inſtances, that She flouriſheth by the (c) Arrival and Preſence of the Celeſtial Deities in Her: But lo! Now your City (careleſs of all its own particular Concerns, and having no regard to the Petitions, which in times paſt it did uſually make [to us] for the welfare of its Affairs,) when it was ſenſible that the Promoters of that accurſed themſelves. Maximin does attempt to blacken the faith of the Chriſtians by theſe words; he calls it, ἀσυκένων ῥημάτων πίστις, a faith of bare words: as if the Chriſtian faith had nothing in it but words, and were void of all reality. Valeſ.

(b) Chriſtophorſon and Muſculus thought that this clauſe ought to be referr'd to Deos (the Gods:) But we make it to be referr'd to the Tyrians

(c) The antients believed, that on ſet days the Gods deſcended into thoſe Cities for which they had a kindneſs: Hence it is that the Inhabitants of Delos and Miletum ſolemnized the coming of Apollo: and the Argivi, the advent of Diana. This coming of the Gods we find mentioned up and down in the Poets, as in Virgil. Hence it is, that upon old Coins, and in the Calendar, we find written Adventus Impp. Valeſ.

Vanity

Maximinus.

Vanity did begin to creep again, and [perceived] that (like Fire which is carelessly left and raked up,) it brake forth into violent Flames, the Brands thereof being rekindled, immediately without the least delay made its Address to our Piety, as to the Metropolis of all Religion, petitioning for a Redress and an Assistance. 'Tis evident that the Gods have instilled into your Minds this wholesome Advice upon account of your constant and faithful Perseverance in your Religion. For the most High and Mighty Jupiter, (who presides over your most famous City, and preserveth your Country Gods, your Wives and Children, your Families and Houses from all manner of Destruction and Ruin) hath breathed into your Minds this salutary Resolution; whence he hath evidenced and plainly demonstrated, what an excellent, noble, and comfortable thing it is, to adore him, and to approach the sacred Ceremonies of the immortal Gods with a due Observancy and Veneration. For what Man can there be found so foolish and so void of all Reason, who perceives not that it comes to pass by the favourable Care of the Gods towards us, that neither the Earth does deny to restore the Seeds committed to it, frustrating the hopes of the Husbandmen with vain Expectations, or that the Aspect of impious War is not (d) immoveably fixed on the Earth; or that Mens Bodies are not hurried away to the Grave being tainted by an Infection in the temperature of the Air: Or that the Sea, tossed with the Blasts of tempestuous Winds does not swell and overflow: Or that Storms beaking forth on a sudden and unexpectedly do not raise a destructive Tempest: Or lastly, that the Earth (the Nurse and Mother of all things,) shaken by an horrid Trembling, arising from its own internal Caverns, (e) does not raise vast Hills out of its own Bowels; or that the Mountains which lie upon it are not swallowed up by its unexpected Scissures and Rents. There is no Man but knows that all these Calamities, (yea far more horrid than these) have happened heretofore. And all these Evils fell upon us, because of that pernicious Error and most vain Folly of those wicked Men, at such time as it abounded in their Souls, and burthened the whole Earth almost with Shame and Confusion. After the interposition of some words, he continues: Let Men now look into the open Fields, and see the flourishing Corn, waving its weighty Ears; let them view the Meadows gloriously bedecked with Flowers and Grass caused by the seasonable springing Showers: Let them consider the Constitution of the Air, how temperate and calm it is again become. In future let all men rejoyce, for that by your Piety, by your Sacrifices and Religious Worship, the Fury of that most potent and strong God Mars is appeased; and for this reason, let them securely solace themselves in the quiet enjoyment of a most prosperous and serene Peace. And, as many as have deserted that blind Error, and wholly relinquished those impertinent Wandrings, by returning to a right and sound Temper of Mind, let them rejoyce the more upon that account; in regard, (being delivered as it were from a Storm unforeseen, and from a fatal Disease,) they shall in future reap the sweet Enjoyments of an happy Life. But if any shall wilfully persist in that their execrable Vanity and Error, let them be banished and driven far from your City and its Vicinage (according to your request:) That by this means your City, being (agreeable to your commendable Diligence in this Affair) freed from all Pollution and Impiety, may wholly devote it self (according to its natural Inclination) to attend upon the Sacrifices and Worship of the immortal Gods with all due veneration. Now, that you may be sensible how acceptable your Address in this Case was to us, and how ready and forward our Mind is voluntarily to comply with and reward good Desires even without any Decrees or Supplication; we permit your Devotion to ask the greatest Favour you have a mind to, upon account of this your Religious Attempt. And now therefore make it your business, to ask this, and have it granted. For you shall obtain it without any delay. And this great Boon granted to your City shall endure throughout all Ages, both as a Testimony of your most Religious Piety towards the immortal Gods; and shall also be an Evidence to your Children and Descendants, that for this your good Course and Resolution of Life you have received due Rewards from our Gracious Goodness.

Maximinus.

(d) Περὶ σὺν σπείζεσθαι. He alludes to that Aspect of the Planets called σπειγμὸν; which term is used concerning the Planets, when they seem to move neither backward, nor forward in their Epicycles; but are stationary. Valesius.

(e) In the Greek Text the term is [καταδυομένην, parts [not] in sunder] but it should be [ἀναδυομένην, does [not] raise vast Hills out of its own bowels.] For two sorts of Earthquakes (contrary to each other) are here spoken of by Maximin; to wit, (1) βρασμαΐαι; which (as Ammianus Marcellinus describes them, Book 17. pag. 98. Edit. Paris 1636.) Humum molestius suscitantes sursum propellunt immanissimas moles, raise the ground after an horrid manner, and drive forth vast quantities of earth: (2) χασμαΐαι, which (according to Ammianus Marcellinus description, loc. citat.) grandiori motu patefactis subito voratrinis, terrarum partes absorbent, having on a sudden made vast scissures in the Ground by a most violent motion, swallow up parts of the Earth. See Valesius's Notes on these words of Ammianus Marcellinus; pag. 142. Maximin means here that Earthquake which afflicted the City of Tyre, in that Year before Diocletian's Persecution, as our Eusebius relates in his Chronicon. Vales.

This Rescript against us was fixed up, on the Pillars throughout every Province, and did utterly exclude us from all hopes of Safety, as far as it lay in Human power to do: In so much that (according to that Divine Oracle) * Even the elect themselves, were it possible, would have been offended at these things. But now, when all expectation [of assistance from above] was amongst most of us in a manner expired and extinct; while they, who were commission'd to publish the foresaid Edict against us, were in some Countries yet on their Journey; God, the Protector of his own Church, (repressing the outragious Insolence of the Tyrant against us, by stopping his Mouth as it were;) did on a sudden demonstrate his Celestial assistance in defence of us.

* He alludes to Matth. 24. 24.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning what afterwards happen'd in the time of the Wars, of the Famine, and of the Pestilence.

* FOR Showers and Rains which would then have been seasonable (it being Winter) withheld their wonted Streams from the Earth: Upon which happen'd a Famine, not so much as thought of or expected, which was followed by a Pestilence. There raged also another violent Disease, (it was an Ulcer, which was properly call'd a Carbuncle, upon account of its violent burning.) This Ulcer spread itself over all the parts of the Body, and was very fatal and dangerous to them that were afflicted with it. And because its chief Seat was for the most part longest about the Eyes, it blinded a great many Men, Women, and Children. Besides all these Calamities, the Tyrant did now engage in a War against the Armenians, who had been old Friends and Allies of the Romans. This * person hated by God, endeavour'd to compel these Men (who were all Christians, very studious and industrious about the Service of God,) to sacrifice to Idols and Dæmons, and so rendred them Foes instead of being Friends, and bitter Enemies instead of Confederates. All these Calamities therefore, hapning on a sudden at one and the same time, did curb and confute the arrogant boasting of the insolent Tyrant against God; who had impudently bragg'd, that in regard of his care in worshipping Idols, and persecuting us, neither War nor Famine, nor Pestilence, had hapned in his Reign. Therefore all these Calamities coming to pass together, and at the same instant, were as Prologues and Fore-runners of his imminent Ruin. Both He and his Armies suffered much in the Expedition against the Armenians: And the residue, who inhabited the Cities under his Government, were miserably oppressed with the Plague and Famine: So that one Measure of Wheat was sold for two thousand five hundred * Attick Drachms. Innumerable were they that died in the Cities, but more in the Countries and Villages; so that now the † Censor's Tables which were formerly filled with the names of Country-men, wanted but little of one continued Blot; almost all persons being destroy'd either by the want of Sustenance, or the Pestilential Disease: Some did not refuse to sell to the wealthier sort, even those things which were most dear to them, for a little morsel of Food. Others selling their Estates by parcels, were reduced to the greatest want and extremity. Other-some chew'd in pieces little handfuls of Grass, which they had pluck'd up, and making no distinction, but eating poisonous Herbs together therewith, which corrupted the healthful Constitution of their Bodies, they perished. Also in every City divers Women of good Families, being reduced through want to shameless necessity, came forth to beg in the Market-place: Their modest Countenances and neatness of Dress were an evidence of their genteel Education: Some were pined away and dried up like the Ghosts of persons departed, so that they went reeling and tottering this way and that way, and being not able to stand, fell down in the midst of the Streets, and lying stretched out upon the Ground with their Faces downward, they craved that even the least morsel of Bread might be given them: And at their very last gasp cried out, that they were hungry; being only strong enough to utter this most doleful expression. But others that seem'd to be rich, astonish'd at the multitude of Beggars, when they had given away a great deal, afterwards became uncompassionate and inexorable, expecting that they themselves should ere-long suffer the same Extremities with those that now begg'd of them. So that now the dead Carkasses which lay in the midst of the Market-places and By-Streets naked and unburied for many days, were a most lamentable Spectacle to the Beholders. Moreover, some were devoured by Dogs, upon which account those that survived, betook themselves to killing of Dogs; being afraid lest they should run mad, and devour them who were yet alive. Neither did the Plague more leisurely destroy whole Households and Families; but more especially those whom the Famine could not dispatch, because they were furnished with great store of Provision. Therefore the rich Presidents of Provinces, the Prefects, and a great many that were of the Magistracy, (as if the Famine had purposely reserved them to be devoured by the Pestilential Distemper) suffer'd an acute and sudden death. All places, By-Lanes, the Markets and Streets, were full of Lamentations. There was nothing to be seen but mournful songs at burials, (a) together with their usual pipes and other funeral-musick. Thus death fighting with the two forementioned weapons, to wit, the Pestilence, and the Famine, did in a short time destroy whole Families; In so much that you might have seen two or three dead bodies carried out of the same house together to the (b) grave. Such were the rewards of Maximin's arrogance, and of the Decrees which the Cities issued out against us. During these sad times all the Heathens had evident demonstrations of the care and piety of the Christians exhibited towards all men: For only they (amidst so many and great calamities on all sides) in reality declared their true compassion, and good nature: Some of them imploy'd themselves, every day in taking care of and in burying the dead (for vast numbers died, whose funerals no body took care of.) Others gathered together into one body, all those in the City who lay under the pressures of the Famine, and distributed bread to them all. So that, when the same of this action was divulged amongst all Men; they all glorified the God of the Christians, and did acknowledge them to be pious, and the only true worshippers of God, being convinced sufficiently by their works. Affairs being in this posture, God the great and cœlestial defender of the Christians, (having by the aforesaid calamities manifested his wrath and indignation against all Men, because of their barbarous cruelties shown towards us,) did again restore to us the gracious and glorious spendour of his Providence; darting forth upon us (involved in the thickest darkness) the most miraculous light of his peace: And made it apparent to all Men, that God himself was always the Overseer and Inspector of our Affairs; who does sometimes indeed chastise and correct his People with the scourges of affliction: But after sufficient chastisement, he does again shew himself gracious and merciful to those that confide in him.

Maximinus.

(a) It was customary amongst the Heathens to attend their dead to the grave with musick upon pipes, and singing of mournful Songs: In this Ceremony were imployed certain old women called præficæ and fiticines; see our Notes upon the 14th Book of Amm. Marcell. Wherefore Christophorus mistakes who instead of [αὐ ἀλ. σωπῶν αὐλῶν, &c.] reads [ἀντὶ ἀλ. &c.] as if this were the sense; there was nothing now to be seen, but mournful cries, instead of their pipes, &c. Thus he erroneously translates the place. But all our MSS. and Nicephorus keep to the common reading. Vales.

(b) By what is here related concerning the burial of the dead, we may gather that the custom of burning dead bodies was at that time wholly disused amongst the Romans. But, when this custom was first abolished 'tis difficult to determine. The Romans seem to have taken up this custom of burying in Graves from the Jews, and Christians: Concerning which we have a place very observable in Macrobius: For (says he in his Saturnal. B 7. Cap. 7.) Although in our days the custom of burning the dead is antiquated and disanulled: Yet History teacheth us that in those days, when they burned the dead, they pay'd great respect and honour to them. Vales.

CHAP. IX.

(a) Concerning the death of the Tyrants, and what Expressions they used before their deaths.

(a) In all our MSS. the Titles of the Chapters are transpos'd; that which ought to be the Title of the tenth Chapter is given to the ninth, and on the contrary that which ought to be prefixt to the ninth is set before the tenth. This mistake we had corrected in our Translation, but because we would do nothing without the Authority of the MSS. we did therefore choose rather to follow the mistake, resting satisfied in having advertised the Reader of the mistake. Vales.

CONSTANTINE therefore (who, as we said before, was an Emperor born of an Emperor, the Pious Son of a most religious, sober, and prudent Father) (b) and Licinius (who was next to him in Authority, both honoured for their Wisdom and Piety;) two most Pious [Emperors] having been encouraged by God the supream King and Saviour of all Men, against two follows this clause [λειπόμενα τε τῶν μὲν αὐτὸν σωτῆρα καὶ εὐεργέτην πεποιημένων, πρὸς τῶν παμβασιλέως Θεοῦ τε καὶ ὅλων σωτῆρος & δύο δυσσεβεστάτων τυράννων ἀναγορευθέντων, &c. And Licinius (who was next to him in Authority, both honoured for their wisdom and piety;) two most pious [Emperors] having been encouraged by God the supream King and Saviour of all Men against two most impious Tyrants, &c.] which we have here inserted, judging it to be genuine, and penned by Eusebius himself, as 'tis apparent from what follows. For in the end of the period Licinius is mentioned as well as Constantine: Whence 'tis plain, that Eusebius had spoken of both of them at the beginning of the period. But the Transcriber designedly expunged Licinius's name here, upon account of the impieties he committed afterwards. two most impious Tyrants, and engaging them in a lawful War, (God assisting them;) Maxentius was most miraculously vanquished at Rome by Constantine; and Maximin the Eastern Tyrant, not long surviving Maxentius, died a most ignominious death, being conquered by Licinius, who had not yet done any extravagant Action. Moreover, Constantine the former of these two (who was the chiefest person, both in respect of Honour, Place, and Degree in the Empire) took compassion upon those who were oppressed with Tyranny at Rome; and having by Prayers humbly called upon the God of Heaven, and his Word Jesus Christ the Saviour of all Men, to be his helper, he march'd with his whole Army in vindication of the antient Liberties of the Romans. Now Maxentius, confiding more in his Magick devices, than in the Love and Favour of his Subjects, durst not so much as stir out of the City-Gates; but with an innumerable Host of Soldiers, and with Ambushes, he fortified all Places, Towns, and Cities whatsoever about Rome, and within the compass of all Italy, which were under the pressures of his Tyranny: The Emperor [Constine] depended upon Divine assistance, and having attack'd the Tyrant's first, second, and third Battalion, and with ease routed them all, he made himself a passage through the greatest part of Italy, and was now come up to the very Gates of Rome. But lest he should be constrained to assault all the Romans for the Tyrant's sake only, God himself drew the Tyrant (as it were with Cords) a great way out of the Gates: And did effectually confirm the truth of the Miracles he wrought in times past against the Wicked (recorded in the everlasting Monuments of the sacred Scriptures, which tho' they are accounted fabulous by some and not credited, are nevertheless believed by the Faithful) to all in general, Believers as well as Infidels, who saw this Miracle we are about to relate. For as God in the days of Moses and the old Religious Nation of the Hebrews, overwhelmed the Chariots and Forces of Pharoah in the Sea; and drowned his (c) chosen Captains in the Red-Sea, and covered them with the Waves: After the very same manner Maxentius with the Soldiers and Guards that were about him, were cast into the Deep like a Stone; at such time as he fled before the Divine Power, which did always assist Constantine's Arms, and design'd to pass a River that was in the way before him: Over which he laid a very artificial Bridge made of Boats joyn'd together, and so became instrumental to his own Destruction. Upon which account these words may be pertinently spoken concerning him; * He hath graven and digged up a pit, and is fallen himself into the destruction that he hath made. His travel shall come upon his own head, and his wickedness shall fall on his own pate. The joynings therefore of the Bridge laid over the River being after this manner separated, the Passage began to sink; and the Boats together with the Men in them descended on a sudden to the bottom of the River. Thus, this most impious Tyrant in the first place, and after him his Guards (according to what was foretold in the sacred Scriptures) sunk down like Lead into the deep Waters. So that [Constantine's Soldiers,] who at that time by Divine assistance obtain'd the Victory, in such sort as the Israelites heretofore did, who were led by Moses that eminent Servant of the Lord, (d) ought in all reason to have sung and repeated the same Expressions (though not in words exactly the same, yet in reality) that they heretofore did against that impious Tyrant [Pharoah,] after this manner: * Let us sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumph'd gloriously; the horse and the rider hath he thrown into the Sea. The Lord is my helper and defender, (e) he is become my salvation. And again: who is like unto thee, O Lord, amongst the Gods: who is like unto thee? Glorious art thou amongst the Saints, wonderful in glory, working miracles. When Constantine had in reality sung these Hymns, and Songs like unto, and of the same sort with these, in praise of Almighty God Governour of all things, and Author of Victory, he entred Rome with all triumphant Pomp and Splendor: And immediately the whole Senate, (f) those that were of the Equestrian Order, and all the People of Rome, together with their Wives and Children received him (with a joy in their Countenances which proceeded from their very Hearts) as a Redeemer, a Saviour, a publick Father, and Benefactor, and with Acclamations, and a gladness insatiable. But he, possessing a Piety towards God that was naturally implanted on him, was not in the least elevated in Mind at these popular Acclamations, nor puffed up with these Commendations, but being sufficiently sensible of the Divine assistance in this his Enterprize, he presently gave command, that the Trophy of our Saviour's Passion should be put (g) into the Hand of a Statue erected to him. And when they had erected his Statue in the most publick place of all Rome, holding in its Right Hand the Salutary Sign of the Cross, he commanded an Inscription to be

(c) These words occur at Exod. 15. 4. The phrase in the Hebrew is מִבְחַר שְׁלִשָׁיו, which the Septuagint translation renders ἐπιλέκτους ἀναβάτας τριστάτας; our English translation, his chosen Captains. Expositors differ in their explications of these words. Valesius thinks the Vulgar translation is truest; 'tis there rendred ternos ex curribus pugnantes, that is, The Three fighting out of the Chariots. The true import of the Hebrew is, The valiantest, or (as the Caldee renders) the fairest, Captains; called The Three or Third, from their being the third sort of Governours in the Kingdom of Egypt. See Ainsworth. Exod. 14. 7. and 15. 4.

(d) I mislike Christophorson's Version of these Words [ὃ δέ πως ἀνυμνεῖν] which he translates [Canere potuisset, could have sung:] He ought rather to have rendred it [Cecinerit, should have sung:] For Eusebius says, that Constantine did sing so, though not in exact words, yet really and truly. Vales.

BY THIS SAVING SIGN WHICH IS THE COGNIZANCE OF TRUE VALOUR, I HAVE DELIVERED AND FREED YOUR CITY FROM THE SLAVISH YOAK OF THE TYRANT, AND HAVE SET AT LIBERTY THE SENATE AND PEOPLE OF ROME, AND RESTORED THEM TO THEIR ANTIENT SPLENDOR AND DIGNITY.

After this, Constantine the Emperor and Licinius his Colleague, (who was not then faln into that extravagant Madness which afterwards depraved his Intellectuals) having both together worshipped and reconciled themselves to God the Author of all the Good which had happen'd to them, did with an unanimous accord and consent enact a most compleat and full Law in behalf of the Christians. And they sent a relation of the Miracles which God had done for them, and an account of their Victory over the Tyrant, together with this their Law, to Maximin who as yet was Emperor in the Eastern parts, and pretended Friendship towards them. But he, like a Tyrant, was discontented and dejected at this News: Yet being afterwards unwilling to seem to yield to others, and also out of fear to them who had confirmed the Edict, daring not (b) to suppress and conceal it, he directs this his first Rescript in behalf of the Christians, to his Ministers, as it were of his own accord, and by his own authority, tho' he was forced to it; wherein with much artifice he feigneth concerning himself such things as were never done by him.

(b) Παρεκδέδωκε τὸ πεπραγμένον (though otherwise rendred by some Translators) signifies the same as ἐν ὑποβύσῳ θεῖναι, a Phrase before used in the first Chapter of this ninth Book. The import of it is seponere, occultare; to conceal, or suppress the Edict, as Maximin did before in the first Chapter of this ninth Book, when Galerius's Rescript was sent him. But when Constantine and Licinius, after the overthrow of Maxentius, sent their Decree to him in favour of the Christians; he durst not conceal it metu superiorum, fearing them, as being his superiors. Vales.

(i) Diocletian was the first that assumed to himself this firname, Jovius; as his Collegue Maximian did that of Herculius. Afterwards when Constantius and Galerius were created Cæsars, Galerius, by marrying Diocletian's Daughter, and living with him in the East, came to be called Cæsar Jovius; and Constantius, by marrying Herculius's Daughter-in-law; and living with him in the Western parts, was called Cæsar Herculius. Afterwards when Galerius died, Maximin, who was by him created Cæsar, assumed to himself the firname of Jovius; which Eusebius here takes notice of. See the Chronicon Alexandrian. Vales.

(k) Under the name of the East, Egypt also is contained. For the Government hereof was committed to Maximinus Cæsar. For Maximinus (after he was made Cæsar by Galerius) received the jurisdiction over all those Provinces, which Diocletian had reserved to himself. And hence it came to pass, that Egypt was reckoned amongst the Eastern Provinces a long while after. So Amm. Marcellinus (B. 14. where he recounts the Provinces of the East,) reckons Egypt and Mesopotamia amongst them. Further, Egypt was originally under the Comes of the East, as we are informed from an ancient Inscription; the Contents whereof are these; M. MAECIO MEMMIO FURIO BALBURIO CÆCILIANO PLACIDO C. V. COMITI ORIENTIS. ÆGYPTI. MESOPOTAMIÆ. CONSULI ORDINARIO, &c. Vales.

and found that very many Men (who might be serviceable to the Republick) were Exiled and Confined by the Judges, for the reason aforesaid, to certain places appointed them; I gave a charge to all the Judges, that none of them should for the future treat the Subjects of their Provinces so barbarously; but that they should rather regain them to the service of the Gods by courteous Perswasives and kind Exhortations. During the time therefore that our Commands were, according to our Injunction, strictly observed, it happened that there was not one in all our Eastern Provinces either confined, or injured: But, in regard no Trouble or Disquietude happened to them, they were the rather reduced to the Worship of the Gods. After this, in (l) the last Year, when I successfully made a Journey to Nicomedia, and there abode, the Citizens of that City came to me with the Images of their Gods, begging of me with much earnestness that those sort of Men might by no means be permitted to inhabit amongst them. But in regard I understood that a great many Men of that Religion lived in those parts, I gave them this answer: That I was very well pleased with, and thankful to them for, their Address, but did not perceive that that was the desire of all Men in general. If therefore, any do persist in the [Christians] Superstition, every one of them may have his free liberty, to choose what pleases him; and if they will embrace the Service of the Gods, they also may do that. I thought it requisite to return a kind reply to the Nicomedians, as well as to the other Cities, who with much importunity had presented me with the same Petition, to wit, That no Christian might dwell in their Cities; (m) for so the preceding Emperors (as I observed) had always done; and it now so pleased the Gods, (by whom all Men are preserved, and the publick State of Affairs continued in a sedate posture,) that I should grant that earnest Address of theirs, which they presented me with concerning the Divine Worship of their Gods. Wherefore although I have very frequently before this time, as well by Rescripts as (n) Commands, ordered your Devotion, that the Presidents of Provinces should not be rigid or severe in their Proceedings against those within their Districts, who are studious about the observation of the Rites and Usages of the Christian Religion; but that they patiently tollerate, and with moderation comply with them:

(l) Ἔτους τῷ παρεληλυθότι, the year past, (i. e.) the year of Christ 311. when Maximian was the eighth time Consul; for in this very year (wherein Galerius died,) Maximin seized upon Bithynia, which Galertus (together with Illyricum and Thrace) had reserved for himself. Vales.

(m) This place is very intricate and obscure: And first, there is a difficulty in these Words [ὅτι δὴ αὐτὸ τοῦτο] which some have translated propterea quòd, because, but the adverb [ὅτι δὴ] may be rendred ita, so, and then this is the meaning of the place, (viz.) I return'd a kind reply to the Nicomedians, which the Emperors my Predecessors always were careful to do. The next difficulty is in these Words [ἤρεσεν οὖν, it therefore pleased the Gods, &c.] But we rather read ἤρεσε νῦν, and it now so pleased the Gods, &c. By this means [νῦν] is fitly oppos'd to the preceding Words [ἀρχαῖοι αὐτοκράτορες, the ancient Emperors, &c.] according to this emendation we have translated the place. Vales.

(n) Maximin does here make distinction betwixt γράμματα and ἐντολαὶ, Letters and Commands. Letters or Rescripts were sent by the Emperors to the Magistrates or Presidents, into ther Provinces when they were absent from Court: Mandata or Commands were given them by the Emperor when they were with him, before they went to their Provinces; all which Commands were bound up in a short Libel. And this was one of the chief of their Charges given them (to wit,) that they should be careful of their health. The Civilians speak much concerning these Mandata Principum. Vales.

them yet, lest they should suffer any Affronts or Molestations from the (o) Beneficiarii, or any others, I thought it agreeable and opportune to remind Your Gravity by these Letters, that You should rather win the Subjects of Our Provinces to embrace the Worship of the Gods, by Flatterings and Exhortations. Wherefore if any shall voluntarily take upon him to embrace and acknowledge the Worship of the Gods, it is convenient that You should receive and treat such Persons with the greatest kindness imaginable. But if any choose to adhere to their own Religion, You are to permit them to take their Liberty. It is therefore required, that Your Devotedness observe what You are hereby enjoyned; and that no Person be impowered to injure, or exercise Violence towards any of the Subjects of Our Provinces: Since it is rather convenient (as We said before) to recal Our Subjects to the Worship of the Gods by fair Words and kind Exhortations. Moreover, that this Injunction of Ours may come to the knowledge of all our Subjects, let it be Your care to (p) publish this Our Order by an Edict proposed by You.

(o) Those Soldiers were called Beneficiarii, or Beneficiarii, that were promoted by the favour of the Tribune; they were privileged from several Duties and Military hardships (as says Vergetius.) Vales.

(p) It was usual that the Præfects of the Prætorium should, immediately upon receipt of the Emperor's Law, publish it to the Subjects by their Edict. Sometimes they did promulge the Emperor's Law before their own Edict; sometimes they proclaimed their own Edict, and only mentioned in it the Emperor's Law. Thus did Sabinus, in the next Chapter of this ninth Book. But Rufinus says that he proclaimed the Emperor's Law before his own Edict. True it is, we must confess, that the Emperor's Laws were published before the Edicts of the President's most commonly. Of this we have a notable instance in the Conference at Carthage, where after the reading of the Emperor's Letter to Marcellinus the Tribune and the Notarius, Marcellinus's Edict was read. We must suppose the same thing concerning the Emperor's Rescripts: Which were always placed before the Edicts of the Magistrates. So did Himerius, Rationalist of Egypt, in his Epistle to the Governour of Mareotis; which Athanasius has related in his Apology. Vales.

When Maximin had issued out this Precept (being necessitated to it, and having not done it of his own accord) for all this he was not look'd upon by all Men to mean unfeignedly, or worthy to be confided in, because formerly (after the like Indulgence) he had demonstrated himself to be of a mutable and perfidious Disposition. None therefore of our Religion durst either (q) meet together in their Ecclesiastick Assemblies, or shew themselves in publick; for the Rescript did not in express words allow of this; it only contained an Order that we should be preserved secure from violence and abuses: But it permitted us not either to celebrate our Assemblies, or to build Churces, or to perform any of those Solemnities usual with us: Although Constantine and Licinius, the Patrons of Peace and Piety, (r) had by their Letters acquainted him, that they had both permitted us to do these things, and also had granted the same to all under their Government by their Rescripts and Decrees. But the most impious Tyrant was resolved not to yield thus, till such time as, having been prosecuted by Divine Justice, he was at length forc'd to it, whether he would or no.

(q) By συνοδον συσκεῖσθαι us'd in this place, we must not understand a Council of Bishops, but an Ecclesiastick Congregation, for σύνοδος is sometimes us'd in that sense, and Niceph. in this place uses [συναγειν, i.e. to meet together in their Assemblies] instead of σύνοδον συσκεῖσθαι· which word I greatly approve of as explaining the place. Vales.

(r) These words [αὐτῷ τε ἐπιτρέπειν ἐπεσταλκεισαν] Musculus and Christoph. render thus; Maximino, ut ista concederet, scripserant, they had written to Maximin that he should grant it. But I think Eusebius's meaning was otherwise, (to wit,) Constantine and Licinius wrote to Maximin, that they had given free liberty to the Christians to exercise their Religion, to celebrate their Assemblies, and to build Churches, &c. For it seems unlikely and something arrogant, that Constantine and Licinius should command Maximin, their Collegue, to grant these Privileges to the Christian. Vales.

CHAP. X.

Constant. and Licinius.

Concerning the Victory [obtain'd] by the Pious Emperours.

THis was the reason which (a) did press him on every hand. When he was no longer able to support the weight of the Government, which was unworthily conferr'd upon him, but through want of a moderate prudence of Mind, such as is required in a Prince, did insolently and undecently manage publick concerns; and moreover, was vainly puffed up with haughtiness of Spirit, even against his Collegues in the Empire, who were far his Superiors in Birth, Education, Desert, Prudence, and (which is the chiefest Accomplishment of all) in Humility and Piety towards the only true God. Through confidence and insolency he arrived to such a degree of audaciousness, as to (b) challenge the Precedency, and placed his name first in all Titles and Honours. Then (c) his madness breaking forth into utter desparation, having violated the League which he had made with Licinius, he raised a bloody and implacable War. Afterwards in a short time he * put all things into confusion, and every City into a strange consternation; and having gather'd together all his Forces, being a very great Army, he march'd forth to fight against Licinius; being extraordinarily puffed up in mind with a confidence of the assistance of Dæmons which he supposed to be Gods, and with his innumerable Army of Men. But when he came to engage in a Battel, he was destitute of a Divine care and protection; and the Victory was by the one only and supream God given to Licinius. First of all his (d) Foot Forces were routed, in which he did most confide; then his Guards deserted him, revolting to Licinius the Conqueror, and he forthwith, unhappy Wretch, threw off his Royal Robes, (which did not become him,) and timerously, ignobly and unmanfully shrowded himself amongst the crowd [of common Soldiers.] Afterwards he fled; and (being very sollicitous about making provision for his own safety) hid himself in the Fields and Villages, hardly escaping the Enemies hands; by which he did truly verifie those firm, unerring, and Divine Oracles, which say; There is no king that can be saved by the multitude Psal. 33. of 16.

(a) I wonder Translators did not understand the force of this word [ἐπαυξήχομαι, i.e. to surround] when as the Common Lexicons do sufficiently explain it: Moreover, the old Maz. MS. does here begin this Chapter, and I am not a little glad that my conjecture is confirmed by its Authority. For before I had procured that MS. I begun this Tenth Chapter at the next Period. The King's and Fuk. MSS. do agree with the Maz. Vales.

(b) By these words [πρῶτον ἑαυτὸν ἐν ταῖς πμαῖς ἀναγρεύειν] is meant, to place his name first in all Titles of Law and Decrees. Also, in all Inscriptions on publick Works, Statues and Images, Maximin placed his name before his Collegues, Constantine and Licinius: Although they were Augusti before him. But Maximin challenged the first place, because he was created Cæsar before them. Vales.

(c) Nicephorus changes these words [ἐπῆρε εἰς ὑπόνοιαν τὰ τῆς μανίας] thus [ἐπῆρας εἰς πλὴν μανίαν τὰ τῆς ὑπονοίας, extending his Pride to utter madness] which Rendition is not amiss. For ὑπόνοια is, in Chrysostome, taken for pride in many places. Vales.

* In all our MSS. 'tis κυκήσας; and we translate accordingly the term. Vales.

(d) By [ὁπλιτικὸν] the term here us'd, Eusebius means Maximin's foot forces. Of all Historians only Zosimus mentions any thing of this Battel between Maximin and Licinius in Illyricum; in his second Book: He says, that Licinius at first suffered some loss; but afterwards, renewing the fight, he put Maximin to flight, who fled towards the East, thinking to raise a new Army. This Relation does well agree with this of Eusebius here, for he says that Maximin having lost his Army fled into his part of the Empire, that is, into the East. This Battel therefore was fought in Europe; in the year of Christ 313. Constantine and Licinius being the third time Consuls; as Sigonius well observes, in his third Book De Occidentali Imperio. Vales.

of an hoſt, neither is any mighty man delivered by his great ſtrength. A horſe is counted but a vain thing to ſave a man, neither ſhall he deliver any man by his great ſtrength. Behold the eyes of the Lord are upon them that fear him, upon them that put their truſt in his mercy; to deliver their ſouls from death. Thus therefore did the Tyrant return with diſgrace into his own Provinces; and firſt of all in a mad paſſion he deſtroyed many Prieſts and Prophets belonging to thoſe Gods he had formerly admired, (by whoſe Oracles he had been excited to engage himſelf in this War) as Cheats, Impoſtor's, and alſo, Betrayers of his own Safety. Then when he had given thanks and praiſe to the God of the Chriſtians, and had enacted a full, perfect, and moſt compleat Law for their Liberty, he was forthwith ſtruck with a mortal Diſtemper, and (without the leaſt delay allow'd him) finiſh'd his Life. Now this was the Law which he publiſhed.

* Ἀντίγραφον ἐμμελείας, i. e. A Copy of the Verſion, &c.

* A Copy of the Tyrant's Decree in behalf of the Chriſtians, tranſlated out of Latin into Greek.

EMPEROR CÆSAR CAÏUS VALERIUS MAXIMINUS GERMANICUS, SARMATICUS, PIUS, FELIX, INVICTUS AUGUSTUS. We are confident no man can be ignorant, but that every one does know and is fully ſatisfied (if he does recollect himſelf, and reflect upon what is done,) that at all times and by all means we do conſult the Utility of the Subjects of our Provinces, and do willingly grant them ſuch things as may prove moſt advantagious to them in general, all that may be moſt conducive to their common good and profit, whatever is agreeable to the advantage of the Publick, and is moſt grateful to the minds of every one of them in particular. At ſuch time therefore as it came to Our knowledge, that (upon occaſion of a Law made by Our Parents, their moſt Sacred [Majeſties] Diocletian and Maximian, whereby it was decreed that the Aſſemblies of the Chriſtians ſhould be utterly aboliſhed) many Extortions and Rapines were committed by the * Beneficiarii, and that theſe Abuſes of Our Subjects (whoſe Peace and Quiet is Our chiefeſt care) increaſed exceedingly, their Eſtates being [upon this pretence] waſted: By Our (e) Letters written the laſt Year to Our Preſidents of every Province, We decreed; That if any one had a deſire to follow that Sect, or adhere to the Prescripts of that Religion, he might without impediment perſiſt in his Reſolution, and not be hindred or prohibited by any man: And that every one ſhould freely do what pleaſed him beſt without the leaſt fear or ſuſpicion. But it could not now eſcape our knowledge that ſome of Our Judges did (f) miſapprehend Our Commands, and cauſed Our Subjects to diſtruſt and doubt of Our Decrees, and made them more ſlow and fearful in their acceſſes to thoſe Religious Performances which they approved of as beſt: Now therefore that all Jealouſies, Ambiguities, and Fears may for the future be removed, we have decreed that this Our Edict be publiſhed; whereby all men may know, that they who deſire to follow this Sect and Religion, are allowed by this Our Gracious Indulgence to apply themſelves to that Religion which they have uſually followed, in ſuch a manner as is acceptable and pleaſing to every one of them. We do alſo permit them to rebuild their Oratories. Moreover, that this Our Indulgence may appear the larger and more comprehenſive, it has pleaſed us to make this Sanction; That if any Houſes or Eſtates (which formerly belonged to and were in poſſeſſion of the Chriſtians) are by the Decree of Our Parents devolved to the Right of the Exchequer, or are ſeized upon by any City, or ſold, or (g) beſtowed upon any one as a Gratuity: We have decreed that they ſhall all be reſtored to the ancient Tenure and Poſſeſſion of the Chriſtians; that ſo all men may hereby be ſenſible of Our Piety and Providence in this concern.

Conſtant. and Licinius.

(g) That is by the Emperors, who us'd to give thoſe Eſtates which fell to the Exchequer, to thoſe that begg'd them. See the Code, in the Title De petitionibus. Valeſ.

* See the foregoing Chapter. Note (o.)

(e) He means his Reſcript to Sabinus Præfect of the Prætorium; which Euſebius has inſerted at the foregoing Chap. B. 8. Maximin ſays 'twas written in the year paſt, or the laſt year, i. e. in the year of Chriſt 312. Conſtantine and Licinius being both then in their ſecond Conſulate. Whence it follows, that this laſt Edict of Maximin was written in the year of Chriſt 313; Conſtantine and Licinius being the third time Conſuls. Further, theſe are the principal differences between the Emperor's Reſcripts and Edicts. (1.) Their Reſcripts had their names annex'd to whom they were ſent; the Edicts ſpoke to all Men in general. (2.) The Edicts were publickly propoſed; the Reſcripts were given to thoſe to whom they were ſent; as may be ſeen from Geſt. Purgat. Cicilian. p. 28. nor was it uſual to publiſh them, unleſs this word was expreſly added in the end of the Reſcript, proponatur, Let it be publiſhed. Laſtly, in their Reſcripts the name of the Emperor was prefix'd only with ſome few of his Titles: But in their Edicts, none of their Titles were omitted, but all were carefully and proudly mentioned. Valeſ.

(f) This word [παρεννοέομαι] is by Langus rendred malè accepiſſe, miſapprehended, miſinterpreted: Which Verſion I approve of: For παρεννοέομαι, in its genuine ſenſe ſignifies malè interpretari. But Muſculus (and Chriſtoph. in imitation of him) tranſlates it, negligere, to neglect, pro nihilo habere, not to value: Which is not ſo well. The Fuk. and Savil MSS. read [παρ' οὐδὲν ἐπίθεντο, diſregarded] which words ſeem to have been written in the Margin as a Scholion at firſt; but afterwards crept into the Text. Valeſ.

Theſe are the expreſſions of the Tyrant, which came from him not a full year after thoſe Edicts he had publiſh'd againſt the Chriſtians [engraven on Plates of Braſs, and] fix'd up on the Pillars. And now he, who but a little before look'd upon us as Impious, Atheiſtical Perſons, and the very Peſt of Mankind, (in ſo much that we were not permitted to dwell in any City, Country, or even in the Deſarts,) this very perſon [I ſay] made and publiſhed Laws and Decrees in favour of the Chriſtians. And they, who but lately were deſtroy'd by Fire and Sword, and were devoured and torn by Beaſts and Birds in the very preſence of this Tyrant; they, who underwent all ſorts of Puniſhments, Tortures and Death, in a moſt miſerable manner, like Atheiſts and irreligious perſons, even theſe Men are now acknowledged by this very Tyrant to profeſs Religion, and are permitted to rebuild their Oratories; nay further, the Tyrant himſelf does acknowledge and atteſt that they ought to be partakers of ſome Rights and Privileges. Moreover, when he made this publick acknowledgment, (as if he had hereby obtain'd ſome favour) for this very reaſon, his Sufferings were leſs calamitous than he deſerved they ſhould be, [for] being ſmitten by God with a ſudden ſtroak, he died in the ſecond Engagement [that happened in] that War. But he ended his Life not like thoſe Martial Generals, who (after they had often demeaned themſelves gallantly in the Field in defence of their Honour and their Friends) happened couragiouſly to undergo a glorious Death. But he (like an impious perſon, and a Rebel againſt his Creator,) whilſt his Army ſtood in the Field drawn up in Battalia, ſtaying at home and hiding himſelf, ſuffered a condign Puniſhment, being ſmitten by God with a ſudden Blow over his Body. For, being tortured with grievous and moſt acute Pains, he fell upon his Face on the Ground, and was deſtroyed by want want of Food, all his Flesh being melted away by an invisible Fire sent upon him from Heaven. In so much that, when his Flesh was wholly wasted away, the entire shape and figure of his former Beauty quite disappeared; his parched Bones (which look'd like a Skeleton that had been long dried) being all that was left of him. So that those about him judged his Body to be nothing but the Grave of his Soul buried in a Body already dead and wholly putrified. And when the violent Heat of his Distemper scorched him with a greater vehemency even to the very Marrow of his Bones, (b) his Eyes leaped out of his Head, and, having deserted their proper station, left him blind. After all this he yet drew his Breath, and having given thanks, and made his Confession to the Lord, he called for Death. At last, acknowledging these his Sufferings due for his Contempt and Presumption against Christ, he gave up the Ghost.

(b) Chrysostome attests the same, in his Oration concerning St. Babylas against the Gentiles; in these words, Ὡς τὸ μὲν τὰς κόρας ἔτι ζῶντ᾽ αὐτομάτως ἐκπηδῆσαι τῆς ὀφθαλμιᾶς, μαχόμενον ἅτερος ἦν· ὁ δὲ μανέντα. The eye-balls of one of them leapt out of his eye-holes of their own accord, while he was yet alive; this was Maximin: The other ran mad. Diocletian was the Emperor that was distracted; which is attested by Eusebius, and by Constantine. We have also an account of Maximin's blindness, in Epiphanius's piece De Ponderib. Vales.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning the final Destruction of the Enemies Religion.

Maximin therefore being thus taken out of the World, (who was the only Enemy of Religion that hitherto survived, and declared himself the worst of them all;) the Churches by the Grace of God Almighty were rebuilt and raised from the very Foundation, and the Gospel of Christ, darting forth its Beams of Light to the great glory of the All-ruling Deity, enjoyed greater liberty than it formerly had. But the Wicked, and the Enemies of Religion were clouded with the highest Disgrace and greatest Shame imaginable. For first of all Maximin himself was proclaimed by the the Emperors a (a) publick Enemy, and was termed in the publick Edicts which were fixed upon Pillars, a most impious, detestable Tyrant, superlatively odious to God. Also the Pictures which were placed in every City in honour of him and his Children, were some of them broke in pieces and thrown down from on high to the very Ground; and others were defaced, having their Visages blackned with dark colours. In like manner all the Statues which had been erected in honour of him, were also thrown down, broken in pieces, and exposed as subjects of derision and scorn to all those that would abuse and insult over them. After this the other Enemies of Religion were divested of all their Dignities. Moreover, all Maximin's Party, more especially those whom he had preferred to places of the greatest power in the Provinces within his Empire (who to flatter him had been insolently abusive towards our Religion) were put to death. One of this number was (a) Though in the common Editions the term here is [πολεμιώτατον] yet we read πολέμιον. For Eusebius here means, that Maximin was proclaimed a Common Enemy. This was done very solemnly, by the Decree of the Senate, as the Compilers of the Historia Augusta inform us in many places, and especially where they treat of Maximin. Vales.

(b) Picentius, a person that was a great Favourite of his, highly esteemed by him, and his deareſt Intimado: Whom he created Consul a second and a third time, and also made him (c) Præfect and Rationalist. Another was one (d) Culcianus, who had born all Offices of Dignity in the Magistracy and in the Government of Provinces; he also was famous for his innumerable Massacres of the Christians in Egypt. There were a great many more beside these, by whose endeavours most especially, the barbarous Tyranny of Maximin was maintained and extended. Further, Divine Vengeance required justice to be executed upon (e) Theotecnus, being in no wise forgetful of his Practices against the Christians. For he was look'd upon as a deserving and successful person upon account of his Consecration of the Image at Antioch, and besides, the Emperor Maximin conferr'd on him the Presidency of a Province. But when Licinius came to Antioch, and was resolved to make Inquisition for the Impostors, [amongst others] he tortured the Priests and Prophets of the new-contrived Image, enquiring of them how they palliated and put a Mask upon their Imposture; when they could no longer conceal the truth, being by their tortures compelled [to disclose it] they declared, that the imposture of the whole Mystery was composed by the cunning of Theotecnus:

(b) Him whom the Greeks name πάππαν we have termed Picentius: that there was a Sycophant of this name in the time of Constantine, Zosimus attesteth in the end of his second Book. Certain we are, that those Persons whom the Greeks call πευκέτιοι the Latines term Picentes. Vales.

(c) He seems to mean the Præfect of the Prætorium. For the term [ἔπαρχον] is never used but to denote either the Præfect of the Prætorium, or the Præfect of the City. Besides, whenas Eusebius affirms that Picentius was advanced to great honour, and made Consul twice by Maximin, it would be absurd for him to say, that he was made Rationalist by him, that being a place of small honour in respect of the Præfecture of the Prætorium. But, there are these arguments to confute this opinion: (1.) By these words [τῆς καθόλου λόγων] Eusebius does always mean the Rationalist, as we have frequently observed before. (2.) Sabinus was Præfect of the Prætorium to Maximin (as we noted before) in the year of Christ, 311, and 312. Neither (3.) is the dignity of the Rationalists Office to be lookt upon as mean and low. For even Macrianus (he that seized on the Empire in the times of Gallienus) bore that Office: And Eusebius himself (Book 8. Chap. 9.) calls it ἀρχὴν ἣ πλὴν τυχοῦσαν, no mean Office; speaking of Philoromus the Martyr. But that which Eusebius says, to wit, that Picentius was made Consul thrice by Maximin, is very intricate and difficult to be made out. We have observed before, that after Galerius's death, Maximin took upon himself the title of Augustus, in the year of Christ 311. Therefore, before this time, when he was Cæsar only, he could not make Picentius Consul. For the Augusti only had a right of creating the Consuls. Therefore, after Galerius's death, Maximin declared himself and Picentius Consuls in that very year. On the year following Maximin and Picentius bore their second Consulate in the East, when Constantine and Licinius were the second time Consuls in the West. But in Italy and Africa Maxentius was the fourth time Consul alone. Then, on the year after, which was the 313 year of Christ, the same Maximin and Picentius were Consuls the third time in the East, as is evidently collected from this famous passage in Eusebius. For 'tis improbable that Maximin should give a third Consulate to another, and not declare himself Consul once. Indeed, in the Alexandrian Chronicle, Galerius Maximinus is put Consul with Maximianus, being in his eighth Consulate, which is the year of Christ 311. Although in that Chronicle he is called Galerius Maximus. We therefore are the first that have taken notice, that Maximin bore three Consulates. Whence it may be gathered, that Maximin was Augustus about two years, having before been Cæsar seven years, and that he had lived till the 313 year of Christ, which we have also demonstrated from his Rescripts. Wherefore I wonder how so notorious a mistake should creep into Eusebius's Chronicon, as to place Maximin's death before Maxentius's: It seems to have been committed by St. Jerome; for he added many things of his own to Eusebius's Chronicon. Vales.

(d) He was President of Thebais, as Epiphanius attests in his 68 Heres. which is the Heresie of the Meletiani, where he is called [κυλλιανὸς, Culetianus;] but it should be Culcianus, as 'tis evident from this place in Eusebius. Yet Rufinus translates it Quintianus: In Nicephorus 'tis Lucianus; both names are false. For this President was called Culcianus, as (besides Eusebius) the Acts of Phileas the Martyr's Passion do affirm. Vales.

Conſtant. and Licinius. when therefore Licinius had inflicted condign puniſhment on them all; he gave order that Theotecnus himſelf ſhould firſt be executed, and afterwards the reſt of his Aſſociates that were conſcious to, and Accomplices in the Cheat, having firſt ſuffered innumerable Tortures. To all theſe were added Maximin's Sons, whom he had now made Collegues with himſelf in the Empire, and Partakers of the Pictures, and Inſcriptions dedicated to his Honour. In fine, all the Tyrant's Relations, (who but juſt before had made their proud boaſts, and inſolently exerciſed anthority over all Men,) moſt ignominiouſly underwent the ſame Sufferings with thoſe perſons forementioned, for they received not inſtruction, nor did they know, or underſtand this ſeaſonable Admonition uttered in the Holy Scriptures; O put not your truſt in Princes, nor in the Children of men, for there is no health in them. The breath of man ſhall go forth, and he ſhall return again to his earth: in that day ſhall all their thoughts periſh. Thus therefore the Impious being like Filth wiped away [from off the Earth,] the Empire, which by right belonged only to Conſtantine and Licinius, continued firm, and unobnoxious to envy. Theſe perſons (after they had firſt of all cleanſed the World from all Impiety) being ſenſible of thoſe great Benefits they had received from God, did ſufficiently demonſtrate their Love of Vertue and of the Deity, their Piety and Gratitude towards God, by the Laws they made in favour of the Chriſtians. Conſtant. and Licinius. Pſal. 146. 2, 3.

CHAP. I.

Conſtant. and Licinius.

Concerning the Peace, which was procured by God for us.

THerefore, Glory be to God, the Almighty and Supream King, for all things: And manifold thanks to the Saviour and Redeemer of our Souls, Jeſus Chriſt, through whom we pray that we may have always preſerved to us a firm and inviolable Peace, both from outward Troubles, and alſo from all internal Moleſtations of mind. Having (by the aſſiſtance of your Prayers) added this Tenth Book of our Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory to thoſe foregoing Books at this place finiſhed, we have dedicated it to you (moſt ſacred (a) Paulinus!) hereby publiſhing you to be the Seal and Cloſure as it were of this our whole Work. Nor will it be incongruous (as we ſuppoſe) to place here * an entire and compleat Panegyrick concerning the Re-edification of the Churches: Obeying herein the Holy Spirit, which exhorteth us in theſe words: O ſing unto the Lord a new ſong; for he hath done marvellous things. With his own right hand, and with his holy arm hath he gotten himſelf the victory. The Lord hath declared his ſalvation: his righteouſneſs hath he openly ſhew'd in the ſight of the Heathen. Therefore, ſince the Scripture enjoyneth us [to begin] a new Song, let us agreeable thereto ſing together; becauſe, after ſuch terrible, black, and horrid Spectacles and Relations, we are now vouchſafed to ſee ſuch happy Days, and to celebrate ſuch Feſtivals, as many of our Anceſtors, who were truly Juſt and God's Martyrs, deſired to ſee upon Earth, but have not ſeen them; and to hear, but have not heard them. But theſe perſons haſtning away with all poſſible ſpeed, obtain'd far more excellent things, being taken up into Heaven, and into the Paradiſe of Divine Joy and Delight: And we, confeſſing theſe preſent Enjoyments to be greater than our Deſerts, ſtand amazed at the bounty of the Donor of ſuch Munificence: We alſo juſtly admire and adore him with the utmoſt vigour of our Souls, atteſting the truth of his Predictions by his Prophets contain'd in the Scriptures, in which 'tis ſaid: O come hither, and behold the works of the Lord, what miracles he hath done upon the earth: He maketh the wars to ceaſe in all the world. He ſhall break the bow, and knap in ſunder the ſpear, and burn the ſhields with fire. Let us therefore rejoyce

(a) He means Paulinus Biſhop of Tyre, to whom our Euſebius dedicated his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. For by his perſwaſion he undertook this work, as he does here plainly intimate. Euſebius deſignedly omitted the dedication of his Books to Paulinus at the beginning of this his Work, (which is uſually done,) upon account of Paulinus's modeſty (if I miſtake not:) but was contented to make an honourable mention of him at the end of his Hiſtory. For he ſuppoſed it ſignified not much, whether he dedicated his Books to him at the beginning, or at the end of them. Euſebius dedicated to the ſame Paulinus two Books περὶ τοπικῶν ὀνομάτων, concerning the names of places: The former of theſe (which contained the diviſion of the twelve Tribes, the deſcription of the City Jeruſalem, and the Hebrew Appellations of extraneous Nations) is now loſt. But the latter (which treats of the Hebrew names of places) was above twenty years ſince put forth in Greek by the Reverend Father Bonfrerius; to which there is prefix'd an Epiſtle to Paulinus. Wherein Euſebius atteſts, that by Paulinus's perſwaſion he attempted that Work; and he gives him this title, [ἱερὲ Θεοῦ ἀνθρωπε παυλῖνε, O Paulinus, thou ſacred Man of God!] Paulinus therefore was our Euſebius's ἐρεθιστὴς, Inſtigator to compile his Books, as Ambroſius heretofore was Origen's.——Further, this Paulinus was at firſt a Presbyter of Antioch. Afterwards, being preferred to the Biſhoprick of Tyre, he was much commended for his Preſidency over that Church. And at length when Euſtathius was diveſted of the See at Antioch, he was by the Antiochians preferred to the Government of their Church: So Euſebius informs us, in his Book againſt Marcellus, Chap. 4. in theſe Words, ἐπὶ τὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄνθρωπον, &c. Afterwards he inveighs againſt the Man of God Paulinus, a moſt bleſſed Perſon; who was adorned with the dignity of a Presbyter at Antioch; and was ſo famous for his Goverment of the Tyrian Church, that the Antiochians challenged him as their own proper Goods. Philoſtorgius (Book 3. Chap. 15.) ſays expreſly, that Paulinus ſucceeded Euſtathius in the See of Antioch, and that ſix Months after his Tranſlation he died.——Paulinus therefore died in the year of Chriſt 328, after he had born the Epiſcopate of Antioch ſix Months. Wherefore Gothofredus is much miſtaken, who (in his Notes on Philoſtorgius) ſuppoſes Paulinus to have died in the year of Chriſt 324; and blames Philoſtorgius for being inconſtant to himſelf. But Philoſtorgius agrees very well with himſelf; which Gothofredus does not, in aſſenting that Paulinus Biſhop of Tyre died on the year of Chriſt 324. undoubtedly Paulinus Biſhop of Tyre was preſent at the Nicene Council, and ſurvived that Synod ſometime; as Theodoret informs us, Book 1. Chap. 6. and Sozomen, Book 2. Chap. 18.——Baronius indeed ſays that Paulinus died in the year 324, and that Euſtathius ſucceeded him. But Baronius affirms not, that that Paulinus whom he makes Euſtathius's Predeceſſor, was Biſhop of Tyre. at the perfect and effectual completion of theſe things in our days, and with gladneſs proſecute the Series of our Narration. After the ſame manner therefore that we have related, did the whole Race of thoſe Enemies of God vaniſh, and was ſuddenly taken away out of Men's ſight; ſo that that Divine Oracle was again compleated, which ſays; * I have ſeen the wicked exalted, and lifted up like the Cedars of Libanus, I went by, and lo, he was not: I ſought his place but it could not be found. Now therefore a bright and glorious day, no cloud overſhadowing it, doth enlighten, with Rays of heavenly Light, the Churches of Chriſt over all the Earth. Neither were there any of thoſe that were ſtrangers to the Community of us Chriſtians, and to our Religion, (b) but (although they did not enjoy them in the ſame degree that we did, yet at leaſt in ſome meaſure) might together with us partake of the Streams and Effluxes of thoſe good things, which had been procured us from God.

CHAP. II.

Concerning the Re-edification of the Churches.

ALL mankind was now free from the Slavery and Oppreſſion of Tyrants; and being releaſed from their former miſeries, (although ſeveral ways, yet) all acknowledged as well as they could, that it was the only true God, who was the Defender of the Pious. But more eſpecially amongſt us (all whoſe hopes were fixed ſolely upon God's Chriſt) there was an inexpreſſible joy, and a kind of celeſtial gladneſs; when we ſaw all places, which thro' the Irreligion of the Tyrants were a little while ago totally deſtroy'd, reſtor'd to life as it were, and recover'd from a tedious and fatal Ruin; and [when we beheld] the Temples erected again from the ground to a vaſt height, and in ſplendour far excelling thoſe which had formerly been deſtroy'd. Moreover, the Emperors themſelves, in whoſe hands the ſupream Power was, by their continual enacting of Laws in favour of the Chriſtians, did enlarge, augment, and confirm the magnificence of the Divine Bounty towards us. There were Reſcripts alſo frequently ſent from the Emperor particularly to the Biſhops, their Honours were increaſed, and Sums of Money were beſtowed on them. The Contents of which Reſcripts (being tranſlated out of Latin into Greek,) it may not be impertinent to record in this Book (as in a ſacred Table) at a proper and fit place, that they may be had in continual remembrance by all ſucceeding Generations.

CHAP. III.

Concerning the Conſecrations of Churches every where [ſolemniz'd.]

AFter thoſe things, a Spectacle earneſtly pray'd for, and much deſir'd by us all, appear'd; [to wit,] the Solemnization of the Feſtivals of Dedication [of Churches] throughout every City, and the Conſecrations of the new builded Oratories; the frequent Aſſemblies of Biſhops, the Concourſe of Strangers from Countries far remote, the mutual Love and Benevolence of the People; the Union of the Members of Chriſt's Body joyn'd together in an entire harmony and conſent: Therefore, (agreeable to that * Prophetick Prediction, which has myſtically fore-ſignified what is to come,) bone was joyned to bone, and joynt to joynt; and what ever elſe that Divine Prophecy has ænigmatically but truly declar'd. There was one and the ſame Power of the Holy Ghoſt which paſſed through all the Members; one Soul in all: The ſame alacrity of Faith: One common conſent in chaunting forth the (a) praiſes of God. Indeed, the Ceremonies of the Prelates were moſt entire, the Presbyters Performances of Service exact, the Rites of the Church decent and majeſtick; (b) on the one hand was a place for the Singers of Pſalms, and for the reſt of the Auditors of the Expreſſions ſent from God: On the other was a place for thoſe who performed the divine and myſtical Services: There were alſo [deliver'd] the (c) myſtical Symbols of our Saviour's Paſſion. And now People of all ages and ſexes, Men and Women, with the utmoſt vigour of their Minds, with joyful Hearts and Souls, by Prayers and Thankſgiving, worſhipped God the Author of all Good. All the Prelates then preſent made publick Orations, every one (as well as he was able) endeavouring to ſet forth the Praiſes of thoſe aſſembled.

* Ezek. 37. v. 7.

(a) Θεολογία is here (as 'tis frequently in this Hiſtorian) uſed to ſignifie the praiſing of God: So alſo is θεολογεῖν, laudare Deum, to praiſe God. Valeſ.

(b) Ruffinus's Verſion of this place may ſerve inſtead of a Comment; he tranſlates it thus; Jam verò ingens in Sacerdotiis & miniſteriis, atq; in omnibus quæ ad religionis obſervantiam pertinent, gratia refulgebat. Adſtabant hic pſallentium chori, juvenes & virgines, ſenes cum junioribus laudabant nomen domini. Hic myſtica miniſteria ordinatis & diſpoſitis vicibus agebantur; And now an exceeding great Glory and Beauty appear'd in the Performances of the Presbyters, and in the Eccleſiaſtick Services, and in all things belonging to the Obſervances of Religion. In one place, the company of thoſe that ſung Pſalms, Youths and Virgins, old Men and young, praiſed the name of the Lord. In another, the Myſtical Services were performed by ſet courſes orderly appointed. The terms [ὃ δὲ μέν] therefore denote the People of the Congregation, who ſang Pſalms in the Church, and hearkned to the ſacred Leſſons: Which is confirmed by theſe Words [φωνῶν ἀκροάσεσι, Auditors of the Expreſſions] which can be underſtood of the Laicks only. The Words [ὃ δὲ δέ] point out to us the Presbyters, who performed the Myſtical Ceremonies. Valeſ.

(c) By theſe [ἀπόῤῥητα σύμβολα σωτηρίου πάθους, the myſtical Symbols of our Saviour's Paſſion] is meant Baptiſm; which is a ſign of our Saviour's ſuffering. For, by Baptiſm we die, and are buried with Chriſt, and we riſe again through the ſame Chriſt by Faith. See Coloſ. 2. 12. Valeſ.

CHAP. IV.

A Panegyrick concerning the ſplendid Poſture of our Affairs.

AND a certain perſon, that had been indifferently well educated and was deſerving, having made this Oration, came forth into the preſence of a great many Biſhops, (that were then preſent as at an Eccleſiaſtick Aſſembly) who gave him audience quietly and decently; then turning himſelf towards one who was the eminenteſt of them all, (a Biſhop acceptable to God, by whoſe care the Church of Tyre, the ſtatelieſt Fabrick amongſt all the Churches within the Country of Phœnicia, was glorioufly erected,) he ſpake thus.

A Pane-

Constant. and Licinius.

A Panegyrick upon the Building of the Churches, spoken to Paulinus Bishop of Tyre.

You, the Friends and Priests of God, who are wrapt in the sacred long Vesture, crowned with the Celestial Diadem of Glory, anointed with the Holy Unction, and cloathed in the Sacerdotal Robe of the Holy Spirit: And You, the Grace and Ornament of this new-erected and sacred Temple of God; You, who are adorned by God with a Prudence befitting an hoary Head, but have exhibited many glorious Evidences of a vigorous and juvenile Virtue; You, to whom God, (who comprehendeth the whole World,) (a) hath granted the special Prerogative of building and renewing this terrestrial Temple for Christ His only begotten and his first born Word, and for His Holy and Sacred Spouse: [You] whom one may term either a new Beseleel, the Architect of the holy Tabernacle; or another Solomon, King of a new, and far more excellent Jerusalem; or a second Zerobabel, in regard You have added a far greater splendour to the Temple of God, than it had before. Also, You, the Sheep of Christ's sacred Flock; the Seat and Mansion of good Doctrines; the School of Modesty; and the Reverend and (b) Religious Auditory of Piety! We (who have long since heard, by reading the Holy Scriptures, the miraculous Works of God, and the loving kindness of the Lord [declared] by his Wonders towards Mankind,) may now sing Hymns and Psalms to God, being instructed to say, *O God, we have heard with our ears; our fathers have told us the work which thou didst in their days, in the times of old. But now, having not barely by Hearing and Reports only, perceived the exalted Arm, and celestial Right Hand of our All-Good and Supream God and King; but in reality and (as we may say) with these very Eyes seen the Truth and Verity of those things which were heretofore recorded; we may sing a second Triumphant Hymn, and break forth into these expres words, saying, Like as we have heard, so have we seen, in the city of the Lord of hosts; in the city of our God. But in what City, in this new built and framed by God? * Which is the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth. Concerning which another Divine Oracle speaketh thus: † Very excellent things are spoken of thee, thou city of God. In which Church, since God the Giver of all Good, by the Grace of His only begotten Son hath convened us, let every one here assembled cry out with a loud voice as it were, and say, *I was glad when they said unto me, we will go into the house of the Lord. And again, † Lord, I have loved the beauty of thine house, and the place where thine honour dwelleth. And not only every particular person, but let us altogether rejoyce and shout forth Praises with one Spirit, and one Mind, saying, * Great is the Lord, and highly to be praised, in the city of our God, even upon his holy hill. For he is truly great, and his house is great, lofty and spacious, and more beautiful than the Sons of Men. Great is the Lord, who only doth marvellous things. Great is He who doth magnificent things, and such as are past finding out, glorious and stupendious, of which there is no number. Great is He who altereth Times and Seasons; who deposeth and constituteth Kings: Who raiseth up the Poor from the Earth, and exalteth the Beggar from the Dunghil: He hath thrust down the Mighty from their Seats, and hath exalted the Humble from the Earth. He hath filled the Hungry with good things, and hath broken in pieces the Arms of the Proud. Not only amongst the Faithful, but amongst the Infidels also He hath confirmed the Authority of those Relations heretofore recorded of him of old. 'Tis He who worketh Miracles: 'Tis He that doth great things: 'Tis He who is Lord of all: He, who is the Framer of the whole World: He, who is Almighty: All-Good: He, that is the One and Only God. In obedience to whom let us sing a new Song; to Him, who only doth wonderful things; for his Mercy endureth for ever. Who smote great Kings and slew mighty Kings; for his Mercy endureth for ever. For the Lord remembred us when we were in a low Condition, and hath redeemed us from our Enemies. And let us never cease thus to praise God the Father of all. Also Him, who is the (c) second Author of all Good to us; who is our Master in instructing us in the Knowledge of God, the Teacher of true Piety, the Destroyer of the Wicked, the Slayer of Tyrants, the Reformer of our Lives; Jesus our Saviour, when we were in despair, Him let us extol, having his Name always in our Mouth. For He alone, who is the Only and Best Son of the Best and Greatest Father, in compliance with His Father's Love to Mankind, most willingly cloathed himself with our Nature who were buried in Corruption; and like a careful Physician ((d) who for the Health's sake of his Patients looks into the Wounds, lightly stroaketh the Sores, and from other Men's Calamities attracteth Grievances upon himself;) he himself hath by himself saved us (who were not only diseased and oppressed with foul Ulcers and Wounds already putrified; but also lay amongst the Dead) from the very Jaws of Death. For there was no other in Heaven that had so much power, as inoffensively to minister Health to so many; it was He only therefore who, after he had touched our burdensome Corruption; He alone, who after he had endured our Labours; He alone, who after he had taken upon himself the Punishment of our Impieties; raised us Eusebius! ) concerning the Son of God, who is co-equal in dominion, co-eternal, and con-Creator of all things [with the Father:] Thou stilest him the second Author of all good, when as he is the same Author and Framer of all things with the Father, and of the same Substance with him. Also in the Maz. MS. we met with this Scholion here, in a later hand, wherein Eusebius is also reproved, in regard he subjects the Son to the Father, and attributes to him the second place. Τί ταῦτ' ἄνθρωπε ἐπὶ κακῷ τῆς σαυτῆς θεολογεῖς κεφαλῆς· Τὸν δόξῃ καὶ δυνάμει καὶ ἐσίᾳ καὶ πάντα ὅμοιον τῷ πατρὶ καταβιβάζων καὶ ὑποτιθείς, καὶ τὰ δεύτερα τοῦ πατρὸς ἀπονέμων· ἐναντία φρονῶν καὶ γεγραφὼς τοῖς ὁμόσπον τῷ πατρὶ καὶ ἴσον δοξάζουσιν ἁγίοις πατράσιν· ὧν συνήγορος θῆς, εἰ μὴ προφανῶς ψεύδονται οἱ τὰς πράξεις συγγράψαντες αὐτῶν· that is, Why doest thou utter this Divinity (O Man!) to thine own destruction? detracting from and subjecting him, who in Glory, Power, and Essence is every way like the Father; and attributing to him the second place from the Father? Thy Sentiments and Writings do herein contradict those Holy Fathers, who determined the Son to be co-essential with the Father? To whose Opinion thou didst subscribe, unless they who wrote their Acts do declare a palpable untruth. Vales.

(d) In the Greek, these following Lines (the Translation whereof is contained within this Parenthesis) seem to be Iambicks taken out of some Tragedian. The Words are these;

Τῆς τῆν καμοῦσαν εἶχεν σωτηρίας·
Ὁρᾷ τὰ δεινὰ διγλάσσει δ' ἀνδρέων·
Ἀλλοίας τὸ συμφορῆσιν ἰδίαις
——— καρπῶται λύπας.

which Verses are undoubtedly very elegant, and smell something of Æschylus, or Sophocles. But I think they ought rather to be blotted out of this place, for they disturb the sence. Vales.

(a) These words [χέρας ἐδωρήσατο] which we render [to whom God hath given this special and particular privilege] Christophorson understands as if this were the sense of them, (viz.) That this Church, which was founded by Paulinus, was a special Ornament or Honour to Christ, and his Church: But Musculus follows the same Sense as I do. Vales.

(b) In the Greek Text, the term is [θεοσεβὲς] which we have translated Religious; but doubtless Eusebius wrote [θεοπρεπὲς, majestick] for it would be a simple way of expressing ones self thus, θεοσεβείας θεοσεβὲς ἀκροατήριον, the Religious Auditory of Religion. Vales.

Conſtant. and Licinius.

(when we were not only half dead, but lay altogether impure and ſtinking in the Graves and Sepulchres) and both in times paſt, and now through his earneſt compaſſion towards us (even beyond our hopes and expectations) preſerveth us, and imparteth to us an Exuberancy of his Father's good things. 'Tis he who is the Author of Life, and the Introducer of Light ; our Great Phyſician, King, Lord, and the Anointed of God. (e) But even then, when all Mankind (by the Wiles of deteſtable Devils, and the Operations of Spirits hated by God) lay buried in an obſcure Night, and thick Darkneſs, he (f) only by his appearance, with the Rays of his Light diſſolved the manifold Chains of our Sins, like melting Wax. And now, when by reaſon of his ſo great Love and Beneficence [towards us] the † envious Devil, Enemy to all that is good, and the Favourer of evil, was in a manner burſt [with grief,] and marſhal'd all his fatal Forces againſt us ; and when at firſt having (like a mad Dog, who with his teeth gnaws the ſtones that were thrown at him, ſpending the fury he was put into againſt thoſe that provoked him, upon the lifeleſs things thrown at him,) turning his beaſtly Rage upon the Stones of the Oratories, and upon the ſenſleſs Piles of the Buildings, he thought with himſelf, that he had procur'd the utter Deſolation of the Churches ; alſo, when afterwards he ſent forth terrible Hiſſings, and his ſerpentine Expreſſions, one while by the Menaces of impious Tyrants, at another time by the blaſphemous Decrees of prophane Preſidents, and moreover belched forth the Virulency of his Death, and with his venomous and deadly Potions, poiſon'd thoſe Souls that were captivated by him, and had in a manner deſtroy'd them by the pernicious Sacrifices of dead Idols ; when laſtly he had incited againſt us all thoſe that under the ſhape of Men masked their ſavage Cruelty, Perſons of a Diſpoſition every way barbarous and fierce : Then again, the Angel of the Great Council, that (g) Chief Commander of God's Hoſts (after a ſufficient Exerciſe in the Combat, which the moſt valiant Champions of his Kingdom exhibited, by undergoing the ſevereſt Hardſhips with patience and fortitude,) appearing on a ſudden, ſo utterly deſtroy'd and reduc'd to nothing, all his Enemies and Adverſaries, that they ſeem as if they had never been named. But his Friends and Dependants he exalted to the higheſt pitch of Glory, not only amongſt all Men, but amongſt the Celeſtial Powers alſo, the Sun, the Moon, the Stars, the whole Heaven, and the World. So that now (which thing never happen'd before) the ſupream Emperors, ſenſible of that Honour they have received from God, ſpit in the Faces of the dead Idols, trample under-foot the prophane Rites and Services of Devils, and deride that ancient Error handed down to them by Tradition from their Anceſtors : They acknowledge one only God, the common Benefactor to all Men, and to them in particular ; and they profeſs Chriſt the Son of God to be the ſupream Ruler of all things, they proclaim him Saviour in their Inſcriptions upon Pillars, engraving in Royal Characters, his valiant Exploits and Victories (in order to their indelible remembrance) over the Impious, in the very midſt of that City which is Queen of the whole Earth. So that our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt is the only perſon amongſt all thoſe who have been ſince the World began, that is confeſſed to be (even by the Emperors themſelves, who are Supream here upon Earth,) not an ordinary King, made ſuch by Men, but is worſhipped as being the genuine Son of the Supream God, and is [adored] as being (h) truly and in himſelf God ; and that deſervedly. For what King had ever ſuch power, as that he could fill the Tongues and Ears of all Men upon Earth (i) with his Name ? What King ever conſtituted ſuch pious and prudent Laws, and was able to confirm them in ſuch a manner, that they ſhould be perpetually read in the audience of all Men from the one end of the whole Earth to the oppoſite Extremities thereof ? What King hath ever by his mild and indulgent Laws, melted and ſoftned the ſavage and barbarous Diſpoſitions of the inhumane Heathens ? What King, oppoſed by all Men during the ſpace of ſo many whole Ages, ever demonſtrated ſuch a more than humàn Valour and Strength, that he flouriſhed daily, and ſeem'd to grow young in every ſucceeding Age ? Who hath planted a Nation (which heretofore was not ſo much as heard of) not in ſome ſecret unknown Corner of the Earth only, but even throughout the whole World [which lies] under the Sun ? Who ever armed his Soldiers with the Arms of Godlineſs in ſuch a manner, that in their Conflicts with their Adverſaries they made it apparent that their Minds were firmer than an Adamant ? What King was ever ſo potent as to lead an Army after his Death, and to erect Trophies againſt his Enemies, and to fill every Place, Country, and City, Grecian and Barbarian, with his Royal Palaces, and with the (k) conſecrated Fabricks of holy Temples, ſuch as are thoſe ſplendid Ornaments and conſecrated Gifts belonging to this very Church : Which are in themſelves truly Auguſt and Magnificent, worthy of amazement and admiration, in regard they are (l) evident Repreſentations of our Saviour's Kingdom. For he now ſpake and they were made ; he commanded, and they ſtood faſt : For what could withſtand the Beck and Will of the Word, who is the ſupream King and Governour of all things, and is himſelf God ? But an accurate Contemplation and Explication of theſe things particularly, require a peculiar Diſcourſe and Leiſure. Moreover, a peculiar Leiſure would be requiſite to relate what, and how great the alacrity of the Workmen was that laboured in this Building, and how it was*

(e) Here he firſt relates what Chriſt did in the days of old, for the Salvation of Mankind. Afterwards he ſets forth what Miracles he lately wrought. Valeſ.

(f) In the Text we read [αὐτὸς μόνῳ ἐπιφανεὶς,] but we ſhould rather read [αὐτὸ μόνον] as we find it in the Med. Fuk. and Maz. MSS. αὐτὸ μόνον ſignifies ſolummodo, only, or alone ; which Phraſe is frequent in Euſebius, and thus he is here to be underſtood : That Chriſt only, by his appearance and incarnation in times paſt, delivered Men, who were enſlaved by the Devil, from that grievous yoke of ſervitude. Valeſ.

† Τῷ μισοκάλῳ φθόνῳ καὶ φιλεπονήρῳ δαίμονι ; the import whereof, if rendred word for word, is this ; Envy the hater of that which is good, and the Devil the lover of miſchief. But by the following words in the period, he ſeems to ſpeak of the Devil only : Upon which account we render it The envious Devil, &c. agreeable to Valeſius's Verſion.

(g) Upon theſe Words in the Med. MS. we find this Scholion in the Margin, (viz.) this is Wicked, Atheiſtical, and Blaſphemous, to call the Saviour Chriſt and God, the great Commander in chief of God's Hoſt. Valeſ.

(h) We ought to take ſpecial notice of this place ; for it is the firſt wherein Euſebius calls Chriſt αὐτοθεὸς. This one place I think ſufficient to confute all their malicious Calumnies, who believe that our Author Euſebius was infected with Arianiſm. This word [αὐτοθεὸς] is made in imitation of Plato's Word αὐτοαγαθὸν, which ſignifies that which in it ſelf is truly good : So αὐτοθεὸς is he who is truly originally and in himſelf God. Valeſ.

(i) By theſe Words [τῆς αὐτῆς θεοσημείας] may be meant the Chriſtians, who are called τῆς αὐτῆς θεοσημείας after his own name : Which name of Chriſtians was ſpread over all Nations, and known not amongſt the Romans only, but alſo amongſt the Barbarians But if any would have theſe Words [τῆς αὐτῆς θεοσημείας] ſignifie Chriſt's own name ; I will not much concradict it ; for a little after our Author ſpeaks of the Chriſtians : Which certainly he would not have done, had he ſpoken of them before. Valeſ.

(k) Ἀφιέρωμα, the term here, does not ſignifie the Conſecration of Churches, as Muſculus here tranſlates it ; but rather the Donaria, things Offered and Conſecrated to God, and thus the following Words [κοσμήματα καὶ ἀναθέματα, Ornaments and Dedicated (or Conſecrated) Gifts,] declare. Certainly if Euſebius had here meant Conſecration, he would have us'd ἀφιέρωσις and not ἀφιέρωμα in this place ; as he does in the third Chapter of this tenth Book. Valeſ.

was look'd upon and esteemed of by that God himself, whom we extol, who inspects the living Temples of us all, and views the House built of living and (m) firm Stones, well and securely placed upon the Foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone: Who was rejected not only by those who were the Framers of that ancient Building, which endures now no longer, but also by those Architects of that Fabrick which now is, consisting of many persons; who were wicked Framers of evil Works. But the Father having tried [this stone] and approved of it, in times past, and now also, laid it as the Head of the Corner of this Church, which is common to us all. Into this living Temple therefore of the living God, which is made up of us, (I mean that most stately sacred Fabrick, truly worthy of God, whose inmost Recesses are invisible to the Vulgar, and are truly holy, and the Holiest of Holies) what Man is he that dares look and divulge [what he there beholds?]

(m) I have translated these words [ζεζωκότων λίθων] firm Stones: Musculus translates them crescentes lapides, growing Stones. Christophorson renders them incedentes interra lapides, walking Stones. But I cannot conceive, how the foundation could be firm, if the Stones moved. Of these Versions the Reader may take which best pleaseth him; I do not here reject Christophorson's Version. But whereas Christoph. supposes these Words [τῷ θεολογωμένῳ] which we translate [that God whom we praise] do signifie Christ; I cannot at all commend him; For our Author speaks afterward of Christ; saying, That he is the chief corner Stone of this Temple. Wherefore by [τῷ θεολογωμένῳ] is meant God the Father, the Overseer of this work. Hieronym. translates [ζεζωκότας λίθους] in the second Chapter of Haggai, lapides viventes qui nunc volvuntur super terram, living Stones which are rolled upon the Earth. Vales.

Yea, who is he that can with his Eyes penetrate its sacred Inclosures, but he alone, the Great High-Priest of all; whose only Right and Priviledge it is to make Researches into the Secrets of every rational Soul? And perhaps the same is granted to (n) one other person in the next place after him, to wit, to this chief Leader of his Host; whom the first and Great High-Priest himself hath honoured with the second place if the Priesthood in the sacred Temple, and has himself constituted him the Shepherd of your Holy Flock, having this your People committed to his charge by the allotment and determination of the Father, as being his own Minister and Interpreter: A new Aaron or Melchisedeck, made like to the Son of God, remaining, and by the publick Prayers of you all preserved for ever by him. Unto this person alone therefore be it lawful next after the Chief and Principal High-Priest, if not to have the first, yet at least the second place in looking into, and taking care of the very inmost Recesses of your Souls: For by [the help of] experience and length of time he hath both made accurate Enquiries into every particular person amongst you; and also by his care and industry, hath instructed you all in modesty, and in the Doctrine which is according to godliness: And he is abler than any one else to give such account of those (o) Works (which by the assisting power of God he hath perfected) as are answerable to the Works themselves. Indeed, our First and Chief High-Priest saith, * What things soever he seeth the Father do, these also doth the Son likewise. But this person, looking upon the first [High-Priest,] as it were upon a Master, attentively with the unpolluted Eyes of the Mind; whatsoever things he seeth him do, them he maketh use of as his original Patterns, and hath wrought the Representations thereof into such a form, that they do express (as near as 'tis possible to be done) an exact likeness thereto. Being nothing inferior to that * Beseleel, whom God himself (having filled him with the Spirit of Wisdom and Understanding, and of other artificial and skilful knowledge,) made choice of to be the Framer of a Structure of Celestial Types of a † Temple, by certain shadowed Representaons. After the same manner therefore, this our [Bishop] (p) bearing in his mind the perfect, whole, and intire Representation of Christ, who is the Word, the Wisdom, and the Light; it cannot be expressed with what a greatness of Soul, * with what a rich and inexhaustible hand of his Understanding, and with what an emulous Liberality [proceeding from] you all, (who by your Nobleness in contributing to the Charge did most ambitiously contend, that you might in no wise seem to be inferiour to his vast Design) he hath erected this magnificent Temple of the most High God, which may be seen, naturally resembling (as near as may be) the Model of that more Glorious Structure which is invisible. And this very place, (for it is fit we should speak of this first,) which by the Treacheries of our Enemies was overwhelmed with all manner of impure Rubbish, he neglected not; nor did he in the least yield to the Wickedness of them who had been Authors of it; whenas he could have found out another place (whereof there are great numbers in this City) where he might have been eased of much of his Labour, and freed himself from many Troubles: Yet, having first made ready himself to undertake this Work; and afterwards corroborated all the People with an alacrity of Mind, and gathered them altogether into one great Band, he attempted this (q) first laborious Enterprize: Supposing it fitting that this very Church (which had been most batter'd by the Enemies, which had heretofore undergone great Sufferings [upon our account,] which had endured Persecutions both with and before us, which like a Mother was bereaved of her Children,) ought to enjoy together with us the magnificent Bounty of our most good and gracious God. For, in as much as that Great Shepherd hath vouchsafed to gather his Children together again into one place, having driven away the Wild-Beasts, Wolves, and all the savage and fierce kind of Creatures, and (as the Divine Scriptures say,) having broken the jawbones of the Lions, with good reason he re-edified the Fold for his Flock, * That he might put to confusion the enemy and the avenger, and might bring a reproach upon the audacious and rebellious attempts of the Impious against God. (r) Now therefore these persons, hated by God, are not, nor were they then. But after they had for a short space of time raised Disturbances, and were

(n) After these words there is an Asterisk set in the Med. MS. and in the Margin are these words written [ἡ τόπο ἀσεβές. This also is blasphemous.] The Scholiast, who set this Note here, seems to have thought that in this place Eusebius spake concerning Christ: But he speaks of Paulinus Bishop of Tyre, who (says he) has obtained the next place to Christ in the Government of Believers. Now this cannot be stiled an impious Expression, seeing that all Prelates do resemble Christ, and are his Vicegerents in the Government of the Church. We confess indeed, that Eusebius attributes too much to Paulinus, in regard he gives him the second place, as if he were Christ's Equal and Colleague; and in regard he terms him Melchisedech. Vales.

(o) He means as well the spiritual as material Fabrick of the Church at Tyre; of the form and model whereof Paulinus (says he) can give the best account, in regard by the assistance of Divine Power he framed that Structure. Vales.

Chap. 23.) speaks thus concerning Macrianus, [ὁ μὲν ἐκ ἔστιν ἐπεὶ μὴ δὲ ἦν, now he is not, for he never was.] Vales.

themſelves alſo diſturbed, they ſuffered a moſt juſt puniſhment inflicted on them by Divine Vengeance, and irrecoverably ruin'd themſelves, their Friends and Families. So that thoſe Predictions heretofore recorded in the ſacred Monuments [of the Scriptures] may now be acknowledged to be really certain, in which the Word of God does both truly declare other things, and alſo ſpeaks expreſly concerning them, thus:

* Pſal. 37. v. 14, 15. * The ungodly have drawn out the ſword, they have bent their bow, to caſt down the poor and needy, and to ſlay ſuch as are of an upright converſation. There ſword ſhall go through their own heart, and their bows ſhall be broken. And again, * Their memorial periſhed with a ſound, and † thou haſt put out their name for ever and ever. || For when they were in troubles they cried, and there was none to ſave them, even unto the Lord did they cry, but he heard them not. † They were bound and fell, but we aroſe and were ſet upright; This alſo which was foretold in theſe words, (* Lord, thou in thy city ſhalt bring their image to nought) is manifeſted in the ſight of us all to be moſt true. Theſe men, who like the Giants raiſed a War againſt God, procured for themſelves the ſame fatal end of their lives that they did: But † ſhe which was deſolate, and whoſe ſafety was deſpaired of by all Men, has arrived to ſuch a concluſion of her patient ſufferance upon God's account as we now behold, ſo that theſe words of the Prophecy of Iſaiah may ſeem to have been ſpoken to her. * Rejoyce thou thirſty deſert; let the ſolitary place rejoyce, and flouriſh like a lilly: the deſerts ſhall flouriſh and be glad: be ye ſtrengthened ye languid hands and feeble knees: be comforted you faint-hearted, be ſtrong, and fear not: Behold our God doth repay judgment, and will repay it: He will come and ſave us. For (ſaith he) Water hath broke out in the deſert, and a valley in a thirſty land. The parched ground ſhall be changed into mooriſh places, and the fountain of water into a thirſty land. All this was formerly predicted in words, and laid up in the ſacred Books; but the things themſelves are now no longer delivered to us by hear-ſay, but [are exhibited] by actual performances. This ſame dry Deſert, this diſconſolate Widow (* whoſe very gates they have cut down at once with Axes, like Wood in the Foreſt, having broken her in pieces with the axe and the hammer: Whoſe Books they have ſpoiled, and have burnt the ſanctuary of God with fire: they have defiled the dwelling place of his name even unto the ground; † Whoſe grapes all that go by plucked off, (having firſt broken down her hedges, whom the wild boar out of the foreſt hath rooted up, and the wild hog devoured; by the miraculous power of Chriſt (it having now pleaſed him ſo to do) flouriſheth again like a Lilly. Yea, at ſuch time as ſhe was chaſtened, that [Chaſtiſement was inflicted on her] by his appointment, as it were by a careful and indulgent Father.

† Heb. 12. v. 6. † For whom the Lord loveth he chaſtiſeth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth. When therefore ſhe had been moderately and ſufficiently chaſtiſed, ſhe is again commanded from Heaven to rejoyce; and ſhe flouriſheth as a Lilly, and breaths forth upon all Men a divine ſweet ſavour: For, ſaith he, * Water guſhed out in the deſerts, [to wit,] the † Fountain of that Salutary Laver of Divine Regeneration. And now, that land which a little before was deſolate, is changed into pools: And the fountain of living water hath guſhed out plentifully upon a thirſty land: Thoſe hands which were formerly weak, are really ſtrong: And thoſe works [which you behold] are great and powerful Inſtances of this Strength of the Hands: Moreover, thoſe Knees which were formerly enfeebled and weak, having, now recovered their uſual Firmneſs and Faculty of Walking, go ſtraight on in the way of Divine Knowledge of God, haſtning towards the genuine Flock of that moſt good and gracious Shepherd. And if any of them have had their Souls benumned and ſtupified through the Menaces of Tyrants, even theſe the ſaving Word does not deſpiſe as incurable, but heals them carefully and tenderly, and excites them to be partakers of the Divine Conſolation, ſaying, Be comforted, ye faint-heated: Be ſtrong, fear not. When therefore this our new and excellent Zorobabel (by the acuteneſs of his Underſtanding) perceived that, according as the Divine Word had foretold, She which had been brought to deſolation for God's ſake, ſhould enjoy theſe good things, after that bitter Captivity, and Abomination of Deſolation: He deſpiſed not this dead Corps, but having in the firſt place with ſupplications and prayers (together with the joynt conſent of you all) propitiated the Father, and taking for his Aſſiſtant, and Fellow-labourer the only Reviver of the Dead, he raiſed up this fallen Church, having firſt purified her, und healed her of her Maladies. And now he hath put a Robe about her, not that old one, but ſuch a one as he had again received inſtructions about, from the Divine Oracles, which expreſly teſtifie thus: * And the latter glory of this houſe ſhall far excel the former. Upon which account, having taken in a far larger compaſs of Ground, he fortified the outward Circuit with a Wall on every ſide, which might ſerve for a ſtrong fence to the whole Structure. Then he raiſed a ſpacious, lofty, and ſtately Portico againſt the Rays of the riſing Sun, which, to thoſe who ſtand at a ſufficient diſtance without the ſacred Incloſure, does yield a full proſpect of this Structure within; and as it were, attracts the Eyes of Infidels to look upon the firſt Entrances, that ſo no Perſon might paſs by, who ſhould not feel ſome Pricks in his Mind, both at the remembrance of the former Deſolation, and alſo at [the ſight of] the ſtupendious Miracle of the preſent Fabrick. Hence he hoped, that he who upon that account felt ſuch a Compunction, might peradventure be drawn [towards it,] and at the very ſight thereof would be perſwaded to enter in. But after you are come within the Gates, he has not permitted you to enter immediately into the Holy place with impure and unwaſhen Feet. But, having left a large vacancy betwixt the Temple and the Portico, he beautified this vacant ſpace ((ſ) having incloſed it in the figure of a Quadrangle) *with four oppoſite Cloyſters ſupported on every ſide with Pillars. he left open, that a view of Heaven might be taken, and that by it might be let in the clear Air filled with the Rays of Light. Here also he placed the mysterious Symbols of the sacred Purgations, to wit, Fountains built opposite to the Front of the Church, which afforded plenty of Water for those who entred the sacred Walls to wash in. And this first place of reception for those that entred, yielded both a beautiful and splendid prospect to all Men, and also afforded a very commodious Mansion to those who yet wanted instruction in the first Principles of Religion. Moreover, † after a view taken of those [buildings,] he made passages opening into the Church [adorned] with a great many more inward Porticoes. And again at the rays of the rising Sun he placed three gates in one and the same side. On the middlemost of which he thought fit to bestow much more of magnificence and spaciousness than on the other two placed on either side of it; and, having adorned it gloriously with plates of Brass bound on with Iron, and with variety of Sculpture, he adjoyned the other two as the Guards to her, being as it were a Queen. When he had after the same manner made the number of the Porches equal to the Cloysters on both sides of the whole Church, over these Porches, he invented other copious Conveyances of Light into the House, and adorned them with various and exceeding fine and small wooden Sculptures: But the Royal House itself he furnished with richer and more costly Materials, liberally bestowing thereon most magnificent and vast expences. I think it here superfluous for me to describe the length and breadth of this Building, and to treat particularly of the Splendour [of the Structure,] of its unspeakable Greatness, of the glittering Show of the Works, of its Height which equals Heaven, and of the costly Cedars of Libanus that are laid hereupon: The mention of which even the holy Scriptures hath not passed over in silence; wherein 'tis said * The trees of the Lord shall rejoyce, even the Cedars of Libanus which he hath planted. To what end should I make an exact Narration here, of the most ingenious and artificial Composure of the whole Structure, and of the incomparable Beauty of every particular part of it, when as the testimony of the Eyes excludeth all knowledge which entreth at the Ears? Moreover, after he had thus finished the Temple, and decently adorned it with the highest Thrones in honour of the Prelates of Churches, and also with (x) Benches orderly placed all over the Church, at last he placed the Holy of Holies, the Altar, in the midst, and that the Multitude might not come within these [sacred places,] he enclosed them with wooden Rails made like Net-work, which were so curiously and artificially framed and carved, that they entertained those that viewed them with a wonderful and surprizing sight. Neither was the very Pavement neglected by him, but after he had beautified it most gloriously with Marble-stone, he proceeded to the Out-buildings of the Temple; and with great Art and Skill erected most spacious * Exhedræ and Oëci on each side, which in an uniform manner were joyned together at the sides of the Cathedral, and united to the (y) Doors which lead into the middle of the Church. These Buildings our most peaceful King Solomon (who erected the Temple of God) made for them, who want the Purification, and the Sprinkling by Water and the Holy Ghost. So that that Prophecy before quoted is no longer a wordy Prediction, but is really accomplished: For now it is come to pass, that the glory of this latter house is truly greater than the former. For it was requisite and agreeable that (since her Pastor and Lord, for her sake once suffered death, and after his Passion changed that vile Body, which for her sake he had put on, into Brightness and Glory; and translated that very corruptible Flesh from Corruption to Immortality,) she also should likewise enjoy the (z) Dispensations of her Saviour. For, although she (having received from him a promise of far more excellent things than she doth at present enjoy,) incessantly longeth to be for eternal Ages partaker of a far greater glory of a Regeneration, at the Resurrection of the incorruptible Body, with the Choir of the Angels of Light, in the Palaces of God above the Heavens, together with Jesus Christ, the Donor of all good things and her Saviour: Yet during the interim of her abode in this present world, she (who was heretofore a Widow and desolate,) being by the Grace of God surrounded with these Flowers, is (as the Prophecy saith) truly become like unto Lilly. And, having put on her Wedding-Robe, and being encircled with a Crown of Beauty, let us hear her herself relate how she is taught to dance by Esaias, and with pleasant expressions to shout forth Thanksgivings to her God and King: Let my soul rejoyce in the Lord: For he hath cloathed me with the garment of salvation, and the coat of gladness. He hath encircled my head with a diadem like a bridegroom, and hath bedecked me like a bride with ornaments. And as the earth which multiplieth its flowers, and as a garden that causeth its seeds to spring forth; so the Lord hath caused righteousness to rise up, and joy in the sight of all † Παεαμειψάμενος τὰ τῶν δεῶν, after you have seen these things, or after you have entertained your self with beholding these things. Musculus's Version of it is, Horum conspectu præterito, after you had passed seeing these things; which Version of Musculus's is rather to be followed than that long Circumlocution of Christophorson's, by which he translates this place thus, Quinetiam quo istas res ad oculos capiendos magnâ operum varietate concinnè illustrarent: Which translation agrees not with Eusebius's words. Vales.

* See Psal. 104. v. 16.

(x) For whom these βάθρα, benches or seats were made, 'tis some difficulty to resolve, (that is,) for what degree or order of Men they were intended. Leo Allatius in his second Epist. De Templis Græcor. supposes these Benches were made for the common use of the Laity. The same says Clemens, in his Constitut. Apost. B. 2. cap. 57. But Eusebius means another thing. For afterwards, where he explains the whole Fabrick of this Church Allegorically, he says that by the Thrones, the Bishops and Presbyters were meant: But by the Benches, the Deacons, and others that served in the Church. Wherefore these Benches were rather designed for those who served in the Church, than for the Laicks. Indeed the Laity were not permitted to sit in the Church. So says Optatus in his fourth Book, which Words of his we must so understand, that in a Congregation in the Church, during the time of Divine Service, the Laicks were not permitted to sit down; but when the Service was ended, they had liberty to sit. So also says Athanas. in his Epist. Ad Solitar. Vales.

(y) Christophorson renders this place thus; atque adeo ad fenestras inferioris templi affixit, and therefore joyned them to the windows of the lower Temple: The meaning of which Version I understand not. For I cannot apprehend how the Exhedræ (i. e. the Vestries, or Lower buildings which stood on the sides of the Cathedral, and were joyned to it) could be fixed to the Windows. Christophorson supposed that εἰσβολαὶ (the term here used in the Greek) did signifie Windows. Indeed, Eusebius, speaking a little above concerning the Windows through which the light was conveyed into the Porches, uses this term [εἰσβολαὶ,] which Christophorson translates Windows. But in this place, where εἰσβολαὶ is put by its self, without being joyned to any other Word, it cannot signifie Windows. Either therefore Eusebius means, by this term here used, the Doors of the Cathedral, which a little before he calls [παρόδους;] or else certain walks, through which there was a passage to the Cathedral; which Paulinus, in his twelfth Epistle, calls Transennæ. But 'tis my judgment that the Doors of the Cathedral are hereby meant. Further, by those Oeci, and Exhedræ, Eusebius means the Baptistery, the Consistory, and the place where they saluted one another; which were joyned to the Cathedral. Vales.

(z) We observed before (see Book 1. Chap. 1. Note b.) that οἰκονομία (the term that occurs here) signifies not only Christ's Incarnation; but that, whatever our Saviour did in the Flesh, in order to the procuring Man's Salvation, is in general termed οἰκονομία. See the authorities there quoted. This place also evidently demonstrates the same, where Eusebius terms not only the Death, but the Resurrection also of Christ, οἰκονομίας, dispensations, in the plural number. Vales.

I turned my face from thee when I was a little angry; but with everlaſting mercy I will have mercy upon thee, † ſaith the Lord who hath redeem'd thee. † Ariſe, ariſe, thou who haſt drunk from the hand of the Lord the cup of his wrath. For thou haſt drunk of, and emptied the cup of deſtruction, the cup of my fury: and there was none of all thy ſons, whom thou haſt born, to comfort thee: neither was there any to take thee by the hand: Behold I have taken out of thy hand the cup of deſtruction, the cup of my wrath, and thou ſhalt no longer drink it. And I will put it into the hands of them who have injured thee, and debaſed thee. *Ariſe, ariſe, put on ſtrength, put on thy glory. Shake off the duſt, and ariſe: ſit down: looſe the chain of thy neck. || Lift up thine eyes round about, and view thy children gathered together. Behold, they are gathered together, and come to thee. As I live ſaith the Lord, thou ſhalt put them all on as an ornament, and thou ſhalt put them about thee as a bride doth her bravery. For thy deſolate places, and thoſe that were waſted and ruinous, ſhall now be too narrow for thy inhabitants. And they ſhall be removed far from thee, that devoured thee: for thy Sons which thou hadſt loſt ſhall ſay in thy ears; The place is too ſtrait for me: make a place for me that I may dwell. And thou ſhalt ſay in thine heart, who hath begotten me theſe? I am childleſs and a widow. Who hath nouriſhed theſe for me? I was left deſolate: theſe where had they been? All this Eſaias hath predicted. Theſe things were in times paſt recorded in the holy Scriptures, concerning us. And it was requiſite that we ſhould now at length receive the truth of theſe words really and actually fulfilled. In regard therefore the Bridegroom, the Word, hath ſpoken in this manner to his Spouſe, the Sacred and Holy Church, agreeably hereto hath this (a) Dreſſer of the Bride, (with the Prayers of you all in common, reaching out to her your helping hands, by the appointment of God the ſupream King, and by the appearance and preſence of Jeſus Chriſt's power) raiſed and erected this deſolate [Church,] lying like a dead Carcaſs [on the Ground,] and deſpaired of by all Men. And, having lifted her up after this manner, hath made her ſuch an one, as he was inſtructed to do by the Delineation of the ſacred Scriptures. This [Fabrick] is indeed a ſtupendious Miracle, and doth ſurpaſs all the degrees of Admiration, eſpecially to them, who are only intent upon the outward appearance of things. But the original Examples and primitive Forms hereof, the ſpiritual and truly divine Patterns are more admirable than all Miracles; I mean the Reparations of that Divine and Rational Building in our Souls. Which [Structure] when the Son of God himſelf had framed according to his own image, and had freely granted, that in all parts it ſhould bear the reſemblance of God, he beſtowed upon it a Nature incorruptible, incorporeal, rational, different from all Terrene Matter, [and gave it] a (b) Subſtance originally and of it ſelf intelligent; after he had once thus created it at the beginning out of nothing, He made it a holy Spouſe, and [framed it into] a moſt ſacred Temple for Himſelf and his Father. This He himſelf in expreſs words acknowledgeth, ſaying

Conſtant. and Licinius.

* I will dwell in them and walk amongſt them, and I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people. Such indeed is the perfect and purified Soul, which was ſo framed at the beginning, that it bore the perfect image of the Celeſtial Word. But when through the Envy and Emulation of the malicious Devil, by its own voluntary choice, it began to be a Follower of its own Paſſions, and was inamoured with Vice, (God having withdrawn himſelf out of it,) being left deſtitute as it were of a Defender, it was eaſily captivated, and remained expoſed to their Treacheries who for a long time had been Enviers [of his Glory,] and being now utterly battered down by the Engines and Machines of its inviſible Adverſaries, and ſpiritual Enemies, it ſunk down into ſuch a total Ruin, that not one Stone of Vertue was left ſtanding upon another: All the Parts of it lay proſtrate on the Ground, as dead, utterly deprived of all thoſe Notions concerning God, which were naturally imprinted on it. But this ruinated Building, which was framed after the Image of God, was not laid waſte by that wild Boar out of the Wood, which is viſible to our Eyes, but by ſome deſtructive Devil, and by intelligent and ſpiritual Wild-Beaſts. Who, having put it into a Flame by wicked Paſſions (as it were with the (c) fiery Darts of their Malice) have burnt with Fire the truly Divine Sanctuary of God, and deſtroyed the Tabernacle of his Name even to the Ground. Afterwards they buried it (miſerable Wretch!) under a vaſt heap of Earth which they caſt up, and reduced it to an utter Deſpair of all manner of Safety. But its Patron, the Divine and Salutary Word (obeying the Love of his moſt gracious Father ſhown towards Mankind,) reſtored it again after it had ſuffered condign Puniſhment for its Sins. In the firſt place therefore, having united to himſelf the Minds of the Emperors, by means of thoſe moſt pious Princes, he cleanſed the whole World from all impious and pernicious Men, and alſo from thoſe cruel and barbarous Tyrants, hated of God. Afterwards he brought to light Men very well known to him, perſons that

(a) Νυμφοστόλος is here very well rendred by Chriſtoph. Exornator ſponſæ, the Dreſſer of the Bride. Muſculus renders it not omiſs Paranymphus, (i. e.) one who is to take care of all things that appertain to the Bride. Valeſ.

(b) Euſebius here calls the ſoul of Man, ὐσία αὐτονοερὰ, (i. e.) a ſelf-intelligent Subſtance, becauſe naturally and of it ſelf it underſtandeth. So the Philoſophers call Spiritual Subſtances, νοερὰς ὐσίας, ſuch as we call Intelligentias, Intelligences. But Chriſtophorſon being groſly miſtaken, takes νοερα ὐσία in this place to be the ſame with νοητὴ ὐσία; and accordingly renders it, Subſtantia Solâ mentis intelligentiâ cognita, a Subſtance which can only be comprehended, by the underſtanding of the mind. But there is a difference betwixt νοητὸν, (i. e.) intelligible, that which may be comprehended, or, underſtood, and νοερὸν (i. e.) intellectual, that which does underſtand, or comprehend. For example's ſake, Chimera, and all ſuch Fictions of the underſtanding are νοητὰ, intelligible, but not νοερὰ, intellectual or intelligent. Nebridius in his 71 Epiſt. to both Auguſtines, doth very well diſtinguiſh betwixt theſe words. Valeſ.

(c) By πεπυρακτωμένα βέλη, Euſebius means malleoli, darts beſmeared with wild-fire, and ſuch fire-balls as are flung from the Walls upon Enemies; here he imitates that place of Saint Paul, where he makes the Devil to be armed with fiery darts, with which he fights againſt Men. See Epheſ. 6. 16. Valeſ.

that heretofore had been (d) consecrated Priests to him for ever, and were secretly concealed, and secured by his Defence during the storm of Persecution, whom agreeable to their Deserts he honoured with the magnificent Gifts of the Spirit: By these Men he hath again purified and cleansed (by their poinant and reprehensive Preaching of the Divine Precepts, as it were with Shovels and Spades,) those Souls which a little before were defiled, and totally covered over with all manner of filthiness, and heaps of impious Injunctions. And when he had made the place of all your Minds bright and clear, he delivered up to this most prudent Prelate, most acceptable to God. Who being a Man endowed with great Judgment and Reason in other things, and also, most acute in discerning and (e) distinguishing the Disposition of the Souls allotted to his care; from the very first day (as I may say) even to this present, he hath not ceased to build: Cementing together in you all one while glistering Gold, at other times purified and tried Silver, and precious and rich Stones. So that by his Works towards you he hath again compleated that sacred and mystical Prophecy, the words whereof are these:

* Esai. c. 54. v. 11, 12, 13, 14.

* Behold I prepare Carbuncle for thy stone, and Sapphire for thy foundations, and for thy Bulwarks Jasper, and for thy gates stones of Crystal, and for thy wall choice stones: and all thy children shall be taught of God, and great [shall be] the peace of thy children: and thou shalt be built in righteousness. He therefore building in righteousness hath aptly and fitly differenced the Strength of all the People. Some he hath inclosed with the outward Wall only; that is, he hath fortified them round with an unerring and strong Faith: Of this sort there is a great multitude, who cannot bear a more excellent Structure. To others he committeth [the custody of] the Entrances into the Temple, giving them in command (f) to watch at the Gates, and to conduct those in, that come thither; these may fitly be compared to the Porches of the Temple. Other some he hath set to support the chief Pillars, which are without, about the (g) Court quadrangular-wise. Bringing them within the first (h) Bolts of the literal sense of the four Gospels. Some he hath also placed about the Sanctuary (i) on both sides, these are such as are * Catechumens as yet, and do make a good progress and increase in the Faith; (k) but yet they are not far from inspecting those most secret Mysteries, which [Privilege] only the perfect Believers do enjoy. Out of this number he hath taken those, whose immaculate Souls have been purified like Gold in the sacred Laver; some of whom he hath set to support Pillars far more noble than those outward ones, even the most intricate and mysterious Sentences of sacred Scripture; others of them he illuminateth to be [as it were] (l) Windows to transmit Light into the Temple. He hath also beautified the whole Temple with one most spacious Portico; that is with the glorious Worship of the one and only God, the supream King. He hath represented Christ and the Holy Ghost on each side of the Father's Pre-eminence and Authority, as the (m) second Rays of Light. And he demonstrateth throughout the whole Cathedral a most copious and excellent Light and Evidence of the Truth particularly [couch'd] in the remaining [Articles of our Faith.] Moreover, when he had from all Parts selected living, firm, and strong Stones of Souls, of all them he framed a stately and Royal Sanctuary, full of light and splendour both within and without: (n) In as much as not only in their Souls and Minds, but their Bodies also, they are beautified with the glorious Ornaments of Chastity and Modesty. There are also within this Temple, Thrones, a great many Benches, and Seats; which are in all those Souls, whereon reside such Gifts of the Holy Ghost, as were heretofore seen by the Holy Apostles: † To whom appear'd cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. But on him that presides over all these, Christ himself ('tis likely) does entirely and wholly reside: And upon (o) those who are next to him in dignity, on every one of them proportionably, according as he is capable of receiving the distributions of the Power of Christ, and of the Holy Ghost. The Benches also are the Souls of certain Angels, the Instruction and Custody of every one whereof is committed to them. But the August, Great, and Only Altar, what [διὰ βίου ἱερωμένοι αὐτῷ] which we render [Priests consecrated to him for ever] Translators understood not; and have therefore misinterpreted it. There were two sorts of Priests, some Annual; such were those the Jews had, under the Roman Governours; and such were almost all the Gentile Priests. Others were Perpetual, which they called διὰ βίου. This an old Inscription in Gruter, (pag. 313.) does manifest. And also the old Coins of the Perpereni, which Jac. Sirmondus published; where we met with ΙΕΡΕΥΣ ΔΙΑ ΒΙΟΥ, Sacerdos perpetuus, a perpetual Priest. Hence 'tis that Eusebius calls the Priests of the Christians, [ἱερωμένοι διὰ βίου· because their Priesthood was not yearly, but perpetual: Like the Priesthood of Christ: Who is a Priest for ever after the Order of Melchisedech; as saith the Prophet. The word [ἱερωμένοι] our Author uses frequently to signifie Priests: See the third Chapter of this Book; where we have ἱερουργίαι καὶ ἱερωμένων, the sacred Duties or Performances of the Priests. In our Version of διὰ βίου we follow Velleius Paterculus, who calls those Magistrates, Perpetui, which the Athenians call διὰ βίου. Minutius Felix (in Gestis Purgationis Cæciliani) is called Flamen Perpetuus. This Dignity for brevities-sake was commonly noted by these Characters, F L. P P. i. e. Flamen Perpetuus, a Perpetual Priest. These Priests are mentioned in the second Law, Cod. Theod. Vales.

(d) What was here meant by

(e) Instead of φιλοκεινῶν we should rather read φυλοκεινῶν· as the old Maz. MS. does (that is,) adjudging or attributing to every one his place. Mark what follows in the Chapter. But should any desire to retain the common reading, I would not resist it much: For φιλοκεινεῖν (in Hesychius) is explain'd by διαιρεῖν, dividere, to divide. Vales.

(f) By συβαυλεῖν καὶ ποδηγεῖν τὰς εἰσιόντας (to watch at the Gates and conduct those that come in.)

Eusebius here means the Sub-Deacons, who kept the Gates of the Church, and conducted all that came in to their particular places: (viz. The Catechumens, Penitents, and Possessed with Evil Spirits, into the Narthex (or Church-Porch,) or into the Catechumenium, (or place where they Catechised;) but the Believers into the Quire. See the 22 Canon of the Council of Laodicea, and Zonaras's and Balsamo's Notes upon it. Vales.

(g) We have before noted in Note (u.) of this Chapter, that that void open place betwixt the Portico and the Church is called by the Latines Atrium the Court. The Greek's (as here) call the same place αὐλὴ: This word [αὐλὴ] frequently occurs in the Gospel, and is always by the old Translator render'd atrium. Vales.

Constant. and Licinius.

* See Note (k.)

(h) 'Tis difficult to render this word [μεσολαὶ] here used, by any Latin word. Musculus renders it Propugnacula, Bulwarks. Christoph. Repagula, Bars. I have translated it Obices, Bolts. Vales.

(i) The word [μεσολαὶς] must be blotted out; for it troubleth the sense; it crept in here out of the upper line. Vales.

(k) By these words [ἃ μὴν πύρρω πω τῆς θεοπτίας ἔτι πιστῶν, not far removed from that clear inspection into the Mysteries which the believers enjoy] I say, by these words Eusebius means those who amongst the antient Christians were called Competentes. These were certain Holy Candidates of Baptism as it were. Eusebius here makes three degrees or ranks of the Catechumeni. The first were those who had learned the Creed: (i. e.) the Principles of Christian Religion. These he compares to the Out-Wall of the Church. The second were those to whom a short Exposition of the Gospels was delivered. These he compares to the Pillars, which were placed in the Court made like a Quadrangle. The next are the Competentes, who were next to the Perfect Believers. But if any one by the first rank would rather understand the promiscuous multitude of the Laicks; and by the second rank those of the Laity, which were the more learned: I will not be much averse to that Explication. Vales.

(l) Ἀνοίσμασι, the term used at this place, may be render'd Gates, as well as Windows. Vales.

(m) At these words we have (in the Maz. MS.) a long Scholion in the Margin, inveighing against this Author as being Heretical, and against this Passage, as being Blasphemous, in regard it makes the Son inferiour to the Father, and attributes the [τὰ πρῶτα] first place to the Father, and the [τὰ δεύτερα] second to the Son. In the Med. MS. we meet with this short Scholion at the Margin here [καὶ τὸ δὲ Βλάσφημον,] and this also is Blasphemy.] Vales.

(n) This place is eminent for the commendation of the Chastity and Continency of the Clergy: But its excellence lay heretofore undiscovered, because of the erroneous Version of Translators: The cause of the mistake in them was the false punctation in Steph. Edit. and in the King's MS. but the Maz. and Med. MSS. do with good reason reject that punctation. Vales.

(o) He means the Presbyters, who had the second degree of the Priesthood. Here he compares the Bishop and Presbyters to the Thrones of the Church, and the Deacons to the Benches. Vales.

what can it be elſe, but the moſt pure Soul and Holy of Holies of the Common Prieſt of all. On his Right Hand ſtandeth the Great High-Prieſt of all, Jeſus himſelf, the only begotten Son of God; who with a chearful Countenance and * ſtretch'd-forth Hands receiveth from all that ſweet-ſmelling Incenſe, and thoſe unbloody and immaterial Sacrifices of Prayers; and tranſmits them to his Heavenly Father the Supream God: Whom in the firſt place he himſelf worſhippeth, and he only exhibiteth due Veneration to the Father; afterwards he beſeecheth him for ever to continue favourable and propitious towards all us. Such is that Auguſt Temple, which the Great Creator of all things the [Word of God] hath built throughout all that World under the Sun; he himſelf hath again framed upon Earth this intellectual Repreſentation of thoſe things beyond the Arches of Heaven: That by every Creature, and by rational Souls upon the Earth, his Father might be duly honoured and adored. (p) But that Region above the Heavens, and the things there, which are the Originals of what we here behold, that Jeruſalem which is above, that * Celeſtial Mount Sion, and that City of the living God, far above the World, in which are innumerable Companies of Angels, and the Church of the Firſt-born which are written in Heaven, who with Praiſes unutterable, which we cannot underſtand, laud their Creator and Supream Prince; [the Bleſſedneſs of this Region, I ſay, and of its Inhabitants] † no Mortal is able deſervedly to ſet forth. For * eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither have entred into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him. Of which things, ſince we are now vouchſafed to be Partakeas in part, let us, both Men, Women and Children, Small and Great, all together, with one Spirit and one Soul never ceaſe to give thanks and praiſe to the Author of theſe our ſo great good things: † Who hath mercy on all our iniquities, and healeth all our infirmities. Who redeemeth our life from deſtruction, and crowneth us with mercy and loving kindneſs; who filleth our deſire with good things. For he hath not dealt with us according to our ſins, neither hath he rewarded us according to our iniquities. For as far as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, ſo far hath he removed our ſins from us. As a father pitieth his own children, even ſo is the Lord merciful to them that fear him. Keeping theſe things freſh in our Memories both now, and throughout all ſucceeding Times, and moreover ſetting before [the Eyes of] our Minds God the Cauſe of this preſent Day's joyful Solemnity, and the Maſter of this Feaſt, both Day and Night, every Hour, and (as I may ſay) every Moment wherein we fetch our Breath; let us love him and worſhip him, with all the Strength of our Souls. And let us now riſe up, and with the loud Voice of our Affection beſeech him, that he would continually ſave and defend us within his Sheepfold, and that he would afford us his everlaſting Peace entire and immoveable in Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, by whom be Glory to him throughout all Ages, Amen.

CHAP. V.

Copies of the Imperial Laws.

LET us therefore now annex the Copies of Conſtantine's and Licinius's Imperial Decrees tranſlated out of Latin.

A Copy of the Imperial Edict tranſlated out of Latin.

Having long ſince perceived, that a Liberty of Religion ought not to be denied, but that Licenſe ſhould be permitted to every one's Will and Arbitrement, of being careful about their Religious Performances according to their own Mind and Judgment, We have Decreed, That as well all other Perſons, as thoſe that are Chriſtians ſhould retain the Faith [and Obſervances] of their own Sect and Religion. But becauſe in that Reſcript wherein this Liberty was granted them, (a) many and different ſorts of Sects ſeemed to be expreſly ſet down, for which reaſon peradventure ſome of them not long after deſiſted from ſuch an Obſervance. Wherefore when We Conſtantine, and Licinius, Auguſti, came fortunately to Mediolanum, and had in debate all matters which might conduce to the Good and Utility of the Publick; amongſt other things, which to us ſeemed ſeveral ways profitable to all in general, (or rather which we judg'd ought to be decreed before any thing elſe) we ſuppoſed ſuch Conſtitutions were to be made, as therein ſhould be contained the Worſhip and Veneration of the Deity: That is, that we ſhould allow a free Choice both to Chriſtians and all others, of following what way of Worſhip they pleaſe: That ſo by this means that Godhead and Heavenly Being, whatever it is, might be propitious to us, and to all that live under our Government. We have therefore proclaimed this our Will and Pleaſure, after we had taken a moſt wholeſome and deliberate Conſideration thereupon, that licence be denied to none at all of following or chooſing the Obſervances or Religion of the Chriſtians: And that free power be granted to every one to apply his Mind to that Religion, which he judgeth moſt congruous and agreeable to himſelf: That ſo God may in all things manifeſt his uſual Care and Loving-kindneſs towards us. It was alſo convenient, that we ſhould ſignifie to you this our Pleaſure; that all thoſe Sects which were included in our former Reſcript to your Devotion concerning the Chriſtians ſhould be quite left out, both that whatever ſeems hurtful and diſagreeable to our Clemency ſhould be wholly removed, and alſo that in future all that have reſolved to make choice of, and keep the Obſervances of the Chriſtian Religion, might obſerve them freely

(a) Becauſe that firſt Reſcript or Letter, mentioned here by Conſtantine, is loſt, we cannot eaſily reſolve what Conſtantine means, when he ſays, that in that Edict were named many and ſeveral ſorts of αἱρέσεις, Sects; for which reaſon many deſiſted from profeſſing Chriſtianity. Chriſtophorſon tranſlates [διαφόρους αἱρέσεις] doubtful and controverted Opinions; as if the ſenſe or meaning of this firſt Edict had been ambiguous. So alſo Baronius underſtands Chriſtoph. his Words at the year of Chriſt 313. Langus and Muſculus tranſlate [αἱρέσεις] opiniones & hæreſes, Hereſies and Opinions; far better than Chriſtoph. For αἵρεσις cannot ſignifie the ſenſe, or [διάνοια] meaning of a place: But it ſignifies an Opinion or Sect. When the Emperor Conſtantine therefore had in that former Edict permitted this Liberty of Conſcience to all, he added, that that privilege was not granted to the Chriſtians only, but to all Men of every Sect, (that is) to Jews, Samaritans, Marcioniſts, &c. and to all Sects of all Religions. This the Chriſtians took to be no ſmall injury to their Religion, that it ſhould be reckon'd amongſt Schiſmaticks, and unbelieving Jews. Conſtantine being advertiſed hereof by the Catholicks, corrected it in this latter Edict; that Clauſe, which mentioned all Sects, being taken out: And this is that which is meant by theſe Words a little further, ἵν' ἀφαιρεθεισῶν πασῶν τῶν αἱρέσεων αἵτινες πῶς σφετέρῃς ἡμῶν γεγραμμέσιν ἐνεχοντο. (i. e.) that all thoſe Sects which were in our former Reſcript ſhould be quite left out. Valeſ.

freely and firmly, without any molestation. These things we therefore determined fully to signifie to your Carefulness; that you may be certified, that we have granted to the Christians a free and absolute liberty of being careful about the Exercise of their Religion. (b) In as much as we have already freely and absolutely granted them this, your Devotedness does hereby perceive that we have allowed a liberty to others also, who are desirous of following their own Observances and Religion: Which, 'tis apparent, is agreeable to the Tranquility of our Times, to wit, that every one should have a liberty and power of choosing and being careful about worshipping whatever Deity he has a mind to. And this we therefore did, that we might seem not in the least to have lessened or detracted from any manner of Divine Worship or Religion whatsoever. We have also further decreed in favour of the Christians; that those their Places (wherein they used to convene in times past (concerning which Places there was (c) another Rule or Form appointed in our Rescript formerly sent to your Devotedness,) in case it appears that they have been purchased by any persons, either of our Exchequer, or of any one else) be immediately and without all hesitancy restored to the Christians *themselves, without Money, and without any exaction of an * additional Price or Value: And if any have receiv'd these Places by way of Gift, that they in like manner forthwith restore them to the* Christians. But if those, who have purchased, or had the Grants of these Places, have a desire to demand any thing of our Goodness, let them make their Address to the Governour that prsides as Judge in that Province, that by our Bounty provision may be made for them: All which places it shall behove you to see forthwith restored to the society of Christians by your Care and Diligence without the least delay. And in as much as the said Christians are known to have had possession not only of those Places wherein they usually assembled themselves, but of others also, which did not particularly and apart belong to any private Persons amongst them, but were the Right of a Society of them; that is, of the Christians; you shall give order that all these places (according to the (d) aforesaid Law) be without all manner of hesitancy restored to the said Christians, that is, to every Society and Assembly of them: The Rule aforesaid being observed, (viz.) that such as shall restore those places [to the Christians,] without a restitution of the price they gave for them, as we have said, may expect to be indemnified by our Gracious Liberality. Now it is your duty to act most vigorously in all these things in behalf of the aforesaid Body of the Christians; both that our Mandate may with all speed be fulfilled; and also that in this Matter provision may be made by our Goodness for the common Quiet and Tranquility of the Publick. For by this means, as is aforesaid, the Divine Care and Goodness towards us, which we have already experienced in many Affairs, will continue firm and lasting for ever. Moreover, to the end that the definitive Determination of this our Law, and of our gracious Indulgence may come to all Men's knowledge, 'tis expedient that this Rescript of ours be proposed to publick view, and made known to all persons, that so no body may be ignorant of the Establishment of this our Gracious Indulgence.

(b) This was Constantine's second Edict, directed to the Prætorium, the same Person to whom was sent Constantine's first Edict for the Christians. The first Edict was signed or dated at Rome, Constantine II. and Licinius II. Coss. and it was immediately sent into the East to Maximin; see Book 9. Chap. 9. But this second Edict was dated at Mediolanum on the year following. Vales

(c) Concerning the Restitution of the publick Places and Cæmiteria of the Christians, there is extant an Edict of Gallienus's in Book 7. Chap. 13. of this History, in which these places are commanded to be restored to the Christians. In the first Decree therefore, which Constantine and Licinius (after Maxentius was conquered,) published in favour of the Christians; a Copy of which they sent to Maximinus the Emperor into the East, they only Decreed, that all places where the Christians used to assemble themselves, which had been heretofore taken from them, should be restored to them again; but they said nothing expresly concerning the restitution of the price: Neither in the Edict of Maximin, which was published soon after the Decree of Constantine and Licinius, was there any caution concerning repaying of the price, as we may see in Book 9. Chap. 9. of this History. It was necessary therefore that Constantine should Decree something more distinctly concerning that point. That the Christians might recover those places which had been taken from them or sold, or given by the Treasury, without repaying the price. Vales.

* Τῆς τιμῆς ἐπαναθέσεως. So he terms adjectiones, i. e. the additions to the prices in sales of Goods or Estates. These adjectiones (which Civilians in other words call additamenta pretii, accessions to the price) we in France call encheres. Vales.

(d) Ἐπὶ τῷ νόμῳ ὃν προεθέμην. (according to the Decree aforesaid) (i. e.) according to that Edict signed at Rome. Constantine II. and Licinius II. Coss. which Edict Constantine mention'd before. That was Constantine's first Decree for the Christians. But Constantine, having in that Law shew'd himself too favourable towards the Christians, in that in it he had extolled their Religion, and condemned all other Sects and Ceremonies, was forced in this second Edict to explain his Mind, for fear, lest the Heathens should murmur at the prohibiting and abolishing the Worship of their Gods. Wherefore Constantine says, that he granted free liberty to every one to worship what Gods, and follow what Sect and and Religion he pleased. This second Decree therefore is nothing else but an explication of the first. For in the first Edict there were some Words with which the Gentiles and also the Schismatical Christians were not a little offended; in that they saw themselves named Hereticks. The Catholick Christians also resented it, because they were joyned in the same Decree with the Gentiles and Hereticks. Wherefore Constantine, that he might shew himself kind to all, desired that those words might be razed out. And this is the sense of those former words, ἵν' ἀφαιρεθεισῶν παντελῶς περὶ αἱρέσεων, &c. That the names of these Sects in our former Rescript might be wholly taken out, &c. Vales.

A Copy of another Imperial Edict which the Emperors published again, to declare, that this their Beneficence was granted only to the Catholick Church.

God save You, dearest Anulinus! This is the manner of Our Goodness; We desire, that those things which appertain to another's Right should not only not be infested with Inquietude, but should also be restored, Dearest Anulinus! Wherefore our Pleasure is, that, as soon as you receive this our Rescript, if any of those [Estates] (which did belong to the Catholick Church of the Christians, in all our Cities, or in other places,) are now detained by the (e) Decurions, or by any other Persons, you cause 'em to be forthwith restored to their [respective] Churches: In as much as we have resolved that those [Estates] which the said Churches have formerly possess'd, shall revert and become their Right again. Since therefore your Devotedness understandeth that this is the most evident Purport of our Command, take care, that all [Estates] which did formerly belong to the Right of the said Churches, (whether Gardens, Houses, or whatever else) be immediately restored to them again: Whereby we may be informed that you have with all diligence and accuracy obey'd this our Command. Farewell, Dearest, and our most Beloved Anulinus.

(e) Instead of πολιτῶν, i. e. Citizens, in this place we read πολιτευτῶν. The πολιτευταὶ are call'd by the Latines, Decuriones; concerning whom see my Notes on Amm. Marcellin. B. 22. p. 225. These Decurions in the time of Persecution seized upon the Places and Farms which belong'd to the Catholick Church, as being vacant. Vales.

Rome, and to (f) Mark. In regard ſeveral ſuch (g) Libels as theſe have been ſent me from the moſt Eminent Anulinus, Proconſul of Africa, wherein 'tis declared that Cecilianus Biſhop of the City of (h) Carthage is accuſed of many things by ſome of his Collegues ordain'd [Biſhops] throughout Africa: And this matter ſeeming not a little grievous to us, that in thoſe very Provinces (which the Providence of God delivered to our Sacrodneſs by a (i) voluntary Surrender, and where there is a great multitude of People) the Populace being in a manner divided, ſhould be found to degenerate and become worſe, and Differences ſhould be nouriſhed even amongſt Biſhops: It ſeemed good to us, that Cecilianus himſelf (together with ten Biſhops his ſuppoſed Accuſers, and ten other Biſhops, whom he ſhall judge neceſſary in behalf of his Cauſe,) ſail to Rome; that there in your Preſence, and alſo in the Preſence of Reticius, Maternus, and Marinus your Collegues, (whom for this reaſon we have commanded to haſten to Rome) he may be heard in ſuch manner as, you know, is moſt agreeable with the moſt Sacred Law. Moreover, that you may have a moſt compleat and perfect Knowledge of all theſe things, we have ſubjoyned to this our Reſcript, Copies of the Libels which were ſent to us by Anulinus, and have tranſmitted them to your aforeſaid Collegues. Which Libels when your Gravity ſhall have read, you ſhall deliberate how the aforeſaid Controverſie may with the greateſt accuracy be examined, and determined according to Equity. For it is not unknown to your Aſſiduity that we bear ſo great a Reverence *to the moſt Legitimate Catholick Church, that we would have you leave no Schiſm or Diſſention at all in any part of it. The Divinity of the Supream God preſerve you (k) (Deareſt) many years.

A Copy of an Imperial Reſcript, by which [Conſtantine] ſummons a ſecond Synod, to put an end to all Diſſention amongſt the Biſhops.

Conſtantius Auguſtus, to Chreſtus Biſhop of Syracuſe. When as heretofore ſome began wickedly and perverſly to ſeparate from the Holy Religion, the Celeſtial Power, and the Catholick Opinion; We, deſirous that ſuch pertinacious Contentions as theſe ſhould be pared off, took ſuch Order that (ſome Biſhops being ſent out of France, and alſo thoſe ſummoned out of Africa, who being of contrary Factions, pertinaciouſly and continually quarrelled *amongſt themſelves, the Biſhop of Rome being alſo preſent,) this [Diſſention] which ſeemed to be raiſed after a moſt careful examination, might in their preſence be compoſed. But in regard (as it commonly happens) ſome perſons, forgetful both of their own Salvation, and of the Veneration due to the moſt holy Religion, ceaſe not as yet to improve their private Grudges and Animoſities, being unwilling to acquieſce in the Sentence already paſſed, but poſitively aſſerting, that they were but a few [Biſhops] who gave their Sentiments and Opinions; and that (before they had carefully enquired into all things which ought to have been firſt inſpected) they proceeded with too much haſte and precipitancy to paſs a definitive Sentence. From all this it happens that even they, whoſe duty it is to preſerve a brotherly and unanimous unity of Mind, unworthily, or rather impiouſly, create Schiſms amongſt one another; and alſo give an occaſion of Scorn and Deriſion to thoſe Men, whoſe Souls are alienated from the moſt holy Religion. Wherefore it was our chiefeſt care, that theſe [Diviſions,] (which ought, after ſentence already given to have been terminated by a voluntary aſſent) might now at laſt be concluded in the preſence of many Biſhops. Since therefore we have ſummoned many Biſhops out of divers and innumerable places, to aſſemble themſelves on the Calends of Auguſt, at the City Orleans: We thought good to write to you alſo, that having received a publick Chariot from the moſt Eminent Latronianus (l) Corrector of Sicily, and taking into your company two (m) of the ſecond Order, whom you ſhall think fit to chooſe, and alſo bringing along with you three Servants which may miniſter to you in your Journey, you meet on the very day appointed at the place aforeſaid, that both your Gravity, and alſo by the unanimous and concordant Prudence and Perſpicacity of the reſt there aſſembled, this Diſſention (which has ſhamefully been continued hitherto by certain deteſtable Quarrellings, after all things have been heard which ſhall be ſaid by the now diſagreeing Parties, whom we have ſummon'd to appear alſo,) may now at laſt be reſtored to a fit and congruous [Obſervancy of] Religion and Faith, and to a Brotherly Union. God Almighty preſerve you in health many years.

* Inſtead of [κατὰλλήλως, mutually, it ſhould be undoubtedly [καὶ] ἀλλήλων, amongſt themſelves:] ſo 'tis corrected in the Margin of the Geneva-Edition: And alſo Sir H. Savil had mended it, in the Margin of his Copy. Valeſ.

(l) The Maz. Fuk. and Med. MSS. read κοινήτορ&. but without doubt we ſhould read κοιρήτορ& (that is) from Latronianus Corrector of Sicily, we find mention of this Latronianus in an old Inſcription at Panormus, which is atteſted by Gaultherus, in Tabulis Siculis, number 164 D. N. FL. VALERIO LICINIO AUG. DOMITIUS LATRONIANUS V.C. CORR. P.S. DEVOTUS N.M. QUE EJUS. Gualtherus alſo in his Annotations upon this Inſcription, quoteth and correcteth this place of Euſebius. Valeſ.

(m) By theſe words [ὁι ἐκ δευτέρου θεόνυ] Euſebius meaneth the Presbyters, who were commonly called Sacerdotes ſecundi ordinis, (Prieſts of the ſecond Order) which may be collected out of ſeveral good Authors, as Optatus Milevitanus, and Jacobus Sirmondus in his Notes upon Sidonius, pag. 78. Hieronymus, in his Epitaph on the bleſſed Paula, ſays, There were preſent the Biſhops of Hieruſalem and other Cities, and an innumerable company of Prieſts [inferioris gradus] of the lower Order, &c. So alſo ſays Gregor. Nazianz. in Carm. Jamb. de vitâ ſuâ, pag. 6. Hence comes this diſtinction; the Biſhops in the Church, ſate in more lofty Thrones, the Presbyters ſitting on both hands

(f) It is much controverted amongſt the Learned, who this Mark is, whom Conſtantine here joineth with Miltiades Biſhop of Rome. Baronius, at the year of Chriſt 313. Ch. 23. thinks the Text of Euſebius is faulty, and inſtead of [μάρκῳ] he would read [ἱερεῖ χῳ.] But this Emendation cannot be admitted of, for whereas Miltiades is before call'd ἐπίσκοπος, Biſhop, 'tis ſuperfluous to add ἱερέως ſacred Magiſtrate. Moreover, Titles of honour are common Words, but this here is an affected and unuſual term. Wherefore, rejecting this conjecture of Baronius's, I think this Mark was a Presbyter of the Church of Rome, whom Conſtantine had a deſire ſhould be preſent at this Synod with Miltiades. This alſo I think was that Mark who was Biſhop of Rome after Silveſter. This Epiſtle of Conſtantine to Miltiades was extant in the third Conference at Carthage; Chap. 319. But the latter part of this third Conference, which in my opinion is the moſt uſeful, is loſt. Valeſ.

(g) By τοῖς τοι χάρταις are meant two Libels, which contained the faults of Cecilianus Biſhop of Carthage, which being ſubſcribed by the Faction of Majorinus, they gave them to Anulinus the Proconſul at Carthage on the 17th of the Calends of May. Conſtantine the Emperor being the third time, and Licinius the third time Conſuls. Theſe Libels Conſtantine calls [χάρται,] becauſe they contained in them many Papers, and many publick Acts, to prove the faults of Cecilianus. Chriſtoph. calls theſe χάρται, Epiſtles, but that is an ill term: For there was but one Epiſtle ſent by Anulinus to Conſtantine the Emperor, but there were ſeveral χάρται, or Papers. Conſtantine alſo a little further calls them Libelli: So does Auguſtine alſo, in his 48 Epiſtle to Vincentius, call it Libellus: And ſays it was thus ſuperſcribed; The Libel of the Catholick Church, containing the faults of Cecilianus, put in by the faction of Majorinus. Valeſ.

(h) In our Text it is, καρταγωνέων; in Niceph. καρταγωνίων; in the Maz. and Med. MSS. 'tis written καρταγωνησίων by a tranſpoſition of the aſpirate, which the Greeks uſually do in turning Latin proper names into Greek. Valeſ.

(i) Inſtead of [αὐθαιρέσι&] we ſhould undoubtedly read [αὐθαιρέτως] in this place, thus, ἃς τῇ ἐμῇ καθοσιώσει αὐθαιρέτως ἡ θεία πέφυκε, ἐνεχείρισε (i. e.) (thoſe Countries which Divine Providence gave into our Hands by a voluntary ſurrender.) For when the head of Maxentius was ſent into Africa, all Africa at the ſight of the Tyrant's head, yielded to Conſtantine. And alſo before the overthrow of Maxentius, ſome African Cities yielded themſelves voluntarily to Conſtantine, when he ſent ſome Sea-forces thither. Valeſ.

(k) Inſtead of [τιμιώτατε] the reading in Nicephorus is [τιμιάτατοι, deareſt] in the plural number. For ſince the Reſcript was written to Miltiades Biſhop of Rome, and to Mark, and ſince he always ſpeaks to them in the plural number; 'tis reaſonable that in the cloſe of the Reſcript it ſhould be [τιμιώτατοι.] Further, the Acts of this Synod at Rome are extant in Optatus, B. 1. The Author of the Synodicon (whom we have often quoted) ſays this Synod was convened by Miltiades and Mark at Rome; he joins Mark to Miltiades, as ſoon as he perceived from this Reſcript that Conſtantine mentioned them jointly. Valeſ.

Naz.* in his Dream de Ecclesiæ Anastasiâ, pag. 78. Eusebius also, in his Description of the Church of Tyre, allotteth the Thrones which were in the Church next the Altar, to the Bishop and Presbyters, but the Benches to the Deacons, where also he calls the Presbyters, τὰς μετὰ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον διαδρομάς, i. e. those which have the second places next the Bishop. See St. Augustine's 148th Epistle. Vales.

(a) Concerning the Estates belonging to the Christians.

(a) This Title [περὶ τῶν χριστιανοῖς προσηκόντων · Concerning the Estates of the Christians] is here put in a wrong place: for the Epistle which follows, says not a word concerning the Estates of the Christians. This Title might better have been prefixt before Chap. 5. where we have two several Decrees of Constantine's concerning the Estates of the Christians. Therefore very well do the old Naz. and Fuk. M.SS. make no distinction of a Chapter in this place. Vales.

A Copy of the Emperor's Rescript, by which he granteth Money to the Churches.

CONstantinus Augustus, to Cecilianus Bishop of Carthage. For as much as it was our pleasure that through all the Provinces of Africa, Numidia, and both Mauritania's, some thing should be allow'd for necessary expences to some Ministers of the most Holy and Legitimate Catholick Religion, who were expresly named, We wrote to the * most Perfect Ursus Rationalist of Africa, and have intimated to him that he take care to pay to your Gravity three thousand (b) Folles. Therefore when you shall have received the sum aforesaid, command that it be distributed to all the forementiond, Ministers, according to a Breve directed to you from Hosius. But if you shall perceive there will be any thing wanting towards the fulfilling of our desire to all in this point, without making any scruples or delays you shall demand of Heraclas the Steward of our Estates whatsoever you shall judge requisite. For we ordered him when he was with us, that if your Gravity demanded any money of him, he should without the least hesitancy take care it should be told out to you. And because we have been informed that some men who are of an unsettled mind, make it their business to pervert the Members of the most Holy Catholick Church by a certain impious and clancular Falshood and Corruption; We would have you understand, that We gave such orders to Anulinus our Proconsul, and also Patricius (c) Deputy of the Præfects, when present, that amongst all other things they take an effectual and sufficient care about this business more especially, and that if any such thing be done, they should by no means suffer it to be neglected. If therefore you shall see any such men persisting in this madness, without any further doubtings you shall make your Address to the foresaid Judges; and disclose the matter to them, that they may correct them according to our Orders to them when present. The Deity of the supreme God preserve you many years.

* See B. 9. Chap. 9. Note (f.)

(b) Φόλλεις. Epiphanius mentions these Folles, at the close of his Book De Mensur. & Ponderib. He speaks of two sorts of them: the first he calls the small Talent, consisting of 208 Denarii. The value of the other, he says, is δύο λεπτὰ, duo minuta, two minutes or mites. See the Learned Petavius's Diatriba concerning the Follis, at the end of his Notes on Epiphan. pag. 431, &c. Edit. Paris, 1622.

(c) Concerning these Vicarii Præfectorum, Deputies of the Præfects, we have treated in our Notes on the 14th Book of Amm. Marcellinus; p. 17. where we shewed that there was a difference between acting for a Præfect, and acting for the Præfects. He may be said to act for a Præfect, whom the Præfect of a City, or the Præfect of Prætorium orders to supply his place in any special business But he may be said to act for the Præfects, who exercises a Deputy's power ordine Codicillorum. See the place now cited in those Notes. The title given to these Vicarii at this time was Perfectissimus, (see Book 9. Chap. 9. Note (f)) not Clarissimus, or Spectabilis. This we are informed of from Constantine the Emperor's Rescript to Probianus Proconsul of Africa, which Augustine relates in his 68th Epistle; and in his 3d Book against Cresconius, cap. 70. Vales.

A Copy of the Emperor's Rescript by which he commandeth, that the Prelates of Churches be freed from bearing all Civil Offices.

WE greet you most Honoured Anulinus. Since it is apparent from several Circumstances, that the contempt of that true Religion, by which is preserved the highest Veneration of the Celestial Majesty, has brought imminent Dangers upon the Affairs of the Publick; but when it was lawfully and rightly admitted and preserved, it conferred the greatest Prosperity upon the * Roman Empire, and an eminent Felicity on all Human Affairs; (the Divine Beneficence being the Donor hereof:) it seemed good to Us, ((b) Dearest Anulinus,) that those Men, who with a due sanctity and an assiduous observance of this Law give themselves wholly to the Ministrations and Services of this sacred Religion, should receive the Rewards of their Labours. Wherefore Our Pleasure is that those Men within the Province committed to your care, who in the Catholick Church, over which Cecilianus presides, do service to this sacred Religion, commonly called by the name of Clergymen, be always preserved exempt from all manner of Civil Offices; lest by any error or sacrilegious Misfortune, they should be drawn away from the Service due to the Deity: but [our Will is] that they should rather serve their own Law without any the least inquietude. For when they perform the highest [acts of] worship to God, the greatest advantage seems to accrue to the publick Affairs. Farewel, most Honoured and Dearest Anulinus.

* τῷ Ρωμαϊκῷ ὀνόματι, nomini Romano, upon the Roman name.

(b) In the Med Naz. Fuk. and Savil MSS. we read [τιμιώτατε καὶ ποθεινότατε ἡμῖν Ἀνυλῖνε, most honoured and our dearest Anulinus.] We have the relation of Anulinus in answer to this Rescript of Constantine's in Augustine's 68 Epistle. But Eusebius inserts these Rescripts in a preposterous kind of order. For Constantine's Letter to Cecilianus the Bishop, and his Rescript to Anulinus, ought in order to precede Constantine's Letter to Militiades Bishop of Rome. For all those Letters have a relation to the Roman Synod which was summoned upon the account of Cecilianus, when Constantine and Licinius were both the third time Consuls, in the year of Christ 313. Vales.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning Licinius's Exorbitancies which afterwards ensued, and concerning his Death.

SUch [gifts] therefore did the Divine and Celestial Grace of our Saviour's presence bestow upon us: and such an exuberance of prosperous successes was procur'd by all men, by reason of the peace [restored] to us. This was the posture of our affairs, we spent the time in joy and publick festivities. But this spectacle was intollerable to the malice of the Devil, that hater of all goodness, and industrious Patron of mischief. Nor were the calamitous misfortunes which befel the forementiond Tyrants sufficient to instil a sober considerateness into Licinius, who being honour'd with a prosperous and successful Government, and with the second place of dignity, that next to Constantine the Great, and innobled with an affinity contracted by marriage, and with a near relation to a most august family, relinquish'd the imitation of good men; and became a zealous emulator of the improbity and wickedness of impious Tyrants. And he made choice of following their Counsels whose calamitous end himself had beheld with his own eyes, rather than to continue in the friendſhip and affection of the beſt of Princes. For being ſtimulated with envy againſt his great Benefactor, he raiſed a moſt impious and nefarious war againſt him, in no wiſe revering the Laws of nature, forgetful of all oaths, affinity and leagues. For Conſtantine, like a moſt courteous Emperor, that he might ſhew him the moſt convincing tokens of his ſincere kindneſs, envied him not his own affinity, nor did he deny him the illuſtrious marriage of his Siſter: but vouchſafed to make him partaker of the (a) Nobility he derived from his Anceſtors, and [communicated to him] his own ancient lineage and Imperial blood; he alſo allow'd him to enjoy an authority over all the Roman Empire, as being his Kinſman and Colleague in the Empire; nor had he given him a leſs portion of the Roman Provinces to rule over and govern, [than he reſerved to himſelf.] But on the other hand, [Licinius] acted quite contrary hereto, daily inventing all kinds of ſtratagems againſt him that was his Better, deviſing all ways how to inſnare him, that with miſchiefs he might reward his Benefactor. At firſt therefore attempting to conceal his treacheries, he counterfeited a friendſhip, and having ſeveral times aſſailed [Conſtantine] by guile and deceit, he hoped to have eaſily obtained what he expected. But God was [Conſtantine's] Friend, Guardian, and Protector: he brought to light and detected the intrigues which were clancularly and ſecretly contrived againſt him. So powerful a ſtrength is that great Armour of Godlineſs [endow'd with,] that it is both prevalent to repulſe the enemy, and has alſo a power ſufficient for its own preſervation. With this Armour our moſt pious Emperor being fortified, eſcaped the many intricate ſnares of that accurſed man. Licinius therefore, perceiving that his ſecret plots did not ſucceed according to his expectation, (becauſe God diſcovered all his deceit and treachery to his beloved Emperor,) and knowing that he could lie no longer conceal'd, raiſeth open war. But in that he determined to war againſt Conſtantine, he likewiſe reſolv'd to marſhal an army againſt Almighty God, whom he knew Conſtantine worſhipped. Afterwards he begun ſecretly and by little and little to attack thoſe pious men who lived under his Government, who never intended the leaſt moleſtation to his Dominions. And this he did [in regard] he was miſerably induced thereto, being blinded by his innate malice. Therefore he did not ſet before his eyes the examples of thoſe who had been Perſecutors of the Chriſtians before him; nor yet of thoſe whoſe deſtroyer and puniſher he himſelf had been appointed, becauſe of the height of thoſe impieties, to which they were arrived: but, declining from the way of ſober and right reaſon, or rather running perfectly mad, he reſolv'd upon engaging with God himſelf (becauſe he was Conſtantine's aſſiſtant,) inſtead of [Conſtantine] who was aſſiſted by him. And firſt of all he baniſh'd all Chriſtians out of his family, leaving himſelf deſtitute (miſerable wretch!) of their prayers to God for him; it being their commonly received Doctrine, that prayer ſhould be made for all men. He afterwards gave command that all the Officers in the (b) Civil Milice ſhould be disbanded, and turn'd out of their military preferments, except they were willing to ſacrifice to Devils. But theſe are but ſmall things, if compared with his greater Villanies, which enſued. To what end ſhould we recount all and every particular fact, which this man, hated of God, committed? How he, who was the greateſt law-breaker, invented impious laws? for he made an order, that no one ſhould charitably relieve the poor diſtreſſed Priſoners with meat, nor ſhow the leaſt compaſſion to thoſe, who through hunger pined away in their fetters: that is, that there ſhould no good man live, and that they who were led by [the dictates of] nature itſelf to have compaſſion on their neighbours, ſhould be incapable of doing them any good. And this was clearly the moſt impudent and cruel of all laws, by far ſurpaſſing all that mildneſs and clemency implanted by nature: to which Law alſo there was a penalty annex'd, that they who ſhew'd compaſſion upon the [criminals] ſhould ſuffer the like afflictions with thoſe towards whom they ſhew'd mercy: and that ſuch as charitably miniſtred to thoſe in bonds and confined to priſon, ſhould ſuffer the ſame puniſhment with them. Such were Licinius's Ordinances. What need we reckon up his innovations concerning marriages, or his new laws about (c) dying perſons; whereby he preſumptuouſly abrogated the ancient, good, and wiſely eſtabliſhed Roman Laws, and inſtead of them introduced certain barbarous and inhumane Ordinances, truly unjuſt and illegal? He alſo invented ſeveral ſorts of (d) Taxes, to the great oppreſſion of the Subjects of his Provinces; and all ſorts of exactions of Gold ond Silver; (e) ſurveying of lands; and that curſed way of getting lucre from Coun-

Conſtant. and Licinius.

(b) The beſt Comment upon this place is the 54th chap. of book 1. of Conſtantine's Life. The Militia amongſt the Romans was twofold: the Militia Caſtrenſis, or the Militia employ'd in all martial affairs; and the Militia Civilis, which in Theodoſius's Code, is called the Militia Cohortalis, the Militia employ'd in Civil Affairs. Thoſe that were liſted into this Militia Cohortalis, were by the Latines commonly call'd Officiales, or Apparitores: and by the Greeks generally στρατιῶται. See Themiſt. 1. Orat. pag. 38. Chryſoſt. Homily 1. upon the firſt Epiſt. to Corinth. p. 8. and p. 10. Moreover [στρατεύειν] by Chryſoſt. Hom. 1. upon St. Matthew is uſed for Apparitoris Officio fungi, to execute an Apparitor's Office. But the Greeks (ſometimes for diſtinction's ſake of the Militia Caſtrenſis) called theſe Apparitores, στρατιῶται κατὰ πόλιν, City Apparitors. So Euſebius in the place above quoted; and Themiſtius, in his 17th Orat. pag. 457. makes uſe of [ἀσυκὸς στρατιώτης] which has the ſame import with [στρατιώτης κατὰ πόλιν] here in Euſebius, (i. e.) the Apparitors of the Preſidents and Præfects of the Prætorium, who gather'd the Tributes which belonged to the Treaſury. Valeſ.

(c) This paſſage ἐπὶ τοῖς τοῦ βίου μεταλλάξασιν, is by Chriſtoph. and Langus render'd mortuos, the dead: but I cannot admit of this Verſion. What Law this of Licinius's was, 'tis difficult to reſolve. It ſeems to have belonged to the Teſtaments of dying people: it was abbrogated by Conſtantine after Licinius was overcome by him. Val.

(d) Euſebius uſes this term [ἐπισκήψεις] which occurs here, at book 8. chap. 14. (ſee note (c.) there) where he treats concerning Maximinus the Eaſtern Tyrant. But in his firſt book De vita Conſtant. he terms it σκήψεις, (i. e.) ways of getting money. The Ancient Greeks us'd πόροι and πορισμοὶ, in this ſence. There is extant a Book of of Xenophon's, entitled περὶ πόρων. The modern Latin Authors call theſe Taxes, Tituli. Valeſ.

(e) The phraſe here us'd (viz.) ἀναμετρήσεις τῆς γῆς, is very well rendred by Langus, iteratæ agrorum menſiones, the re-meaſuring of Lands. This Verſion Rufinus confirms, who renders it cenſus innovare, to renew the Cenſus, or the prizing of every man's eſtate. This Cenſus could not be renewed without the re-meaſuring of Land: For the Cenſus amongſt the Romans conſiſted of two things, (i. e.) the meaſuring of Lands, and the numbering of the People, as I have elſewhere noted. We have the teſtimony of Aurel. Vict. and of Victor's Epitome in confirmation of what Euſebius ſays concerning Licinius's Avarice. But what Euſebius ſays concerning Licinius's Exactions, and Oppreſſions of his Subjects, is confuted by the teſtimony of two ancient Authors, (viz.) Aurel. Victor and Libanius. Victor ſays of Licinius that he was, Agraribus plane ac ruſticantibus, quia ab eo genere ortus altuſque erat, ſatis utilis, *i. e. To the common ſort of People and Ruſticks, becauſe he was extracted from and maintained by that ſort of men, He was uſeful enough. trey-men which were not alive, but long since dead. Besides these things, why should we reckon up the (f) Proscriptions of innocent men which he, the Enemy of mankind, was the inventer of? and the imprisonments of men (g) nobly descended, and of an honourable repute? Whose youthful wives he forced from them by violence, and deliver'd them to some of his impure slaves, that they might be most injuriously vitiated? What need we number the married Women, Virgins, and Maids, whom in his (b) decrepid age he abused, to the fulfilling of his own soul's insatiable lust? What need is there [I say] of enlarging upon these things, whenas the exorbitant grosness of his last actions evinceth his first to be trivial and almost nothing? In fine, he arrived to such an heighth of madness, that [he made an attempt] upon the Bishops: and looking upon them (in regard they were the servants of Almighty God) to be enemies to his practices; (but [daring not] as yet to use open violence, fearing his superior,) he privily and craftily plotted against them: and by the treacheries of his Presidents destroy'd the eminentest of them. The manner how he murther'd them is strange, and such as was never before heard of. But his actions at Amasia and the rest of the Cities of Pontus do far exceed the most superlative cruelty. Where some of Gods Churches were again thrown down from their vast height to the very ground, and others were shut up, lest any of those that did usually frequent them should meet there, and render a due worship to God. For he did not suppose that prayers were offer'd up for him, being perswaded to entertain such thoughts as these by a consciousness of his own impieties. But he was of opinion that all we did was in behalf of the pious Emperor, and to render God favourable to him. Upon which account he resolved to assail us with his utmost rage. Therefore, those Presidents that were his flatterers, being fully perswaded that this would be grateful to the Tyrant, [inflicted] the same punishment upon some Bishops that they usually imposed upon Malefactors. So that harmless and innocent men were haled away, and without the least pretext punish'd like murtherers. But others of them underwent a new kind of death, having their bodies cut with a sword (as Butchers do meat) into a great many pieces; and after this barbarous and most horrid spectacle, they were thrown into the depths of the Sea to be made food for the fishes. After this therefore, the worshippers of God betook themselves to flight, and the fields, the deserts, the woods and mountains were the Receptacles of Christ's servants. When the impious Tyrant had succeeded thus prosperously in these his attempts, he afterwards entertained some thoughts of raising a general persecution against all the Christians. And he had undoubtedly been master of his desire, nor could there have been any obstacle to hinder him from effecting of it, had not God, the Protector of his own servants, (that he might prevent what would immediately have ensued,) caused Constantine his servant suddenly to appear as a Saviour and a great Light to all that were in a thick darness and an obscure night, conducting him with a mighty arm into these parts.

Constant. and Licinius.

(f) I doubt not, but instead of [ἐξορκισμὰς,] we should read ἐξοσιωμὰς, Proscriptions:] for in the first Book, De vita Constant. cap. 55. (where Eusebius repeats all these passages almost in the same words) instead of this term, he uses this phrase [ὑπερορίας τιμωρίας, punishments of Exile.] Val.

(g) Christoph. translates the term συγκλητικῶν here used, Patricios, erroneously, as we before signified. They were termed Nobiles, who were descended from those that had born any Office in Rome, or in the Towns incorporate. Vales.

(b) But Licinius died in the sixtieth year of his age, as Victor affirms in his Epitome. Wherefore Eusebius, like an Orator, aggravates the matter here. Vales.

CHAP. IX.

Concerning Constantine's Victory, and concerning the prosperity procured by him to all those that live under the power of the Romans.

(a) ON this man therefore did [God] from above bestow Trophies of Victory over the ungodly, as being the worthy fruits of his piety. But the impious Tyrant, together with all his Counsellors and friends, he laid prostrate on their faces before the feet of Constantine. For when * he was arriv'd at the highest degree of madness, the pious † Emperor supposing he was not to be longer born with, (b) entring into a prudent and sober consideration with himself, and having tempered the severity of Justice with [his own natural] clemency, resolves upon succouring of those that were oppress'd by the Tyrant; and prepares to save a great part of mankind, by cutting off and removing out of the way a few pestilent and destructive persons. For having before this made use of clemency only, and shewing pity on him who deserved no compassion; he did not profit him at all; for he desisted not from [the practice of his pristine] impieties, but rather increased his fury against the Subjects of his own Provinces. There was no hope of deliverance now remaining to those that were oppressed and afflicted by this cruel Beast. Wherefore [Constantine] the Protector of all good men (having temper'd his hatred of impiety with his love of virtue) together with his son Crispus, a most mild and courteous * Cæsar, marches forward upon this expedition, reaching out a helping hand to all that were in distress. Both the Father therefore and the Son, having for their Captain and Assistant the supream King, and the Son of God the Saviour of all men, divided the Army so, as on every side to encompass God's Enemies, and got an easie victory; all things in that action having been rendred facil, and successfully expedited for them by God, according to their wish. Immediately therefore, even in the twinkling of an eye, they who yesterday and the day before breathed forth death and menaces, became wholly extinct, the remembrance even of their very names not in the least surviving them. Their pictures also and other monuments [dedicated to their honour] received the deserved [spots of] ignominy; and the same [disgrace] which Licinius had with his own eyes beheld the impious Tyrants heretofore involv'd in, even he himself in like manner suffer'd. For he himself receiv'd not instruction, nor was he amended by his neighbour's stripes: but walking on in the same path of wickedness with them, deservedly wandred into the same precipice they did. Thus

(a) At these words we began the 9th Chap. which conjecture of ours is confirmed by the old Maz. and Fuk. M. SS. And in those M.S S. this Chapter is rightly called the eighth Chapter as we remark'd before. Vales.

(b) Τὸν σώφρονα συναγαγὼν λογισμόν: these are the Words in the original; which Valesius renders thus, Modestam ac sobriam in se colligens mentem: Grynæus thus, rem hanc sapienter expendit: and we translate it after this manner, entring into a prudent and sober Consideration with himself. 'Tis a phrase usual with our Eusebius. For so he expresses himself Book 3. De Vita Constant. Chap. 5. and 11.

* Or Prince, the term in the Greek is Βασιλεὺς.

was this perſon ſmitten and proſtrated. But Conſtantine the Mighty Conqueror, glorioufly adorn'd with all the vertues of Religion (together with his Son Criſpus, a Prince highly beloved of God, and in all things like his Father,) recover'd his own Eaſt, and re-united the Roman Empire into one entire body, as it heretofore was: ſubjecting under (c) their peace the whole World [which reaches] from the Riſing Sun to the utmoſt Weſtern Regions, together with the Provinces that lie round about as well towards the North as the South. Men therefore were now ſecure from all fear of them who formerly had oppreſſed them, and celebrated ſplendid and ſolemn days of Feſtivity. All things ſeemed to abound with fulneſs of light, and they who heretofore beheld each other with dejectedneſs and ſorrow, then look'd upon each other with ſmiling countenances, and chearful eyes. In (d) Dances alſo and Songs, in every City and in the Fields, they firſt of all glorified God the the King of Kings, (for thus they were inſtructed to do) and in the next place the pious Emperor, together with his Children which were beloved of God. There was an oblivion of paſt afflictions, no remembrance of any impiety, but only an enjoyment of the preſent good things and expectations of more in future. In all places the Edicts of the Victorious Emperor, full of kindneſs and clemency, and his Laws containing manifeſt tokens of his great bounty and true piety, were proclaimed. All Tyranny therefore being thus extirpated, the Empire which did by right belong to Conſtantine and his Sons, was preſerved firm and ſecure from envy. Who (after they had cleanſed the World from the impiety of their Predeceſſors) being ſenſible of thoſe great benefits which had been procured for them by God, (e) did by a moſt apparent and convincing teſtimony of their deeds declare to all men their love of vertue and of the Deity, and alſo their piety and gratitude towards God.

Conſtant. and Licinius.

(c) By this Phraſe here uſed [εἰρήνη αὐτῶν, their Peace] is meant the Peace which they reſtored. So Seneca in his Book De Clementia brings in Nero ſpeaking thus: Hæc tot millia gladiorum quæ pax mea comprimit, ad nutum meum ſtringentur. Where by [pax mea] he means the Peace he had procured. So alſo Velleius Paterculus uſes this Phraſe, and on ſome Old Coins we find this inſcription; Pax Auguſti, i. e. the Peace procured by the Emperor. But Pax Romana is by the ſame Seneca (in his Book De Clementia, and in that De Providentia) uſed in another ſence, to wit, pax ea quâ fruitur imperium Romanum, (i. e.) that Peace which the Roman Empire enjoyeth. Valeſ.

(d) This word [χορεῖαι dances] here uſed, when the diſcourſe is concerning the Chriſtians praiſing God, did not pleaſe Niceph. And therefore inſtead of χορεῖαι he uſes παιᾶνες. Euſebius, in his ſecond Book, De vita Conſtant. inſtead of χορεῖαι uſes χοροί which term indeed is more tolerable. But we may eaſily bear with this word χορεῖαι. For the Chriſtians uſed to dance on their Feſtivals of the Martyrs, which they kept in honour of them; and thus they celebrated their Conflicts and Victories as Greg. Naz. relates (in Carminibus ad mulieres ſeſe curioſius exornantes, pag. 152.) Baſilius Magnus (in his 14th Homily againſt drunkenneſs) has a ſharp invective againſt theſe Choreas, or Dances. Valeſ.

(e) The reading in the King's M. S. (which Stephens almoſt every where follows) is this [διὰ τῆς ὑπὲρ χειστιανῶν ἐνεδείξαντο νομοθεσίας, declared by their Law [publiſhed] in favour of the Chriſtians.] But in the Maz. Med. Fuk. and Savil. M. SS. this place is written far otherwiſe, thus [δι' ὧν εἰς πρῶτον ἅπασιν ἀνθρώποις παρέχον ὁρᾶν, ἐπεδείξαντο, did by a moſt apparent and convincing teſtimony of their deeds declare to all men:] which reading, being confirmed by the conſent of more, and thoſe ancienter Copies, we with good reaſon ſuppoſed ought to be preferred before the other. Valeſ.

SOCRATES Scholasticus.

VALESIUS's PREFACE,

To the Studious READERS.

AFTER Eusebius Bishop of Cæsarea, (whom we may deservedly stile The Father of Ecclesiastick History,) many inflamed with a pious Emulation, undertook to treat of the same Subject. But Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret are in the Judgment of all Antiquity far more famous than all the other Writers: Who beginning from those Times wherein Eusebius concluded his Ecclesiastick History, brought their Work down to the Times of Theodosius Junior. And at first I was resolved to have publish'd these three Writers together, that as they had prosecuted one and the same Subject in their Writings, so they might have also been comprehended and read in one and the same Volume. But in regard this would hereby have been too large a Volume, therefore I was forced to defer the Edition of Theodoret to another time. To which I will add Evagrius Epiphaniensis's Ecclesiastick History, as also the Excerptions of Philostorgius and Theodorus Lector; that the Studious may in future read over the whole Body of Ecclesiastick History, publish'd and explain'd by our Labour. In the interim you have here (Reader) joyn'd together in this Volume Socrates and Sozomen. Concerning what I have done about the Edition of these Authors, take this Account in short.

Above eight years since, when by the Command and Advice of the most Illustrious Prelates belonging to the Gallican Clergy, I publish'd the History of Eusebius Cæsariensis, I made it my business to perform three things most especially in that Edition. For first, having from all places procured those Manuscript-Copies that were most remarkable and eminent, I amended and differenc'd those passages which in the former Editions had been corrupted and disguised. Secondly, in regard the former Translators had, either by reason of their want of Manuscript-Copies, or on some other account, err'd in many places, that their Versions might not induce the Readers into Mistakes, I my self have elaborated a new Translation, with which the the Studious will, I hope, be in future content. Lastly, I have added Annotations, that I might therein both give an account of mine Amendments, and also explain and illustrate all the more obscure and difficult places. And this Edition, being candidly received by all, is now in the hands of the Learned. Therefore, what I then (by the Divine Assistance) perform'd in the History of Eusebius Cæsariensis, the same I have attempted now to do in the History of Socrates and Sozomen, by the Command and Advice of the same Prelates I mention'd. For (that I may in the first place speak concerning Socrates, who first betook himself to write) I have amended his History by the help and assistance of three Manuscript-Copies, to wit, the Sfortian, the Florentine, and the Allatian. The Sfortian-Manuscript (which is the best and ancientest,) is at this time kept in the Vatican Library. This Copy the Learned Lucas Holstenius had some time since (in favour to the most Illustrious Carolus Monchallus, Arch-Bishop of Tolouse) compared with the Geneva Edition; and had transmitted the various Readings (together with the Emendations of Philostorgius transcribed from the Scoriacensian MS.) to the same Prelate, at such time as the Gallican Clergy had committed to him the Care of setting forth a new Edition of the Ancient Ecclesiastick History; so the said Holstenius informs us, in his Epistle to Peter Possinus, a Divine of the Order of the Jesuites. But afterwards, when by the Entreaty of the same Arch-Bishop of Tolouse (who understood, that by reason of his too much other business, he could not be at leisure to take care of this Edition) the Gallican Clergy had injoyned me that Province; the same Holstenius sent me the various Readings of the fore-mention'd Sfortian-Manuscript, written out with his own hand at the Margin of the Geneva Edition, together with those Amendments of Philostorgius; and had sent me more, had a longer Life been granted him. For a little before his Death he sent me some Dissertations concerning certain Passages in the Nicene and Chalcedon Councils, and concerning Synesius's Episcopate. Which Dissertations shall (God willing) be publish'd by us in the Third Tome of our Ecclesiastick History, that the learned part of the World may be no longer defrauded of that most Accomplish'd Person's Labours. The Florentine-Manuscript follows, transcribed above five hundred years since, which is now kept at Florence, in St. Lawrence's Library. The Discovery and Use of this Manuscript I owe to Emericus Bigotius, a most skilful searcher into old Libraries: By whose diligence it is contrived, that we sitting still and idle here, enjoy the Riches and Treasures of many and most remote Libraries. For at his entreaty, Michael Erminius, a Senator of Florence, compared that Copy with the Geneva Edition, and transmitted the various Readings thereof to me; upon which account I do profess my self much obliged to both of them. The third Manuscript belongs to Leo Allatius, a Person every way learned, and one that has deserved well of Ecclesiastick Antiquity. This Copy contains the Ecclesiastick History of Theodorus Lector, comprised in Two Books; which Theodorus Lector had gather'd out of three Writers of Ecclesiastick Affairs, to wit, Socrates, Sozomen, zomen, and Theodoret, after the ſame manner that Caſſiodorus Senator has compoſed his Tripertite Hiſtory. But this Tripertite Hiſtory of Theodorus Lector comprehends only the Affairs tranſacted in the Church during the Reign of Conſtantine and Conſtantius: Whether the reaſon be, that Theodorus Lector continued his Collection no further, or that the other Books of that Work are loſt by the negligence of Antiquity. Out of this Copy therefore Leo Allatius had ſome time ſince collected the various Readings in the two former Books of Socrates, and tranſmitted them, being written out with his own hand, to the moſt Illuſtrious Prelate Carolus Monchallus: Which I afterwards procured by the aſſiſtance of the moſt Eminent Dionyſius Talæus, Advocate General to the Moſt Chriſtian King in the Supream Court at Paris. Beſides theſe three Manuſcript Copies, I made uſe of the King's Manuſcript, (which is no very ancient one,) which Robert Stephens made uſe of only in his Edition. Upon which account it is leſs to be wondred at, that the common Editions of Socrates have hitherto been ſo faulty, ſeeing they were all derived from one only Copy, which alſo is a very modern one. Moreover, this Copy was taken out of the King's Library, and courteouſly lent me by the moſt Illuſtrious and Reverend Prelate Nicholas Colbertus, Biſhop of Luſſon, a Perſon endow'd with eminent Learning, Virtue, and Dignity. Concerning whoſe Praiſe I would ſpeak more in this place, did not his ſingular Modeſty hinder me, who am very deſirous thereof. And theſe are the Aſſiſtances of the Manuſcript Copies, by the ſupports whereof I attempted this Edition of Socrates.

But in the Correcting of Sozomen's Hiſtory I had the benefit of fewer Manuſcript Copies. For beſides that Copy in the King's Library, which Robert Stephens followed in his Edition, and beſides that Copy belonging to Leo Allatius (whereof we made mention before,) which was an aſſiſtance to us only in the four firſt Books of Sozomen, and in the beginning of the Fifth; I had only the Fuketian Manuſcript. This Copy did at firſt belong to Carolus Monchallus Arch-Biſhop of Toloufe, a perſon very ſtudious of Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. But afterwards it was put into the Fuketian Library, and lent to me by the moſt worthy Nicolaus Fuketius. Upon which account in my Annotations I have called this the Fuketian Manuſcript. But at length, when our Edition was compleated, this Copy (together with the other Manuſcripts belonging to the Fuketian Library) was transfer'd into the Right and Poſſeſſio of the moſt Illuſtrious and Eminent Perſon, on account both of his own and his Father's deſerts, Carolus Mauricius Tellerius, Abbot of Saint Benignus, who at this time is Coadjutor in the Arch-Biſhoprick of Rheimes. Indeed this is no very ancient Manuſcript, but 'tis of the beſt note, and is tranſcribed from a moſt correct Copy. The Titles of the Chapters, which in the King's Manuſcript, and in Robert Stephen's Edition, are prefix'd before the Hiſtory of Sozomen, are wanting in this Copy. Nor is there any diſtinction of the Chapters throughout all the Books. From whence may be diſcerned the Excellency and Antiquity of that Manuſcript. For the Titles or Contents of the Chapters were made by Nicephorus Calliſtus, or rather by ſome other more modern Author, and are wholly impertinent, and barbarouſly expreſs'd. In ſo much that after I had look'd thereon with a greater accuracy, they ſeem'd to have been compoſed by ſome other hand, rather than by Nicephorus. Moreover, that I may not defraud any perſon of his due praiſe, I acknowledge my ſelf indebted to Samuel Tennulius (a very learned perſon, and one that is a great lover of me, at preſent an eminent Profeſſor of Literature at Nimmeghen) for the various Readings in the Hiſtory of Sozomen and Theodoret, collected out of the fore-mentioned Allatian-Manuſcript; that is, out of the Tripertite Hiſtory of Theodorus Lector. For whilſt he was at Rome, he tranſcribed them with his own hand from Leo Allatius's Copy, a perſon never praiſed enough; who by my entreaty, and for my ſake, had delivered thoſe various Readings to the ſaid Tennulius, that he might write them out. By the help of theſe Copies therefore I have amended innumerable places both in Socrates and alſo in Sozomen, which were very corrupt before; I have ſupplied many Defects, reſtored many Punctations and Diſtinctions, and, laſtly, I have added a new Verſion. Concerning which I will now ſpeak briefly.

What I have heretofore ſaid concerning Muſculus's and Chriſtophorſon's Tranſlation in my Preface to the Illuſtrious Prelates of the Gallican Church, which is prefixt before the Edition of our Euſebius, I need not now repeat. I will only add this: If after thoſe Tranſlators now named, the Hiſtory of Euſebius Cæſarienſis wanted a new Interpreter, a new Verſion of Socrates and Sozomen was much more neceſſary. For their Hiſtories have come to our hands far more faulty than Euſebius's. And that the Judicious Reader will eaſily diſcern from Robert Stephens's Edition. For Robert Stephens, in his Edition of Euſebius, had the uſe of many Manuſcript Copies, which were taken out of the King's Library: But in his Impreſſion of Socrates's and Sozomen's Hiſtory, he had but one Copy of each of them. Therefore at the end of his Edition, he remark'd the various Readings in the Books of Euſebius, taken out (as he ſays) of moſt ancient Copies. But at the cloſe of Socrates's and Sozomen's Hiſtory he put no various Readings, becauſe he had gotten but one Copy of each of thoſe Writers. Alſo, the Copies of Euſebius, which Stephens made uſe of, were the beſt and ancienteſt, as he himſelf atteſts. But each Copy, as well that of Socrates's as the other of Sozomen's Hiſtory, which Robert Stephens followed in his Edition, was, as we perceive, very new, and did alſo abound with many faults. 'Tis therefore no wonder, that Learned Men have been ſo often miſtaken in their Verſions of Socrates's and Sozomen's Books, ſince they had ſuch faulty and maimed Copies before them, and were deprived of the aſſiſtance of Manuſcripts. For Muſculus had ſeen Robert Stephen's Edition only. Chriſtophorſon had indeed inſpected ſome MS. Copies of Euſebius and Theodoret. But he had no MSS. of Socrates and Sozomen, as I have frequently obſerved in my Annotations. He had only ſeen the various Readings and Conjectures of Learned Men ſet at the Margin of Robert Stephens's Edition: Of which ſort many Copies came to our hands. But thoſe Readings were almoſt of no weight or authority at all, in as much they had no Remark annex'd of the ancient Copy out of which they were tranſcribed. But I, having got the beſt and ancienteſt Manuſcripts, as well of Socrates, as Sozomen, and with great labour and induſtry compared them with the common Editions; afterwards took an eaſier and plainer way to their Tranſlation. This Edition of ours therefore will (we hope) equally ſatisfie all perſons, as well thoſe that are skilled in the Greek Tongue, as them that are not. For, both thoſe that are knowing in the Greek Language will read Socrates and Sozomen amended and throughly purged by our Labour; and ſuch as are leſs skilled in the Greek will eaſier underſtand thoſe Authors done into Latin by us.

Muſculus

Our Annotations follow; wherein, in the ſame manner as in our Notes on Euſebius, we have attempted to perform two things. The firſt is, to give an account of our Emendations, and to propoſe to the Reader's Judgment the various Readings taken out of the Manuſcript Copies. Then, ſecondly, to illuſtrate (according to our ability) the more obſcure and difficult places, which ſeem'd to be able to involve the Reader's Judgment in Doubts. Nor am I ignorant, that there are many delicate and faſtidious Perſons, who may think that they have exhibited to them ſome exquiſite Obſervations only, and Common Places (as they are called,) compoſed for ſhew and oſtentation; and who may ſuppoſe that that part of our Annotations, which contains Emendations and various Readings, is altogether trivial and deſpicable. To which perſons I would make this return: Altho thoſe Emendations and various Readings (which the Greeks term διπλοσεαφίας) may frequently be inſipid, and ſeem troubleſome to the Readers, yet they are highly uſeful, and altogether neceſſary, eſpecially in theſe Writers, whoſe Books have come to our hands leſs correct. Now that Socrates's and Sozomen's Books are ſuch, we have before mention'd. And indeed our Obſervations do bear a greater ſhew of Learning: But an Emendation in my opinion requires more of Wiſdom and Judiciouſneſs. Neither is it for every Man to give his opinion concerning the true and genuine Reading of antique Writers: But he only is able to do this, who is furniſhed with a manifold ſtock of Learning, and has been long and much exerciſed in this Art of Judging.

And theſe are the Particulars I thought neceſſary to advertize the Readers of in the beginning of this Work, that they might know at firſt ſight what they were chiefly to expect in this Edition of ours, which could not be met with in the former Editions of this Hiſtory. It remains now, that we ſpeak ſomething concerning Socrates and Sozomen: who and what manner of Perſons they were, what courſe of Life they followed, what Religion they profeſs'd, and which of them firſt wrote his Hiſtory.

CONCER-

Concerning the

LIFE

SOCRATES and SOZOMEN.

OUR Socrates therefore, for we will begin with him, had Conſtantinople for his Country. In the Fifth Book of his Hiſtory, Chap. 24. he atteſts that he was born and educated in that City, and that he therefore recorded thoſe Matters chiefly which hapned in that City. When very young he was inſtructed in the Rules of Grammar, by Helladius and Ammonius, Grammarians, who at that time had left Alexandria, and betook themſelves to Conſtantinople. He that is deſirous to know the reaſon why theſe Grammarians departed from Alexandria, will find it related by Socrates, in the Fifth Book and Sixteenth Chapter of his Hiſtory. For when the Heathen Temples were demoliſh'd at Alexandria, by the Care and Induſtry of Theophilus Biſhop of that City, Helladius and Ammonius, Grammarians (the one of whom was Jupiter's Prieſt, and the other Simius's at Alexandria,) diſpleaſed at the Ignominy their Gods were expoſed to, having left the City Alexandria, went to Conſtantinople, and there took up their habitation. Moreover, the Heathen-Temples at Alexandria were deſtroy'd when Timaſius and Promotus were Conſuls, (according to Marcellinus's Relation in his Chronicon,) which was the Emperor Theodoſius's Eleventh year. Whence it is apparent, that our Socrates was born about the beginning of Theodoſius's Reign. For Boys were uſually ſent to be inſtructed by Grammarians when they were about Ten years old. After this Socrates ſtudied Rhetorick under the Tuition of Troilus the Sophiſta, who about that time was an eminent Profeſſor of Eloquence at Conſtantinople. Our Socrates does not indeed ſay thus much in expreſs words. But the attentive and diligent Reader will eaſily collect from his words that which I have affirmed. For he does make ſuch frequent, and ſo honourable a mention of him, that he may ſeem to pay reward to his Maſter. For he names his Country, Side, a City of Pamphylia. He alſo mentions not a few of his Scholars, to wit, Euſebius Scholaſticus, and Silvanus, and Ablabius who were Biſhops. Laſtly, in his Seventh Book he relates, that Anthemius the Præfect of the Prætorium (who, whilſt Theodoſius Junior was yet a Minor, was the Chief Miniſter of State in the Empire) did chiefly make uſe of the Counſels of Troilus the Sophiſta. Where he alſo gives him this Elogue : Ὃς μετὰ τῆς ἄλλης αὐτῷ Φιλοσοφίας (for that muſt be the Reading, as we have intimated in our *Notes) καὶ πολιτικὴν φρόνησιν τῷ Ἀνθεμίῳ ἐφάμιλλος ἦν ; that is, who beſides the Philoſophy that was in him, was Anthemius's Equal in Political Knowledge. By theſe Reaſons I have been induced to think that our Socrates had Troilus for his Rhetorick-Maſter. But concerning this matter we permit every one to determine according to his own Arbitrement. Further, you muſt know that the Ancients were not ſo ſpeedy and haſty in [their learning the Rules of] Eloquence, as is now a-days uſual, but they applied their minds to thoſe Studies for a long time together. Gregory Nazianzen atteſts (in his Poem concerning his own Life) that he left Athens in the thirtieth year of his Age, as ſoon as he had learned the Precepts of the Art of Oratory in that City. After this, Socrates having left Troilus's School, betook himſelf to the Forum, and pleaded Cauſes at Conſtantinople. Whence he got the Sirname of Scholaſticus. For ſo the Advocates were at that time called, as it has long ſince been remarked by others : * Not becauſe they were reduced into Schools ; but in regard, being Young Men that had left the Schools of the Rhetoricians, they profeſs'd this Art. But at length, having left off his Practice in the Law, he applied his mind to Writing of his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory. In which Work he has made uſe of a ſingular Judiciouſneſs and Diligence. His Judiciouſneſs is manifeſted by his Remarks and Sentiments interwoven every where throughout his Books : than which there is (in my opinion) nothing more excellent. But his diligence is declared by many other Inſtances, chiefly by this, in regard he frequently annexes a Note of the Times times, that is, the Conſulates and Olympiades, eſpecially where he mentions ſuch Matters as are more momentous. Nor has he careleſly or negligently written his Hiſtory, as Rufinus Aquileienſis did, who ſeems to me to have compoſed his two Books of Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory (which he annex'd to Euſebius's) without looking into any Records. Our Socrates did far otherwiſe, for having from all places got together the beſt Monuments, that is, the Epiſtles of Prelates, the Acts of Synods, and the Books of Eccleſiaſtick Writers, agreeable to their authority he compoſed his Hiſtory. And whereas in the firſt Edition of his Work, having therein followed Rufinus, he had placed the Synod of Tyre, and the Baniſhment of Athanaſius into the Gallia's, in the Reign of Conſtantius Auguſtus, upon reading of Athanaſius's Books afterwards, he perceived his error. Wherefore he was neceſſitated to ſet forth a new Edition of his Hiſtory, wherein he both mended the Miſtake I have mention'd, and alſo made an addition of ſome other things, which were wanting in the former Edition, as he himſelf atteſts at the beginning of his Second Book. Whence it appears how highly we ought to value Socrates's Hiſtory, to which the Writer himſelf put his laſt * Hand. In the Compoſure of his Hiſtory Socrates has made uſe of a plain and mean Stile; which was done by him on ſet purpoſe, that he might the eaſier be underſtood by all perſons, as himſelf atteſts at the beginning of his Firſt and Third Book. For he look'd upon that ſublime and eloquent manner of expreſſion to be more agreeable for Panegyrick Orations, than an Hiſtory of Eccleſiaſtick Affairs. Moreover, he has dedicated his Hiſtory to one Theodorus, whom in the beginning of his Second Book he ſtiles a Sacred Man of God, which is the ſame Appellation our Euſebius gives to Paulinus Biſhop of Tyre, at the beginning of his Tenth Book. But who this Theodorus was, it is to me unknown. For I cannot believe it was Theodorus Biſhop of Mopſueſtia, in regard Socrates wrote his Hiſtory after the Death of Theodorus Mopſueſtenus. But it is now time for us to inquire concerning his Sect ond Religion, as we promiſed at the beginning.

* That is, he himſelf Reviſed, and Corrected it.

Baronius in his Annals, and Philippus Labbæus in his Book De Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis, do affirm, that our Socrates was by Sect a † Novatian. The ſame was Nicephorus's Opinion before it was theirs, who in the Proeme to his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory ſays thus: Ὁ τῷ πρεσβυτέριον, ὁ μὲν δὲ γε κατὰ τὴν αἵρεσιν καθαρὸς Σωκράτης. That is, That Socrates, ſirnamed * Catharus, but as to his Mind he was not pure. Which words are not ſo to be underſtood, as if Socrates were ſirnamed Catharus, but that it might be ſhown he was a Novatian. For the Novatians termed themſelves Cathari, as we are informed from the Eighth Canon of the Nicene Council. The ſame Nicephorus (in his Eleventh Book, Chap. 14.) writes thus concerning Socrates: Socrates (who in this place plainly ſhews himſelf not to be a deteſter of the Novatian Principles) relates that theſe things were told him by a certain old Man, &c. Now, why our Socrates was by many accounted a Novatian, the reaſons are not few, nor trivial. For firſt, he carefully records the Series of the Novatian Biſhops, who preſided over the Church at Conſtantinople from the Times of Conſtantine; and alſo remarks the Conſulates wherein every one of them departed out of this Life. Secondly, he highly extols them all, eſpecially Agerius, Siſinius, Chryſanthus, and Paulus. By whoſe Prayers, as he relates, a certain Miracle was wrought at Conſtantinople. Laſtly, he proſecutes all Matters belonging to the Novatian Sect with ſo great a care and diligence, that he may ſeem to have been addicted to this Sect. But ſhould any one examine theſe Particulars with a greater accuracy, he will find nothing in them, that may evince our Socrates to have been a Novatian. For with the like diligence he enumerates the Arian Biſhops, who govern'd their Church at Conſtantinople; and yet it is not ſaid he was an Arian. With no leſs carefulneſs alſo has he related all things that hapned to the Arians, Eunomians, and Macedonians at Conſtantinople, than he has recorded what befel the Novatians. The reaſon hereof he himſelf has given, in Chap. 24. of his Fifth Book. Where he ſays, it was his deſign to record thoſe things moſt eſpecially which hapned at Conſtantinople; both becauſe he himſelf lived in that City, wherein he had been born and educated; and alſo in regard the Affairs tranſacted there were more eminent, and worthier to be recorded. But ſhould any one object, that the Arian Biſhops are not extolled by Socrates at the ſame rate that the Novatian Biſhops are: the Anſwer hereto is eaſie. For the Arian Biſhops, who then lived at Conſtantinople, were far inferior to the Novatian Biſhops. For the Church of theſe Hereticks did in thoſe Times abound with many, and Thoſe eminent Prelates: Which Sozomen alſo confirms by his Teſtimony, who records their Elogues, exactly like thoſe given them by our Socrates. Wherefore, it muſt either be ſaid that Sozomen was alſo a Novatian, or elſe our Socrates muſt be diſcharged from that Calumny. But 'tis manifeſt Sozomen was not a Novatian. For (to omit Theodorus Lector's Teſtimony, who, in his Epiſtle prefixt before his Tripertite-Hiſtory, ſtiles him Μακαριώτατον, a moſt bleſſed Perſon,) he himſelf in his Ninth Book relates, that he was preſent at a publick Proceſſion, celebrated at Conſtantinople in honour of forty Martyrs, at ſuch time as Proclus preſided over the Church of that City. Whence 'tis manifeſtly concluded, that Sozomen was a Perſon of the Catholick Communion, in regard he was preſent at the publick Prayers together with the Catholicks. I confeſs indeed, that our Socrates does frequently favour the Novatians; for inſtance, when he recounts the Ring-leader of the Novatian Hereſie amongſt the number of the Martyrs; when he affirms, that the Novatians were joyn'd to the Catholicks in the ties of a moſt intimate Friendſhip and Love, and that they pray'd together with them in the Church of God; and laſtly, when he commends Siſinius's Oration, which he made againſt this Saying of S^t Chryſoſtome,

* That is, Pure.

Although

Although thou haſt repented a thouſand times, approach. But 'tis one thing to favour the Novatians; another to be a Novatian. Our Socrates might indeed be a favourer of the Novatians, either becauſe he was engaged in a friendſhip and familiarity with them, or in regard he approved of their diſcipline and abſtinence. For, as far as we can collect from his Books, he was ſomething ſevere. But I can hardly perſwade my ſelf, that he was a Novatian; eſpecially when as I ſeem to have found the contrary from ſome places which occur in his Hiſtory. For firſt, in Chap. 38. of his Second Book, he frequently calls the Catholicks τὰς τῆς ἐκκλησίας, thoſe of the Church; and oppoſes them to the Novatians. Therefore he acknowledges that the Novatians were without the Church. Which he would certainly never have done, had he embraced that Hereſie. Beſides, in the 20. and 23. Chapters of his Fifth Book he reckons the Novatians amongſt the Hereticks, to wit, amongſt the Arians, Macedonians, and Eunomians. Laſtly, from Chap. 19. of the ſame Book it may be apparently concluded that Socrates was not a Novatian. For firſt, he always calls the Church ſimply and abſolutely the Catholick-Church: oppoſing it to the Churches of other Sects, concerning which he treats in the following Chapters, to wit, of the Arians, Novatians, and Eunomians. Then, he does not obſcurely reprehend that advice of Nectarius, who abrogated the † Pœnitentiary Presbyter. For he ſays, that hereby Licence was given to Sinners, when as there was no body that might reprove Offenders. Which Opinion could not proceed from a Novatian, in regard thoſe Hereticks admitted neither of Repentance [after Baptiſm,] nor of a Penitentiary-Presbyter, as Socrates does there atteſt. Add hereto the teſtimony of Theodorus Lector, who, in his Epiſtle prefixt before his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, calls Socrates, Sozomen and Theodoret, ἄνδρας θεοφιλεῖς, that is, Men that were pious and acceptable to God. Moreover, Theodorus Lector lived in the ſame City, and almoſt at the ſame time that Socrates did, to wit, in the Reign of the Emperor Anaſtaſius. Laſtly, Petrus Halloixius (in his Notes on the Life of St. Irenæus, pag. 664.) is of the ſame Opinion with us. For, diſputing againſt Baronius, who at the year of Chriſt 159. had written thus; Theſe things Socrates the Novatian, who with the Jews celebrated Eaſter on the fourteenth day of the Moon, &c. he utters theſe words. And whereas Socrates is termed a Novatian, that may be taken in a double ſenſe: The one is, that he ſometimes favoured the Novatians; which alſo Bellarmine affirms (in his Book de Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis, at the year of our Lord 440.) both concerning him, and likewiſe concerning Sozomen. The other is, that he was [a follower] of the Novatian-Hereſie. In the now-cited Chapter, he neither ſhews himſelf to be a Novatian, nor a favourer of them. For he blames them, and detects their diſſentions and vices; in ſo much that he may ſeem not to have been a friend, but an enemy, or rather neither of the two, but a declarer of the truth, which is the buſineſs of an Hiſtorian. Thus far concerning Socrates, we muſt now ſpeak of Sozomen.

† See Socrates's Eccleſ. Hiſt. Book 5. Chap. 19. note (a.)

Hermias Sozomen was alſo a practiſer in the Law at Conſtantinople, at the ſame time with Socrates. His Anceſtors were not mean, they were originally Paleſtinians, Inhabitants of a certain Village near Gaza, called Bethelia. This Village did in times paſt abound with a numerous Company of Inhabitants, and had moſt ſtately and ancient Churches. But the moſt glorious Structure of them all was the Pantheon, ſituated on an artificial Hill, which was the Tower as it were of Bethelia, as Sozomen relates in Chap. 15. of his fifth Book. The Grandfather of Hermias Sozomen was born in that Village, and firſt converted to the Chriſtian Faith by Hilarion the Monk. For when Alaphion an inhabitant of the ſame Village was poſſeſſed with a Devil, and the Jews and Phyſicians attempting to cure him, could do him no good by their Inchantments; Hilarion, by a bare invocation of the Name of God, caſt out the Devil. Sozomen's Grandfather, and Alaphion himſelf, amazed at this Miracle, did with their whole families embrace the Chriſtian Religion. The Grandfather of Sozomen was eminent for his Expoſitions of the ſacred Scriptures, being a Perſon endowed with a polite Wit, and an acuteneſs of Underſtanding. Beſides, he was indifferently well skill'd in Literature. Therefore he was highly eſteemed of by the Chriſtians inhabiting Gaza, Aſcalon, and the places adjacent, in regard he was uſeful and neceſſary for [the propagating of] Religion, and could eaſily unlooſe the Knots of the ſacred Scriptures. But Alaphion's Deſcendants excelled others for their Sanctity of Life, Kindneſs to the indigent, and for their other Virtues: and they were the firſt that built Churches and Monaſteries there, as Sozomen atteſts in the place before cited. Where he alſo adds, that ſome holy Perſons of Alaphion's Family were ſurviving even in his days, with whom he himſelf, when very young, was converſant, and concerning whom he promiſes to ſpeak more afterwards. Undoubtedly he means Salamanes, Phuſco, Malchio, and Criſpio, Brothers, concerning whom he ſpeaks in Chap. 32. of his ſixth Book. For he ſays, that theſe Brethren, inſtructed in the Monaſtick Diſcipline by Hilarion, were, during the Empire of Valens, eminent in the Monaſteries of Paleſtine: and that they lived near Bethelia, a Village in the Country of the Gazites. For they were Deſcendants of a Noble Family amongſt them. He mentions the ſame Perſons in his Eighth Book and Fifteenth Chapter, where he ſays Criſpio was Epiphanius's Arch-Deacon. 'Tis apparent therefore, that thoſe Brethren I have mentioned were extracted from Alaphion's Family. Now Alaphion was related to Sozomen's Grandfather. Which I conjecture from hence. Firſt, becauſe the Grandfather of Sozomen is ſaid to have been converted (together with his whole Family) to the Chriſtian Religion, upon account of Alaphion's wonderful Cure, whom Hilarion had healed, by calling on the name of the Omnipotent potent GOD. Further, this Conjecture is confirm'd by what Sozomen relates, to wit, that he, when very young, was familiarly converſant with the aged Monks that were of Alaphion's Family. And laſtly, in regard Sozomen took his name from thoſe Perſons who were either the Sons or Grandchildren of Alaphion. For he was called Salamanes Hermias Sozomenus (as Photius atteſts in his Bibliotheca) from the name of that Salamanes, who, as we obſerved before, was Phuſco's, Malchio's, and Criſpio's Brother. Wherefore that miſtake of Nicephorus's, and others, muſt be amended, who ſuppoſe that Sozomen had the Surname of Salaminus, becauſe he was born at Salimine a City of Cyprus. But we have before demonſtrated from Sozomen's own teſtimony, that he was not born in Cyprus, but in Paleſtine. For his Grandfather was not only a Paleſtinian, as is aboveſaid, but Sozomen himſelf was alſo educated in Paleſtine, in the boſom (as I may ſay) of thoſe Monks that were of Alaphio's Family. From which education Sozomen ſeems to me to have imbibed that moſt ardent love of a Monaſtick Life and Diſcipline, which he declares in many places of his Hiſtory. Hence 'tis, that in his Books he is not content to relate, who were the Fathers and Founders of Monaſtick Philoſophy; but he alſo carefully relates their Succeſſors and Diſciples, who both in Egypt, Syria, and Paleſtine, and alſo in Pontus, Armenia and Oſdroëna, followed this way of Life. Hence alſo it is, that in the Twelfth Chapter of the Firſt Book of his Hiſtory, he has propoſed to be read (in the beginning as it were) that gorgeous Elogue of Monaſtick Philoſophy. For he ſuppoſed, that he ſhould have been ungrateful, had he not after this manner at leaſt made a return of thanks to thoſe, in whoſe familiarity he had lived, and from whom, when he was a youth, he had received ſuch eminent examples of a good converſe. For that he himſelf intimates, in the Proeme to his firſt Book. But it is collected that Sozomen was educated at Gaza, not only from this place which I have mentioned, but alſo from Chap. 28. of his Seventh Book, where Sozomen ſays, that he himſelf had ſeen Zeno Biſhop of Majuma. This Majuma is a Sea-Port belonging to the Gazites. Which Biſhop, although he was almoſt an hundred years old, yet was never abſent from the Morning and Evening Hymns, unleſs it hapned that he was detained by a diſeaſe. After this Sozomen applied himſelf to the profeſſion of the Law. He was a Student in the Civil Law at Berytus, a City of Phœnicia, not far diſtant from his own Country, wherethere was a famous Civil-Law-School. But he practiſed the Law at Conſtantinpole, as himſelf atteſts in his ſecond Book and third Chapter: And yet he ſeems not to have been very much employed in pleading of Cauſes. For at the ſame time that he was an Advocate at Conſtantinople, he wrote his Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory; which may be concluded from his own Words. For thus he ſays (Book 2. Chap. 3.) οἷον δ' Ἀκυλίνῳ ξυμπέπτωκεν, ἀνδρὶ εἰσέτι νῦν ἡμῖν συνδιαλεγομένῳ, καὶ ἐν τοῖς αὐτοῖς δικαστηρίοις δίκας ἀγορεύοντι, τὰ μὲν παρ' αὐτοῦ ἀκούσας· τὰ δὲ καὶ θεασάμενος, ἀναγκαίως ἐρῶ· but what hapned to Aquilinus, a perſon at this time converſant with me, and one that pleads Cauſes in the ſame Court of Judicature, I will neceſſarily relate, partly as I heard it from him, and partly as I my ſelf ſaw it. Further, before he wrote his Nine Books of Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory, Sozomen compoſed a Breviary of Eccleſiaſtick affairs, from our Saviour's Aſcenſion to the Depoſition of Licinius. Which work was comprized in two Books, as himſelf atteſts in the Proeme to his Firſt Book. But thoſe two Books are loſt by length of time. In the compoſure of his Hiſtory, Sozomen has made uſe of a Stile neither too Low, nor too High, but between both: which Stile is moſt agreeable to a Writer of Eccleſiaſtick Affairs. Photius (in his Bibliotheca) prefers Sozomen's Stile before Socrates's. With whom we agree. But by how much Sozomen is ſuperior for the Elegancy of his expreſſion, by ſo much Socrates exceeds upon account of his judiciouſneſs. For Socrates judges incomparably well, both of Men, and alſo of Eccleſiaſtick Buſineſs and Affairs. There is nothing in him but what is grave and ſerious. Nothing that you can expunge as ſuperfluous. But on the contrary, ſome paſſages occur in Sozomen that are trivial and childiſh. Of this ſort is his digreſſion in his Firſt Book concerning the building of the City Hemona, and concerning the Argonauts, who carried the Ship Argo on their Shoulders ſome furlongs. Alſo his deſcription of Daphne without the Walls of the City Antioch, which occurs at Chap. 19. of his Sixth Book. And that obſervation of his concerning the beauty of the Body, where he treats of that Virgin, with whom the bleſſed Athanaſius abſconded a long while. Laſtly, his Ninth Book contains little elſe beſides warlike Events, between which and an Eccleſiaſtick Hiſtory there is no agreement. Beſides, Sozomen's Stile, which Photius prefers before that of Socrates, wants not its faults. For I have obſerved, that the Periods are by Sozomen no otherwiſe joyned together, than by theſe Particles δὲ and τέ; than which there is nothing more troubleſome. Should any one attentively read that Epiſtle wherein Sozomen Dedicates his Work to Theodoſius Junior, he will find that which I have ſaid to be certainly true, to wit, that Sozomen was no great Orator.

It remains, that we inquire which of theſe * two Authors wrote firſt, and which of them borrow'd, or rather ſtole from the other. Certainly, in regard both of them Wrote almoſt the ſame things of the ſame Tranſactions, in as much as they both began at the ſame beginning, and concluded their Hiſtory at the ſame boundary, (both beginning from the Reign of Conſtantine, and ending at the Seventeenth Conſulate of Theodoſius Junior;) it muſt needs be true, that one of them robbed the others Desk. Which ſort of theft (as Porphyrius atteſts in Euſebius's Tenth Book of Evangelick Preparation) was committed by many of the Grecian Writers. But which was the Plagiary, Socrates or Sozomen, 'tis hard to ſay, in regard both of them lived in the ſame times, and both wrote their Hiſtory in the Empire of Theodoſius Junior. Therefore, in the diſquiſition of this queſtion, we muſt make uſe of conjecture. In ſuch a caſe as this Porphyrius in the before quoted Book (when it was uncertain whether Hyperides ſtole from Demoſthenes, or Demoſthenes from Hyperides, becauſe both of them lived at the ſame time,) openly declared that conjecture was to be made uſe of. Let us therefore ſee upon which of them falls the ſuſpicion of theft. Indeed this is my ſentiment, I do ſuppoſe that the Inferior does frequently ſteal from the Superior, and the Junior from the Senior. But Sozomen is in my judgment far inferior to Socrates; and he betook himſelf to Writing his Hiſtory when he was younger than Socrates. For he wrote it whilſt he was yet an Advocate, as I obſerved before. Now, the profeſſion of the Advocates amongſt the Romans was not perpetual, but temporary. Laſtly, He that adds ſomething to the other, and ſometimes amends the other, ſeems to have written laſt. But Sozomen now and then adds ſome paſſages to Socrates, and in ſome places diſſents from him, as Photius has obſerved, and we have hinted in our Annotations. Sozomen therefore ſeems to have written laſt. And this is the Opinion of almoſt all modern Writers; who place Socrates before Sozomen, So Bellarmine in his Book De Scriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis; who is followed by Miræus, Labbæus, and Voſſius. Amongſt the Ancients, Caſſiodorus, Photius and Nicephorus name Socrates in the firſt place. Although Caſſiodorus is found to have varied. For in his Preface to the Tripertite Hiſtory, in a clean contrary order he names Theodoret in the firſt place, Sozomen in the ſecond, and Socrates laſt. So alſo does Theodorus Lector recount them, in his Epiſtle which he prefixt before the Tripertite Hiſtory. Thus far concerning Sozomen.

THE

CHAP. I.

The Preface to the whole Book.

Constant.

EUSEBIUS PAMPHILUS having compiled an Ecclesiastick History in Ten intire Books, concluded it in the Reign of Constantine the Emperor: at which time also the (a) Persecution against the Christians ceased, [which had been begun] by Diocletian. The same Author, in the Books he wrote concerning the Life of Constantine, has made but a (b) slight relation of the matters relating to Arius: for he was more careful about the praises of the Emperor, and about a panegyrical sublimity in his expressions, as it is usually done in [the composition of] an Encomium, than about an accurate and exact account of what was done. But we, purposing to commit to writing the Ecclesiastick affairs from those times to these our own days, will begin our History (c) from those things which he has left untoucht: we shall not be over curious about the grandeur of our stile, but what things soever we have found upon record, or have heard from such as were present at the transactions thereof, we will particularly relate. And because it is conducive to our design, to declare after what manner Constantine was converted to the Christian Religion, according to our ability we will speak something of that matter. Constant.

(a) In the Kings MS. and Robert Stephens's Edit. it is [πόλεμος, the war :] but in the Florent. and Sfort. MSS. we found it written [διωγμὸς, persecution.] Vales.

(b) Μερικῶς here used does not (as usually) signifie singillatim, one by one, apart, but ἐν μέρει, partly. For Eusebius (in his Books De vitâ Constantini) does indeed but partly touch the History of Arius; he prosecutes it not wholly, and particularly. Vales.

(c) Musculus renders these words [ἐξ ὧν ἐκεῖνος ἀπέλιπε] thus, we will begin our History where we left off. Christoph. does translate it almost after the same manner, but more barbarously, as to his Latin. We have rendred these words thus [ab iis rebus quas ille intactas reliquit, operis nostri sumemus exordium, i. e. we will begin our History from those matters which he has left untoucht.] For Socrates's meaning is, that he will begin from the History of Arius, which Eusebius had but partly toucht upon, in his Books concerning the Life of Constantine. For Eusebius (says he) made it his business in those Books to enlarge upon the Emperor's praises, rather than to give an exact account of the Ecclesiastick affairs. But he himself, resolving to commit to writing the affairs transacted in the Church, promises to give a more accurate relation of the Arian Heresie, and to begin his History from those things which Eusebius had either purposely omitted, or but slightly toucht upon, as not conducive to his design in hand. Indeed Socrates has not begun his History where Eusebius left off. For Eusebius continues that Work of his concerning Constantine's Life to the Death of Constantine. But Eusebius has continued the Series of his Ecclesiastick History down to the tumults raised by Arius, and to those affairs which preceded the Nicene Council. If therefore we have respect only to Eusebius's Ten Books of his Ecclesiastick History, we may say, that Socrates began where Eusebius ended. But if we also add his Books concerning the Life of Constantine (as Socrates here does, then that will not be true. Vales.

CHAP. II.

After what manner Constantine the Emperor was converted to the Christian Religion.

(a) WE will begin from those times, wherein Diocletian and Maximian, sirnamed Herculius, having by a mutual compact resign'd their Empire, embraced a private life: and Maximian, sirnamed Galerius, who had been Colleague in the Empire with them, came into Italy, and created two Cæsars, Maximin in the Eastern parts [of the Empire,] and Severus in Italy. (b) But in Britain Constantine was proclaimed Emperor, in the room of Constantius his Father, (c) who died in the first year of the two hundredth seventy first Olympiad, on the five and twentieth day of the month July. [Lastly] at Rome, Maxentius the Son of Maximianus Herculius was by the Prætorian Soldiers advanced to be a Tyrant rather than an Emperor. Hereupon Herculius, passionately desirous of reassuming his Imperial Authority, endeavour'd to destroy his Son Maxentius. But he was hindred from doing that by the Soldiers. Afterwards (d) he died at Tarsus a City of Cilicia.

(a) Vales. in his Latin translation begins this period not as Musculus and Christoph. do, and we have followed his judgment, as more agreeable with the continuation, and connexion of the sense.

(b) Socrates seems to have been of of opinion that Constantine and Maxentius began their Reign in the same year that Diocletian and Maximianus Herculius did resign the Empire. This also was the opinion of the Author of the Chronicle of Alexandria, and of others who attribute the years of Constantius's Reign to Constantine his Son. And hence it is that Constantine the Great is reported to have reigned 32 years, when as really he reigned but 30 years, and 10 months. Vales.

(c) Socrates does in the end of his Seventh Book (where he concludes his History) repeat this, in which place he says that he began his History in the first year of the 271 Olympiad, in which year Constantine the Great was proclaimed Emperor. This Olympiad does begin at the Solstice of the CCCV. year, being the year after the resignation of Diocletian. But Constantius died not this year, but in that following, when he was the sixth time Consul with Galerius Augustus, as we may read in Fastis Idatii. And therefore Constantius's death is to be reckon'd on the second year of the aforesaid CCLXXI. Olympiad. Vales.

(d) Socrates is here in an error, for Maximianus Herculius, who was otherwise called Maximian the Elder, was by Constantine's command slain in Gallia, in the year of Christ 310. But Maximinus Cæsar, being two years after conquer'd by Licinius, died at Tarsus, as Aurelius Victor relates, and Eusebius in his Chronicle and other Authors. This is the common mistake of the Greek Historians; they make a confusion betwixt Maximianus and Maximinus, using them promiscuously. Vales.

Conſtant. Severus Cæſar being ſent to Rome by (e) Galerius Maximianus to take Maxentius, was betray,d by his own Soldiers and put to death. Laſt of all died Galerius Maximianus alſo, who was now (f) the ſupreme perſon in the Empire, having before his death conſtituted Licinius Emperor: he was a native of Dacia, and had for a long time been Galerius's Fellow Soldier and Confident. Maxentius in the mean while treated the Romans ſeverely, behaving himſelf like a Tyrant rather than an Emperor towards them: impudently debauching the wives of perſons genteely extracted; killing many and perpetrating ſuch like facts as theſe. Whereof when Conſtantine the Emperor had notice, he made it his buſineſs to deliver the Romans from that ſervitude he had preſſed them with; and immediately became ſollicitouſly inquiſitive how he might deſtroy the Tyrant. Whilſt he was in this deep cogitation, he conſidered with himſelf what Deity he ſhould invoke to be his Aſſiſtant and Tutelar God in this Expedition. It came into his mind that the ſtrict worſhip of the Heathen Gods had not in the leaſt availed Diocletian; and he found that his father Conſtantius having relinquiſhed the ſuperſtition of the Grecians, had led a more fortunate and proſperous life. Whilſt therefore he was [engaged] in this doubtful deliberation, and upon the March with his Army ſome whither, there hapned to appear to him a wonderful and unexpreſſible Viſion. For about noon, when the day began now to decline ſomewhat towards afternoon, he ſaw in [the face of] the heavens a pillar of light, in figure like unto a Croſs, with this inſcription on it, By this be thou Conqueror. The Emperor ſtood amaz'd at this apparition. And, almoſt disbelieving his own eyes, he asked them that were preſent, whether they alſo ſaw the ſame ſight; which when they all had unanimouſly agreed in, [the mind of] the Emperor was corroborated by that divine and wonderful apparition. The night following Chriſt appear'd to him in his ſleep, and ſaid unto him, Make a Standard in figure like that which appeared [to thee,] and make uſe of it, as an infallible and ready Trophy, againſt thine enemies. In obedience to this [heavenly] Oracle, he orders a Trophy to be made, in figure like a Croſs, which is kept in the Palace to this day. After this he proceeded in the diſpatch of affairs with a greater vigour and alacrity of mind; and having engag'd the Enemy before the very Gates of Rome, near the Bridge called Milvius, he got the victory; Maxentius being drowned in the River. This was now the (g) ſeventh year of Conſtantine's Reign, when he got the victory over Maxentius. After theſe [Atchievements] whilſt Licinius his Colleague (who was alſo his Brother-in-law, by the marriage of his Siſter Conſtantia) reſided in the Eaſt, he alſo having received ſo many and ſuch great favours from God, offer'd thankſgivings to him his great Benefactor; which were of this ſort, he put a ſtop to the perſecution againſt the Chriſtians; he recalled thoſe that were in exile; he releaſed ſuch as were confined in priſon, and reſtored their Eſtates to thoſe that had been proſcribed; he repaired the Churches, and all theſe things he did with great alacrity of mind. (h) About this time Diocletian, who had reſign'd his Imperial power, died at Salona, a City of Dalmatia.

Conſtant.

(b) Diocletian died at Salona the third of the Nones of December, in the year of Chriſt 316. as Idatius does very well write in his Annals. The ſame alſo ſays the Author of the Chronic. Alexand. but inſtead of Diocletian there is crept into the Text, Galerius Maximianus; 'tis alſo confirmed by the authority of Zoſimus in the ſecond Book of his Hiſtory, where he ſays that Diocletian died 3 years after the third Conſulſhip of Conſtantine and Licinius. For, having ſaid, that from the Conſulſhip of Chilon and Libo (in which the Secular Games were celebrated) to the third Conſulſhip of Conſtantine and Licinius, it was above 110 years, he adds Διοκλητιανὸς μὲν τελευτᾷ τριετὴν ἑαυτοῖς ὕστερον· (i. e.) three years after died Diocletian. But Joſeph Scaliger in his Notes upon Euſebius, underſtood this paſſage of Zoſimus ſo, as if Zoſimus ſhould ſay that Diocletian died three years after the reſignation of his Empire, or after his ninth Conſulſhip. Valeſ.

(e) Altho' in the Greek it be Galerius Maximinus; yet we muſt read Maximianus: the Greeks uſually confound theſe two names. In the beginning of this Chapter (where the words are, Maximianus ſirnamed Galerius) the Sfort. MS. has it written Maximinus. Valeſ.

(f) This paſſage [πάντα Μαξιμιανὸς ὁ Γαλέριος τῶν ὅλων] Maximianus Galerius, who was now the ſupream perſon in the Empire] muſt be underſtood favourably; for Galerius was not really chief and ſole Arbitrator of all things; whenas there were at the ſame time two other Auguſti, to wit, Conſtantine in the Gallia's, and Maxentius at Rome. But nevertheleſs he may be ſaid ſummam imperii adminiſtraſſe, becauſe he was the ſenior Auguſtus, and was reſpected by the junior Auguſti, as a Father. Valeſ.

(g) Conſtantine got this Victory over Maxentius in the year of Chriſt 312. when he and Licinius were in their ſecond Conſulate; this was the ſixth year of Conſtantine's Reign: for he begun his Reign on the 25th day of July, in the year of Chriſt 306. But if we ſay that Maxentius was conquered on the eighth of the Kalends of October in the year 312. (as Onufrius reckons in his Faſti, and Sigonius in his ſecond Book concerning the Weſtern Empire) then that which Socrates here affirms may be true; that Conſtantine routed Maxentius in the ſeventh year of his Reign. But it ſeems ſomething odd to me, that Maxentius ſhould (in the Panegyrick of Nazarius) be ſaid to be ſlain in the end of his ſixth year, juſt the day before he began his ſeventh. Maxentius began his Reign ſome days after Conſtantine; therefore if Maxentius died on the eighth of the Kalends of October, he muſt neceſſarily begin his Reign on the ſeventh. And by this Computation Conſtantine came to the Empire two months before Maxentius. Which indeed does not ſeem probable to me. But Socrates does here accord with his own opinion: for whereas Conſtantine (according to him) began his Reign in the 305th year of Chriſt; he very well reckons this Victory in the ſeventh year of his Reign. Valeſ.

CHAP. III.

How whilſt Conſtantine augmented [the proſperity of] the Chriſtians, Licinius his Colleague perſecuted them.

NOW Conſtantine the Emperor, profeſſing himſelf a Chriſtian, did all things beſeeming his profeſſion; he erected the Churches and adorn'd them with moſt magnificent conſecrated gifts. Moreover, he ſhut up and demoliſh'd the Temples of the Heathens, end † expoſed the Images placed therein. But Licinius his Colleague, adhering to the Opinions of Heathens, hated the Chriſtians: he forbore raiſing an open perſecution againſt them, becauſe he fear'd the Emperor Conſtantine: but in a clandeſtine manner he enſnared many of them: and at length proceeded to open violence againſt them. This Perſecution was local; for it raged in thoſe parts only * where Licinius made his reſidence. But in regard Conſtantine was in no wiſe unacquainted with theſe, and other ſuch like his tyrannous outrages, Licinius being ſenſible that he highly reſented theſe proceedings, betook himſelf to the making of his apology before him; and having appeaſed him by his obſequiouſneſs, he hypocritically made an amicable league with him, binding himſelf by many oaths, that in future he would never attempt any thing that was tyrannical. But at the ſame time that he ſwore, he was alſo perjured. For he deſiſted not from his tyrannick [conſpiracies againſt Conſtantine] nor ceaſed he from perſecuting the Chriſtians. For by a Decree he prohibited the Biſhops † Δημοσιεύων τὰ ἐν αὐτοῖς ἀγάλματα, made common, or expoſed the Images placed therein; that is (as we ſuppoſe) he caus'd them to be deſecrated.

* Ἔνθα γὰρ ἦν Λικίνιος, ἐκεῖ μόνον ἐγίνετο· the import whereof rendred word for word, is this, it hapned there only, where Licinius was: Valeſius renders the words thus, in iis enim duntaxat partibus graſſata eſt, quæ ſubditioni erant Licinii, it raged in thoſe parts only, which were under Licinius's juriſdiction.

Constant. Bishops from frequenting the houses of Heathens, that there might be no pretence of propagating the Christian Religion. This Persecution was at the same time open and secret. It was concealed and disguised in words; but in reality and deeds it was apparent. For those that lay under its pressures, endured most deplorable afflictions [and losses] in their Bodies, and as to their Estates.

CHAP. IV.

That there was a War raised betwixt Constantine and Licinius upon account of the Christians.

THese proceedings rais'd the highest indignation in the Emperor Constantine [against Licinius:] and, the feign'd league of friendship which was betwixt them being broken, they became enemies to each other. Not long after they entred into an actual War against one another: and having fought several Sett-battles both by Sea and Land, at length Licinius was vanquished at Chrysopolis of Bithynia, a Port-Town of the Chalcedonensians, and yielded himself. Constantine having taken him alive, treated him kindly; and would in no wise slay him, but commanded him to reside at Thessalonica peaceably and without making any disturbance. But having lived quietly a while, he afterwards gather'd into a body some of the Barbarians, and attempted to recover his overthrow, and renew the War. Constantine being inform'd hereof, commanded that he should be put to death, and accordingly he was slain. Constantine having now the sole power and command over the whole [Roman Empire,] and being proclaimed (a) Emperor and Augustus, endeavour'd again to augment the affairs of the Christians: which he effected divers ways: and by his means Christianity enjoy'd a profound and secure peace. But an intestine War amongst the Christians themselves succeeded this so firm a Peace. What manner of War this was, and how it began, in the sequel according to my ability I will relate.

(a) In the Kings and Florentine MSS. the Particle [καὶ, and] is wanting; which Christoph. inserted. To me it seems not very necessary. If we do retain it, then [βασιλεὺς] must signifie [Augustus,] not King, as Christoph. renders it. Socrates alludes to the Soldiers acclamations, who after a signal Victory were wont to stile their Prince Emperor and Augustus. The Citizens did the same, when the victorious Prince made his entry into the City. Vales.

CHAP. V.

Concerning Arius's Contest with Alexander the Bishop.

AFter Peter, Bishop of Alexandria, who suffer'd Martyrdom in the Reign of Diocletian, Achillas succeeded in that See. After Achillas [succeeded] Alexander, in the time of the foremention'd peace. He living in times that were more calm and secure, adorn'd and set his Church in order. Discoursing one day in the presence of his Presbyters, and the rest of his Clergy too curiously, concerning the [mystery of] the Holy Trinity, he asserted this point of Divinity, that there was an Unity in the Trinity. But Arius one of the Presbyters placed under Alexander (a man of no mean skill in the faculty of reasoning) supposing that the Bishop design'd to introduce the Opinion of * Sabellius the Libyan, desirous to be perverse and contentious, deflected to an Opinion that was diametrically opposite to that of Sabellius, and as he thought, sharply and nimbly opposed the Bishop's assertions, arguing thus. If the Father begot the Son, he that was begetten hath a beginning of his Existence. And from hence it is apparent, that there was a time, when the Son was not. Whence this is a necessary consequence, that he derives his Existence from nothing. Constant.

* See Eusebius's Eccles. Hist. Book 7. Chap. 6. Note (b.)

CHAP. VI.

How from this Contention there arose a Division in the Church; and how Alexander Bishop of Alexandria deposed Arius and his Complices.

Arius having drawn this conclusion from these new assertions, excited many to that question; and from this small spark was kindled a great fire. For the mischief having been begun in the Church of Alexandria over-ran all Egypt, Libya and the Upper Thebais, and at length consumed the rest of the Cities and Provinces. Many there were that did patronize Arius's Opinion, but more especially Eusebius was a maintainer of it; (not that Eusebius who was Bishop Cæsarea, but another, who formerly had been Bishop of the Church of Berytus; but was then surreptitiously crept into the Bishoprick of Nicomedia in Bithynia.) Alexander hearing and seeing what was done, became highly enrag'd, and having convened a Council of many Bishops, he degraded Arius and those that embraced his Opinion; and wrote to the [Bishops] of every City, as followeth.

The Letter of Alexander [Bishop] of Alexandria.

To Our Well beloved and dearest Fellow-Ministers of the Catholick Church in all places, Alexander [wisheth] health in the Lord. (a) Whereas there is one Body of the Catholick Church; and 'tis commanded in the Holy Scriptures that we keep the Bond of Peace and Concord, it is requisite that we should write and inform one another of what things are done amongst us, to the end, that if one Member suffer, or rejoyce, we may either joyntly rejoyce or suffer together. In our Dioceſs therefore there are lately started up Men that are impious and Enemies of Christ, who teach such Apostacy, as any one may judge, and justly term the forerunner of Antichrist. And this I would most gladly have buried in silence, that the mischief might have been consum'd by being included amongst the Apostates only, lest haply by its further progress into other places it should have infected the ears of the Simple. But because Eusebius now Bishop of Nicomedia, supposing that the Affairs of the Church are wholly at his dispose, (in regard, having deserted the Church of Berytus, he has sordidly coveted that of Nicomedia, and has not been prosecuted by any) does patronize even these Apostates, and has boldly attempted to write Letters up and down in commendation of them, that thereby he might seduce some ignorant Persons into this worst Heresie to Christ: I thought it and most displeasing necessary, being sensible

(a) Lucas Holstenius a very learned person, heretofore wrote a Dissertation upon this Epistle of Alexander's, which (together with some other pieces of his) he sent me a little before his death. In that Treatise he remarks in the first place, that Interpreters had not well rendred these words of Alexander [ἑνὸς σώματός ἐστιν τῆς Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας,] which they had translated thus [Cum unum sit Catholicæ corpus Ecclesiæ, whereas there is one Body of the Catholick Church. But he asserts, that the place should rather have been thus rendred, [whereas the Catholick Church is one Body, &c. or, consists of one Body.] For that learned person is of opinion, that Alexander alludes to St. Paul's Epistles, wherein the Church is frequently called Christ's Body. But (by the favour of that great man, and heretofore my deerest friend) this Version cannot be born with. For, if Alexander had thought, as Holstenius means, he would doubtless have expres'd himself thus; [ἑνὸς σώματός ἐσμεν τῆς Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας·] which in regard he has not said, it is apparent, there can be no othee sense of the words, than that expres'd by Translators. Besides, if Alexander would have said that the Church is the Body of Christ, he would not have worded it thus [ἑνὸς σώματος, one body,] but rather thus [σώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, the Body of Christ.] Vales.

Conſtant. ſible of what is written in the Law, to be no longer ſilent, but to give you all notice, that you might know thoſe that are the Apoſtates, and likewiſe the deteſtable Expreſſions of their Hereſie, and that if Euſebius write to you, you ſhould give no heed to him: For he, at this time deſirous to renew his priſtine Malevolence, which ſeemed to have been ſilenced [and forgot] by length of time, pretends indeed to write Letters on their behalf, but in reality he declares, that he uſes his utmoſt diligence to do this upon his own account. Now theſe are the names of thoſe which are turn'd Apoſtates; Arius, Achillas, Aithales, Carpones, another Arius, Sarmates, Euzoïus, Lucius, Julianus, Menas, Helladius, and Gaius; Secundus alſo, and Theönas, who were ſometimes ſtiled Biſhops. (b) And theſe are their Tenets which they have invented and do aſſert contrary to the authority of Scripture. God, they ſay, was not always a Father; but there was a time when God was not a Father. The Word of God was not from everlaſting, but had its beginning from Nothing. For God, who is, made him, who was not, of Nothing. Therefore there was a time when he was not: For the Son is a Creature and a Work; neither is he like to the Father as to his Eſſence, nor is he by Nature the genuine Word of the Father, nor his true Wiſdom (c) But he is one of his Works, and one of his Creatures: and is only improperly ſtiled the Word and the Wiſdom: (d) For he himſelf exiſts by the proper Word of God, and by the Wiſdom that is in God, by which God made all things and him alſo. Wherefore he is by nature mutable and ſubject to change, as well as all other rational Beings. So that the word is different, diſagreeable, and ſeparate from the Eſſence of God: and the Father cannot be declared or ſet forth by the Son, and (e) is inviſible to him. For the Son does not perfectly and accurately know the Father, neither can he perfectly behold him: For the Son knows not his own Eſſence, what it is. For our ſakes he was made, that God might make uſe of him, as an Inſtrument, in order to our Creation; nor had he ever exiſted, had it not pleaſed God to create us. And when one asked them, if the Word of God could be changed, as the Devil was, they were not afraid to anſwer, Yes certainly he may: For he is of a Nature ſubject to change, (f) in that he is gotten and created. We therefore with the Biſhops of Ægypt and (g) Libya, near a hundred in number, being met together, have *Anathematized Arius for theſe his Principles, and for his impudent Aſſertion of them, together with all his Adherents. But Euſebius has given them entertainment, endeavouring to mix Falſhood with Truth, and Impiety with Piety: but he ſhall not prevail. For Truth getteth the Victory: and Light has no communion with Darkneſs, nor hath Chriſt any agreement with Belial. For who ever heard the like? Or what Man, if he ſhould now hear them, would not be amazed thereat, and ſtop his Ears, leſt the Filth of this Doctrine ſhould penetrate and infect them? What Man is he, that when he hears theſe words of St. John, In the beginning was the Word, will not condemn thoſe that affirm, there was a time when the Word was not? Or, who is he that when he hears theſe words of the Goſpel, The only begotten Son, and by him all things were made, will not abominate theſe Men that ſay, the Son is one of the Creatures. (h) For how can he be one of thoſe things that were made by him? Or how can he be term'd the Only begotten, who (according to their ſentiments of him) is reckon'd amongſt all the other Creatures? How can he be made of nothing, whenas the Father himſelf ſaith, * My heart hath ſent forth a good word, and † Before the morning I have begotten thee in the womb? Or how can he be unlike the Father in Eſſence, whenas he is the * perfect Image, and † the brightneſs of the Father: And whenas he himſelf teſtifieth, || He that has ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father: Now if the Son be the Word and the Wiſdom of the Father, how can there be a time when he was not? For 'tis the ſame [abſurdity,] as if they ſhould ſay, there was a time when God was both without his Word and his Wiſdom. How can he be mutable and ſubject to change, who ſays concerning himſelf, * I am in the Father, and the Father in me, and † I and the Father are one? He [ſpake alſo] by the Prophet, || Behold me, for I am the Lord, and am not changed. And tho' ſome one may ſay, that this was ſpoken in reference to the Father, yet it will be more accommodate, to underſtand it now to be ſpoken in relation to the Word: Becauſe although he became Man, yet was he not changed; but, as the Apoſtle ſays, † Jeſus Chriſt the ſame yeſterday and to day, and for ever. But what motive could they have to ſay, that he was made for us, whenas Paul ſaith,  For him are all things, and by him are all things? But concerning their Blaſphemy in affirming, that the Son doth not perfectly know the Father, it ought not to be wondred at. For having once reſolved to fight againſt

(b) In the Florence MS. after theſe words [ὅτι ταῦτα, theſe are] follow theſe [πῶς φρονοῦσιν οἱ Ἀρειανοὶ, the Tenets of the Arians,] which words ſhould rather be placed in the Margin. In Gelaſius there occur likewiſe at this place, theſe words, δόγμα Ἀρείου, Arius's Opinion. Valeſ.

(c) After theſe words [nor his true Wiſdom] there was a whole clauſe wanting, which from our three MSS. the Florentine, Sfortian, and Allatian, and from Gelaſius Cyzicenus we have made good, thus, [ἀλλ' εἷς μὲν ἐστὶ τῶν ποιημάτων καὶ γενητῶν ὅτι. [But he is one of his Works, and one of his Creatures;] which words Epiph. Scholaſticus had found in his Copy, as is apparent from his Verſion. For he has tranſlated this whole place thus: Creatura eſt enim, & factura filius, neque ſimilis eſt patri ſecundum ſubſtantiam: neque verus eſt, neque vera ſapientia ejus eſt, neque verum naturaliter patris verbum eſt, ſed unus quidem creaturarum & facturarum eſt: For the Son is a Creature and a Work, neither is he like the Father as to his Eſſence: Nor is he genuine, nor his true Wiſdom: nor is he by nature the true Word of the Father, but one of his Creatures and one of his Works. Hence it appears, that that Greek Copy of Socrates, which Epiphanius Scholaſticus uſed, differed ſomething from our Manuſcripts. And yet Leo Allatius's Copy agrees exactly with that which Epiphanius followed. For thus it words this paſſage: ὅτε δὲ ἀληθινός ἐστιν, ὅτε ἀληθινὴ σοφία αὐτοῦ ἐστὶν· ὅτε ἀληθινὸς καὶ φύσει τοῦ πατρὸς λόγος ἐστὶν· ἀλλ' εἷς μὲν ἐστὶ τῶν ποιημάτων, καὶ ποιητῶν ἐστι· καταχρηστικῶς δὲ λέγεται λόγος, καὶ, &c. So exactly do the Authors of the Greek and Latin Tripertite Hiſtory agree amongſt themſelves, that they ſeem to have borrowed from one another. Valeſ.

(d) In Leo Allatius's MS. Copy, the reading of this place is thus, γενόμενος καὶ αὐτὸς δὲ ὢν ἐν τῷ ἰδίῳ τοῦ θεοῦ λόγῳ, καὶ ἐν τῇ τοῦ θεοῦ σοφίᾳ. Which reading Epiphan. Scholaſt. has followed; who tranſlated it thus; Factus & ipſe & exiſtens in proprio Dei verbo, & in Dei ſapientiâ, He himſelf is made and exiſts in the proper Word of God, and in the Wiſdom of God. But we have rather follow'd the reading of the King's, the Florentine, and the Sfortian MSS. which is alſo confirm'd by Gelaſius. Val.

(e) In Leo Allatius's MS. (which contains the Tripertite Hiſtory that Theodorus Lector compoſed in Greek out of Socrates, Sozomen, and Theodoret) theſe words are added, καὶ ἀόρατος, and is inviſible. So Epiph. Scholaſt. reads it, as appears from his Verſion. Valeſ.

(f) Inſtead of γεννητὸς καὶ τρεπτὸς, in the Greek, we with Gelaſius chooſe to read γεννητὸς καὶ κτιστὸς, and accordingly tranſlate it thus, begotten and created. This Paſſage is thus tranſlated by Epiph. Factus aium, & convertibilis eſt, They ſay that he is made, and is mutable. Val.

(g) In Leo Allatius's MS. the reading is καὶ λιβύην· but in Gelaſius καὶ τὰς λιβύας· Which reading does pleaſe me. For there are two Libya's, we may alſo here take notice of this number (to wit) 100 Biſhops in Egypt. The ſame number I remember I met with in Athanaſius's Second Apology againſt the Arians, pag. 788. Ἐπίσκοποι εἰσὶν ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ καὶ λιβύῃ καὶ πενταπόλει, ἑκατόν· there are in Egypt, Libya, and Pentapolis, near an hundred Biſhops. Valeſ.

(h) In Leo Allatius's MS. and in Gelaſius Cyzicenus, this place is truer written thus, πῶς γὰρ δύναται εἷς εἶναι τῶν δι' αὐτοῦ γενομένων; which Reading we have expreſs'd in our Tranſlation. The Reading in the Florentine and Sfortian MSS. is πῶς δὲ δύναται ἴσος εἶναι τῶν δι' αὐτοῦ γενομένων, How can he be equal with thoſe things made by him. Valeſ.

Constant. against Christ, they despise even the Words of the Lord himself, who says, * As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father. If therefore the Father knoweth the Son only in part, it is manifest, that the Son also knoweth the Father in part. But if it be impious to assert this, and if the Father knoweth the Son perfectly, it is perspicuous, that as the Father knoweth his own Word, so doth the Word know his own Father, whose Word he is. By asserting of these things, and explaining the Sacred Scriptures, we have frequently confuted them; but they, like Chamæleons, have again been changed, pertinaciously contending to appropriate to themselves this that is written, † When the Impious is arrived at the very extreams of wickedness, he despiseth. There have indeed been many Heresies before these Persons, which by their too much audaciousness have fallen into Imprudence and Folly: But these Men, who by all their Discourses (i) attempt nothing less than the subversion of the Divinity of the Word, have to the utmost of their power made those [preceding] Heresies to be accounted just, in regard they approach nearer to Antichrist. Wherefore they are expelled out of the Church, and Anathematized. We are really troubled at the Destruction of these Men, and the rather, because they were heretofore instructed in the Doctrine of the Church, but have now renounced it. Yet we do not look upon this as so strange a thing. For the same thing befel * Hymæneus and Philetus; and before them, Judas, who thought he had been our Saviour's Disciple, yet was afterwards his Betrayer, and an Apostate. Neither have we continued unadvised of these very persons; for our Lord hath predicted, † Take heed that no man deceive you: For many shall come in my name saying; I am [Christ,] and the time draweth near, and they shall deceive many. Go ye not therefore after them. And Paul having learned these things from our Saviour, wrote thus; * That in the latter days, some shall depart from the sound faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, who detest the truth. Since therefore our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ hath himself commanded this, and also by his Apostle hath given us intimation concerning these men, we, being ear-witnesses of their impiety, have deservedly anathematized these men, as we said before, and openly declared them estranged from the Catholick Church and Faith. Moreover, we have signified thus much to your Piety, (beloved and dearest Fellow-Ministers) that if any of them should have the confidence to come to you, you might not entertain them, and that you should not be perswaded [to believe] Eusebius, or any one else that shall write to you concerning them. For it is our duty, as we are Christians, to detest all those that speak or devise any thing against Christ, as the Enemies of God, and the Corrupters of Souls, and * not to say to such men so much as God speed, lest we become partakers of their iniquities (as Saint John hath commanded us.) Salute the brethren that are with you, they that are with us salute you.

Alexander, having written such Letters as this to all the Bishops in every City, the mischief grew worse: those to whom the Contents thereof were communicated, being hereby inflamed with a pertinacious contention. Some were of the same opinion with, and subscribed to the Contents of these Letters; but others did the contrary. But Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia was in the highest degree incited to dissent, because Alexander had in his Letters made a reproachful mention of him in particular. At that time Eusebius was a man of great interest, because the Emperor did then keep his Court at Nicomedia: for Diocletian had not long before built a Palace there. For this reason therefore many Bishops were very obsequious to Eusebius. And he himself wrote frequently, sometimes to Alexander, [advising him] to suppress (k) the controversie raised [amongst them] and to readmit Arius and his adherents into the Church: at other times [he wrote] to the Bishops of every particular City, [perswading them] that they should not consent to Alexander. Hence it came to pass, that all places were filled with tumult and disturbances. For now a man might have seen not only the Prelates of the Churches in words contending with one another, but the Populace also divided, some inclining to one party, some to another. And this matter grew to that height of indignity and insolency, that the Christian Religion became a ridicule even in the publick Theaters. Those that were at Alexandria did * pertinaciously contend about the chiefest points of the Faith. They also sent Embassies to the Bishops of every particular Province. Likewise, those that were of the other party, were authors of the like stirs and discords. (l) There were mixed amongst the Arians the Melitians, who not long before had been separated from [the Communion] of the Church. Now who these Melitians are, we must relate: one Melitius a Bishop of one of the Cities in Egypt, had been deposed by Peter Bishop of Alexandria (who suffered Martyrdom under Diocletian,) for several other reasons, but most especially for this, that in the time of persecution he had denied the Faith and sacrific'd. This person being divested [of his Bishoprick,] and having got a great many followers, constituted himself the Ringleader of their Heresie, who in Egypt are to this day from him called Melitians. Moreover, having no reasonable excuse at all for his separation from the Church, he barely said thus much, that he was injured; he did likewise revile and speak reproachfully of Peter. Peter having suffer'd martyrdom in the persecution, ended his life. But [Melitius] withdraws his reproaches [from Peter] and casts them first upon Achillas, Peter's successor, and afterwards upon Alexander who succeeded Achillas. During their being engaged in this dissention, Arius's controversie was started; and Melitius and his Complices became favourers of Arius, joyning with him in a conspiracy against the Bishop. Now those who lookt upon Arius's Opinion as absurd, approv'd of Alexander's Condemnation of Arius, and thought the sentence pass'd against all that favour'd

(k) Instead of [τὸ κινούμενον ζήτημα, the Controversie raised] the reading in Leo Allatius's MS. is [τὸ κινῆσαν τὴν ταραχὴν ζήτημα, the question that raised the disturbance.] A little after this, in the same MS. instead of [consent to Alexander] the reading is [consent to those whom Alexander wrote to.] Vales.

* Νεανικῶς, childishly.

(l) Here, I am confident, Socrates mistakes; for the Melitians did not side with the Arians till after the Council of Nice: being then sollicited by Eusebius Bishop of Nicomedia to cast scandalous aspersions upon Athanasius, as he himself does testifie in his second Apology against the Arians. If the Melitians had joyned themselves with the Arians before the Council of Nice, the Fathers of that Council undoubtedly had not treated them so kindly as they did. Vales.

Conſtant. that Hereſie was juſt and equitable. But Euſebius of Nicomedia, and as many as embraced Arius's Opinion, wrote to Alexander that he ſhould abrogate the ſentence of Excommunication that had been pronounced, and re-admit the perſons excommunicate into the Church; in regard they aſſerted nothing that was perverſe or impious. Letters from both the diſagreeing parties having been after this manner ſent to the Biſhop of Alexandria, there was a Collection made of theſe Epiſtles. Arius collected thoſe which were written in his own defence, and Alexander thoſe that made againſt him. Hence thoſe Sects, (which do abound ſo numerouſly in theſe our days,) that is, the Arians, Eunomians, and thoſe that derive their denomination from Macedonius, took an occaſion of defending their own Tenets. For each of them quote the Epiſtles of their own Party as a ſufficient evidence.

CHAP. VII.

How Conſtantine the Emperor, griev'd at theſe Diſturbances in the Church, ſent Hoſius a Spaniard to Alexandria, to exhort the Biſhop and Arius to a Reconciliation.

WHen the Emperor had notice of theſe things, he was greatly perplex'd in mind, and looking upon this as his own calamitous concern, without delay he made it his buſineſs to extinguiſh the miſchief newly hatcht, directing his Letters to Alexander and Arius by a perſon of known fidelity, named Hoſius, who was Biſhop of Corduba a City in Spain; which man the Emperor had a great love and eſteem for. Part of this Letter, 'tis not unſeaſonable to inſert here; the whole Letter (a) is extant in Euſebius's Books concerning the Life of Conſtantine.

(a) In the Greek after theſe words, μετὰ ἐν βίβλοις, is extant in the Books, the Florent. MS. reads μέρος ὑπομνήσεως, part of the Letter. Which words, although they may be written in the Margin, yet ſometimes are put into the Text by Authors; as for inſtance in Athanaſius's Apology againſt the the Arians. Valeſ.

VICTOR CONSTANTINUS MAXIMUS AUGUSTUS, to ALEXANDER and ARIUS.

We underſtand that this was the ground of the preſent Controverſie. For when You, Alexander, enquired of your Presbyters, what every particular man's (b) Opinion was concerning a certain Text of Scripture, or rather concerning a part of a fruitleſs Controverſie. And whereas you, Arius, inconſiderately vented ſuch Sentiments as you ought either not to have conceived at firſt, or if you had had ſuch conceptions, it had been your duty, to have let them been buried in ſilence: Upon this a diſſention has been raiſed between you, communion is refuſed: and the moſt Religious Populace rent into two Factions, is ſeparated from the harmonious unity of the whole body. Wherefore let both of you, mutually pardoning each other, quietly accept of what your Fellow-ſervant doth reaſonably adviſe you to. But what is that? It was your duty neither to have ask'd ſuch queſtions at firſt, nor if propoſed, to have made any return thereto. For ſuch queſtions, as no Law does neceſſarily limit or preſcribe, but are propoſed by the contentiouſneſs of an unprofitable vacancy from buſineſs (although they may be framed to exerciſe and employ our natural parts about, yet) we ought to confine within our own Breaſts, and not inconſiderately divulge them in publick Aſſemblies, nor unadviſedly commit them to the ears of the Vulgar. For what perſon amongſt a thouſand is ſufficiently qualified either accurately to comprehend the full Efficacy and Nature of things ſo ſublime and profound, or to explicate them according to their worth and dignity? Or ſhould any Man look upon this as an eaſie performance, how ſmall a part of the Vulgar will he induce to be fully perſwaded hereof? Or what Man can without danger of falling into groſs Errors inſiſt upon the accurate diſcuſſions of ſuch nice Controverſies? In Queſtions therefore of this nature, Loquacity muſt be bridled and reſtrained; leſt either through the frailty of our Nature (we being not able to explicate what we propoſed,) or through the ſlowneſs of our Auditors underſtanding what they are taught (being unable accurately to apprehend our Diſcourſe,) leſt [we ſay] from one of theſe Cauſes the People be reduced to a neceſſity of Blaſphemy or Schiſm. Wherefore, let any unwary Queſtion, and an inconſiderate Anſwer with both of you mutually pardon each other. For this Conteſt is not kindled upon an occaſion of any principal or chief Commandment of our Law: neither have you introduced any new Hereſie concerning the Worſhip of God. But you both hold one and the ſame Opinion; ſo that [you may eaſily cloſe in a] conſent of Communion with each other. For whilſt you thus pertinaciouſly contend about Trifles and things of no importance, (c) *'tis not convenient that ſo numerous a People of God ſhould be under your Care and Government, becauſe of your Diſſention with one another: Nor is it only misbecoming, but 'tis alſo judg'd to be altogether unlawful. Now that I may adverti ſe your Prudence by a ſmaller inſtance, I will tell you: You know even the Philoſophers themſelves, how that they are all united in [the profeſſion of] one Sect, whenas notwithſtanding they frequently diſagree in ſome part of their Aſſertions: But altho' they do ſometimes jarr * in the very Perfection of Knowledge, yet becauſe of the Agreement and Union of their Sect, they do again cloſe in a mutual conſent. Now if it be ſo [amongſt them,] it will certainly be much more reaſonable that you, who are the Miniſters of the moſt High God, ſhould in like manner be unanimous in the profeſſion of the ſame Religion. But let us now with more accuracy and greater attention inſpect and deliberate upon what has been ſaid: whether it be juſt and equitable, that becauſe of the trivial, vain, and pertinacious Conteſts between you about Words, Brethren ſhould be ſet in array [as it were] againſt Brethren; and that that venerable Aſſembly ſhould upon your account, who contend with one another about things ſo ſlight, and in no wiſe neceſſary, be rent aſunder by an impious Variance. Theſe [Conteſts] are poor and mean, and do become a childiſh ignorance, rather than agree with [the Gravity] of Presbyters and prudent Men. Let us of our own accord depart from the Tentations of the Devil. Our Great God the Saviour of all Men, hath reached forth a Light common to all Men. By the aſſiſtance of whoſe Providence, give us*

(b) After theſe words in the Greek; (to wit,) τὶ δήποτε ἕκαστος αὐτῶν, Leo Allat. MS. and Gelaſ. Cyzicen, add φρονεῖ; the Import of which we have alſo made uſe of in our Tranſlation; though 'tis not expreſs'd in the Common Edit. Valeſ.

(c) In Leo Allatius's MS. this place is thus written [τοσοῦτον τὸ Θεῷ λαὸν ὄν ὑπὸ τοῖς ὑμετέροις εὐχαῖς καὶ χερσὶν εὐδυνεῖσθαι πεισθήσει, διχονοεῖν ἔτι τε πρέπον, ἔτι ὅλως δεμιτὸν ἂν πιστεύεται; i.e. 'Tis neither decent, nor is it in any wiſe to be believed, that ſo numerous a people of God (which ought to be governed by your Prayers and Prudence) ſhould be at variance.] Epiphanius Scholaſticus followed the ſame reading: For thus he tranſlates this place: [Tantum Dei populum, quem veſtris orationibus & prudentiâ convenit gubernari, diſcordare nec decet, nec omnino fas eſſe credibile eſt.] Valeſ.

* Τῇ τῆς ἐπιστήμης ἀρετῇ; in ipſâ ſcientiæ perfectione: So Valeſius, whom we follow. Muſculus renders it, in virtute ſcientiæ, in the virtue of knowledge: Grynæus, diſciplinæ cauſâ, &c. upon account of their diſcipline, &c.

Constant. us leave, who are his Servants that we may successfully finish this our Endeavour, that by our Exhortation, Diligence and earnest Admonitions, we may reduce you to an Uunity of Assembly. For in regard, as we have already said, you hold the same Faith, and have the same Sentiments of our Religion; and since the Commandment of the Law doth in all its Parts include all in general in one Consent and Purpose of Mind; let not this thing, which has raised a mutual Division between you, (in as much as it appertaineth not to the Power and Efficacy of Religion in general) by any means make a Separation and a Faction amongst you. These things we speak, not to necessitate you to be all of one Opinion concerning this foolish idle Controversie, of what sort soever it be. For the precious value of the Assembly may be preserved entire amongst you, and one and the same Communion may be retained, although there be interchangeably amongst you a great Diversity of Sentiments in things of the smallest import. For we do not all mean the same in all things, neither is there one Disposition or Opinion in all of us. Therefore, concerning the Divine Providence, let there be amongst you one Faith, one Meaning, and one Covenant of the Deity. But as for these slender and light Questions, which with so much niceness you dispute of and make Researches into amongst your selves, although therein you do not all agree in the same Opinion, yet it is your Duty to confine them to your own Thoughts, and keep them within the secret Repositories of your own Minds. Let therefore an unutterable and excellent common Friendship, a Belief of the Truth, the Honour of God, and a religious Observance of his Law, remain amongst you firm and immoveable; return ye to a mutual Friendship and Charity: restore to the whole Body of the People their usual Embraces. And be you your selves (having as it were purified your own Souls,) acquainted again [and renew your Familiarity] with one another. For Friendship is frequently more sweet and pleasing, after the (d) Occasion of the Enmity is laid aside; return to a Reconciliation again. Restore therefore to us peaceable and serene Days, and Nights void of Sollicitude, that during the Residue of our Life we may have the pleasure of the pure Light, and the joy of a quiet Life reserv'd for us. Which if [we shall not obtain] we must necessarily groan, and be wholly surrounded with Tears: Nor shall we finish the Residue of our Life without great disquietude. For whilst the People of God, (we mean our Fellow Servants,) are rent asunder by this pernicious and indiscreet Dissention which they are now involved in, how is it possible for us in future to continue in a sedate temper of Mtnd? And that you may be sensible of our excessive Sorrow for this thing, be attentive [to what we shall tell you.] When we lately came to the City of* Nicomedia, we had resolved forthwith to have made a journey into the East. But while we were hastning towards you, and by the greatest part were with you, the news of this Affair quite altered our Resolution; lest we should be necessitated to be a Spectator of these things, which we could not endure even to hear. Do you therefore by your Unanimity for the time to come, open the way for us into the East, which by your mutual Discord you have stopped up. Give us leave with joy speedily to see you, and all the rest of the People, and that with an unanimous consent of Praises we may offer up to God due thanks for the publick Agreement and Liberty. Constant.

* Βούλε-σθαι, Will, Wish, or Desire.

(d) In my Annotations at the second Book of Eusebius's Life of Constantine, instead of [μετὰ τὴν τῆς ἔχθρας ἀπόθεσιν, after the occasion of the Enmity is laid aside.] I have noted that the reading should be [τῆς ἔχθρας ἀποθέσεως, after the removing of the Enmity;] as it is in some Copies. But in as much as our MSS. to wit, the Florent. Sfortian, and Allatian change not the reading here, we may bear with the common reading; which is also confirmed by Epiph. Scholasticus's Version: for thus he translates this Passage; Suaviores crebrò sunt amicitiæ post inimicitiarum causas ad concordiam restitutæ. Vales.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning the Council held at Nicæa, a City of Bithynia; and concerning the Faith there published.

SUch admirable and prudent advice did the Emperor's Letter give them. But the mischievous difference was grown so strong and potent, that neither the Emperor's industry, nor the authority of the person who brought the Letters was able to do any good. For neither Alexander nor Arius were in the least mollified by the Letter. Amongst the Populace also there was an irreconcilable discord, and a great disturbance. Moreover, before this broke out, there was another distemper in that place, which had caus'd disturbance in the Church, (to wit) a disagreement concerning the Feast of Easter; but this was only in the Eastern parts: where some made it there business to celebrate that Festival after the Jewish manner, others [in their solemnization thereof] imitated the rest of the Christians throughout the whole World. But tho' they differ'd thus concerning the Feast, yet they did not refrain from a mutual Communion. However, they clouded the joy of the Feast by this their dissention. The Emperor therefore seeing the Church disturbed by these two evils, convened a General Council, by his Letters requesting the Bishops from all parts to meet together at Nice a City of Bithynia. Accordingly the Bishops, out of divers Provinces and Cities, assembled; concerning whom Eusebius Pamphilus, in his Third Book of Constantine's Life, writeth thus word for word. The most eminent therefore amongst God's Ministers of all those Churches which filled all Europe, Libya and Asia, were convened. And one sacred Oratory, enlarged as it were by God himself, included at the same time within its Walls, both Syrians and Cilicians, Phœnicians and Arabians, Palestinians, and Ægyptians also; Thæbeans, Libyans, and those that came out of Mesopotamia. There was also at this Synod a Persian Bishop, neither was the Scythian absent from this Choir. * Pontus also, and Galatia, Pamphilia and Cappadocia, Asia and Phrygia afforded their most select Divines. Moreover, there appeared here Thracians and Macedonians, Achaians and Epirots, and such as dwelt far beyond these were nevertheless present [Hosius also] that most famed Spaniard, (together with many of his Countreymen) was one that sat in this Council. The † Prelate of the Imperial City was absent

* These words of Eusebius occur at the Third Book of his Life of Constantine, Chap. 7. Socrates has not quoted them word for word as they are there: We (following herein Valesius, Musculus, and Grynæus) have rendred them as they are in the fore-cited place of Eusebius.

† Gelasius Cyzicenus supposed that by these words the Bishop of Constantinople was meant. with whom agrees Nicetas, (in Thesauro Orthodoxæ fidei, Book 5. Chap. 6.) and Epiphanius Scholasticus, in Book 2. Histor. Tripart. Musculus (as 'tis apparent from his rendition of these words) thought the Bishop of Rome was hereby meant: for he renders this place thus; Romanæ autem civitatis Episcopus propter senium deerat; i. e. The Bishop of Rome, by reason of his age, was absent. Valesius is of the same opinion with Musculus: for (in his Annotations on Chap. 7. of the Third Book of Eusebius's Life of Constantine) he says, that at such time as this Council was convened, Constantinople was not adorned with the name of The Imperial City. See Sozomen, Book 1. Chap. 16. and Theodoret, Book 1. Chap. 7.
